

This is a digital copy of a book that was preserved for generations on library shelves before it was carefully scanned by Google as part of a project to make the world's books discoverable online.

It has survived long enough for the copyright to expire and the book to enter the public domain. A public domain book is one that was never subject to copyright or whose legal copyright term has expired. Whether a book is in the public domain may vary country to country. Public domain books are our gateways to the past, representing a wealth of history, culture and knowledge that's often difficult to discover.

Marks, notations and other marginalia present in the original volume will appear in this file - a reminder of this book's long journey from the publisher to a library and finally to you.

Usage guidelines

Google is proud to partner with libraries to digitize public domain materials and make them widely accessible. Public domain books belong to the public and we are merely their custodians. Nevertheless, this work is expensive, so in order to keep providing this resource, we have taken steps to prevent abuse by commercial parties, including placing technical restrictions on automated querying.

We also ask that you:

- + Make non-commercial use of the files We designed Google Book Search for use by individuals, and we request that you use these files for personal, non-commercial purposes.
- + Refrain from automated querying Do not send automated queries of any sort to Google's system: If you are conducting research on machine translation, optical character recognition or other areas where access to a large amount of text is helpful, please contact us. We encourage the use of public domain materials for these purposes and may be able to help.
- + Maintain attribution The Google "watermark" you see on each file is essential for informing people about this project and helping them find additional materials through Google Book Search. Please do not remove it.
- + Keep it legal Whatever your use, remember that you are responsible for ensuring that what you are doing is legal. Do not assume that just because we believe a book is in the public domain for users in the United States, that the work is also in the public domain for users in other countries. Whether a book is still in copyright varies from country to country, and we can't offer guidance on whether any specific use of any specific book is allowed. Please do not assume that a book's appearance in Google Book Search means it can be used in any manner anywhere in the world. Copyright infringement liability can be quite severe.

About Google Book Search

Google's mission is to organize the world's information and to make it universally accessible and useful. Google Book Search helps readers discover the world's books while helping authors and publishers reach new audiences. You can search through the full text of this book on the web at <http://books.google.com/>

3 3433 07607801 7

S P E C T

STEREOTYPE

London

PRINTED BY W. LEWIS

FOR ISAAC, TUC

14, HENRIETTA

COVENT-GARDEN

1836.

Repair No. 727/66

233

Joseph H. Choate,

1894-1895

INDEX.

	No.
Assence of Mind . . . . .	77
Absent Lovers . . . . .	245
Absurd Claims of Reward . . . . .	629
Absurdities of the Opera-dresses . . . . .	29 exemplified in Letters . . . . . from the Performers of Beasts . . . . .	22 Account of a Free-thinker . . . . .	234 a great Man's Levee . . . . .	193 a Grinning-match . . . . .	173 an Atheistical Book . . . . .	389
a remarkable Sleeper . . . . .	184
a Trunkmaker in the Theatre . . . . .	235 a Whistling-match . . . . .	179
Sappho . . . . .	223
the Custom of Enborne . . . . .	623
the Death of Madame de Villacerfe . . . . .	368 the Everlasting Club . . . . .	72
the Hebdomadal Club . . . . .	43
the Marriage of Will Honeycomb . . . . .	530
the Mohock Club . . . . .	324
the new Sect of Loungers . . . . .	54 the Spectator opening his Mouth . . . . .	556
the Sweaters . . . . .	332 the various Clubs . . . . .	9
the Ugly Club . . . . .	17
the Widow's Club . . . . .	561
A cheerful Temper . . . . .	143
Address to those who have jealous Husbands . . . . .	171
Admission of the Spectator into the Ugly Club . . . . .	32
Adrian's Verses . . . . .	532
Advantages from Christianity . . . . .	633 of an air of Importance in making . . . . .
Love . . . . .	602
of being so easily pleased . . . . .	454 of Content . . . . .	574 of Levity over grave Behaviour in . . . . .
Young Ladies . . . . .	492 of seeking the Protection of the Su- . . . . . preme Being . . . . .	571 of the Sexes associating . . . . .	433 of the Spectator's Taciturnity . . . . .	4
Adventure of M. Pontignan . . . . .	90
Adventures of a Servant . . . . .	96 of Sir Roger de Coverley with a . . . . .
Woman of the Town . . . . .	410
Advice on Disputes . . . . .	197 to Gloriana respecting the studied Ad- . . . . . dresses of Strephon and Damon . . . . .	423 to Ladies on Marriage . . . . .	522 to the Trading-world . . . . .	443 Affectation of Business . . . . .	284 of Negligence . . . . .	284 of Slovenliness . . . . .	150
Affected method of Psalm-singing . . . . .	205
Allegory of several Schemes of Wit . . . . .	63
Ambition hurtful to the Hopes of Futurity . . . . .	257

Amours of Anecdotes Annals
Answers
Applause
April-day Art of be-of im-
Arts of C of P BALLAD Beauties
Behaviour Benefit of Benevolen
Bill of M Bishop of Blessing Books for Bruyere's CARE of
Case of L
Castle-bu Catalogue Causes of
of wh Caution t
i Celinda's Censure of Character

INDEX.

No.		No.
156	Cures performed by the Spectator	547
409	Custom of telling Stories of Ghosts to Children	12
422	D. to his Coquette Mistress	204
506	Dancing	67, 296
100	recommended	370
114	Dangerous Influence of the Month of May	365
33	Dangers of Dancing	67
65	of the Month of May escaped	395
476	Dapperwit's Question	534
144	Death and Character of Dick Estcourt	468
75	of Sir Roger de Coverley	517
294	Decency of Behaviour	104
381	Decorating Churches with Evergreens	282
45	Defence and Happiness of a Married Life	500
630	of the Spectator's Censure of Public Vices	286
546	Degeneracy of the Stage	446
Ugly	Demurrage	89
78	Depraved Taste on the Theatre	208
323	Description of Male Jilts	288
30	of a Tavern Tyrant	508
372	Devotion	211
217	Difference between True and False Wit	62
568	of Temper in the Sexes	128
448	Different Characters in a Tour through the Me-553	tropolis	454
526	Classes of Female Orators	247
private	Difficult case in Love resolved	605
313	Diffidence	206
508	Disadvantages of Ambition	256
250	Disappointment in Love	163
24	Discretion and Cunning	225
st the	Dispute on the Landed and Trading Interest	174
528	Dissection of a Beau's Head	275
100, 143	of a Coquette's Heart	281
286	Dissertation on Beards	331
461	Distresses of a very Amorous Gentleman	596 103	Divinity, Law, and Physic, overburdened with 137	Practitioners	21
13	Division of Mankind into Classes	624 fortune	Dramatic Improvements	592
163	Murders	44
192	Dream of a Picture-gallery	82
349	Dreams of various Correspondents	597
ed by	Duelling	99
306	Dumb Conjuror	474
aviour	Durability of Writing	166 of the	Duty of being Usefully Employed	583
197	of communicating Knowledge: Objec-
300	tions answered	379
380	to Parents	189
and	EDUCATION compared to Sculpture	215
401	of Country Squires	123
Mrs.	Effects of Avarice and Luxury upon Employ-328	ments	55
240	Eloquence of Beggars	613
67	Embroidery recommended to the Ladies	606
lors	Encoring in the Theatres	314
218	Endeavours of Mankind to get rid of their Bur-
300, 470	dens, (a Dream)	558, 559
285, 291,	English Tongue, The	135
333, 339,	Tragedy	39, 42
592	Enlargement of the Mind in a future State	635
542	Enthusiasm	201
70, 74	Ephesian Matron, The	11
350	Epicure Mammon's Letter on Eating	344
189	Epigram on the Spectator	488 age	Epitaph in Pancras-churchyard	538
252	Equestrian Lady	485

INDEX.

	No.
Erratum in the Paper on Drinking	205
Errors in the Common Modes	66
Essay on Dreams	487
on Friendship	385
on Wit	58
Essays on the Pleasures of the Imagination	411—421
Eubulus	49
Excess of Anxiety about Health	25
Exercise of the Fan	102 of the Snuff-box	138
Exhibition of Pictures	67
Extract from Tillotson's Sermons	352
Extracts on Sincerity	103
FABLE of a Drop in the Ocean	293 of Pleasure and Pain	183
False Delicacy	286
Hopes	282
Wit and Humour	35
Wit and Mechanic Poetry	220
Fame	218
difficult to be obtained	255
Farewell Paper and Acknowledgments of Assistance	555
Fashions in Dress, how imitated in the Country	129
Fate of Writings	85
Female Beauty	144
Dress	435
Education	314
Equestrians	435
Head-dress	265
Levity	128
Oratory	252
Pander described	205
Party-spirit discovered by Patches	81
Reading	95
Fickle Friend	194
Filial Piety of Fidelia	449
Flitch of Bacon, The	607
Folly of Demurrage	89
of destroying Wood	589
of the Pride of Birth or Fortune	202 of Wishing to be Young	153
Fragment of Sappho	229
Fragments from Cæsar	374
French Fashions	45
Frivolous Disputants	138
GENEALOGY of Humour	35
Good Breeding	158
Manners	296
Nature, as a Moral Virtue	177
Natured Lies	234
Gospel-gossip	46
Grateful Letter on Heroic Virtue	240
Grotto Work	632
HAPPINESS of Dependance upon the Supreme Being	441
Heathen Fables on Prayers	391
Hints to a Lover	326
History of Amanda	375
of Cat-calls	361
of False Wit	58, 59
of a Female Republic	434 of the Italian Opera	18 of the Lover's Leap	233 of a Male Republic	433
of Phillis and Brunetta	80 of Will Honeycomb's Amours	359
Hobbe's Theory of Laughter	52

Hoods Humorous
Mirth
Hunting Hypocrisy
IDEA of a
Ill Consequence
Ill-nature
Immortal Impertinent
Impertinent
Importers
Improper Improper
Impudence
Impudent Inconsistent
Inconstant
Inconven Increase of Indelicacy
Indelicate
Infirmity present Influence Inkle and Inquisitive Instinct in Interview with a Introduction of the V Journal of Italian R
KING LA
LABOUR
Ladies' H
Lady-love
Lampoons
Lancashire
Laughter
Lawyer's
Lee Letter on from by
of
from
from on from
from on
on
from fre
on

INDEX.

No.		No.
158	Letter of Pliny to Hispulla	525
187	on Poachers	168
16	on Poetical Justice	548
Ac-	from a Poor and Proud Jezebel	292
301	on the Prayers of Clergymen before 27	Sermon	312
Pup-	from the President of the Club of 372	Widows	573
and	from a Prude	364
474	on Punning	396
to a	and Reflections on Modesty	484 338	and Reflections on Rustic Amusements	161
ormal	on Seduction	208
79	on the Severity of Schoolmasters	168
Lady,	from a Silent Lover	304
254	from Sir Andrew Freeport—His Re-
324	tiring	549
251	from Sir John Envil, married to a Wo-236	man of Quality	299
334	from Mr. Sly on Hats	532
542	from Sophia in Love with a Short Face	290
341	from a Splenetic cured	134
95	from one Steele	274
348	on the Theatre—On a Musical Scheme	258
450	from Three Thrifty Ladies	332
Pope	on Travelling	364
545	from a Valetudinarian	25
252	from the Ugly Club	52
66	on Visiting	208
189	on the Unhappy Condition of Women 104	of the Town	190
326	on an Untoward Wife	194
311	from a Widow with two Lovers, and 477	Answer	149
of the	from Will Honeycomb	131
298	on Women's Men	158
deter-	on Women taking Snuff	344
212	on young Templars turning Hackney-
486	coachmen	498
127	to Zelinda from her Lover—his Death	627
493	Letters on Affectation of Ignorance—from a 204	Poetical Lover	473
ed by	on Ambition—from a Lady marked by 328	the Small-pox	613
320	from a Blank—complaining of a Cho-
87	leric Gentleman	563
527	from Cleanthes on a Mischief-making
168	Old Maid—from E. G. on Kissing	272
236	in Commendation of Brock and Hol-cer—	lier's Wine—from a Scholar in Love	362
611	on the Conduct of gay and foppish Fa-
527	thers—on Swinging	496
551	from a Country Gentleman to Phara-
163	mond—from a Lawyer's Clerk	480
136	on Delicacy in the Censure of Vices—208	from an affected Lady—a Kept-
227	mistress—a Quaker	276
24	from Dorinda, complaining of the Spec-en in	tator's partiality—from a Man of 199	Fashion	319
540	from the Dumb Doctor—from a Pert 343	Baggage—on the Author's recover-
437	ing his Speech	560
203	on Education	337, 353
364	on Education—from the Husband of a Ingra-	Scold—on Money	455
322	on the Education of Youth	330
553	from an English Singer at Venice—on 284	Rudeness	443
140	on Epitaphs	518
zed	from Estcourt—from Sir Roger	264 577 e Fan
134

INDEX.

Letters on Female Education	No. 53
on a Generous Benefactor	546 on Greek Mottos—the Use of the Window—soliciting Advice—Lampoons	296
from Hecatissa—from an Old Beau	48 from Hen-pecked Husbands—from a Woman married to a Cot-quean	482 on Idleness—from a Lover	316
to Impertinents and Whisperers	148 on improper Behaviour in a Stage-coach—Story of a Lottery-ticket—from the Guardian of Two Nieces	242 on the improper Dress of young Clergymen—on Antipathies—against Embroidery	609 on Indelicacy—from an Old Maid—from A. B.	217 on Innocent Diversions—from a Trojan	245 on the Joys and Satisfaction of Private Life	406 from the Lion—from an Under-sexton on the Masquerade	14 on Love, Wit, Drinking, Gaming, &c. from a Lover, and Answer—from John Trott on his Courtship	314 from a Lover and Young Lady	381 on Masquerades	8
on Military Life by various Soldiers	566 from an Old Bachelor—from Lovers	260 on Parents forcing the Inclinations of their Children—on Rudeness and Impudence	533 on a Partnership between a Goose and a Watchman—from a Schoolmistress on Dancing	376 from the Playhouse, on the Dismission of Inanimate Performers	36 of Pliny	230, 292
on Pulling the Nose—on Choice in Marriage—from a Heedless Gazer—on Floods—an Oxford Toast—on Patching	268
from Ralph Valet and Patience Giddy	137 on the relative Duties of Parents and Children—between a Mother and Son requesting Advice in a Case of Love—on Improper Behaviour at Church	380
of Richard and Sabina Rentfree	431 on Seduction, from the Seducer	182 from Servants	202
from a Shopkeeper on his Wife's Greek or Simonides' Satire on Women	211 from a Spoilt rich Beauty—from a Grocer in Love—from an Idol	534 from Sylvia, complaining of an Unnatural Mother—from a Married Man in Love with his Ward—concerning a Profligate Lover	402 from Tom Trippet—complaining of a Greek Quotation—soliciting a Peep at Sir Roger—from a Showman	271 from a Town Coquette to her Friend, and Answer	515 from various Lovers—on Tale-bearers	310 on Wagerers, Whistlers, rude Old Bachelor	145
Life preparatory to the Happiness of Eternity	575
List of Persons who demanded the Flitch of Bacon	608
Love	220
Love-letter of James to Betty	71

Love-letters
Love of Ap
of De
of Gl
of Le
and Scene Lovers
Loves of H
MAJ E Dre Manners of Maxims of Means of st Mediocrity
Meditation Memoirs of
of Messiah, T
Method of —Specin
Methods to Military Co Minute from Misapplicat Mischief of
of Mischiefs of Misery of b Miseries of
of Mixt Wit Mixture of Modesty
Monkey rec Motives to Musical Pla
NEGLIGENCE
News-write Newspap
Note from Notions of OGLING
On the Abu Abuses
the Abs
the Adv
Adultery
of Un
Affectat Aiming
the Art
the Art
asking Atheists
attributi
Judge Beauties
the Bea Benefice
Benevol
Benev
bestow the bet

INDEX.

No.		No.
289	On Method in Writing and Conversation	476
448	Modesty and Assurance	373
594	the Mohocks—Manifesto of the Emperor	347
366	the Nature of Man—of the Supreme Being	565
270	the New Stamp	445
287	Novelty	626
631	the Number, Dispersion, and Religion of otson's	the Jews	495
539	an Obsequious Behaviour	386
449	Oratory	633
397	Outward Civilities	259
505	Party Lies	507
557	a Passionate Temper—the Angry Booksel-
334	ler and Calm Customer	438
133	Patrons and their Clients	214
520	Persecution	516
451	Personal Identity	578
539	Petty Ambition	570
604	Physiognomy	86
280	Pin-money, Reflections on that Custom	295
253	Pious Gratitude	453
537	Planting	583, 569
546	Pleasant Fellows	462
593	the Power of insignificant Objects	485
569	Prejudice and Emulation—a Sulky Wife	432
352	the Price and Success of the Spectator	488
196	the Pride of Genealogy	612
307	Pronunciation and Action	541
562	the Proper Method of Repelling Calumny	390
19	the Proper Use of Time	374
618	Propriety in Genteel Dress	360
590, 628	Public Mournings	64
538	Quack Advertisements	444
250	Quacks	572
183	Raillery	422
615	Raphael's Cartoons	226, 244
244	Reading the Church-service	147
382	Religious Faith and Practice	459
68	Religious Hope	471
110	Religious Melancholy	494
512	Reluctance to leave the World	549
493	Seducers	274
580	Seducers and their Illicit Progeny	203
424	Self-love and Benevolence	588
ution 169	the Shame and Fear of Poverty	114
160	Singularity—the Dread and Affectation of it	576
213	Sorrow	312
176	the Spectator's opening his Mouth	553
308	the Stage	370
531	Strained and Pompous Phrases—Specimen	617
170, 171	the Study of Human Nature—the Passions	408
148	the Taste of a Roman and English Theatri-621	cal Audience	562
554	Temperance	195
405	Templars turning Hackney-coachmen	526
132	True and False Modesty	458
186	True Liberality	346
510	Vain Hopes	535
582	Visions	524
h Men	the Unaccommodating Disposition of Old
394	Men	336
264	the Uncertainty and Absurdity of Public 325	Reports	521
from	Vulgar Phrases—Specimen	616
238	Want of Charity in the Wealthy	294
467	Waste of Time	317
acters	the Ways of Providence	237
564	the Whims of Lottery Adventurers	191
525	Witchcraft	117
490	Opinions on the Dispute between Count Rech-
598	teren and M. Mesnager	48

INDEX.

	No.
Opinions entertained of the Spectator in the Country . . . . .	131	Reflections on Otway . . . . .	39	Rejection of PARADISE of Fools, a Vision . . . . .	460	Remarks on Parental Fondness and Expectation . . . . .	192	on Passage from Milton . . . . .	325	on Passages from Cicero and Burnet . . . . .	146	and Passion for Fame and Praise . . . . .	73	Remedy for Patience, an Allegory . . . . .	501	Remonstrance
Peeper, A . . . . .	53	Reputation Petition of Anthony Title-page—of Barth . . . . .	304	Resolutions of of John a Nokes and Tom a Styles . . . . .	577	Retailers of from the Readers of the Spectator . . . . .	310	Rosicrucius's of Who and Which . . . . .	78	Rules for Po Pharamond and Eucrate on Duels . . . . .	97	of Pre
Phæbe, A Poem . . . . .	603	Rural Manne
Plan of an Academy . . . . .	230	SALE of Unm Pleasant Character of Charles the Second . . . . .	462	Salutation at Poem on Pious Gratitude . . . . .	453	Salutations
Poetical Version of Solomon's Song, Chapter . . . . .	388	Sappho's Hy
Second . . . . .	388	Scandal
Poetry too often mixed with Mythology—Edict . . . . .	523	Scene in a St on that Subject . . . . .	523	an Officer Political Arithmetic . . . . .	200	Self-denial Politics . . . . .	16	Signature Le
Pope's Essay on Criticism . . . . .	253	Simonides' Sa Popular Superstitions . . . . .	7	Simplicity of Power of Bearing Calamities . . . . .	312	Sir Andrew F of Numbers . . . . .	632	Sir Roger de Preference of Wit and Sense to Honesty and . . . . .	6	Sir Roger de Virtue . . . . .	84	Sir Roger's A Private Life of Pharamond . . . . .	278	A Marriage . . . . .	440	B
Proceedings of the Infirmary for Ill-humoured . . . . .	274	C
People . . . . .	305	P
Procuresses . . . . .	31	R
Project of the New French Political Academy . . . . .	28	Specimen of t of a New Opera . . . . .	358	a of an Office for the Regulation of Signs . . . . .	93, 94	c
Proper Ingredients of Festivity and Mirth . . . . .	550	Spectator's Ac
Methods of employing Time . . . . .	457
Proposal for a New Club . . . . .	478 for a Newspaper of Whispers . . . . .	472 for a Repository of Fashions . . . . .	3 that the Rich Sick should assist the . . . . .	90
Poor in the Loss of Sight . . . . .	94
Public Credit, a Vision . . . . .	624
Punishment of a Voluptuous Man after Death . . . . .	607
Pursuit of Knowledge . . . . .	219
Pursuits of Avarice, Ambition, &c. . . . .	448 591 625 614
QUALIFICATION of a Poet . . . . .	314
Qualities necessary to make Marriage Happy . . . . .	607 Quality . . . . .	219	Speculations o Quarrel between Will Trap and Stint . . . . .	448	Death of the Questions and Cases of Love . . . . .	591	Spleen, The in Love solved by the Love Casuist . . . . .	625	St. Bride's Ch Questions on Widows answered by . . . . .	614	Stage Tricks
The Love Casuist . . . . .	614	Story of Alna of Basil of a Cal of Clear in A
		of a De
		of Eudo
		of Fadla
		of Gyge of Hilpo
		of Hort
		of Moll
RAIPH Wonder's Account of the Phantom at . . . . .	503
Church . . . . .	503
Recommendations of Industrious Tradesmen— . . . . .	552
Matteux—Harris—Rowley—Proposals for . . . . .	552
New Globes . . . . .	350
Reflections on Courage without Humanity . . . . .	133 on the Death of a Friend . . . . .	393 on the Delights of Spring . . . . .	506 on Errors in Marriage . . . . .	231 on Modesty . . . . .

INDEX.

No.
491	Various Opinions of Future Happiness
84	Subjects proposed for Speculation
48	ways of Managing a Debate
504	Verses on a Grotto
216	to the Spectator
445	Version of the 114th Psalm		461
525	Vicissitudes of Night and Day, a Drama		425
Classes	Virtue of an Orange Girl		380
e Club	Vision of Hearts		587
34	of Marraton		56
112	of Mirza		159
Used	of Mount Parnassus		514
172	Visions of Worldly and Heavenly Wisdom		524
ents—	Visit to the Bear-garden		436 442	to the Royal Exchange		69
ents	from Sir Roger—his Opinions		269 er Let-	with Sir Roger de Coverley to Westminster-ent for	abbey		329
536	with Sir Roger to the Country Assizes		122 torious
532	UNCERTAINTY of Fame		101
53	Undutifulness of Nephews		402
599	Universality of Ambition—its Wrong Directions		224
Women	University Physiognomy		518
99	Use and Difficulties of Periodical Papers		124
g her	of Dreams		586
539	to be Made of Enemies		355
e Car-	of Mottoes		221
439	of Proper Gestures		407
620	of Similes		455
Libel	Uses of Ambition		255
568	of the Spectator		10 47 lity 308 290 40
oking-	WEIGHT of Wisdom and Riches—a Vision		463
392	Will Honeycomb's Account of the Siege of Hers-
628	berg—and his Dream		499
410	Knowledge of the World—
551	Various kinds of Pedants		105
366	Notions of Female Head-
406	dress		265
211, 343	Proposal of a Fair for Mar-504	riage		511
	Wisdom of Providence		121
219	Wit of the Monkish Ages—in Modern Times		60, 61
391	Women called Picts—no Faith to be kept with requests	them		41 180
aper—
367	YAWNING		179
16
179	ZEAL—Various Kinds of Zealots		185

CONTRIBUTORS TO "THE SPECTATOR."—635 PAPERS.

Contributors.	Entire Papers.	Letters & Parts of Papers Brought forward	582	19
Eusden		2
Henley, John		2
Shepherd, Miss		2
Perry, Mrs.		1
Heywood		1
Watts		1
Weaver		1
Parker		1
Golding		1
Harper		1
Motteux		1
Budgell, Gilbert		1
Bland		1
Ince
Carey
Anonymous	53
Total	33	635
19		35

THE BRITISH ESS

THE SPECT

ORIGINAL DEDICA

OF THE SUCCESSIVE VOL

TO LORD JOHN SOMERS,

BARON OF EYRESHAM.

My Lord,

I should not act the part of an impartial Spectator, if I dedicated the following papers to one who is not of the most consummate and acknowledged merit.

None but a person of a finished character can be a proper patron of a work which endeavours to cultivate and polish human life, by promoting virtue and knowledge, and by recommending whatsoever may be either useful or ornamental to society.

I know that the homage I now pay you, is offering a kind of violence to one who is as solicitous to shun applause, as he is assiduous to deserve it. But, my Lord, this is perhaps the only particular in which your prudence will be always disappointed.

While justice, candour, equanimity, a zeal for the good of your country, and the most persuasive eloquence in bringing over others to it, are valuable distinctions: you are not to expect that the public will so far comply with your inclinations, as to forbear celebrating such extraordinary qualities. It is in vain that you have endeavoured to conceal your share of merit in the many national services which you have effected. Do what you will, the present age will be talking of your virtues, though posterity alone will do them justice.

Other men pass through oppositions and contending interests in the ways of ambition; but your great abilities have been invited to power, and importuned to accept of advancement. Nor is it strange that this should happen to your Lordship, who could bring into the service of your sovereign the arts and policies of ancient Greece and Rome, as well as the most exact knowledge of our own constitution in particular, and of the interests of Europe in general; to which I must also add, a certain dignity in yourself, that (to say the least of it) has been always equal to these great honours which have been conferred upon you.

It is very well known how much the church owed to you, in the most dangerous day it ever saw, that of the arraignment of its prelates; and how far the Spectator—Nos. 1 & 2.

civil power, indebted to

But to en public has re be a more p dress of this

Your Lor life, as in th borne. I w of the pleas your convers polite arts of complacency fluence whic one who con himself, with talents. But be observed new to say u I a

TO O

My L

SIMILITU tioned as ou and esteem for your Lo of qualities these paper pable. Whi and can pre you are con both in the I am silent are admired genius of th tion of diff discourse is force of rea embellishm common lif that the

with the books, in which hides through in the posorch in the shew those ds to their concern for ing that is all your life
e me when aced in the le—in that will not be thor in it.
occasion of
and honour atitude for ged,

servant,
SPECTATOR.

BOYLE.*

1712. is to entergence to t to find out here being knowledge
nself more at abilities gh employ-
would not general ap-
with that affability of gh all parts
tations arts
which you
a little content which is

r character,
g on those you so great on that ele-
more re-
donable if,
dertain you
t, however,
se great ob-

servant,
SPECTATOR.

OUGH.

1712. ess for what produce, I our to pre-g to it your n the illus-
celebrated by bject of the

and afterward

most sublime pens; but if I could convey you to posterity in your private character, and describe the stature, the behaviour, and aspect, of the Duke of Marlborough, I question not but it would fill the reader with more agreeable images, and give him a more delightful entertainment, than what can be found in the following, or any other book.

One cannot indeed without offence to yourself observe, that you excel the rest of mankind in the least, as well as the greatest endowments. Nor were it a circumstance to be mentioned, if the graces and attractions of your person were not the only pre-eminence you have above others, which is left almost unobserved by greater writers.

Yet how pleasing would it be to those who shall read the surprising revolutions in your story, to be made acquainted with your ordinary life and deportment! How pleasing would it be to hear that the same man who carried fire and sword into the countries of all that had opposed the cause of liberty, and struck a terror into the armies of France, had, in the midst of his high station, a behaviour as gentle as is usual in the first steps towards greatness! And if it were possible to express that easy grandeur, which did at once persuade and command; it would appear as clearly to those to come, as it does to his contemporaries, that all the great events which were brought to pass under the conduct of so well-governed a spirit, were the blessings of heaven upon wisdom and valour; and all which seem adverse fell out by divine permission, which we are not to search into.

You have passed that year of life wherein the most able and fortunate captain, before your time, declared he had lived long enough both to nature and to glory; and your Grace may make that reflection with much more justice. He spoke of it after he had arrived at empire by a usurpation upon those whom he had enslaved; but the Prince of Mindelheim may rejoice in a sovereignty which was the gift of him whose dominions he had preserved.

Glory established upon the uninterrupted success of honourable designs and actions, is not subject to diminution; nor can any attempt prevail against it, but in the proportion which the narrow circuit of rumour bears to the unlimited extent of fame.

We may congratulate your Grace not only upon your high achievements, but likewise upon the happy expiration of your command, by which your glory is put out of the power of fortune: and when your person shall be so too, that the Author and Disposer of all things may place you in that higher mansion of bliss and immortality which is prepared for good princes, lawgivers, and heroes, when he in his due time removes them from the envy of mankind, is the hearty prayer of,

My Lord, your Grace's most obedient,

Most devoted, humble servant,

THE SPECTATOR.

TO THE EARL OF WHARTON.

MY LORD,

1712-13.

THE author of the Spectator, having prefixed before each of his volumes the names of some great persons to whom he has particular obligations, lays his claim to your Lordship's patronage upon the same account. I must confess, my Lord, had not I already received great instances of your favour, I should have been afraid of submitting a work of this nature to your perusal. You are so thoroughly acquainted with the characters of men, and all the parts of human life, that it is impossible for the least misrepresentation of them to escape your notice. It is your Lordship's particular distinction that you are master of the whole compass of business, and have signalised yourself in all the different scenes of it. We admire some for the dignity, others for the popularity of their behaviour; some for their clearness of judgment, others for their happiness of expression; some for the laying of schemes, and others for the putting of them into execution. It is your Lordship only who enjoys these several talents united, and that too in as great perfection as others possess them singly. Your enemies acknowledge this great extent in your Lordship's character, at the same time that they use their utmost industry and invention to derogate from it. But it is for your honour that those who are now your enemies were always so. You have acted in so much consistency with yourself, and promoted the interests of your country in so uniform a manner, that those who would misrepresent your generous designs for the public good cannot but approve the steadiness and intrepidity with which you pursue them. It is a most sensible pleasure to me that I have this opportunity of professing myself one of your great admirers, and, in a very particular manner,

My Lord, your Lordship's most obliged,

And most obedient, humble servant,

THE SPECTATOR.

TO THE EARL OF SUNDERLAND.

MR LORD,

1712-13.

VERY many favours and civilities (received from you in a private capacity) which I have no other way to acknowledge, will, I hope, excuse this presumption; but the justice I, as a Spectator, owe your character, places me above the want of an excuse. Candour and openness of heart, which shine in all your words and actions, exact the highest esteem from all who have the honour to know you; and a winning condescension to all subordinate to you, made business a pleasure to those who executed it under you, at the same time that it heightened her Majesty's favour to all those who had the happiness of having it conveyed through your hands. A secretary of state, in the interest of mankind joined with that of his fellow-subjects, accomplished with a great facility and elegance in all the modern as well as ancient languages, was a happy and proper member of a ministry, by whose services your sovereign is in so high and flourishing a condition, as makes all other princes and potentates powerful or inconsiderable in Europe, as they are friends or enemies to Great Britain. The importance of those great events which happened during that administration in which your Lordship bore so important a charge, will be acknowledged as long as time shall endure. I shall not therefore attempt to rehearse those illustrious passages, but give this application a more private and particular turn, in desiring your Lordship would continue your favour and patronage to me, as you are a gentleman of the most polite literature, and perfectly accomplished in the knowledge of books* and men, which makes it necessary to beseech your indulgence to the following leaves, and the author of them; who is, with the greatest truth and respect,

My Lord, your Lordship's obliged,

Obedient, and humble servant,

THE SPECTATOR.

* His lordship was the founder of the splendid and truly valuable library at Althorp.

SIR,

It is with publishing allow me in not acknowledge my thoughts some parts good-nature But such re a person bl perfections private adv But when had the hap which make had opportu spicuous ma

The great procuring a merce betwe has purchas derstand the

Those per the ordinary men, you f judgment.

ship, in the been used occasionally of a skilful

But your nation. W Majesty's m encamped, through all by his side t he recovered sonal qualiti highest militi minister in t vanquished gave both t lively exampl nation he re

Your frie quently talk hide from u thing which tainment we sion in little general com the greatest you, there is sense of you you every da

Your t

TO WIL

THE seven been dedicat sons of the a

* Afterward very ingenious Portugal, concl his name; and exerted himsel

† Generally

‡ This dedic tace Budget, Wimbles.

hath ever company.
any part of your past on you as n.

and your-occasion to es. And upon your er the like ou will or ich are of must allow lubility of h, the ma-niteness of ained you

ale world,
e female)
al genius

ents by a
yourself in

A man
ifications
his heart.)
ave done,
es. It is des of ashese beau-
the study
s of their free and makes as your fa-

ur charms
ht of mis-
u had forantic race
ers; and not a sage their pre-of life: I ar opinion
you chose who doth

not indeed pretend to an ancient family, but has certainly as many forefathers as any lady in the land, if she but reckons up their names.

I must own I conceived very extraordinary hopes of you from the moment that you confessed your age, and from eight-and-forty (where you had stuck so many years) very ingeniously stepped into your grand climacteric. Your deportment has since been very venerable and becoming. If I am rightly informed, you make a regular appearance every quarter-sessions among your brothers of the quorum; and if things go on as they do, stand fair for being a colonel of the militia. I am told that your time passes away as agreeably in the amusements of a country life, as it ever did in the gallantries of the town; and that you now take as much pleasure in the planting of young trees, as you did formerly in the cutting down of your old ones. In short, we hear from all hands that you are thoroughly reconciled to your dirty acres, and have not too much wit to look into your own estate.

After having spoken thus much of my patron, I must take the privilege of an author in saying something of myself. I shall therefore beg leave to add, that I have purposely omitted setting those marks to the end of every paper, which appeared in my former volumes, that you may have an opportunity of shewing Mrs. Honeycombe the shrewdness of your conjectures, by ascribing every speculation to its proper author; though you know how often many profound critics in style and sentiments have very judiciously erred in this particular, before they were let into the secret. I am, Sir,

Your most faithful humble servant,

THE SPECTATOR.

THE BOOKSELLER TO THE READER.

In the six hundred and thirty-second Spectator, the reader will find an account of the rise of this eighth and last volume.

I have not been able to prevail upon the severa.
gentlemen who were concerned in this work to let me acquaint the world with their names.

Perhaps it will be unnecessary to inform the reader, that no other papers which have appeared under the title of the Spectator, since the closing of this eighth volume, were written by any of those gentlemen who had a hand in this or the former volumes.

SPECTATOR.

710-11.

cem

et. ver. 143.

MMON.

peruses a

the writer

or choleric

her parti-

ry much to

To gratify

this curiosity, which is so natural in a reader, I design this paper and my next as prefatory discourses to my following writings, and shall give some account in them of the several persons that are engaged in this work. As the chief trouble of compiling, digesting, and correcting, will fall to my share, I must do myself the justice to open the work with my own history.

I was born to a small hereditary estate, which,
according to the tradition of the village where it lies, was bounded by the same hedges and ditches in William the Conqueror's time that it is at present, and has been delivered down from father to son, whole and entire, without the loss or acquisition of a single field or meadow, during the space of six hundred years. There runs a story in the family, that, when my mother was gone with child of me about three months, she dreamed that she was brought to bed of a judge. Whether this might proceed from a law-suit which was then depending in the family, or my father's being a justice of the peace, I cannot determine; for I am not so vain as to think it presaged any dignity that I should arrive at in future life, though that was the interpretation which the neighbourhood put upon it. The gravity of my behaviour at my first appearance in the world, and at the time that I sucked, seemed to favour my mother's dream; for, as she has often told me, I threw away my rattle before I was two months old, and would not make use of my coral until they had taken away the bells from it.

As for the rest of my infancy, there being nothing in it remarkable, I shall pass over it in silence. I find that, during my nonage, I had the reputation of a very sullen youth, but was always a favourite of my schoolmaster, who used to say, "that my parts were solid, and would wear well." I had not been long at the university, before I distinguished myself by a most profound silence; for during the space of eight years, excepting in the public exercises of the college, I scarce uttered the quantity of a hundred words; and indeed do not remember that I ever spoke three sentences together in my whole life. Whilst I was in this learned body, I applied myself with so much diligence to my studies, that there are very few celebrated books, either in the learned or the modern tongues, which I am not acquainted with.

Upon the death of my father, I was resolved to travel into foreign countries, and therefore left the university with the character of an odd, unaccountable fellow, that had a great deal of learning, if I would but show it. An insatiable thirst after knowledge carried me into all the countries of Europe in which there was any thing new or strange to be seen; nay, to such a degree was my curiosity raised, that having read the controversies of some great men concerning the antiquities of Egypt, I made a voyage to Grand Cairo on purpose to take the measure of a pyramid; and as soon as I had set myself right in that particular, returned to my native country with great satisfaction.*

I have passed my latter years in this city, where I am frequently seen in most public places, though there are not above half-a-dozen of my select friends that know me; of whom my next paper shall give a more particular account. There is no place of general resort wherein I do not often make my appearance.—Sometimes I am seen thrusting my head into a round of politicians at Will's, and listening with great attention to the narratives that are made in those little circular audiences. Sometimes I smoke a pipe at Child's,† and while I seem attentive to nothing but the Postman, overhear the conversation of every table in the room. I appear on Sunday nights at St. James's coffee-house, and sometimes join the little committee of politics in the inner room, as one who comes there to hear and improve. My face is likewise very well known at the Grecian, the Cocoa-tree, and in the theatres both of

Drury-lane and for a merchant ten years, an assembly of stories wherever I see with them, the own club.

Thus I live mankind; the means I have soldier, mercantile with a well versed in and can discern and diversion engaged in the which are apt I never espoused resolved to of Whigs and Tories myself by the have acted in which is the paper.

I have given tory and character together unequal taken. As for ventures, I shall see or consider how begin to blame have neither the fulness of do it in writing before I die.

that it is pity have made shaman. For this sheet-full of the of my content contribute to country in which summoned out thinking that

There are things not spoken to important read for some time age, and lodged my reader in for these three they might tell my paper, I communicating the draw me out of for many years several salutes very disagreeable suffer, is the best is for this replexion and distress is not impossible in the progress

After having shall in to-morrow gentlemen who for, as I have and concerted are) in a club engaged me to the mind to correct

* A sarcasm on Mr. Greaves, and his book entitled Pyramidographia.

† Child's coffee-house was in St. Paul's church-yard, and the resort of the clergy; St. James's stood then where it does now; Jonathan's was in Change-alley; and the Rose tavern was on the outside of Temple bar.

Little Bri-reader, that and Thurs-
to sit every ers as may public weal.

C.

710-11.

L. 167

an of Woraronet, his eat-grandfa-
ntry-dance
y that shire and merits
is very sin-
lies proceed
ions to the s the world our creates
th sourness
ed to modes er and more
know him.
quare.* It
y reason he ul widow of ppointment, elman, had er and Sir
s first com-
in a public But being he was very gh, his tem-
over it, he essed afterdoublet of time of his
he tells us,
he first wore
n his desires
somuch that in point of his is looked of raillery
year, cheer-
use both in unkind; but our, that he

ok satisfied,
m, and the
m. When he nts by their o a visit. I justice of the arter-session s ago gained ssage in the d authority

a member of ity, wit, and

n.
ger, and deed out; he was s purious.

understanding; but he has chosen his place of residence rather to obey the direction of an old humour-some father, than in pursuit of his own inclinations. He was placed there to study the laws of the land, and is the most learned of any of the house in those of the stage. Aristotle and Longinus are much better understood by him than Littleton or Coke. The father sends up every post questions relating to marriage-articles, leases, and tenures in the neighbourhood; all which questions he agrees with an attorney to answer and take care of in the lump. He is studying the passions themselves when he should be inquiring into the debates among men which arise from them. He knows the argument of each of the orations of Demosthenes and Tully, but not one case in the reports of our own courts. No one ever took him for a fool; but none, except his intimate friends, know he has a great deal of wit.
This turn makes him at once both disinterested and agreeable: as few of his thoughts are drawn from business, they are most of them fit for conversation.
His taste for books is a little too just for the age he lives in; he has read all, but approves of very few.
His familiarity with the customs, manners, actions, and writings of the ancients, makes him a very delicate observer of what occurs to him in the present world. He is an excellent critic, and the time of the play is his hour of business; exactly at five he passes through New-Inn, crosses through Russell-court, and takes a turn at Will's till the play begins; he has his shoes rubbed and his perriwig powdered at the barber's as you go into the Rose. It is for the good of the audience when he is at a play, for the actors have an ambition to please him.

The person of next consideration is Sir Andrew Freeport, a merchant of great eminence in the city of London. A person of indefatigable industry, strong reason, and great experience. His notions of trade are noble and generous, and (as every rich man has usually some sly way of jesting, which would make no great figure were he not a rich man) he calls the sea the British Common. He is acquainted with commerce in all its parts, and will tell you that it is a stupid and barbarous way to extend dominion by arms: for true power is to be got by arts and industry. He will often argue, that if this part of our trade were well cultivated, we should gain from one nation; and if another, from another. I have heard him prove, that diligence makes more lasting acquisitions than valour, and that sloth has ruined more nations than the sword. He abounds in several frugal maxims, amongst which the greatest favourite is, "A penny saved is a penny got." A general trader of good sense is pleasanter company than a general scholar; and Sir Andrew having a natural unaffected eloquence, the perspicuity of his discourse gives the same pleasure that wit would in another man. He has made his fortune himself; and says that England may be richer than other kingdoms, by as plain methods as he himself is richer than other men; though at the same time I can say this of him, that there is not a point in the compass, but blows home a ship in which he is an owner.

Next to Sir Andrew in the club-rooms sits Captain Sentry,* a gentleman of great courage, good understanding, but invincible modesty. He is one of those that deserve very well, but are very awkward

* It has been said, that the real person alluded to under this name was C. Kempenfelt, father of the Admiral Kempenfelt who deplorably lost his life, when the Royal George of 100 guns sank at Spithead, Aug. 29, 1782.

at putting their talents within the observation of such as should take notice of them. He was some years a captain, and behaved himself with great gallantry in several engagements and at several sieges; but having a small estate of his own, and being next heir to Sir Roger, he has quitted a way of life in which no man can rise suitably to his merit, who is not something of a courtier as well as a soldier. I have heard him often lament, that in a profession where merit is placed in so conspicuous a view, impudence should get the better of modesty. When he had talked to this purpose, I never heard him make a sour expression, but frankly confess that he left the world, because he was not fit for it. A strict honesty, and an even regular behaviour, are in themselves obstacles to him that must press through crowds, who endeavour at the same end with himself, the favour of a commander. He will, however, in his way of talk excuse generals, for not disposing according to men's desert, or inquiring into it; for, says he, that great man who has a mind to help me, has as many to break through to come at me, as I have to come at him: therefore he will conclude, that the man who would make a figure, especially in a military way, must get over all false modesty, and assist his patron against the importunity of other pretenders, by a proper assurance in his own vindication. He says it is a civil cowardice to be backward in asserting what you ought to expect, as it is a military fear to be slow in attacking when it is your duty. With this candour does the gentleman speak of himself and others. The same frankness runs through all his conversation. The military part of his life has furnished him with many adventures, in the relation of which he is very agreeable to the company; for he is never overbearing, though accustomed to command men in the utmost degree below him; nor ever too obsequious, from a habit of obeying men highly above him.

But that our society may not appear a set of humours, unacquainted with the gallantries and pleasures of the age, we have amongst us the gallant Will Honeycomb,* a gentleman who, according to his years, should be in the decline of his life, but having been very careful of his person, and always had a very easy fortune, time has made but very little impression, either by wrinkles on his forehead, or traces on his brain. His person is well turned, and of a good height. He is very ready at that sort of discourse with which men usually entertain women. He has all his life dressed very well, and remembers habits as others do men. He can smile when one speaks to him, and laughs easily. He knows the history of every mode, and can inform you from which of the French king's wenchers our wives and daughters had this manner of curling their hair, that way of placing their hoods—whose frailty was covered by such a sort of petticoat, and whose vanity to shew her foot made that part of the dress so short in such a year. In a word, all his conversation and knowledge has been in the female world. As other men of his age will take notice to you what such a minister said upon such an occasion, he will tell you, when the Duke of Monmouth danced at court, such a woman was then smitten—another was taken with him at the head of his troop in the Park. In all these important relations, he has ever about the same time received a kind glance, or a blow of a fan from some celebrated beauty, mother of the present Lord

commoner the starts up, "I Mirable bego affair; that y
a dog than a This way of t conversation
I find there i who rarely s
that sort of n
fine gentlem
women are no

I cannot te
I am next to he visits us b
to every man is a clergyman learning, gre
good breeding
very weak c
accept of suc
his function
among divine lawyers. The
of his life, cre loud advances
subject he spe
years, that h earnestness t
which he alwa
who has no hastening to t ceives hope fr
are my ordin

No. 3. S.

Et quo quile Aut quibus
Atque in qu
In somnis e

—What
And fill me

In one of looked into th and was not a cretaries, and that wealthy stations, acc just and regu
memory the m
heard concern
the methods
nion, have al
always been
and party pri

The thought
ment for a w a kind of me contemplation
else the reader

Methought
had been the instead of the wards the up seated on a th
me) was Pu adorned wit
many acts c

* It has been said that a Colonel Cleland was supposed to have been the real person alluded to under this character.

BRITISH ESSAYISTS.

agna charta,
t hand, and e lower end
which was sat upon the ere covered
en made for lady seemed veral pieces
freshed her secret plea-
at the same ness, if she hurt them.
s in all her delicacy of ed with va-
who I found ged colour,
She was er valetudi-
even in her
y consump-
she should n, and most
a skeleton.
her decays,
ment out of the highest

erving these
ion. There ho received
world, which ally reading
heard, to he changed
f health or

ap of bags another so e floor, on vered with ls on either
wonder at,
d the same as a Lydian
t she could icious metal.
d hurry of n a dream, s flew open,
ost hideous (a dream)
wo, though nd mingled too tedious
which rea-
at the first econd were s of a com-
two years He had a ce he often
a citizen,
hat he saw
of so many moon, and

, born June

earth in the Rehearsal, that danced together for no other end but to eclipse one another.

The reader will easily suppose, by what has been before said, that the lady on the throne would have been almost frightened to distraction, had she seen but any one of these spectres; what then must have been her condition when she saw them all in a body? She fainted and died away at the sight.

Et neque jam color est misto candore rubori; Nec vigor, et vires, et quæ modo visa placebant, Nec corpus remanet— Ovid Met. iii. 491.

— Her spirits faint,
Her blooming cheeks assume a pallid teint,
And scarce her form remains.

There was a great change in the hill of money-bags, and the heaps of money, the former shrinking and falling into so many empty bags, that I now found not above a tenth part of them had been filled with money.

The rest that took up the same space, and made the same figure, as the bags that were really filled with money, had been blown up with air, and called into my memory the bags full of wind which Homer tells us his hero received as a present from Æolus. The great heaps of gold on either side the throne now appeared to be only heaps of paper, or little piles of notched sticks, bound up together in bundles, like Bath fagots.

Whilst I was lamenting this sudden desolation that had been made before me, the whole scene vanished. In the room of the frightful spectres, there now entered a second dance of apparitions very agreeably matched together, and made up of very amiable phantoms. The first pair was Liberty, with Monarchy at her right hand. The second was Moderation leading in Religion; and the third a person whom I had never seen,* with the Genius of Great Britain. At the first entrance the lady revived, the bags swelled to their former bulk, the pile of fagots and heaps of paper changed into pyramids of guineas: and for my own part, I was so transported with joy that I awaked, though I must confess I would fain have fallen asleep again to have closed my vision, if I could have done it.—C.

No. 4.] MONDAY, MARCH 5, 1710-11.

— Egregii mortalem altique silentii?
Hor. 2 Sat. vi. : 8.
One of uncommon silence and reserve.

AN author, when he first appears in the world, is very apt to believe it has nothing to think of but his performances. With a good share of this vanity in my heart, I made it my business these three days to listen after my own fame; and as I have sometimes met with circumstances which did not displease me, I have been encountered by others which gave me much mortification. It is incredible to think how empty I have in this time observed some part of the species to be, what mere blanks they are when they first come abroad in the morning, how utterly they are at a stand until they are set a-going by some paragraph in a newspaper.

Such persons are very acceptable to a young author, for they desire no more in any thing but to be new, to be agreeable. If I found consolation among such, I was as much disquieted by the incapacity of others. These are mortals who have a certain curiosity without power of reflection, and perused my papers like spectators rather than readers. But there is so little pleasure in inquiries that so nearly concern ourselves (it being the worst way in the world to fame, to be too anxious about it) that upon the whole I resolved for the future to go on in my ordinary way; and without too much fear or hope about the business of reputation, to be very careful of the design of my actions, but very negligent of the consequences of them.

* The Elector of Hanover, afterwards George I.

It is an endless and frivolous pursuit to act by any other rule, than the care of satisfying our own minds in what we do. One would think a silent man, who concerned himself with no one breathing, should be very little liable to misrepresentations; and yet I remember I was once taken up for a Jesuit, for no other reason but my profound taciturnity. It is from this misfortune, that, to be out of harm's way, I have ever since affected crowds. He who comes into assemblies only to gratify his curiosity, and not to make a figure, enjoys the pleasures of retirement in a more exquisite degree than he possibly could in his closet: the lover, the ambitious, and the miser, are followed thither by a worse crowd than any they can withdraw from. To be exempt from the passions with which others are tormented, is the only pleasing solitude. I can very justly say with the sage, "I am never less alone than when alone."

As I am insignificant to the company in public places, and as it is visible I do not come thither as most do, to show myself, I gratify the vanity of all who pretend to make an appearance, and have often as kind looks from well-dressed gentlemen and ladies, as a poet would bestow upon one of his audience. There are so many gratifications attend this public sort of obscurity, that some little distastes I daily receive have lost their anguish; and I did, the other day, without the least displeasure, overhear one say of me, "that strange fellow;" and another answer, "I have known the fellow's face these twelve years, and so must you; but I believe you are the first ever asked who he was." There are, I must confess, many to whom my person is as well known as that of their nearest relations, who give themselves no farther trouble about calling me by my name or quality, but speak of me very currently by the appellation of Mr. What-d'y-e-call-him.

To make up for these trivial disadvantages, I have the highest satisfaction of beholding all nature with an unprejudiced eye; and having nothing to do with men's passions or interests, I can, with the greater sagacity, consider their talents, manners, failings, and merits.

It is remarkable, that those who want any one sense, possess the others with greater force and vivacity. Thus my want of, or rather resignation of speech, gives me the advantages of a dumb man. I have, methinks, a more than ordinary penetration in seeing; and flatter myself that I have looked into the highest and lowest of mankind, and made shrewd guesses, without being admitted to their conversation, at the inmost thoughts and reflections of all whom I behold. It is from hence that good or ill fortune has no manner of force towards affecting my judgment. I see men flourishing in courts, and languishing in jails, without being prejudiced, from their circumstances, to their favour or disadvantage; but from their inward manner of bearing their condition, often pity the prosperous, and admire the unhappy.

Those who converse with the dumb, know from the turn of their eyes, and the changes of their countenance, their sentiments of the objects before them.

I have indulged that the few smiles with which I see every point I look at. Will I not other night at my right hand, will I believe Will looking with a box before us, She has, I will think, that childish than time, he said, but perhaps to mother; for beauty to be gance of her yet if she has another, or has not allow her would call a my eye towards what I looked at, in the face

"Behold, behold the beauty of her innocence of her affability, are nance; she knows she is good.

conscious virtue! What a blooming woman expresses the beauty of language."

It was prudent object, and the less creatures move a knowledge of insignificant are but pictures.

Thus the world of entertainment and commerce of discovery and not in perhaps raised effect I cannot As my pleasure of the sight, I have always been the fair sex.

believed or content the world, and gallantry of our people, I these my speech the young through ginity, marriage woman's day, style and air I say this, I not lower but course for the but refined.

talking sentences covers he can In a word, I work, if amon furnish tea-table on matters which concerned to app or affection. I was unable to de-speculation, overs say to time I shall e to conceal e made by our to make they are in ng the time n with the s considera- en shall be eproach for shall here- y in friend- great and e passion, e examined. ated at now, heir proper ent writing y shall not 710-11.

Poet. ver. 5.

ragantly la- s to gratify tion in the quires, that machines rd. How ve laughed est in robes upon a sea lery would entertained enchanted d real cas- skill in cri- realities ame piece; s the repre- emblances, one would with herds he country ral parts of joining to- decoration uld recom- ors, as well a fortnight eage full of was won- ut them to, tance, who g what he e had been ows for the ; "what! s the other, e first act, uriosity so , by which ct the part ough upon a nearer inquiry I found the sparrows put the same trick upon the audience that Sir Martin Mar-all* practised upon his mistress; for though they flew in sight, the music proceeded from a concert of flageolets and bird-calls, which were planted behind the scenes. At the same time I made this discovery, I found by the discourse of the actors, that there were great designs on foot for the improvement of the opera; that it had been proposed to break down a part of the wall, and to surprise the audience with a party of a hundred horse, and that there was actually a project of bringing the New-river into the house, to be employed in jets-d'eau and water-works. This project, as I have since heard, is postponed till the summer season, when it is thought the coolness that proceeds from fountains and cascades will be more acceptable and refreshing to people of quality. In the mean time, to find out a more agreeable entertainment for the winter season, the opera of Rinaldo is filled with thunder and lightning, illuminations and fire-works, which the audience may look upon without catching cold, and indeed without much danger of being burnt; for there are several engines filled with water, and ready to play at a minute's warning, in case any such accident should happen. However, as I have a very great friendship for the owner of this theatre, I hope that he has been wise enough to insure his house before he would let this opera be acted in it.

It is no wonder that those scenes should be very surprising, which were contrived by two poets of different nations, and raised by two magicians of different sexes. Armida (as we are told in the argument) was an Amazonian enchantress, and poor Signior Cassani (as we learn from the persons represented) a Christian conjuror (Mago Cristiano). I must confess I am very much puzzled to find how an Amazon should be versed in the black art, or how a good Christian, for such is the part of the magician, should deal with the devil.

To consider the poet after the conjurers, I shall give you a taste of the Italian from the first lines of his preface: "Eccoti, benigno lettore, un parto di poche sere, che se ben nato di notte, non è però aborto di tenebre, ma si farà conoscere figlio d'Apollo con qualche raggio di Parnasso:" "Behold, gentle reader, the birth of a few evenings, which, though it be the offspring of the night, is not the abortive of darkness, but will make itself known to be the son of Apollo, with a certain ray of Parnassus." He afterwards proceeds to call Mynheer Handel the Orpheus of our age, and to acquaint us, in the same sublimity of style, that he composed this opera in a fortnight. Such are the wits to whose tastes we so ambitiously conform ourselves. The truth of it is, the finest writers among the modern Italians express themselves in such a florid form of words, and such tedious circumlocutions, as are used by none but pedants in our own country; and at the same time fill their writings with such poor imaginations and conceits, as our youths are ashamed of before they have been two years at the university. Some may be apt to think that it is the difference of genius which produces this difference in the works of the two nations; but to show that there is nothing in this, if we look into the writings of the old Italians, such as Cicero and Virgil, we shall find that the English writers, in their way of thinking and expressing themselves, resemble those authors much more than the modern Italians pretend to do. And as for the poet himself, from whom the dreams of this opera* are taken, I must entirely agree with Monsieur Boileau, that one verse in Virgil is worth all the clinquant or tinsel of Tasso.

* A comedy by J. Dryden, borrowed from Quinault's Amant indiscret, and the Etourdi of Moliere.

But to return to the sparrows: there have been so many flights of them let loose in this opera, that it is feared the house will never get rid of them; and that in other plays they may make their entrance in very wrong and improper scenes, so as to be seen flying in a lady's bed-chamber, or perching upon a king's throne—besides the inconveniences which the heads of the audience may sometimes suffer from them. I am credibly informed, that there was once a design of casting into an opera the story of Whittington and his Cat, and that, in order to it, there had been got together a great quantity of mice; but Mr. Rich, the proprietor of the playhouse, very prudently considered that it would be impossible for the cat to kill them all, and that consequently the princes of the stage might be as much infested with mice, as the prince of the island was before the cat's arrival upon it; for which reason he would not permit it to be acted in his house. And indeed I cannot blame him; for, as he said very well upon that occasion, I do not hear that any of the performers in our opera pretend to equal the famous pied piper,† who made all the mice of a great town in Germany follow his music, and by that means cleared the place of those little noxious animals.

Before I dismiss this paper, I must inform my reader, that I hear there is a treaty on foot between London and Wise‡ (who will be appointed gardeners of the playhouse) to furnish the opera of Rinaldo and Armida with an orange-grove: and that the next time it is acted, the singing-birds will be personated by tom-tits, the undertakers being resolved to spare neither pains nor money for the gratification of the audience.—C.

No. 6.] WEDNESDAY, MARCH 7, 1710-11.

Credebant hoc grande nefas, et morte piamdum, Si juvenis vetulus non assurrexerat — Juv. Sat. xiii. 54.

‘Twas impious then (so much was age rever’d)
For youth to keep their seats when an old man appear’d.

I know no evil under the sun so great as the abuse of the understanding, and yet there is no one vice more common. It has diffused itself through both sexes, and all qualities of mankind, and there is hardly that person to be found, who is not more concerned for the reputation of wit and sense, than of honesty and virtue. But this unhappy affectation of being wise rather than honest, witty than good-natured, is the source of most of the ill habits of life. Such false impressions are owing to the abandoned writings of men of wit, and the awkward imitation of the rest of mankind.

For this reason Sir Roger was saying last night, that he was of opinion none but men of fine parts deserved to be hanged. The reflections of such men are so delicate upon all occurrences which they are concerned in, that they should be exposed to more than ordinary infamy and punishment, for offending against such quick admonitions as their own souls give them, and blunting the fine edge of their minds in such a manner, that they are no more shocked at vice and folly than he is at the sight of a new coat. There is no greater mark of a man of great parts than to be insensible of one side of satisfaction, and to have lost the taste of the other. Scarcely, he disabled himself for a day to get his sense, he is not half a sense. The he finds reason, he has a weakness, he deserves to be nates his supply of his Sir Roger, “But,” could private virtue parts forsook done, so it be so whimsical nature and circumstance with condition with contemptible public of, therefore for together; they have a prope ral tendency agreeable to good-breeding hinted, is his entire as

While the self in good which made “What I am of opinion neglect our cusable. If of that, you unaccountable not always only the gu times of a v upon exami least virtuo of admitting without cor this means what we do will not pas taste. Sir good sense honour to e of wit, to h follies. The ing his wit being in t after to say writing of hands of r and chaste ployment s ought to be in public, foundation, in his studi ornament society is u * Rinaldo, an opera, 8vo. 1711. The plan by Aaron Hill; the Italian words by Sig. G. Rossi; and the music by Handel.

† June 26, 1294, the rats and mice by which Hamelen was infested, were allured, it is said, by a piper, to a contiguous river, in which they were all drowned.

‡ London and Wise were the Queen's gardeners at this time.

in what is and rea-
another.
is going
te; when tful, and as polite
man who
of being our good ng so just upon ex-
creable to us? And n that we l which is that it is becoming,
think so.
I think,
as age?
on of this roduce a
that the
st vicious.
lic repre-
ur of the se too late
y. Many difficulty that they they sat.
d accord-
which he d expose
he whole Athenian
were also When the pointed for e virtuous
the great-
The Athese of the y, gave a
cried out, but the 710-11.

p. ii. 208.

aintenance,
family very occasion of a strange afraid por-
er to their observed which I heard from sat down,
hile, "My you may ndle last to talk of family affairs, a little boy at the lower end of the table told her, that he was to go into join-hand on Thursday. "Thursday!" says she, "No, child, if it please God, you shall not begin upon Childermas-day; tell your writing-master that Friday will be soon enough." I was reflecting with myself on the oddness of her fancy, and wondering that any body would establish it as a rule, to lose a day in every week. In the midst of these my musings, she desired me to reach her a little salt upon the point of my knife, which I did in such a trepidation and hurry of obedience, that I let it drop by the way; at which she immediately startled, and said it fell towards her. Upon this I looked very blank; and observing the concern of the whole table, began to consider myself, with some confusion, as a person that had brought a disaster upon the family. The lady, however, recovering herself after a little space, said to her husband with a sigh, "My dear, misfortunes never come single." My friend, I found, acted but an under part at his table, and being a man of more good-nature than understanding, thinks himself obliged to fall in with all the passions and humours of his yoke-fellow. "Do not you remember, child," says she, "that the pigeon-house fell the very afternoon that our careless wench spilt the salt upon the table?" "Yes," says he, "my dear, and the next post brought us an account of the battle of Almanza." The reader may guess at the figure I made, after having done all this mischief. I dispatched my dinner as soon as I could, with my usual taciturnity; when, to my utter confusion, the lady seeing me quitting my knife and fork, and laying them across one another on my plate, desired me that I would humour her so far as to take them out of that figure, and place them side by side. What the absurdity was which I had committed I did not know, but I suppose there was some traditionary superstition in it; and therefore, in obedience to the lady of the house, I disposed of my knife and fork in two parallel lines, which is the figure I shall always lay them in for the future, though I do not know any reason for it.

It is not difficult for a man to see that a person has conceived an aversion to him. For my own part, I quickly found, by the lady's looks, that she regarded me as a very odd kind of fellow, with an unfortunate aspect. For which reason I took my leave immediately after dinner, and withdrew to my own lodgings. Upon my return home, I fell into a profound contemplation on the evils that attend these superstitious follies of mankind; how they subject us to imaginary afflictions, and additional sorrows, that do not properly come within our lot. As if the natural calamities of life were not sufficient for it, we turn the most indifferent circumstances into misfortunes, and suffer as much from trifling accidents as from real evils. I have known the shooting of a star spoil a night's rest; and have seen a man in love grow pale, and lose his appetite, upon the plucking of a merry-thought. A screech-owl at midnight has alarmed a family more than a band of robbers; nay, the voice of a cricket hath struck more terror than the roaring of a lion. There is nothing so inconsiderable, which may not appear dreadful to an imagination that is filled with omens and prognostics. A rusty nail, or a crooked pin, shoot up into prodigies.

I remember I was once in a mixed assembly, that was full of noise and mirth, when on a sudden an old woman unluckily observed, there were thirteen of us in company. This remark struck a panic into several who were present, insomuch that one or two of the ladies were going to leave the room; but a friend of mine taking notice that one of our female companions was big with child, affirmed there were fourteen in the room, and that, instead of portending one of the company should die, it plainly foretold one of them should be born. Had not my friend found this expedient to break the omen, I question not but half the women in the company would have fallen sick that very night.

An old maid that is troubled with the vapours produces infinite disturbances of this kind among her friends and neighbours. I know a maiden aunt of a great family, who is one of these antiquated sybils, that forebodes and prophesies from one end of the year to the other. She is always seeing apparitions, and bearing death-watches; and was the other day almost frightened out of her wits by the great household that howled in the stable, at a time when she lay ill with the tooth-ache. Such an extravagant cast of mind engages multitudes of people, not only in impertinent terrors, but in supernumerary duties of life; and arises from that fear and ignorance which are natural to the soul of man. The horror with which we entertain the thoughts of death (or indeed of any future evil,) and the uncertainty of its approach, fill a melancholy mind with innumerable apprehensions and suspicions, and consequently dispose it to the observation of such groundless prodigies and predictions. For as it is the chief concern of wise men to retrench the evils of life by the reasonings of philosophy; it is the employment of fools to multiply them by the sentiments of superstition.

For my own part, I should be very much troubled were I endowed with this divining quality, though it should inform me truly of every thing that can befall me. I would not anticipate the relish of any happiness, nor feel the weight of any misery, before it actually arrives.

I know but one way of fortifying my soul against these gloomy presages and terrors of mind, and that is, by securing to myself the friendship and protection of that Being, who disposes of events, and governs futurity. He sees, at one view, the whole thread of my existence, not only that part of it which I have already passed through, but that which runs forward into all the depths of eternity. When I lay me down to sleep, I recommend myself to his care; when I awake, I give myself up to his direction. Amidst all the evils that threaten me, I will look up to him for help, and question not but he will either avert them, or turn them to my advantage. Though I know neither the time nor the manner of the death I am to die, I am not at all solicitous about it; because I am sure that he knows them both, and that he will not fail to comfort and support me under them.

No. 8.] FRIDAY, MARCH 9, 1710-II.

*At Venus obscuro gradientes aere sepsit, Et multo nebulae circum Dea fudit amictu.
Cernere ne quis eos* ———— VIRG. Æn. l. 415.

They march obscure, for Venus kindly shrouds With mists their persons, and involves in clouds.—DAYDEN.

I SHALL here communicate to the world a couple of letters, which I believe will give the reader as good an entertainment as any that I am able to furnish him with, and therefore shall make no apology for them:—

“TO THE SPECTATOR, &c.

“SIR,—I am one of the directors of the society for the reforming myself a proper person, have thorough religion in Great Britain with the predominate the whole island virtue has made corporations; and are committed in my own family respondents in send me up all the little justice in their

“I am no less than the registers and registers in different parts of the country. I can describe to you in what manner which gaming drunkenness. I am disposed to lanes and alleys. When I well, and improve very well acquainted of female night.

“After this you know, that information of I think falls especially since criminals too our society. has of late been conspicuous to be continued all the persons are masked, way, lest we shall well, or a peer sides, their not afraid they will nity, though of constables, them from our yours; as before give no part affronted by you.

“If we are observed by trived for the women either by friends who first entrance addresses him where the persons show their friends, and end the place. I dinous assembly and intrigue methods, by prevent such from meeting

“I am your

Not long another upon and style of Templar:

1710-11.

ny vice or
ake for it,

In order
e time in asquerade.

by half-ag to adopt mination I disguised

aken out to
of the first

gracefully.
one another

ell read in ing verses

no

anguishing had made

ed my face
g upon her

re of a co-
transported

I plied her allantries I

ings to so ate meeting

coach or but I had

e days, be-
I had con-

heard, by y does not

am not the upon for a

ken a cloud
use of this

ay possibly
I do most

er, B. L."

e myself, in nd till then

ight enter-

Mr. Buckley,

1710-11.

Sat. xv. 163.

FAIR.

d, as an in-

ke all occa-

s into those commonly set of men

ough never

o a kind of

k, upon the

I know a

e was a club

as you may well suppose) to entertain one another with spright-liness and wit, but to keep one another in countenance. The room where the club met was something of the largest, and had two entrances, the one by a door of a moderate size, and the other by a pair of folding-doors. If a candidate for this corpulent club could make his entrance through the first, he was looked upon as unqualified; but if he stuck in the passage, and could not force his way through it, the folding-doors were immediately thrown open for his reception, and he was saluted as a brother. I have heard that this club, though it consisted but of fifteen persons, weighed above three ton.

In opposition to this society, there sprung up another composed of scarecrows and skeletons, who, being very meagre and envious, did all they could to thwart the designs of their bulky brethren, whom they represented as men of dangerous principles; till at length they worked them out of the favour of the people, and consequently out of the magistracy. These factions tore the corporation in pieces for several years, till at length they came to this accommodation; that the two bailiffs of the town should be annually chosen out of the two clubs; by which means the principal magistrates are at this day coupled like rabbits, one fat and one lean.

Every one has heard of the club, or rather the confederacy, of the kings. This grand alliance was formed a little after the return of King Charles the Second, and admitted into it men of all qualities and professions, provided they agreed in the surname of King, which, as they imagined, sufficiently declared the owners of it to be altogether untainted with republican and anti-monarchical principles.

A Christian name has likewise been often used as a badge of distinction, and made the occasion of a club.
That of the George's, which used to meet at the sign of the George, on St. George's-day, and swear "Before George," is still fresh in every one's memory.

There are at present, in several parts of this city, what they call street-clubs, in which the chief inhabitants of the street converse together every night.
I remember, upon my inquiring after lodgings in Ormond street, the landlord, to recommend that quarter of the town, told me there was at that time a very good club in it; he also told me, upon farther discourse with him, that two or three noisy country 'squires, who were settled there the year before, had considerably sunk the price of house-rent; and that the club (to prevent the like inconveniences for the future) had thoughts of taking every house that became vacant into their own hands, till they had found a tenant for it, of a sociable nature and good conversation.

The Hum-drum club, of which I was formerly an unworthy member, was made up of very honest gentlemen of peaceable dispositions, that used to sit together, smoke their pipes, and say nothing till midnight. The Mum club (as I am informed) is an institution of the same nature, and as great an enemy to noise.

After these two innocent societies, I cannot forbear mentioning a very mischievous one, that was erected in the reign of King Charles the Second; I mean the club of Duellists, in which none was to be admitted that had not fought his man. The president of it was said to have killed half a dozen in single combat; and as for the other members, they took their seats according to the number of their slain. There was likewise a side-table, for such as had only drawn blood, and shown a laudable ambition of taking the first opportunity to qualify themselves for the first table.
This club, consisting only of men of honour, did not continue long, most of the members of it being put to the sword, or hanged, a little after its institution.

Our modern celebrated clubs are founded upon eating and drinking, which are points wherein most men agree, and in which the learned and the illiterate, the dull and the airy, the philosopher and the buffoon, can all of them bear a part. The Kit-cat* itself is said to have taken its original from a mutton-pie. The beef-steak† and October clubs, are neither of them averse to eating and drinking, if we may form a judgment of them from their respective titles.

When men are thus knit together, by a love of society, not a spirit of faction, and do not meet to censure or annoy those that are absent, but to enjoy one another; when they are thus combined for their own improvement, or for the good of others, or at least to relax themselves from the business of the day by an innocent and cheerful conversation, there may be something very useful in these little institutions and establishments.

I cannot forbear concluding this paper with a scheme of laws that I met with upon a wall in a little alehouse. How I came thither I may inform my reader at a more convenient time. These laws were enacted by a knot of artisans and mechanics, who used to meet every night; and as there is something in them which gives us a pretty picture of low life, I shall transcribe them word for word.

Rules to be observed in the Two-penny Club, erected in this place for the preservation of friendship and good neighbourhood.

1. Every member at his first coming in shall lay down his two-pence.
2. Every member shall fill his pipe out of his own box.
3. If any member absents himself, he shall forfeit a penny for the use of the club, unless in case of sickness or imprisonment.
4. If any member swears or curses, his neighbour may give him a kick upon the shins.
5. If any member tells stories in the club that are not true, he shall forfeit for every third lie an half-penny.
6. If any member strikes another wrongfully, he shall pay his club for him.
7. If any member brings his wife into the club, he shall pay for whatever she drinks or smokes.
8. If any member's wife comes to fetch him home from the club, she shall speak to him without the door.
9. If any member calls another a cuckold, he shall be turned out of the club.
10. None shall be admitted into the club that is of the same trade with any member of it.
11. None of the club shall have his clothes or shoes made or mended, but by a brother member.

* An account of this club, which took its name from Christopher Cat, the maker of their mutton-pies, has been given in the new edition of the Tatler, with notes, in 6 vols. The portraits of its members were drawn by Kneller, who was himself one of their number, and all portraits of the same dimensions and form, are at this time called kit-cat pictures. The original portraits are now the property of William Baker, Esq., to whom they came by inheritance from J. Tonson, who was secretary to the club. It was originally formed in Shire-lane, about the time of the trial of the seven bishops, for a little free evening conversation; but in Queen Anne's reign comprehended above forty noblemen and gentlemen of the first rank for quality, merit, and fortune, firm friends of the Hanoverian succession.

† Of this club, it is said, that Mrs. Woffington, the only woman in it, was president; Richard Estcourt, the comedian, was their providore; and as an honourable badge of his office, wore a small gridiron of gold hung round his neck with a green silk riband.

12. No member.

The moral is wholesome, but my reader would he would like Ben Jonson, cited by Livy, ancient Greek

No. 10.]

Non aliter
Remigis
Atque ille

So the boy
And, slow
But if the Then down

It is with city inquiring receiving more seriousness and there are all every day: paper, which I may reckon London and to distinguish of their ignorance have raised spare no pains and their shall endeavor temper with possible, but tion of the and discretioning starts of memories of them out of into which fallow for a only to be kept. It was said down from shall be am brought P schools and bles, at tea. I would commend the families, the tea and bro vise them punctually part of the

Sir Francis book, comp like Moses up and down not be so v appears, the leave it to not much one's self, Poland: as as tend to and preju inflame ha In the t

BRITISH ESSAYISTS.

en whom I
and allies,
to live in the
in it; and or laziness
ess with the
m. Under contempla-
ows of the given to be of business;
world as a judgment of

ust likewise the blanks
with ideas,
ay has sup-
these poor n, when I y have met
ag? and by for think-
ow what to morning;
ldges of the nd whether lie at the re grave or to the no-morning, I stir out of per, and do them such all have a ne ensuing

per will be have often as taken in ersions for ntrived for as they are oted to the their great
of their ives. The very good ursion to gue makes fter. Their mbroidery,
on of jellies
ate of ordinaltitudes of ation, that and virtue,
the orna-
ve and re-olders. I publishing deavour to entertain the minds
At the finishing t beautiful
ur to point
nishes, as shments of my gentle ands, will not grudge throwing away a quarter of an hour in a day upon this paper, since they may do it without any hinderance to business.

I know several of my friends and well-wishers are in great pain for me, lest I should not be able to keep up the spirit of a paper which I oblige myself to furnish every day; but to make them easy in this particular, I will promise them faithfully to give it over as soon as I grow dull. This I know will be matter of great raillery to the small wits, who will frequently put me in mind of my promise, desire me to keep my word, assure me that it is high time to give over, with many other little pleasantries of the like nature, which men of a little smart genius cannot forbear throwing out against their best friends, when they have such a handle given them of being witty. But let them remember, that I do hereby enter my caveat against this piece of raillery.—C.

No. 11.] TUESDAY, MARCH 13, 1710-11.

Dat veniam corvis, vexat censura columbas.—Juv. Sat. li. 63.
The doves are censur'd, while the crows are spar'd.

ARIETTA is visited by all persons of both sexes, who have any pretence to wit and gallantry. She is in that time of life which is neither affected with the follies of youth, nor infirmities of age; and her conversation is so mixed with gaiety and prudence, that she is agreeable both to the old and the young. Her behaviour is very frank, without being in the least blameable: and as she is out of the track of any amorous or ambitious pursuits of her own, her visitants entertain her with accounts of themselves very freely, whether they concern their passions or their interests. I made her a visit this afternoon, having been formerly introduced to the honour of her acquaintance by my friend Will Honeycomb, who has prevailed upon her to admit me sometimes into her assembly, as a civil inoffensive man. I found her accompanied with one person only, a common-place talker, who, upon my entrance, arose, and after a very slight civility sat down again; then, turning to Arietta, pursued his discourse, which I found was upon the old topic of constancy in love. He went on with great facility in repeating what he talks every day of his life; and with the ornaments of insignificant laughs and gestures, enforced his arguments by quotations out of plays and songs, which allude to the perjuries of the fair, and the general levity of women. Methought he strove to shine more than ordinarily in his talkative way, that he might insult my silence, and distinguish himself before a woman of Arietta's taste and understanding. She had often an inclination to interrupt him, but could find no opportunity, till the larum ceased of itself, which it did not till he had repeated and murdered the celebrated story of the Ephesian Matron.

Arietta seemed to regard this piece of raillery as an outrage done to her sex; as indeed I have always observed that women, whether out of a nicer regard to their honour, or what other reason I cannot tell, are more sensibly touched with those general aspersions which are cast upon their sex, than men are by what is said of theirs.

When she had a little recovered herself from the serious anger she was in, she replied in the following manner:

"Sir, when I consider how perfectly new all you have said on this subject is, and that the story you have given us is not quite two thousand years old, I cannot but think it a piece of presumption to dis-

le it with you; but your quotations put me in mind of the fable of the lion and the man. The lion, talking with that noble animal, showed him the ostentation of human superiority, a sign of a man killing a lion. Upon which, the lion said very truly, 'We lions are none of us painters, else we should show a hundred men killed by lions for one man killed by a man.' You men are writers, and you represent us women as unbecoming as you ease in your works, while we are unable to return an injury. You have twice or thrice observed in our discourse, that hypocrisy is the very foundation of our education; and that an ability to dissemble in affections is a professed part of our breeding. These and such other reflections are sprinkled up and down the writings of all ages, by authors, who have behind them memorials of their resentment against the scorn of particular women, in invectives against the whole sex. Such a writer, I doubt not, as the celebrated Petronius, who invented the pleasant aggravations of the Ephesian lady; but when we consider this question between the sexes, which has been rather a point of dispute or railery ever since there were men and women, let us take lessons from plain people, and from such as have not either ambition or capacity to embellish their narrations with any beauties of imagination. I was the other day amusing myself with Lignon's Account of Barbadoes; and, in answer to your well-wrought tale, I will give you, (as it dwells upon my memory) out of that honest traveller, in his fifty-fifth page, the history of Inkle and Yarico.

"Mr. Thomas Inkle, of London, aged twenty years, embarked in the Downs, in the good ship called the Achilles, bound for the West Indies, on the 16th of June, 1617, in order to improve his fortune by trade and merchandize. Our adventurer was the third son of an eminent citizen, who had taken particular care to instil into his mind an early love of gain, by making him a perfect master of numbers, and consequently giving him a quick view of loss and advantage, and preventing the natural impulses of his passions, by prepossession towards his interests. With a mind thus turned, young Inkle had a person every way agreeable, a ruddy vigour in his countenance, strength in his limbs, with ringlets of fair hair loosely flowing on his shoulders. It happened, in the course of the voyage, that the Achilles, in some distress, put into a creek on the main of America, in search of provisions. The youth, who is the hero of my story, among others went on shore on this occasion. From their first landing they were observed by a party of Indians, who hid themselves in the woods for that purpose. The English unadvisedly marched a great distance from the shore into the country, and were intercepted by the natives, who slew the greatest number of them. Our adventurer escaped among others, by flying into a forest. Upon his coming into a remote and pathless part of the wood, he threw himself, tired and breathless, on a little hillock, when an Indian maid rushed from a thicket behind him. After the first surprise they appeared mutually agreeable to each other. If the European was highly charmed with the limbs, features, and wild graces of the naked American; the American was no less taken with the dress, complexion, and shape of an European, covered from head to foot. The Indian grew immediately enamoured of him, and consequently solicitous for his preservation. She therefore conveyed him to a cave, where she gave him a delicious repast of fruits, and led him to a stream to slake his thirst. In the midst of these good offices, she combed his hair, and delid to that of her fine laugh at him for a person of distinction in a different dress, gles, and beads. many spoils, which her, so that his spotted skins of the others of fowls, while his confinement in the dusk of the light, to unfrequently him where to lie, falls of waters and was to watch and fear of her country to consult his safety pass away their language of their own, cated to his mistress her in his country such silks as his tried in houses disposed to wind or the enjoyment of they were there to correspondence these when Yarico, in vessel on the coast in the night, with accompanied him bound to Barbadoes arrives in that down to the shore ket of the Indian horses and oxen.

"To be short into English ten upon his loss of many days interest his stay with Yarico man pensive, and able to give his consideration, the Yarico to a Barb that the poor girl condition, told but he only made his demands upon

I was so touched should be always tron) that I let which a woman sure, take for granted I could make her

No. 12.] WEL
— Vele

I root th' old
At my coming for I could set I was forced to an officious land morning how I family, and liv
when my landl
man, took it int
and therefore w

BRITISH ESSAYISTS.

done. This I bore for me one day that he thought it was high accordingly took new about a week after, I as I said before, was out me into an advent, in the following holy man left his lodg- afternoon, and was Islington: if any one B., fishmonger in the awarded for his pains." world to keep my own fishmonger not know- of my life was never low woman, who has a plies with my humour member that we have these five years; my every morning with- I point to my chin- upon which my landlady takes my meaning, and ls. She has likewise hat when her little boy or prattle in my face, calls him off, and bids man. At my first en- as troubled with the ne every time I came ly observing that upon ed Pish, and went out n ceremony to be used sent I walk into the ing taken notice of, or e business or discourse will ask her mistress he gentleman is ready ress (who is indeed an at the servants as behind my back. In e house, and enter into liberty as a cat, or any am as little suspected ar or see.

ere were several young ting about the fire with telling stories of spirits opening the door the air discourse, but my hem that it was nobody s the name which I go well as in the family,) g me. I seated myself table at one end of the a book that I took out readful stories of ghosts, ed at the feet of a bed, d by moonlight; and of d into the Red Sea for drawing their curtains er old women's fables of rit raised another, I ob- ury story the whole com- crowded about the fire. f a little boy, who was hat I am mistaken if he self this twelvemonth. hat the imaginations of anifestly crazed, and, I am sure, will be the worse for it as long as th I heard one of the girls, that had looked u over her shoulder, asking the company how had been in the room, and whether I did r paler than I used to do. This put me unde apprehensions that I should be forced to myself, if I did not retire; for which reason the candle into my hand, and went up i chamber, not without wondering at this una ble weakness in reasonable creatures, th should love to astonish and terrify one s Were I a father, I should take a particular preserve my children from these little horrors gination, which they are apt to contract wh are young, and are not able to shake off wh are in years. I have known a soldier that tered a breach, affrighted at his own shad look pale upon a little scratching at his do the day before had marched up against a be cannon. There are instances of persons w been terrified even to distraction at the fig tree, or the shaking of a bulrush. The tru is, I look upon a sound imagination as the blessing of life, next to a clear judgment and conscience. In the mean time, since there s few whose minds are not more or less su these dreadful thoughts and apprehensions, w to arm ourselves against them by the dictate son and religion, "to pull the old woman our hearts" (as Persius expresses it in the r my paper,) and extinguish those impertinent which we imbibed at a time that we were not judge of their absurdity. Or, if we believe, s wise and good men have done, that there s phantoms and apparitions as those I have been ing of, let us endeavour to establish to our interest in him who holds the reins of the creation in his hands, and moderates them af a manner, that it is impossible for one being t loose upon another, without his knowledge s mission.

For my own part, I am apt to join in the with those who believe that all the regions of swarm with spirits; and that we have multi spectators on all our actions, when we thi selves most alone; but instead of terrifying with such a notion, I am wonderfully ple think that I am always engaged with such s merable society in searching out the wonder creation, and joining in the same concert o and adoration.

Milton has finely described this mixed com of men and spirits in Paradise; and had d his eye upon a verse in old Hesiod, which is word for word the same with his third line in following passage:

Nor think, though men were none,
That heav'n would want spectators, God want p Millions of spiritual creatures walk the earth Unseen, both when we wake and when we sleep:
All these with ceaseless praise his works behold Both day and night. How often from the steep Of echoing hill or thicket have we heard Celestial voices, to the midnight air, Sole, or responsive each to other's note, Singing their great Creator? Oft in bands, While they keep watch, or nightly rounding wall With heavenly touch of instrumental sounds, In full harmonic number join'd, their songs Divide the night, and lift our thoughts to heaven

PARAD. LOS

C.

13.] THURSDAY, MARCH 15, 1710-11.

Dic mihi, si fueris tu leo, qualis eris?—MART.Nonne gressu lion, how would you behave?

THERE is nothing that of late years has afforded us of greater amusement to the town than Signior Nicolini's combat with a lion in the Haymarket, which has been very often exhibited to the general faction of most of the nobility and gentry in the dom of Great Britain. Upon the first rumour is intended combat, it was confidently affirmed, is still believed by many in both galleries, that it would be a tame lion sent from the tower every night, in order to be killed by Hydaspes: this is, though altogether groundless, so universally believed in the upper regions of the play-house, that some of the most refined politicians in these of the audience gave it out in a whisper, that the was a cousin-german of the tiger who made his entrance in King William's days, and that the would be supplied with lions at the public expense during the whole session. Many likewise were conjectures of the treatment which this lion was met with from the hands of Signior Nicolini; supposed that he was to subdue him in recitation as Orpheus used to serve the wild beasts in his and afterward to knock him on the head; some said that the lion would not pretend to lay his upon the hero, by reason of the received opinion, that a lion will not hurt a virgin. Several, pretended to have seen the opera in Italy, had told their friends, that the lion was to act a part in Dutch, and roar twice or thrice to a thorough before he fell at the feet of Hydaspes. To top up a matter that was so variously reported, I made it my business to examine whether this intended lion is really the savage he appears to be, or a counterfeit.

It before I communicate my discoveries, I must inform the reader, that upon my walking behind scenes last winter, as I was thinking on something else, I accidentally jostled against a monstrous animal that extremely startled me, and upon my survey of it, appeared to be a lion rampant. The lion, seeing me very much surprised, told me, in a gentle voice, that I might come by him if I pleased: "for," says he, "I do not intend to hurt body." I thanked him very kindly, and passed on: and in a little time after, saw him leap upon the stage, and act his part with very great applause. It has been observed by several, that the lion has changed his manner of acting twice or thrice since his appearance; which will not seem strange, if I acquaint my reader that the lion has been reproved upon the audience three several times. The lion was a candle-snuffer, who being a fellow of choleric temper, overdid his part, and would offer himself to be killed so easily as he ought to have done; besides, it was observed of him, that he was more surly every time that he came out of the box; and having dropped some words in ordi-conversation, as if he had not fought his best, he suffered himself to be thrown upon his back in the scuffle, and that he would wrestle with Nicolini for what he pleased out of his lion's skin: it was thought proper to discard him; and it is only believed to this day, that had he been kept upon the stage another time, he would certainly have done mischief. Besides, it was objected at the first lion, that he reared himself so high on his hinder paws, and walked in so erect a posture, that he looked more like an old man than a lion.

The second lion belonged to the play, and was mild and peaceable; the former was too full of part; inasmuch, that upon the stage, he would not without grappling the opportunity of showing his strength; is said, indeed, that his flesh-colour doubled for himself, in his rage; must not omit, that he had ed me with so much noise.

The acting lion is a country gentleman, who desires his name mentioned handsomely in his will, from gain, that he may get it; and that it is believed in this manner, than in the same time says, that upon himself, that a ill-natured world would lion's skin." This is of such a happy mix, that he outdoes both together greater and the memory of man.

I must not conclude notice of a groundless a gentleman's disapprobation myself an admirer; and the lion have been another, and smoking scenes; by which to conclude, that it is but present upon the stage, if any such correspondence it was not till the combat to be looked upon as a rule of the dramatic, is used every day in the is more usual than to have been tearing embracing one another.

I would not be content, to reflect upon this part only compared audience; he knows more admirers than famous equestrian statues that more people go who sits upon it. Of indignation to see a majesty to kings, real lovers, thus sinking in viour, and degraded Prentice. I have observed would copy after them they make the same inform their faces with visions, how glorious with that action which the forced thoughts, expressions of an Italian have related this combat are at present the most popular part of Great

Audiences have a taste for the coarsest and most grievance does not taste, but of common

BRITISH ESSAYISTS.

CH 16, 1710-11.

is.—OVID, Met. iv. 590. onstrous shape.

g upon the spirit and five-and-twenty years
me; and lamented to s they neglected their od sense; but that the grown more childish, ormer. While I was fellow, whose face I e, gave me the fol-“Sir, the Lion pree, and desired me to market, March 15.

, and have stifled my ions upon operas, un-
ou plainly insinuate, lf have a correspondistent with the valour ss of mine. I desire orbear such intima-ust say it is a great ow so great an esteem ge a Lion that is your

of the lion and man, at that matter, that I soever of the animals have misrepresented ntry gentleman, who ereas, had I still the once had when I was gu my manhood for a
as low as my circum-
as much a man of ho-
any beast for bread, “Yours, &c.”

than one of my land-several others, with up my present paper,
the same subject, viz.
ersions.

-garden, March 13.

ears under-sexton of ent-garden, and have s six times in all those performed to my great ht last past, during tion take the warning ng, to go to a puppet-ll, under the Piazzas.
y lost my two custom-ixpence a-piece over ght, but Mrs. Rachael

There now appear
ary people, who come yers, so that I have no on Sundays. I have to acquaint the ladies and that it stands on but they only laugh at

s before all the whole
e such a tool for the may choose hours less ow, Mr. Powell has a ve a very thin house;

which if you can remedy, you will very oblige, “Sir, yours, &

The following epistle I find is from the unde of the masquerade:

“Sir,

“I have observed the rules of my mask so ear (in not inquiring into persons) that I cannot whether you were one of the company or no Tuesday; but if you were not, and still des come, I desire you would, for your own ente ment, please to admonish the town, that all p indifferently are not fit for this sort of divers could wish, Sir, you could make them unde that it is a kind of acting to go in masquerad a man should be able to say or do things prop the dress in which he appears. We have no then rakes in the habit of Roman senators grave politicians in the dress of rakes. The tune of the thing is, that people dress themse what they have a mind to be, and not what th fit for. There is not a girl in the town, but I have her will in going to a mask, and she shall as a shepherdess. But let me beg of them t the Arcadia, or some other good romance, they appear in any such character at my
The last day we presented, every body was so habited, that when they came to speak to other, a nymph with a crook had not a word but in the pert style of the pit bawdry; and in the habit of a philosopher was speechless, till casion offered of expressing himself in the re the tying rooms. We had a judge that dai minuet with a quaker for his partner, while dozen harlequins stood by as spectators: a drank me off two bottles of wine, and a Jew up half a ham of bacon. If I can bring my to bear, and make the maskers preserve the racters in my assemblies, I hope you will allow is a foundation laid for more elegant and imp gallantries than any the town at present affor consequently, that you will give your approba the endeavours of, Sir,

“Your most obedient humble ser

I am very glad the following epistle obliges mention Mr. Powell a second time in the paper; for indeed there cannot be too great ragement given to his skill in motions*, prov is under proper restrictions,

“Sir,

“The opera at the Haymarket, and that the little Piazza in Covent-garden, being at the two leading diversions of the town, as Powell professing in his advertisements to Whittington and his Cat against Rinaldo a mida, my curiosity led me the beginning week to view both these performances, and m observations upon them.

“First, therefore, I cannot but observe th Powell wisely forbearing to give his compan of fare before-hand, every scene is new and pected; whereas it is certain, that the unde of the Haymarket, having raised too great pectation in their printed opera, very much point their audience on the stage

“The King of Jerusalem is obliged to con the city on foot, instead of being drawn in a tr ant chariot by white horses, as my opera-bo promised me; and thus while I expected A

* Puppet-shows were formerly called motions

ragons should rush forward towards Argentes, I and the hero was obliged to go to Armida, and and her out of her coach. We had also but a very short allowance of thunder and lightning; though I cannot in this place omit doing justice to the boy who had the direction of the two painted dragons, and made them spit fire and smoke. He flashed out his rosin in such just proportions, and in such due time, that I could not forbear conceiving hopes of his being one day a most excellent player. I saw, indeed, but two things wanting to render his whole action complete, I mean the keeping his head a little lower, and hiding his candle.

"I observe that Mr. Powell and the undertakers of the opera had both the same thought, and I think much about the same time, of introducing animals on their several stages—though indeed, with very different success. The sparrows and chaffinches at the Haymarket fly as yet very irregularly over the stage; and instead of perching on the trees, and performing their parts, these young actors either get into the galleries, or put out the candles; whereas Mr. Powell has so well disciplined his pig, that in the first scene he and Punch dance a minuet together. I am informed, however, that Mr. Powell resolves to excel his adversaries in their own way; and introduces larks in his next opera of Susannah, or Innocence Betrayed, which will be exhibited next week, with a pair of new Elders.

"The moral of Mr. Powell's drama is violated, I confess, by Punch's national reflections on the French, and King Harry's laying his leg upon the Queen's lap, in too ludicrous a manner, before so great an assembly.

"As to the mechanism and scenery, every thing, indeed, was uniform, and of a piece, and the scenes were managed very dexterously; which calls on me to take notice, that at the Haymarket, the undertakers forgetting to change the side-scenes, we were presented with the prospect of the ocean in the midst of a delightful grove; and though the gentlemen on the stage had very much contributed to the beauty of the grove, by walking up and down between the trees, I must own I was not a little astonished to see a well-dressed young fellow in a full bottomed wig, appear in the midst of the sea, and without any visible concern taking snuff.

"I shall only observe one thing farther, in which both dramas agree; which is, that by the squeak of their voices the heroes of each are eunuchs; and as the wit in both pieces is equal, I must prefer the performance of Mr. Powell, because it is in our own language.

"I am, &c."

R.

No. 15.] SATURDAY, MARCH 17, 1710-11.

Parva leves capiunt animos—Ovid. Ars Am. l. 159.
Light minds are pleased with trifles.

WHEN I was in France, I used to gaze with great astonishment at the splendid equipages and party-coloured habits of that fantastic nation. I was one day in particular contemplating a lady that sat in a coach adorned with gilded Cupids, and finely painted with the loves of Venus and Adonis. The coach was drawn by six milk-white horses, and loaded behind with the same number of powdered footmen. Just before the lady were a couple of beautiful pages, that were stuck among the harness, and by their gay dresses and smiling features, looked like the elder brothers or the little boys that were carved and painted in every corner of the coach.

The lady was towardward gave novel. She had dresses of a gentlemanly acquaintance of this shining her by one of The circumstances seems, the display of pageantry to after she was pomp and magnificence the loss of one another.

I have often countable human with every thing on the number light fantastical young lady the couple of imposters together, did themselves, by complicity of conversation was doubt her choice, one thought himself his liveries, who married her then.

The usual count much cherishes with outside married couple, and keep their coach the name of at you learn some ball is a great furnishes conversation furbelow of prodiamond, a breeding topics. I perery of the spectators on those ornate illustrious in the women are thus imaginations, but colours, attentive to the and substantiated trained up in the of every embrace. A pair of fringed word, lace and with the like to women of when artificial the most airy and rambles.

True happiness enemy to pomp place, from the next, from the select company naturally have meadows: in within itself, tudes of witne false happiness the eyes of the deceive any satisfaction gives herself, raises in other

BRITISH ESSAYISTS.

no existence but quality, delights and passes away a

walks and gardens.
friend and compa-
love with her ever abound with good
tual esteem; and e another. Their
omy, in its hours
at and diversion,
alth within itself.
they may return
ther; and some-e properly, as to ew in themselves
e means they are
y their children,
become the envy,
now them.

of Fulvia! She d, and looks upon us little domestic ality. She thinks
cies herself out of ag, the playhouse,
s in a perpetual
f thought, and is she thinks there
e missing of an ore afflicting to pities all the va-
alls every woman
e, a poor-spirited, rtification would er setting herself
ed that she grows
!

without observing,
upon this female character of Ca-
ave shaken off all still described as poet tells us, that er of the enemy, Trojan, who wore coat of mail, with A golden bow,"
his garment was his head covered ng metal." The this well-dressed
's longing for the hed with:

more.—Æo. xi. 782.
glittering trifles, (al,) represents to male hero.—C.

H 19, 1710-11.

et omnia in hoc sum.
Hon. 1 Ep. 4. 11.
y call,
Pore.

ng me to be very
s now in fashion;
of silver garters
been lately seen
et-street; a third

sends me a heavy complaint against fringed gloves To be brief, there is scarce an ornament of either sex which one or other of my correspondents has not inveighed against with some bitterness, and recommended to my observation. I must, therefore, on for all, inform my readers, that it is not my intention to sink the dignity of this my paper with reflections upon rod heels or top-knots, but rather to enter in the passions of mankind, and to correct those ill-proved sentiments that give birth to all those little extravagances which appear in their outward dress and behaviour. Poppish and fantastic ornaments are only indications of vice, not criminal in the selves. Extinguish vanity in the mind, and you naturally retrench the little superfluities of garb and equipage. The blossoms will fall of themselves when the root that nourishes them is destroyed.

I shall therefore, as I have said, apply my re-dies to the first seeds and principles of an affect dress, without descending to the dress itself; that at the same time I must own that I have thought creating an officer under me, to be entitled the Commander of Small Wares, and of allotting him one day the week for the execution of such his office. An orrator of this nature might act under me, with the same regard as a surgeon to a physician; he might be employed in healing those blotches and mours which break out in the body, while the is sweetening the blood, and rectifying the constitution. To speak truly, the young people of both sexes are so wonderfully apt to shoot out into swords or sweeping trains, bushy head-dresses or bottomed periwigs, with several other encumbrances of dress, that they stand in need of being pruned frequently, lest they should be oppressed with ornaments, and overrun with the luxuriancy of their bits. I am much in doubt whether I should give preference to a Quaker that is trimmed close, almost cut to the quick, or to a beau that is loaded with such a redundancy of excrescences. I therefore desire my correspondents to let me know they approve my project, and whether they think erecting of such a petty censorship may not turn the emolument of the public; for I would not do thing of this nature rashly and without advice.

There is another set of correspondents to whom must address myself in the second place; I mean such as fill their letters with private scandal, black accounts of particular persons and families. The world is so full of ill-nature, that I have poems sent me by people who cannot spell, and satisfied by those who scarce know how to write.
By the last post in particular, I received a pack scandal which is not legible; and have a whole bundle of letters in women's hands, that are full of and calumnies; insomuch, that when I see the names of Cælia, Phillis, Pastora, or the like, at the beginning of a scrawl, I conclude of course that it brings some account of a fallen virgin, a faithless wife, an amorous widow. I must therefore inform my correspondents, that it is not my design to publish of intrigues and cuckoldoms, or to little infamous stories out of their present lurking holes into broad day-light. If I attack the vice I shall only set upon them in a body; and will not be provoked by the worst usage I can receive from any one to make an example of any particular criminal. short, I have so much of a Drawcansir in me, that shall pass over a single foe to charge whole armies.
It is not Lais or Silenus, but the harlot and drunkard, whom I shall endeavour to expose; I shall consider the crime as it appears in the spi-

is circumstanced in an individual. I think Calpurnia, who wished the whole city of Rome on one neck, that he might behead them at a blow, shall do, out of humanity, what that emulid have done in the cruelty of his temper, every stroke at a collective body of offenders. At the same time I am very sensible that I spread a paper like private calumny and calumny; but as my speculations are not under discussion, they are not exposed to this temptation.

In the next place I must apply myself to my party adherents, who are continually teasing me to take notice of one another's proceedings. How often I am teased by both sides, if it is possible for me to be a disinterested spectator of the rogueries that are committed by the party which is opposite to him in the letter. About two days since, I was reminded with an old Grecian law, that forbids any man to stand as a neuter, or a looker-on, in the disputes of his country. However, as I am very sensible that a paper would lose its whole effect, should it be the outgrowth of a party, I shall take care to be free of every thing which looks that way. In any way assuage private inflammations, or private ferments, I shall apply myself to it with all my endeavours; but will never let my heart be drawn into having done any thing towards settling those feuds and animosities that extinguish civility, deface government, and make a nation a wilderness.

I have said under the three foregoing heads, I am afraid, very much retrench the number of correspondents. I shall therefore acquaint myself with what he has started any hint which he is not to pursue, if he has met with any surprising circumstance which he does not know how to tell, if he has discovered any epidemical vice which has escaped my notice, or has heard of any uncommon virtue which would desire to publish; in short, if he has any trials that can furnish out an innocent diversion, I shall promise him my best assistance in bringing them up for a public entertainment. My paper my reader will find was intended for the use of a multitude of correspondents; but I will pardon me if I single out one of them, who has made me so very humble a request. I cannot forbear complying with it.

"TO THE SPECTATOR.

"MARCH 15, 1710-11.

I am at present so unfortunate as to have nothing to do but to mind my own business; and therefore I am sure that you will be pleased to put me into the post under you. I observe that you have appointed your printer and publisher to receive letters and advertisements for the city of London, and I am myself very much honoured by you, if you appoint me to take in letters and advertisements for the city of Westminster and the duchy of York. Though I cannot promise to fill such a paper with sufficient abilities, I will endeavour to make up with industry and fidelity what I want in arts and genius.

I am, Sir, your most obedient servant,

"CHARLES LILLIE."

] TUESDAY, MARCH 20, 1710-11.

strum ante omnia vultum.—JUV. x. 191.

—A visage rough,
deformed, unfeatured.

Our persons are not of our own making,
are such as appear defective or uncomely, it is, methinks, an honour to dare to be ugly; at least, being abashed with a countenance which we cannot help, and which I would not defend a hair's breadth much time at a glass, and a few guishing graces to defend us. We ought to be contented with our shape, so far, as never to reflect on that subject. People who are not accustomed to remarks on any occasion, when a man enters with a prominent nose, an assembly, or is distinguished by a mouth, or obliquity of aspect, that has any of these oddities, he is as merry upon himself as upon that occasion. We are with such a cheerfulness that we are at first frightened at his looks, and then pleased with him. As I shall rally him for natural defects, I am able when he can jest upon them.

Madam Maintenon's face is of this kind, and has drawn much irregularity of his shape, much resembling the leg of a stool, likewise by representing an engine and pulley, with a rope that hangs about his head. When there happens a change in a visage, and the owner is not of a great dignity, he must be of a great emptiness from raillery. This is to be pleasant upon the countenance of Falstaff, in Shakspeare, who is upon fat and lean as a horse, and humorously called woolf in flesh; Harry, a starveling in a bow-case, and a tuck. The subjects of the conversation kept up upon the person, and sensibility in this point, are the necessities of self-love. For an unhappy in the mould of a face, so long as it is broad and full, partly arise from my opinion, and domer than other people, much lengthening the face, at leisure to determine, has been often put out of countenance of my face, and was forced to conceal it by wearing a wig, and letting my beard grow, and roughly got over this defect with a much shorter, and I am for a member of the house. The following letter gives me an account of it from Oxford, and is full of spirit of mirth and good nature. To that place, I shall send it, and it shall come to me.

"MOST PROFOUNDLY."

"Having been very much amused by your speculations, and your specimen upon clubs, and your will continue, I shall take pleasure with a brief account of your life, have not seen in your paper, fortune to touch upon the African continent, and the Grand Cairo. There has

BRITISH ESSAYISTS.

out saying any thing) of the madal societies, as the ph, and amongst the burlesque upon which, em to have come into some years last past together, and assumed this ill-favoured fra- and twelve fellows; ined by patent to any phn's men would have erefore erected a se- es), but liberty is left eat Britain, provided rules of the club, as he Act of Deformity: l transmit to you. ever shall be admitted is aspect, or peculiar h the president and to determine, and the oice.

be had upon exami- gentlemen that offer n; or to the obliquity ever.

of any man's nose be ther as to length or preence to be elected. be two or more com- casieris paribus, he that he preference.

on his first night, is to lish of cod-fish, and a nose portraiture they er disproportion, over is, as soon as their se the heads of Ther- Hudibras, and the old all the celebrated ill- e for the club-room.

n professed admirers imously declare that uragement to such as tute, though none yet o is their most devoted e two copies of verses, is society; the first, a to Mrs. Touchwood, e teeth; the other, a s left shoulder. Mrs. all pox, has grown to- in the club; but I ne- is fine things, as upon ally officiates at their ud extols as the very n; in short, Nell (says ary works of nature; and features, so valued outside and symmetry, me leave to add, that easant gentleman, and he has got (as he calls ut him; and he often meet a fellow with a air (which is so agree- French nation); and, y in this particular, he his pocket book of all ears have fallen under at the head of them, and in the rear (as one of a promising and i ing aspect),

"Sir, your obliged and humble serva
"ALEXANDER CARBU
Oxford, March 12, 1710.

No. 18.] WEDNESDAY, MARCH 21, 1710.
Equitis quoque jam migravit ab aure volu Omnis ad incertos oculos, et gauda vana.

Hon. 2 E
But now our nobles too are fops and vain, Neglect the sense, but love the painted scene.—C

It is my design in this paper to deliver d posterity a faithful account of the Italian ope of the gradual progress which it has made up English stage; for there is no question b great grand-children will be curious to kn reason why their forefathers used to sit togel an audience of foreigners in their own count to hear whole plays acted before them in a which they did not understand.

Arsinoe was the first opera that gave us a Italian music. The great success this ope with produced some attempts of forming piec Italian plans, which should give a more natu reasonable entertainment than what can be m in the elaborate trifles of that nation. This a the poetasters and fiddlers of the town, wh used to deal in a more ordinary kind of war therefore laid down an established rule, whic ceived as such to this day, "That nothing is of being well set to music, that is not nonsen

This maxim was no sooner received, but medately fell to translating the Italian and as there was no great danger of hurt sense of those extraordinary pieces, our would often make words of their own whic entirely foreign to the meaning of the passag pretended to translate; their chief care b make the numbers of the English verse fo to those of the Italian, that both of them mig the same tune. Thus the famous song in C

Barbara, si, t' intendo, &c.

Barbarous woman, yes, I know your meaning which expresses the resentments of an ang was translated into that English lamentation

Frail are a lover's hopes, &c.

And it was pleasant enough to see the most persons of the British nation dying away a guishing to notes that were filled with a rage and indignation. It happened also v quently, where the sense was rightly transla necessary transposition of words, which were out of the phrase of one tongue into that of made the music appear very absurd in one that was very natural in the other. I reme Italian verse that ran thus, word for word:

And turn'd my rage into pity.

which the English for rhyme-sake translated And into pity turned my rage.

By this means the soft notes that were to pity in the Italian, fell upon the wo in the English; and the angry sounds tl turned to rage in the original, were made to pity in the translation. It oftentimes h likewise, that the finest notes in the air t the most insignificant words in the sentence known the word "and" pursued through t gamut, have been entertained with many djous "the," and have heard the most graces, quavers, and divisions bestowed upon

THE SPECTATOR

"from;" to the eternal honour of our icles.

step to our refinement was the introslian actors into our opera; who sang their own language, at the same time strymen performed theirs in our native e king or hero of the play generally ilian, and his slaves answered him in he lover frequently made his court, and part of his princess, in a language which understand. One would have thought it t to have carried on dialogues after this hout an interpreter between the persons ed together; but this was the state of the re for about three years.

the audience grew tired of understand-opera; and therefore, to ease themselves the fatigue of thinking, have so ordered it, that the whole opera is performed in a tongue. We no longer understand the four own stage; insomuch that I have afraid, when I have seen our Italian per-ttering in the vehemence of action, that been calling us names, and abusing us selves; but I hope, since we put such confidence in them, they will not talk before our faces, though they may do it me safety as if it were behind our backs. a time, I cannot forbear thinking how nastorian who writes two or three hundred , and does not know the taste of his wise will make the following reflections: "In ng of the eighteenth century, the Italian so well understood in England, that operas on the public stage in that language."

ce knows how to be serious in the confu-absurdity that shews itself at first sight.
want any great measure of sense to see e of this monstrous practice; but what e more astonishing, it is not the taste of but of persons of the greatest politeness, established it.

alians have a genius for music above the he English have a genius for other per-of a much higher nature, and capable of mind a much nobler entertainment. think it was possible (at a time when an d that was able to write the Phædra and ,) for a people to be so stupidly fond of opera, as scarce to give a third day's that admirable tragedy? Music is cerry agreeable entertainment: but if it would ntire possession of our ears, if it would scapable of hearing sense, if it would ex-that have a much greater tendency to the of human nature; I must confess I would better quarter than Plato has done, who out of his commonwealth.

nt our notions of music are so very un-at we do not know what it is we like; only,
, we are transported with any thing that lish: so it be of a foreign growth, let it French, or High Dutch, it is the same short, our English music is quite rooted othing yet planted in its stead.

royal palace is burnt to the ground, every liberty to present his plan for a new one;
h it be but indifferently put together, it sh several hints that may be of use to a tect. I shall take the same liberty, in a paper, of giving my opinion upon the sub-ssic; which I shall lay down only in a problematical manner, to be are masters in the art.—C

No. 19.] THURSDAY

Di bene fecerunt, inopis Finxerunt animi, raro et

Thank Heaven, that made To action little, less to w

OSSEAVING one person an utter stranger to him, w methought expressed an en ent from what could be rail able as the gentleman he sider, not without some see of an envious man. Som has a certain magical force the envious have, by their enjoyments of the happy, some have been so curious and seasons when the st most effectually pernicious has been when the person circumstance of glory and the mind of the prosperous abroad, among things with posed to the malignity. I speculations so abstracted excellent things which one upon this miserable affecti mon road of life, consider lation to these three heads his happiness.

The envious man is in which ought to give him p life is inverted; and the the highest satisfaction to this passion, give the quic are subject to it. All the creatures are odious. Ye wisdom, are provocations a wretched and apostate with excellence, and to h prove him! The conditi the most emphatically mi capable of rejoicing in a but lives in a world when plot against his quiet, by ness and advantage. W tale-bearer; he makes it versation with envious n handsome young fellow, d cretly married to a great he adds circumstances to to aggravate their distres his knowledge, he has an thousands. Will has ma ture this sort of temper, he finds them change c wish such a piece of news to speak some good or o acquaintance.

The reliefs of the env blemishes and imperfecti in an illustrious charact consolation to an envious known honour does a thi when any action which better information appea stances, that the fame of instead of being attribut satisfaction to these m

BRITISH ESSAYISTS.

any fancy is nearer merit is shared
years ago, there
at the name of the ere incapable of
e supposed writer.
ok great pains to
his. That again it was overlooked
lly written by an-amongst a cluster eried out, "Gen-
ou yourselves had ou were, whoever
er to the envious,
kind, is to keep nd by that means falling upon any envious man clear
ion of any man's mention his un-
ars such a one is ers when you add ord, the only sure
not to deserve it.
man in delight, it
ant in romance;
ists in the many If any who pro-common under-be that aimed at l laudable, meets
vious man, under an smile with an ill effect it may the future.
he nature of this how to avoid the hese my speculamyself, I think I on hearing in a mended, I immeould spring from a description of ved, as I grow in pretensions to ome ease to those e honour to tor-
of this my paper.
d deserves com-
in pity to them,
ster consolations
y person. In the spectator has wit,
ink that he does
ay one praises his lves by consider-
gest.—R.

23, 1710-11.

z, Hom.

akings which I correction of im-at heart. This nce as Spectator;
itted by the eyes,
rs would perhaps guring any other plaint of a young is kind, with that command of herself as befits beauty and innocen and yet with so much spirit as sufficiently expres her indignation. The whole transaction is perfor ed with the eyes; and the crime is no less than employing them in such a manner, as to divert the of others from the best use they can make of the even looking up to heaven.

"Sir,

"There never was (I believe) an acceptable but had some awkward imitators. Even since Spectator appeared, have I remarked a kind of whom I choose to call Starers; that without any gard to time, place, or modesty, disturb a la company with their impertinent eyes. Specta make up a proper assembly for a puppet-show o bear-garden; but devout supplicants and atten hearers are the audience one ought to expect churches. I am, Sir, member of a small pious gregation near one of the north gates of this c much the greater part of us indeed are females, used to behave ourselves in a regular attentive m ner, till very lately one whole aisle has been turbed by one of these monstrous starers; he is head taller than any one in the church; but for greater advantage of exposing himself, stands u a hassock, and commands the whole congregat to the great annoyance of the devoutest part of auditory: for what with blushing, confusion, vexation, we can neither mind the prayers nor
mon. Your animadversion upon this insolence w be a great favour to,

"Sir, your most humble servant, S. C.

I have frequently seen this sort of fellows, and think there cannot be a greater aggravation of an fence than that it is committed where the crimina protected by the sacredness of the place which violates. Many reflections of this sort might be justly made upon this kind of behaviour, but starer is not usually a person to be convinced by reason of the thing; and a fellow that is capabl showing an impudent front before a whole congr tion, and can bear being a public spectacle, is so easily rebuked as to amend by admonitions. therefore, my correspondent does not inform me, within seven days after this date the barbarian at least stand upon his own legs only, with an eminence, my friend Will Prosper* has promi to take a hassock opposite to him, and stare agai him in defence of the ladies. I have given him rections, according to the most exact rules of op to place himself in such a manner, that he shall u his eyes wherever he throws them. I have ho that when Will confronts him, and all the ladies whose behalf he engages him, cast kind looks; wishes of success at their champion, he will h some shame, and feel a little of the pain he ha often put others to, of being out of countenance.

It has, indeed, been time out of mind gener remarked, and as often lamented, that this famil Starers have infested public assemblies. I ki no other way to obviate so great an evil, except the ease of fixing their eyes upon women, some u friend will take the part of such as are under oppression of impudence, and encounter the eye the Starers wherever they meet them. While suffer our women to be thus impudently attac they have no defence, but in the end to cast yiel glances at the Starers. In this case a man who no sense of shame, has the same advantage over

* See Spect. No. 19. W. Prosper, an honest tale-bearer.

as he who has no regard for his own life his adversary.—While the generality of are fettered by rules, and move by proper methods, he who has no respect to any of ries away the reward due to that propriety our, with no other merit, but that of hav- ted it.

an impudent fellow to be a sort of outlaw reeding, and therefore what is said of him or person can be concerned for. For this e may be free upon him. I have put my- eat pains in considering this prevailing hich we call impudence, and have taken it exerts itself in a different manner, ac- the different soils wherein such subjects ominous as are masters of it were born. ce in an Englishman is sullen and inso- a Scotchman it is untractable and rapa- an Irishman absurd and fawning: as the the world now runs, the impudent En- behaves like a surly landlord, the Scot- received guest, and the Irishman like a who knows he is not welcome. There is y thing entertaining either in the impu- a South or North Briton; but that of an is always comic. A true and genuine im- is ever the effect of ignorance without the ee of it. The best and most successful ow in this town are of that nation; they lly the advantage of the stature mentioned re letter of my correspondent, and gene- their stands in the eye of women of for- much that I have known one of them, this after he came from the plough, with a good air, lead out a woman from a play, of our own breed, after four years at Ox- two at the Temple, would have been afraid ttell how to account for it, but these people lly the preference to our own fools, in the the sillier part of womankind. Perhaps an English coxcomb is seldom so obse- an Irish one; and when the design of a visible, an absurdity in the way towards forgiven.

se who are downright impudent, and go t reflection that they are such, are more rated, than a set of fellows among us who pudence with an air of humour, and think if the most inexcusable of all faults in the h no other apology than saying in a gay out an impudent face upon the matter. an shall be allowed the advantages of im- who is conscious that he is such. If he is impudent, he may as well be otherwise; ll be expected that he blush, when he sees another do it. For nothing can atone for of modesty: without which beauty is un- and wit detestable.—R.

SATURDAY, MARCH 24, 1710-11.

cus est et pluribus umbræ.—HON. 1 Ep. v. 28.

om enough, and each may bring his friend.

CREECH.

metimes very much troubled, when I re- the three great professions of divinity, physic; how they are each of them over- with practitioners, and filled with multi- genious gentlemen that starve one another. y divide the clergy, into generals, field- and subalterns. Among the first we may reckon bishops, deans, the second are doctors and all that wear scarfs. under the subalterns. constitution preserves i incumbents, notwithstan- berless. Upon a strict there has been a great the second division, se- granted for the converti- ficers; insomuch, that w of lutestring is raised at As for the subalterns, th Should our clergy once- tice of the laity, by the they would be able to ca England.

The body of the law, superfluous members, th which he tells us was so not room to use their we- ciety of men may be d peaceable. Under the those who are carried do minster-hall, every morn- description of this species

Itas et v

“Men that hire out the are more or less passion- paid for it, and allow the proportionable to the fee him. I must, however, above three parts of the the litigious are such a their hearts, and have their passion at the bar. not know what strifes mu hall every day, that they readiness to enter the lis occasion for them.

The peaceable lawyers of the benchers of the seem to be the dignitar- dowed with those qualifi- plish a man rather for a men live peaceably in th a day, and dancing once their respective societies.

Another numberless be are those young men wh of court in order to study frequent the playhouse m and are seen in all pul- court of justice. I shall and busy multitudes that in the drawing up of writ of those greater numbers business with a pretence

If, in the third place, of physic, we shall find men. The sight of them serious, for we may lay when a nation abounds i of people. Sir William- zed to find out a reason he calls it, does not send and overrun the world wh did formerly; but had th that there were no stud and that this science north at present, he for this difficulty use of. This body of be described like the . Some of them slay

* See Dugdale's

If the infantry do less ers, it is because they into all quarters of the business in so short a regular troops, there are ng duly listed and en- to those who are so un-above-mentioned, innu- who, for want of other with the stifling of cats gs alive, or impaling of eedle for microscopical at are employed in the phase of butterflies: not merchants and spider-of these professions are seek their livelihood in merit there are in each aid to be of the science, much wonder at the hu- rather choose to place ere an honest industry tions where the greatest sense, may miscarry. curates, that might have of London, by a right m of money than what earned education? A er parts and a slow ap- ed in trade, though he n would be well enough hom he would not ven- us is careful, studious, little thick-skulled; he might have had abund-

fortune is, that parents profession, and there- e of it: whereas, in so ould consider the ge- ildren more than their

of a trading nation, that all and heavy, who may f life, which may give ing their fortunes. A not, like law, physic, or with hands; but on the udes, and gives employ- Fleets of merchant-men ating shops, that vend s in all the markets of apmen under both the incredulus odi.

MARCH 26, 1711.

Hon. Ars. Poet. ver. 5.
y sense
believe.—ROSCOMMON.

most usually understood ublic representations in f many letters relating indeed there are such monstrous things done in both, that if one been an eye-witness of them, one could not that such matters had really been exhibited, is very little which concerns human life, or ture of nature, that is regarded by the grea of the company. The understanding is di from our entertainments. Our mirth is the of fools, and our admiration the wonder of else such improbable, monstrous, and inc dreams could not go off as they do, not only the utmost scorn and contempt, but even a loudest applause and approbation. But the of my correspondents will represent this aff more lively manner than any discourse of n I shall therefore give them to my reader w this preparation, that they all come from play that the business of playing is now so manag you are not to be surprised when I say one of them are rational, others sensitive and re actors, and others wholly inanimate. I s place these as I have named them, but as th precedence in the opinion of their audience

“MR. SPECTATOR,

“Your having been so humble as to take the epistles of other animals, imboldens me, the wild boar that was killed by Mrs. Toft present to you, that I think I was hardly use having the part of the lion in Hydaspes give It would have been but a natural step for me personated that noble creature, after having myself to satisfaction in the part above-me That of a lion is too great a character for never trod the stage before but upon two leg the little resistance which I made, I hope it excused, when it is considered that the t thrown at me by so fair a hand. I must c had but just put on my brutality; and C charms were such, that beholding her ere hearing her charming voice, and astonished graceful motion, I could not keep up my fierceriness, but died like a man.

“I am, Sir, your most humble ad “THOMAS”

“MR. SPECTATOR,

“This is to let you understand, that tl house is a representation of the world in n much as in this particular, that no one ri according to his merit. I have acted seve of household-stuff with great applause f years: I am one of the men in the hanging Emperor of the Moon; I have twice perfor third chair in an English opera: and have r the pump in The Fortune-Hunters. I am no old, and hope you will recommend me so eff as that I may say something before I ge stage; in which you will do a great act of c

“Your most humble serv “WILLIAM SC

“MR. SPECTATOR,

“Understanding that Mr. Screeen has you, and desired to be raised from dumb parts; I desire, if you give him motion or that you would advance me in my way, am keep on in what I humbly presume I am n wit, in representing human and still life I have several times acted one of the fine pots in the same opera wherein Mr. Scree chair; therefore, upon his profuotion, requ may succeed him in the hangings, with my the orange-trees.

“Your humble serv
“RALPH S

"Sir, Drury-lane, March 24, 1710-11.

"I saw your friend the Templar this evening in the pit, and thought he looked very little pleased with the representation of the mad scene of The Pilgrim. I wish, Sir, you would do us the favour to amadvert frequently upon the false taste the town is in, with relation to plays as well as operas. It certainly requires a degree of understanding to play justly: but such is our condition, that we are to suspend our reason to perform our parts. As to scenes of madness, you know, Sir, there are noble instances of this kind in Shakspeare: but then it is the disturbance of a noble mind, from generous and humane resentments. It is like that grief which we have for the decease of our friends. It is no diminution, but a recommendation of human nature, that in such incidents, passion gets the better of reason; and all we can think to combat ourselves, is impotent against half what we feel. I will not mention that we had an idiot in the scene, and all the sense it is represented to have is that of lust. As for myself, who have long taken pains in personating the passions, I have to-night acted only an appetite. The part I played is Thirst, but it is represented as written rather by a drayman than a poet. I come in with a tub about me, that tub hung with quart pots, with a full gallon at my mouth. I am ashamed to tell you that I pleased very much, and this was introduced as a madness; but sure it was not human madness, for a mule or an ass may have been as dry as ever I was in my life.

"I am, Sir, your most obedient and humble servant."

From the Savoy, in the Strand.

"MR. SPECTATOR,

"If you can read it with dry eyes, I give you this trouble to acquaint you, that I am the unfortunate King Latinus, and I believe I am the first prince that dated from this palace since John of Gaunt. Such is the uncertainty of all human greatness, that I, who lately never moved without a guard, am now pressed as a common soldier, and am to sail with the first fair wind against my brother Louis of France. It is a very hard thing to put off a character which one has appeared in with applause. Thus I experienced since the loss of my diadem; for, upon quarrelling with another recruit, I spoke my indignation out of my part in recitativo;

Most audacious slave,
Durst thou an angry monarch's fury brave?

The words were no sooner out of my mouth, when a serjeant knocked me down, and asked me if I had a mind to mutiny, in talking things nobody understood. You see, Sir, my unhappy circumstances; and if by your mediation you can procure a subsidy for a prince (who never failed to make all that beheld him merry at his appearance), you will merit the thanks of

Your friend,
"THE KING OF LATIUM."

ADVERTISEMENT.

For the good of the Public.

Within two doors of the masquerade lives an eminent Italian chirurgeon, arrived from the carnival at Venice, of great experience in private cures. Accommodations are provided, and persons admitted in their masquing habits.

He has cured since his coming hither, in less than a fortnight, four scaramouches, a mountebank doctor, two Turkish bassas, three nuns, and a morris-dancer.

N. B. And be kept in r teeth without

No. 23.]

Sævit atrox Auctorem,

Fierce Vols
Descry'd ne
Nor knew t

THERE is a nerous spirit
man's reputa written with which not onl
For this reaso
the talents of
of an ill-natu
gratification t
stir up sorrow
raise uneasine
whole familie remains unse accomplishme
man is vicious mischievous o ciety. His s
who ought to merit, and ev
made the sub impossible to these arrows
other excuse
that the wou
produce nothi
in the mind
be confessed,
in them robb
how many ar
siderable sum
set up as a this case a n
not to be me but of him th
Those who outrages of t
not without t
served a pass in a light whe
it. That exc little before h
course on the ing upon it s
most comic p such a subject evidently gla
comedy on pe
divine philos writers, that piece of buff

* The follow 23, is in a set which contains lived at the tim

This was Mr. H grounded, ill-g singular in the and Addison, w
time estranged.
March 16, 1710

BRITISH ESSAYISTS.

and never ex-
but with sube-
made shews impression
to wise to dis-

by Catullus,
im with such
bet his friend the same kind
who had re-Latin poem.
ome kind ex-
assured him
a promise of which he ac-
months after.
thor, that he
k to the car-
sages which rous and for-de pope, the ed in a very er it, that he his laundress fection upon otion of her ces that Pasnade made a considerable uld discover pon his holi-

ate overtures
he discovery
a the reward
to disable the gue to be cut off. Aretine*
hows that all
aries. Nay, he makes his under contri-

I have here en behaved
its of the age hem plainly
of their received them
art, I would as capable of ot but think putation he ne, could he is, indeed,
in the ordi-ocent young
y feature; a
some domesner life for a good, a tem-
nt of counteualities that thing is wit,
humanity.
inconsiderate
acrificed the utance to a ition of dis-

ed in 1556.

tinguishing themselves by a spirit of railery and satire: as if it were not infinitely more honourable to be a good-natured man than a wit. Where there is this little petulant humour in an author, he is often very mischievous without designing to be so. For which reason, I always lay it down as a rule that an indiscreet man is more hurtful than an ill-natured one; for as the latter will only attack his enemies, and those he wishes ill to; the other injures indifferently both friends and foes. I cannot forbear on this occasion transcribing a fable out of Sir Roger l'Estrange, which accidentally lies before me. "A company of waggish boys were watching of frogs at the side of a pond, and still as any of them put up their heads, they would be pelting them down again with stones. 'Children,' says one of the frogs, 'you never consider, that though this may be play to you it is death to us.'"

As this week is in a manner set apart and dedicated to serious thoughts, I shall indulge myself in such speculations as may not be altogether unsuitable to the season; and in the mean time, as the settling in ourselves a charitable frame of mind is a work very proper for the time, I have in this paper endeavoured to expose that particular breach of charity which has been generally overlooked by divines because they are but few who can be guilty of it.—C

No. 24.] WEDNESDAY, MARCH 28, 1711.

Accurrit quidam notus mihi nomine tantum: Arreptaque manu, Quid agis, dulcissime rerum?

Hox. 1 Sat. ix. 3

Comes up a fop (I knew him but by fame), And seiz'd my hand, and called me by name—
—My dear!—how dost thou?

THERE are in this town a great number of insignificant people, who are by no means fit for the better sort of conversation, and yet have an impertinent ambition of appearing with those to whom they are not welcome. If you walk in the park, one of them will certainly join with you, though you are in company with ladies; if you drink a bottle, they will find your haunts. What makes such fellows the more burdensome is, that they neither offend nor please so far as to be taken notice of for either. It is, I presume, for this reason, that my correspondents are willing by my means to be rid of them. The two following letters are writ by persons who suffer by such impertinence. A worthy old bachelor, who sets in for his dose of claret every night at such an hour, is teased by a swarm of them; who because they are sure of room and good fire, have taken it in their heads to keep a sort of club in his company, though the sober gentleman himself is an utter enemy to such meetings.

"MR. SPECTATOR,

"The aversion I for some years have had to clubs in general, gave me a perfect relish for your speculation on that subject; but I have since been extremely mortified by the malicious world's ranking me amongst the supporters of such impertinent assemblies. I beg leave to state my case fairly; and that done, I shall expect redress from your judicious pen.

"I am, Sir, a bachelor of some standing, and a traveller; my business, to consult my own good humour, which I gratify without controlling other people's: I have a room and a whole bed to myself and I have a dog, a fiddle, and a gun: they please me, and injure no creature alive. My chief meal is a supper, which I always make at a tavern. I am constant to an hour, and not ill-humoured; for rich reasons, though I invite nobody, I have no other supped, than I have a crowd about me of that sort of good company that know not whither else to go. It is true every man pays his share; yet as they are intruders, I have an undoubted right to be the only speaker, or at least the loudest; which I maintain, and that to the great emolument of my audience. I sometimes tell them their own in pretty free language; and sometimes divert them with merry tales, according as I am in humour. I am one of those who live in taverns to a great age, by a sort of regular intemperance; I never go to bed drunk, but always flustered; I wear away very gently; am apt to be peevish, but never angry. Mr. Spectator, if you have kept various company, you know there is in every tavern in town some old humourist or other, who is master of the house as much as he that keeps it. The drawers are all in love of him; and all the customers who frequent his company, yield him a sort of comical obedience. I do not know but I may be such a fellow as this myself. But I appeal to you, whether this is to be called a club, because so many impertinents will break in upon me, and come without appointment? Lunch of Barnet has a nightly meeting, and shows every one that will come in and pay; but then he is the only actor. Why should people miscall things? If his is allowed to be a concert, why may not mine be a lecture? However, Sir, I submit it to you, and am, Sir, your most obedient servant, &c.

"THOMAS KIMBOW."

"GOOD SIR,

"You and I were pressed against each other last winter in a crowd, in which uneasy posture we suffered together for almost half an hour. I thank you for all your civilities ever since, in being of my acquaintance wherever you meet me. But the other day you pulled your hat off to me in the Park, when I was walking with my mistress. She did not like our air, and said she wondered what strange fellow I was acquainted with. Dear Sir, consider it as much as my life is worth, if she should think we were intimate: therefore I earnestly intreat you for the future to take no manner of notice of,

"Sir, your obliged humble servant,

"WILL FASHION."

A like impertinence is also very troublesome to the superior and more intelligent part of the fair sex. It is, it seems, a great inconvenience, that those of the meanest capacities will pretend to make visits, though indeed they are qualified rather to add to the furniture of the house (by filling an empty chair,) than to the conversation they enter into when they visit. A friend of mine hopes for redress in his case, by the publication of her letter in my paper; which she thinks those she would be rid of will take to themselves. It seems to be written with an eye to one of those pert, giddy, unthinking girls, who, upon the recommendation only of an agreeable person and a fashionable air, take themselves to be upon a level with women of the greatest merit:

"MADAM,

"I take this way to acquaint you with what common rules and forms would never permit me to tell you otherwise; to wit, that you and I, though unequal in quality and fortune, are by no means suitable companions. You are, it is true, very pretty, and dance, and make a very good figure in a public assembly; but, alas, Madam, you must go no farther: distance and silence are your best recommendations; therefore let me beg of you never to make me any more visit. I see one, for you see one, for you see this, that I would dance; but I would of good breeding to one another. I myself always by giving the accident makes mutually lament another at home play, and smile as we pass in our much of each of: for there are only by sight, you will always. "Your

"P. S. I subscribe I keep, that my who I am."

To prevent all gentlemen of the but once a week by miscalling the from them as are provinces; this is of the book-debtor observer of those resigned that ex Sowton; to who first coffee-grinder Samuel Burdock of the said Bird

No. 25.] THE

— Egrecs
And sickness

The following no apology.

"SIR,

"I am one of known by the nameless to you, that body, or rather do no sooner began I found my pulse the account of a self afflicted with of fevers threw hung upon me a excellent piece. I of several authors distempers, and tion; till at length manner shamed after this I found gout, except paid upon the gravel, who (as it is usual temper into another me the stone. I publication of dis into my hand the

* Mr. Tickell, in "Addison never had in his dedication of

BRITISH ESSAYISTS

myself by a l from his ob-
very well action ; who, for s, contrived a s so artificially
h any thing as means be dis-
passed by per-rned into nou-
y by the other s chair, I used insomuch that

s, to have lived elf, when I am
undred weight,
er a day's fast,
y full meal; so
o trim the bands
in my cou-
etch myself up
pound; and if,
short of it, I h a quantity of weight. In my s more than the lth's sake, I do s soon as I find walk till I have les; and when o far reduced, I ee ounces more.
ound, I keep no
and sup by the
that informs me
clude myself to ll diligence. In and a half, and ter than on the other, a quarter s more or less;

I have not cont the rest in my f what I expend-I always register be two hundred
t I am impaired
le twelvemonth.
y great care to and to keep my hat I find myself

My complexion
w, and my body
you, Sir, to con-
ve me more cer-
have already ob-ge able servant."

A Italian epitaph
dinarian: "Stavo hich it is impos-
ath often proves
o save their lives
is a reflection
erving that there
a slight, than in may give an English I was well, but try a battle; and may be applied to those multitudes of imaginary sick persons that break their constitutions by physic, and throw themselves into the arms of death by endeavouring to escape it. This method is not only dangerous, but below the practice of a reasonable creature. To consult the preservation of life, as the only end of it—to make our health our business—to engage in no action that is not part of a regimen, or course of physic—are purposes so abject, so mean, so unworthy human nature, that a generous soul would rather die than submit to them. Besides, that a continual anxiety for life vitiates all the relishes of it, and casts a gloom over the whole face of nature; as it is impossible we should take delight in any thing that we are every moment afraid of losing.

I do not mean, by what I have here said, that I think any one to blame for taking due care of their health. On the contrary, as cheerfulness of mind and capacity for business, are in a great measure the effects of a well-tempered constitution, a man cannot be at too much pains to cultivate and preserve it. But this care, which we are prompted to not only by common sense, but by duty and instinct, should never engage us in groundless fears, melancholy apprehensions, and imaginary distempers which are natural to every man who is more anxious to live, than how to live. In short, the preservation of life should be only a secondary concern, and the direction of it our principal. If we have this frame of mind, we shall take the best means to preserve life, without being over-solicitous about the event and shall arrive at that point of felicity which Ma-tial has mentioned as the perfection of happiness, neither fearing nor wishing for death.

In answer to the gentleman, who tempers his health by ounces and by scruples, and instead of complying with those natural solicitations of hunger and thirst, drowsiness, or love of exercise, governs himself by the prescriptions of his chair, I shall tell him a short fable. Jupiter, says the mythologist, to reward the piety of a certain countryman promised to give him whatever he would ask. The countryman desired that he might have the management of the weather in his own estate. He obtained his request, and immediately distributed rain, snow and sunshine, among his several fields, as he thought the nature of the soil required. At the end of the year, when he expected to see a more than ordinary crop, his harvest fell infinitely short of that of his neighbours. Upon which (says the fable) he desired Jupiter to take the weather again into his own hands, or that otherwise he should utterly ruin himself.—C.

No. 26.] FRIDAY, MARCH 30, 1711.

*Pallida mors aequo pulsat pede pauperum tabernas Regumque turres. O beate Sexti, Vitte summa brevis spem nos vetat inchoare longam.
Jam te premet nox, fabulaque manes, Et domus exilis Plutonia.*—Hon. 1 Od. iv. 13.

With equal foot, rich friend, impartial fate Knocks at the cottage and the palace gate: Life's span forbids thee to extend thy cares,
And stretch thy hopes beyond thy years;
Night soon will seize, and you must quickly go To storied ghosts, and Pluto's house below.—CARRER.

WHEN I am in a serious humour, I very often walk by myself in Westminster-abbey: where the gloominess of the place, and the use to which it is applied, with the solemnity of the building, and condition of the people who lie in it, are apt to fill the mind with a kind of melancholy, or rat-thoughtfulness that is not disagreeable. I yesterday passed a whole afternoon in the church-yard, the cloisters, and the church, amusing myself with the tombstones and inscriptions that I met with in those several regions of the dead. Most of them recorded nothing else of the buried person, but that he was born upon one day, and died upon another; the whole history of his life being comprehended in those two circumstances that are common to all mankind. I could not but look upon these registers of existence, whether of brass or marble, as a kind of satire upon the departed persons; who had left no other memorial of them, but that they were born, and that they died. They put me in mind of several persons mentioned in the battles of heroic poems, who have sounding names given them, for no other reason but that they may be killed, and are celebrated for nothing but being knocked on the head.

Glaucumque, Medontaque, Thersilochumque.—VIRG.
Glaucus, and Melon, and Thersilochus.

The life of these men is finely described in holy writ by "the path of an arrow," which is immediately closed up and lost.

Upon my going into the church, I entertained myself with the digging of a grave; and saw in every shovel-full of it that was thrown up, the fragment of a bone or skull intermixed with a kind of fresh mouldering earth that some time or other had a place in the composition of a human body. Upon this I began to consider with myself what innumerable multitudes of people lay confused together under the pavement of that ancient cathedral; how men and women, friends and enemies, priests and soldiers, monks and prebendaries, were crumbled amongst one another, and blended together in the same common mass; how beauty, strength, and youth, with old age, weakness, and deformity, lay undistinguished in the same promiscuous heap of matter.

After having thus surveyed the great magazine of mortality, as it were, in the lump, I examined it more particularly by the accounts which I found on several of the monuments which are raised in every quarter of that ancient fabric. Some of them were covered with such extravagant epitaphs, that if it were possible for the dead person to be acquainted with them, he would blush at the praises which his friends have bestowed upon him. There are others so excessively modest, that they deliver the character of the person departed in Greek or Hebrew, and by that means are not understood once in a twelve-month. In the poetical quarter, I found there were poets who had no monuments, and monuments which had no poets. I observed, indeed, that the present war has filled the church with many of these uninhabited monuments, which had been erected to the memory of persons whose bodies were perhaps buried in the plains of Blenheim, or in the bosom of the ocean.

I could not but be very much delighted with several modern epitaphs, which are written with great elegance of expression and justness of thought, and therefore do honour to the living as well as the dead. As a foreigner is very apt to conceive an idea of the ignorance or politeness of a nation from the turn of their public monuments and inscriptions, they should be submitted to the perusal of men of learning and genius before they are put in execution. Sir Cloudesly Shovel's monument has very often given me great offence. Instead of the brave rough English admiral, which was the distinguishing character of that plain gallant man, he is represented on his tomb by the figure of a posing him of state. The ment; for able action country, its death, in w honour. The want of g antiquity of this na our own co which have present the rostral cro festoons of

SPECTATOR—Nos. 5 & 6.

But to r pository of of another for so seri tainments dismal tho ginations; serious, I c and can th and solemn most gay d improve m sider with the great, read the e desire goes rents upon sion; who selves, I c whom we lying by t rival wits divided the reflect with competition When I re that died y I consider contempor

No. 27.

Ut nox
Longa v
Pupilla
Sic mihi
Consilio
Æque p
Æque n

Long as Long as Long as When th
So slow
That loo
That ke
Life's im
That tea
The old
Which
And wh

THERE is involved secret imp and has fo or other; is his being.

ches, which satisfaction anxiety they n of them, ppens very with them- they bear, ish it: re- not betake shade and most glitter- as reason- at, when he arts deceive cannot com- we every lurements; leave, but in the midst the greater k, and live oon as they f life is so opic of dis- life itself,) noment the of reason? ne point to id adieu to pleasure re- ceivily with entangled e lover sees ould aban- f thinking, in our con- of circum- us where- nd we can pest retire- so, in some f the world. r known by a perusal of My friend us discourse rastination, with whom , according his charac- , who is his e conceives no state at starts.

s to you the have laid e, of doing every day I e with daily e principle evolence to ublication in lieve merit endless per- I am dis- ed to leave n sorry you on I am in rtunes; but know I contribute more to your satisfaction, when I acknowledge I am the better man, from the influence and authority you have over, Sir,

"Your most obliged and most humble servant,
"R. O."

"SIR,

"I am entirely convinced of the truth of what you were pleased to say to me, when I was last with you alone. You told me then of the silly way I was in; but you told me so as I saw you loved me, otherwise I could not obey your commands in letting you know my thoughts so sincerely as I do at present. I know 'the creature, for whom I resign so much of my character,' is all that you said of her; but then the trifler has something in her so undesigning and harmless, that her guilt in one kind disappears by the comparison of her innocence in another. Will you, virtuous man, allow no alteration of offences? Must dear Chloe be called by the hard name you pious people give to common women? I keep the solemn promise I made you, in writing to you the state of my mind, after your kind admonition; and will endeavour to get the better of this fondness, which makes me so much her humble servant, that I am almost ashamed to subscribe myself yours,
"T. D."

"SIR,

"There is no state of life so anxious as that of a man who does not live according to the dictates of his own reason. It will seem odd to you, when I assure you that my love of retirement first of all brought me to court; but this will be no riddle when I acquaint you, that I placed myself here with a design of getting so much money as might enable me to purchase a handsome retreat in the country. At present my circumstances enable me, and my duty prompts me, to pass away the remaining part of my life in such a retirement as I at first proposed to myself; but to my great misfortune I have entirely lost the relish of it, and should now return to the country with greater reluctance than I at first came to court. I am so unhappy, as to know that what I am fond of are trifles, and that what I neglect is of the greatest importance: in short, I find a contest in my own mind between reason and fashion. I remember you once told me, that I might live in the world, and out of it, at the same time. Let me beg of you to explain this paradox more at large to me, that I may conform my life, if possible, both to my duty and my inclination. I am yours, &c.
"R. B."

R.

Letters are directed "For the Spectator, to be left at Mr. Buckley's, in Little Britain, post paid." N. B. In the form of a direction, this makes a figure in the last column of the Spectator in folio.

No. 28.] MONDAY, APRIL 2, 1711.

— Neque semper arcum

Tendit Apollo.— Hor. 2 Od. x. 19.

Nor does Apollo always bend his bow.

I shall here present my reader with a letter from a projector, concerning a new office which he thinks may very much contribute to the embellishments of the city, and to the driving barbarity out of our streets. I consider it as a satire upon projectors in general, and a lively picture of the whole art of modern criticism.

"SIR,

"Observing that you have thoughts of creating certain officers under you, for the inspection of several petty enormities you yourself cannot attend to;

and finding daily absurdities hung out upon the sign-posts of this city, to the great scandal of foreigners, as well as those of our own country, who are curious spectators of the same: I do humbly propose that you would be pleased to make me your superintendent of all such figures and devices as are or shall be made use of on this occasion; with full powers to rectify or expunge whatever I shall find irregular or defective. For want of such an officer, there is nothing like sound literature and good sense to be met with in those objects that are everywhere thrusting themselves out to the eye, and endeavouring to become visible. Our streets are filled with blue boars, black swans, and red lions; not to mention flying pigs, and hogs in armour, with many other creatures more extraordinary than any in the deserts of Africa. Strange! that one who has all the birds and beasts in nature to choose out of, should live at the sign of an Ens Rationis!

"My first task therefore should be, like that of Hercules, to clear the city from monsters. In the second place, I would forbid that creatures of jarring and incongruous natures should be joined together in the same sign; such as the bell and the neat's tongue, the dog and the gridiron. The fox and the goose may be supposed to have met, but what has the fox and the seven stars to do together? And when did the lamb and the dolphin ever meet, except upon a sign-post? As for the cat and fiddle, there is a conceit in it; and therefore I do not intend that any thing I have here said should affect it. I must, however, observe to you upon this subject, that it is usual for a young tradesman, at his first setting up, to add to his own sign that of the master whom he served; as the husband, after marriage, gives a place to his mistress's arms in his own coat. This I take to have given rise to many of those absurdities which are committed over our heads; and, as I am informed, first occasioned the three nuns and a hare, which we see so frequently joined together. I would therefore establish certain rules, for the determining how far one tradesman may give the sign of another, and in what cases he may be allowed to quarter it with his own.

"In the third place, I would enjoin every shop to make use of a sign which bears some affinity to the wares in which it deals. What can be more inconsistent than to see a bawd at the sign of the angel, or a tailor at the lion? A cook should not live at the boot, nor a shoemaker at the roasted pig; and yet, for want of this regulation, I have seen a goat set up before the door of a perfumer, and the French king's head at a sword-cutler's.

"An ingenious foreigner observes, that several of those gentlemen who value themselves upon their families, and overlook such as are bred to trade, bear the tools of their forefathers in their coats of arms. I will not examine how true this is in fact. But though it may not be necessary for posterity thus to set up the sign of their forefathers, I think it highly proper for those who actually profess the trade to show some such marks of it before their doors.

"When the name gives an occasion for an ingenious sign-post, I would likewise advise the owner to take that opportunity of letting the world know who he is. It would have been ridiculous for the ingenious Mrs. Salmon to have lived at the sign of the trout; for which reason she has erected before her house the figure of the fish that is her nameake. Mr. Bell has likewise distinguished himself by a device of the same nature; and here, Sir, I must beg leave to observe to you, that this particular

figure of a
of wit in t know, that it in the heathen g
which, in c handsome the bell-sa standing b zled upon
into the re
of the Fre beautiful v
is called i every whe savage. T
vince you
and conse
ment whic conclude another re ject with that I can inhabitant
A surly ch bear; as u
at the sig painted up curiously g
over it, an riosity to found, upo
agréments
I know, Si
these hints
so, humbly
patronage.

I shall a
came to me

"From

"Hos

"Having
rager of it dancer that to the Grea swings up drinks a g
He gives they will r
for a brot
good tumb
family wh being an e
the countr entertainm
doubt not puppet-sho
better man tainly he i
the most
If you will your paper
my show f

C

BRITISH ESSAYISTS.

3, 1711.

erni est.
Hox. i Sat. x. 23
roduce,
e.

startled our ecitative at its were wonder-g the word of ages in music.
laughing when illet-doux, and o a tune. The ter a king and an absurdity, a desert, or a
ing unaccom-

acting in reci-
I cannot but which prevailed
novation: the ic being more
to plain and common method

at practice, is ativo with En-

must observe,
it) the accent
ch, is altoge-
er people; as otch who borer accent, I do
articular word,
e. Thus it is man when he
that the actors
efore he very ot considering me tone in an

, in every lane or accent of may properly
d not do it in u Italy, knows tativo bear a es in ordinary erly, are only re musical and admiration, in d them) which n such occa-

es of an En-much that I nely mistaken
e, and expect-essenger, when fancying that nly bids him

cannot agree ring Purcell's
o wonderfully
ations do not e same sounds.
at an English

composer should not follow the Italian recitative to servilely, but make use of many gentle deviation from it, in compliance with his own native language. He may copy out of it all the lulling softness an "dying falls," (as Shakspeare calls them) but should still remember that he ought to accommodate him self to an English audience; and by humouring th tone of our voices in ordinary conversation, have th same regard to the accent of his own language, a those persons had to theirs whom he professes to im- tate. It is observed, that several of the singin birds of our own country learn to sweeten thei voices and mellow the harshness of their natura notes, by practising under those that come froz warmer climates. In the same manner I would allo the Italian opera to lend our English music as muc as may grace and soften it, but never entirely to an nihilate and destroy it. Let the infusion be a strong as you please, but still let the subject matte of it be English.

A composer should fit his music to the genius o the people, and consider that the delicacy of hearin and taste of harmony, has been formed upon thes sounds which every country abounds with. In short that music is of a relative nature, and what is har mony to one ear, may be dissonance to another.

The same observations which I have made upo the recitative part of music, may be applied to al our songs and airs in general.

Signior Baptist Lully acted like a man of sens in this particular. He found the French music ex tremely defective, and very often barbarous. How ever, knowing the genius of the people, the humou of their language, and the prejudiced ears he had t deal with, he did not pretend to extirpate the Frencl music and plant the Italian in its stead; but only t cultivate and civilize it with innumerable graces an modulations which he borrowed from the Italians. By this means the French music is now perfect i its kind; and when you say it is not so good as th Italian, you only mean that it does not please yo so well; for there is scarce a Frenchman who wou not wonder to hear you give the Italian such a pre ference. The music of the French is indeed ver properly adapted to their pronunciation and accent as their whole opera wonderfully favours the geni of such a gay airy people. The chorus, in whic that opera abounds, gives the parterre frequent op portunities of joining in concert with the stage. This inclination of the audience to sing along wit the actors, so prevails with them, that I have some times known the performer on the stage do no mor in a celebrated song than the clerk of a paris church, who serves only to raise the psalm, and i afterwards drowned in the music of the congregation. Every actor that comes on the stage is a bear. Th queens and heroines are so painted, that they appea as ruddy and cherry-cheeked as milk-maids. Th shepherds are all embroidered, and acquit themselv in a ball better than our English dancing-masters. I have seen a couple of rivers appear in red stock ings; and Alpheus, instead of having his head co vered with sedge and bull-rushes, making love in a full-bottom periwig and a plume of feathers; bu with a voice so full of shakes and quavers, that I should have thought the murmurs of a country brool the much more agreeable music.

I remember the last opera I saw in that merry nation was the Rape of Proserpine, where Pluto, t make the more tempting figure, puts himself in French equipage, and brings Ascalaphus along wit him as his valet de chambre. This is what we cal folly and impertinence ; but what the French look upon as gay and polite.

I shall add no more to what I have here offered, than that music, architecture, and painting, as well as poetry and oratory, are to deduce their laws and rules from the general sense and taste of mankind, and not from the principles of those arts themselves; or, in other words, the taste is not to conform to the art, but the art to the taste. Music is not designed to please only chromatic ears, but all that are capable of distinguishing harsh from disagreeable notes. A man of an ordinary ear is a judge whether a passion is expressed in proper sounds, and whether the melody of those sounds be more or less pleasing.—C.

*.* Complete sets of this paper for the month of March, are sold by Mr. Greaves, in St. James's-street; Mr. Lillie, perfumer, the corner of Beaufort-buildings; Messrs. Sanger, Knapton, Round, and Mrs. Baldwin.—Spect. in folio.

No. 30.] WEDNESDAY, APRIL 4, 1711.

Si, Minnermus uti censet, sine amore jocisque

Nil est jucundum; vivas in amore jocisque.

Hon. 1 Ep. vi. 65.

If nothing, as Minnermus strives to prove,

Can e'er be pleasant without mirth and love,

Then live in mirth and love, thy sports pursue.—CREECH.

ONE common calamity makes men extremely affect each other, though they differ in every other particular. The passion of love is the most general concern among men; and I am glad to hear by my last advices from Oxford, that there are a set of sighers in that university, who have erected themselves into a society in honour of that tender passion. These gentlemen are of that sort of inamoratos, who are not so very much lost to common sense, but that they understand the folly they are guilty of; and for that reason separate themselves from all other company, because they will enjoy the pleasure of talking incoherently, without being ridiculous to any but each other. When a man comes into the club, he is not obliged to make any introduction to his discourse, but at once, as he is seating himself in his chair, speaks in the thread of his own thoughts: "She gave me a very obliging glance, she never looked so well in her life as this evening;" or the like reflection, without regard to any other member of the society; for in this assembly they do not meet to talk to each other, but every man claims the full liberty of talking to himself. Instead of snuff-boxes and canes, which are the usual helps to discourse with other young fellows, these have each some piece of riband, a broken fan, or an old girdle, which they play with while they talk of the fair person remembered by each respective token. According to the representation of the matter from my letters, the company appear like so many players rehearsing behind the scenes; one is sighing and lamenting his destiny in beseeching terms, another declaiming he will break his chain, and another, in dumb-show, striving to express his passion by his gesture. It is very ordinary in the assembly for one of a sudden to rise and make a discourse concerning his passion in general, and describe the temper of his mind in such a manner, as that the whole company shall join in the description, and feel the force of it. In this case, if any man has declared the violence of his flame in more pathetic terms, he is made president for that night, out of respect to his superior passion.

We had some years ago in this town, a set of people who met and dressed like lovers, and were distinguished by the name of the Fringe-glove club; but they were even before that their variety of by which fellows cov their dress they are lo understand of the and translated Chloris is was made far as I ca nowned D knight are the colour selves: bu sible of the they do no the best an is a frenz aforesaid who, I ha lately adm following

"SIR
"Since
to give yo have no w
of. We Amorous
mirrors of little know are oblig constitution
we live: A profess so duates in ing to the mitted; an recorded in the major poem in Without
that is not for our so man is e
are at pres
when we our mistre indeed cre
recourse to

Na
Six
This meth occasion
A young Dimple, v
under the
the club,
to Betty.
does not look upon himself a
In fine, t men—the cality, an pany wit
member o

; for which reason I I so abruptly subscribe

your humble servant,

"T. B.

Albina, who has six voyour readers."—R.

APRIL 5, 1711.

— VIND. ÆN. vi. 266.
me to relate.

ing into a coffee-house theatre, I diverted myth overhearing the dis-habbiness of his dress, ceptions, and the hurry be of that species who the title of projectors.
he was treated as such aining a whole table of in opera, which he told or three mornings in he was ready to put in find his account in it.
all the great trouble and ere at, in travelling up that are exhibited in n. The dancing mon-
puppet-show in another;
mention the lions, that urney from the politer means people of figure enter after their coming in all the strange sights specially when it was a little raised and roout of his pocket the ed, The Expedition of ch he had disposed all own among the scenes

The thought, he con-
own, but that he had al performances which in one of which there er a ladder-dance; and iving picture, with many der opens with his con-ps, in which the dumb d by so many persons of be introduced as telling ee Clinch of Barnet is t of the temple, as ring-joy of his arrival. The d by the ingenious Mrs. s to fall in love with a esents the beautiful Sta-ss into that country, in as the dogs were so ex-ld not lose their hold, feces limb by limb, and their prey by their teeth mouth left, there is to Hole, in which is to be of that place, the bull-cannot possibly be exason of the lowness of s in Asia, which Alex-pass through, will give ys dancing upon ropes, of that ludicrous spe-

here chance to be any strange animals in town, whether birds or they may be either let loose among the driven across the stage by some of the coun-of Asia. In the last great battle, Pinkethri-personate King Porus upon an elephant, is be encountered by Powell, representing Alex-the Great, upon a dromedary, which nev-Mr. Powell is desired to call by the name of phalus. Upon the close of this great decis-when the two kings are thoroughly reconshow the mutual friendship and good corresthat reigns between them, they both of the gether to a puppet-show, in which the ingen-Powell, junior, may have an opportunity of ing his whole art of machinery, for the div-two monarchs. Some at the table urged puppet-show was not a suitable entertain-Alexander the Great; and that it might duced more properly, if we suppose the co-touched upon that part of India which is inhabited by the pygmies. But this objec-looked upon as frivolous, and the proposal ately overruled. Our projector farther ad-after the reconciliation of these two kings, th invite one another to dinner, and either of ertain his guest with the German artist, kethman's heathen gods, or any of the like d which shall then chance to be in vogue.

This project was received with very great by the whole table. Upon which the untold us, that he had not yet communicatabove half his design; for that Alexander Greek, it was his intention that the who should be acted in that language, which was he was sure would wonderfully please the pecially when it was a little raised and rothe Ionic dialect; and could not but be acto the whole audience, because there are them who understand Greek than Italian. difficulty that remained, was how to get per-unless we could persuade some gentlemen of versities to learn to sing, in order to qual-selves for the stage; but this objection soon when the projector informed us that the were at present the only musicians in the empire, and that it would be very easy for tory at Smyrna to furnish us every year w lony of musicians, by the opportunity of the fleet; besides, says he, if we want any sin-for any lower part in the opera, Lawrence to speak Greek, as well as he does Italian, night's time.

The projector having thus settled matter good-liking of all that heard him, he left the table, and planted himself before the fi-I had unluckily taken my stand for the con-of overhearing what he said. Whether he served me to be more attentive than ordinari-not tell, but he had not stood by me above of a minute, but he turned short upon me den, and catching me by a button of my tacked me very abruptly after the following

"Besides, Sir, I have heard of a very e-nary genius for music that lives in Switzerl-has so strong a spring in his fingers, that make the board of an organ sound like a d if I could but procure a subscription of a thousand pounds every winter I would un-fetch him over, and oblige him by articles to thing that should be sung upon the Englis After this he looked full in my face, exp-would make an answer, when, by good luc-

BRITISH ESSAYISTS.

re things in all our number night,
r. You see
not have his

in all such ors (whom,
his pains to chin, which very gravely
cient know-
ore willing own part,
science, as he did not
ellow; for,
body's bu-
esident im-
why he is and to ease

' That for ght wear a d he looked
t; but Mr.
lowed him rileged to s; and that eir labours,
the hand of myself:' for ntspiece of glish Juve-
nly added,
Larva do-
all, and in r; and Mr.
protesting,
ard, he did
re occasion
ll you have here very a; and you us: which l upon the ulations of,
ervant,
" A. C."

, 1711.

RECH.

s, whom I
er is one of n she lives,
arms in her
their out-
e seems to childhood, of her fea-
she is no
l outside.
dered her

insupportably vain and insolent towards all who have to do with her. Daphne, who was almost twenty before one civil thing had ever been said to her, found herself obliged to acquire some accomplishments to make up for the want of those attractions which she saw in her sister. Poor Daphne was seldom submitted to in a debate wherein she was concerned; her discourse had nothing to recommend it but the good sense of it, and she was always under a necessity to have very well considered what she was to say before she uttered it; while Lætitia was listened to with partiality, and approbation sat on the countenances of those she conversed with, before she communicated what she had to say. These causes have produced suitable effects, and Lætitia is as insipid a companion as Daphne is an agreeable one. Lætitia, confident of favour, has studied no arts to please; Daphne, despairing of any inclination towards her person, has depended only on her merit. Lætitia has always something in her air that is sullen, grave, and disconsolate. Daphne has a countenance that is cheerful, open, and unconcerned.

A young gentleman saw Lætitia this winter at a play, and became her captive. His fortune was such, that he wanted very little introduction to speak his sentiments to her father. The lover was admitted with the utmost freedom into the family, where a constrained behaviour, severe looks, and distant civilities, were the highest favours he could obtain of Lætitia; while Daphne used him with the good humour, familiarity, and innocence of a sister: insomuch that he would often say to her, "Dear Daphne, wert thou but as handsome as Lætitia—" She received such language with that ingenuousness and pleasing mirth which is natural to a woman without design. He still sighed in vain for Lætitia, but found certain relief in the agreeable conversation of Daphne. At length, heartily tired with the haughty impertinence of Lætitia, and charmed with the repeated instances of good humour he had observed in Daphne, he one day told the latter that he had something to say to her he hoped she would be pleased with—"Faith, Daphne," continued he, "I am in love with thee, and despise thy sister sincerely." The manner of his declaring himself gave his mistress occasion for a very hearty laughter.—"Nay," says he, "I knew you would laugh at me, but I will ask your father." He did so; the father received this intelligence with no less joy than surprise, and was very glad he had now no care left but for his beauty, which he thought he could carry to market at his leisure. I do not know any thing that has pleased me so much for a great while, as this conquest of my friend Daphne's. All her acquaintance congratulate her upon her chance-medley, and laugh at that premeditating murderer her sister. As it is an argument of a light mind, to think the worse of ourselves for the imperfections of our person, it is equally below us to value ourselves upon the advantages of them. The female world seem to be almost incorrigibly gone astray in this particular; for which reason I shall recommend the following extract out of a friend's letter to the professed beauties, who are a people almost as insufferable as the professed wits.

"Monsieur St. Evremond has concluded one of his essays with affirming, that the last sighs of a handsome woman are not so much for the loss of her life, as of her beauty. Perhaps this raillery is pursued too far, yet it is turned upon a very obvious remark, that woman's strongest passion is for her own beauty, and that she values it as her favourite distinction. From hence it is that all arts which pretend to improve or preserve it, meet with so general a reception among the sex. To say nothing of many false helps and contraband wares of beauty which are daily vended in this great mart, there is not a maiden gentlewoman of good family in any county of South Britain, who has not heard of the virtues of May-dew, or is unfurnished with some receipt or other in favour of her complexion; and I have known a physician of learning and sense, after eight years' study in the university, and a course of travels into most countries of Europe, owe the first raising of his fortunes to a cosmetic wash.

"This has given me occasion to consider how so universal a disposition in womankind, which springs from a laudable motive—the desire of pleasing—and proceeds upon an opinion not altogether groundless—that nature may be helped by art—may be turned to their advantage. And, methinks, it would be an acceptable service to take them out of the hands of quacks and pretenders, and to prevent their imposing upon themselves, by discovering to them the true secret and art of improving beauty.

"In order to this, before I touch upon it directly, it will be necessary to lay down a few preliminary maxims, viz. :—

"That no woman can be handsome by the force of features alone, any more than she can be witty only by the help of speech.

"That pride destroys all symmetry and grace, and affectation is a more terrible enemy to fine faces than the small-pox.

"That no woman is capable of being beautiful, who is not incapable of being false.

"And, That what would be odious in a friend is deformity in a mistress.

"From these few principles, thus laid down, it will be easy to prove, that the true art of assisting beauty consists in embellishing the whole person by the proper ornaments of virtuous and commendable qualities. By this help alone it is, that those who are the favourite work of nature, or, as Mr. Dryden expresses it, the porcelain clay of human kind, become animated, and are in a capacity of exerting their charms; and those who seem to have been neglected by her, like models wrought in haste, are capable in a great measure of finishing what she has left imperfect.

"It is, methinks, a low and degrading idea of that sex, which was created to refine the joys and soften the cares of humanity by the most agreeable participation, to consider them merely as objects of sight. This is abridging them of their natural extent of power, to put them upon a level with their pictures at Kneller's. How much nobler is the contemplation of beauty heightened by virtue, and commanding our esteem and love while it draws our observation! How faint and spiritless are the charms of a coquette, when compared with the real loveliness of Sophronia's innocence, piety, good-humour, and truth; virtues which add a new softness to her sex, and even beautify her beauty! That agreeableness which must otherwise have appeared no longer in the modest virgin, is now preserved in the tender mother, the prudent friend, and the faithful wife. Colours artfully spread upon canvas may entertain the eye, but not affect the heart; and she who takes no care to add to the natural graces of her person any excellent qualities, may be allowed still to amuse, as a picture, but not to triumph as a beauty.

"When Adam is introduced by Milton, describing Eve in Paradise, and relating to the angel the impressions he tion, he does

by her shape
mind which power of ch

Grace

In all

"Without
one ought to
to the contr
uninformed

"I cannot epitaph writ
nothing coul
been describ

"I a

R.

No. 34.

Cogna

From

THE club
composed of ways of life, conspicuous
am furnished
materials, an different que
great city, b
too have the or degree an ative in this present who terests, that the prejudice
and privilege

I last nig select body o
veral remark
these my spe
cess which t
ranks and told me, in were some la they are not at the libert
puppet-show
much surpr
points as the lity proper s

He was
took him up hinted at, ha
all their wi
them; and f themselves v
generous int appear in a
a publisher
"In short,"
foolish beate
citizens, and luxury of co ral use."

Upon this drew, that he

BRITISH ESSAYISTS.

always been
wits of king
se during his e examples of est writers of
and court had ridicule, how at patronised
I think your on, in attack-ert; and I do
dent for your

ley, who had speech with a see so many eries. "Let very one that
Mr. Specta-
care how you are the orna-
f good heads
some of them
-hunters with

y on this oc-
commend my rmy, and ad-
in that point.
f my specula-
r other of the e condition of took a dislike black, till by d an aversion
and naked.

lf, my worthy
y for me, was y cause. He ersons should be advised.
ce, which ex-
and folly
could be met laced in high farther added, aggravate the
those who are e turned into tions and cir-
o take notice
to the public,
too trivial for antastical for n advised me
rfulness, and spleased with whose praises
are bestowed,
ference to the awn into what uous manner
e strength of
makes use of,
that what he art, he would ad demanded
the city with uld not stand
the Captain;
perty to carry
vided I continued to combat with criminals in a body, and to assault the vice without hurting the person.

This debate, which was held for the good of mankind, put me in mind of that which the Roman triumvirate were formerly engaged in for their destruction. Every man at first stood hard for his friend, till they found that by this means they should spoil their proscription; and at length, making a sacrifice of all their acquaintance and relations, furnished out a very decent execution.

Having thus taken my resolutions to march on boldly in the cause of virtue and good sense, and to annoy their adversaries in whatever degree or rank of men they may be found; I shall be deaf for the future to all the remonstrances that shall be made to me on this account. If Punch grows extravagant, I shall reprimand him very freely. If the stage becomes a nursery of folly and impertinence, I shall not be afraid to animadvert upon it. In short, if I meet with any thing in city, court, or country, that shocks modesty or good manners, I shall use my utmost endeavours to make an example of it. I must however, entreat every particular person, who does me the honour to be a reader of this paper, never to think himself, or any one of his friends or enemies, aimed at in what is said; for I promise him, never to draw a faulty character which does not fit at least a thousand people; or to publish a single paper, that is not written in the spirit of benevolence, and with a love of mankind.—C.

No. 35.] TUESDAY, APRIL 10, 1711.

Risus inepto res ineptior nulla est.—CATULL. CARM. 39. in Enn. Nothing so foolish as the laugh of fools.

AMONG all kinds of writing, there is none in which authors are more apt to miscarry than in works of humour, as there is none in which they are more ambitious to excel. It is not an imagination that teems with monsters, a head that is filled with extravagant conceptions, which is capable of furnishing the work with diversions of this nature; and yet if we look into the productions of several writers, who set up for men of humour, what wild irregular fancies, what unnatural distortions of thought do we meet with. If they speak nonsense, they believe they are talking humour; and when they have drawn together a scheme of absurd, inconsistent ideas, they are not able to read it over to themselves without laughing. These poor gentlemen endeavour to gain themselves the reputation of wits and humorists, by such monstrous conceits as almost qualify them for Bedlam, not considering that humour should always lie under the check of reason, and that it requires the direction of the nicest judgment, by so much the more as it indulges itself in the most boundless freedoms. There is a kind of nature that is to be observed in this sort of compositions, as well as in all other; and a certain regularity of thought which must discover the writer to be a man of sense, at the same time that he appears altogether given up to caprice. For my part, when I read the delirious mirth of an unskillful author, I cannot be so barbarous as to divert myself with it, but am rather apt to pity the man, than laugh at any thing he writes.

The deceased Mr. Shadwell, who had himself a great deal of the talent which I am treating of, represents an empty rake, in one of his plays, as very much surprised to hear one say, that breaking of windows was not humour; and I question not but several English readers will be as much startled as we affirm, that many of those raving incoherent pieces which are often spread among us under chimerical titles, are rather the offsprings of a distempered brain, than works of humour.

It is indeed much easier to describe what is not humour, than what is; and very difficult to define it otherwise than as Cowley has done wit, by negatives. Were I to give my own notions of it, I would deliver them after Plato's manner, in a kind of allegory—and by supposing Humour to be a person, deduce to him all his qualifications, according to the following genealogy. Truth was the founder of the family, and the father of Good Sense. Good Sense was the father of Wit, who married a lady of collateral line called Mirth, by whom he had issue Humour. Humour therefore being the youngest of this illustrious family, and descended from parents of such different dispositions, is very various and unequal in his temper; sometimes you see him putting on grave looks and a solemn habit, sometimes airy in his behaviour and fantastic in his dress; inasmuch that at different times he appears as serious as a judge, and as jocular as a merry-andrew. But as he has a great deal of the mother in his constitution, whatever mood he is in, he never fails to make his company laugh.

But since there is an impostor abroad, who takes upon him the name of this young gentleman, and would willingly pass for him in the world; to the end that well-meaning persons may not be imposed upon by cheats, I would desire my readers, when they meet with this pretender, to look into his parentage, and to examine him strictly, whether or no he be remotely allied to Truth, and lineally descended from Good Sense; if not, they may conclude him a counterfeit. They may likewise distinguish him by a loud and excessive laughter, in which he seldom gets his company to join with him. For as True Humour generally looks serious, while every body laughs about him; False Humour is always laughing, whilst every body about him looks serious. I shall only add, if he has not in him a mixture of both parents, that is, if he would pass for the offspring of Wit without Mirth, or Mirth without Wit, you may conclude him to be altogether spurious and a cheat.

The impostor of whom I am speaking, descends originally from Falsehood, who was the mother of Nonsense, who was brought to bed of a son called Frenzy, who married one of the daughters of Folly, commonly known by the name of Laughter, on whom he begot that monstrous infant of which I have here been speaking. I shall set down at length the genealogical table of False Humour, and, at the same time, place under it the genealogy of True Humour, that the reader may at one view behold their different pedigrees and relations:—

Falsehood.
Nonsense.
Frenzy—Laughter.
False Humour.
Truth.
Good Sense.
Wit—Mirth.
Humour.

I might extend the allegory, by mentioning several of the children of False Humour, who are more in number than the sands of the sea, and might in particular enumerate the many sons and daughters which he has begot in this island. But as this would be a very invidious task, I shall only observe in general, that

False Humour does from a

First of all

tricks and but it is all one and folly, but virtue and wit Thirdly, H that he will be vour to ridic For having where he can Fourthly, I sues no point ludicrous only Fifthly, B representation aimed at the vice, or the v I have he false humoris in this paper which discover age, I shall m any of the sn compositions This is the o general rule multitudes, s upon himsel libeller and they fall in them and tre No. 36.] V

Perf This I SHALL

to this day's en letters and t with the min conduct in r "Upon re one of your tween all the are separate London and wonders, sho pective ment actors of this design. It i execution of to it, we hav their liveliho among us af are resolved every thing

sensation of

of all anim

hangings yo

are likewise

upon two leg

this morning

notice to the regulations

show no mo

such by the will please t

BRITISH ESSAYISTS.

the unnatural aping the polite and the character of a s which are fre- gesture. This, we shall take to thin the notice of thing more gross a for the future. ies of theatrical all for the future at an army; and u will have them ops of Macedon. t his pantheon of racle of Delphos, n the fortune of I am desired by ey submit to your eater veneration a drive monsters merit will be as ce is more than servant, T. D."

great and unex- doubt not but I I have for many playhouse; and out of the clouds theatre that ever descended and derer in The Re- n thus low, they and make me a or these two last ny still farther, hed from above rstand that I am d taken from me ent. Now, Sir, undertaker thinks rs have done) in cannon against burning of Per- all think fit. VENT-GARDEN."

the playhouse in etting forth their tes of their good elief. ed to Mr. Chr.

Hamlet, to com- of Alexander.

, to be Hephes-

a both by father ater of Thomas r in the law, and own in all parts eed by misfor- ns, and for some school of young , that she hath ry-square, com- in a good air;

where she teaches all sorts of birds of the loquacious kind, as parrots, starlings, magpies, and others, imitate human voices in greater perfection than ev was yet practised. They are not only instructed pronounce words distinctly, and in a proper tone a accent, but to speak the language with great puri and volubility of tongue, together with all the fashio- able phrases and compliments now in use either tea-tables, or on visiting-days. Those that have go voices may be taught to sing the newest opera-si and, if required, to speak either Italian or Frenc paying something extraordinary above the comm rates. They whose friends are not able to pay f full prices, may be taken as half-boarders. S teaches such as are designed for the diversion of t public, and to act in enchanted woods on the th tress, by the great. As she had often observed w much concern how indecent an education is usual given these innocent creatures, which in some me sure is owing to their being placed in rooms ne the street, where, to the great offence of chaste a tender ears, they learn ribaldry, obscene songs, a immodest expressions from passengers and ic people, as also to cry fish and card-matches, w other useless parts of learning to birds who have ri friends, she has fitted up proper and neat apartme for them in the back part of her said house: wh she suffers none to approach them but herself, an servant-maid who is deaf and dumb, and whom s provided on purpose to prepare their food, a cleanse their cages; having found by long ex- rience, how hard a thing it is for those to keep lence who have the use of speech, and the dang her scholars are exposed to, by the strong impr- sions that are made by harsh sounds and vulgar d- lects. In short, if they are birds of any parts capacity, she will undertake to render them so: accomplished in the compass of a twelvemonth, t they shall be fit conversation for such ladies as k to choose their friends and companions out of t species.—R.

No. 37.] THURSDAY, APRIL 12, 1711.

—Non illa colo calathivæ Minervæ Fœmineas assuetæ manus— Vireo. Æn. vii. 805.

Unbred to spinning, in the loom unskill'd.—DARWIN.

SOME months ago, my friend Sir Roger, being the country, enclosed a letter to me, directed to certain lady whom I shall here call by the name Leonora—and as it contained matters of consequen desired me to deliver it to her with my own ha Accordingly I waited upon her ladyship pretty ea in the morning, and was desired by her woman walk into her lady's library, till such time as she v in readiness to receive me. The very sound of lady's library gave me a great curiosity to see: and as it was some time before the lady came to n I had an opportunity of turning over a great ma of her books, which were ranged together in a ve beautiful order. At the end of the folios (whi were finely bound and gilt) were great jars of chi placed one above another in a very noble piece architecture. The quartos were separated from t octavos by a pile of smaller vessels, which rose in delightful pyramid. The octavos were bounded tea-dishes of all shapes, colours, and sizes, whi were so disposed on a wooden frame, that they look like one continued pillar indented with the fin strokes of sculpture, and stained with the great variety of dyes. That part of the library which w designed for the reception of plays and pamphle and other loose papers, was enclosed in a kind of square, consisting of one of the prettiest grotesque works that I ever saw, and made up of scaramouches, lions, monkeys, mandarines, trees, shells, and a thousand other odd figures in china-ware. In the midst of the room was a little japan table, with a quire of gilt paper upon it, and on the paper a silver snuff-box made in the shape of a little book. I found there were several other counterfeit books upon the upper shelves, which were carved in wood, and served only to fill up the numbers like fagots in the muster of a regiment. I was wonderfully pleased with such a mixed kind of furniture, as seemed very suitable both to the lady and the scholar, and did not know at first whether I should fancy myself in a grotto or in a library.

Upon my looking into the books, I found there were some few which the lady had bought for her own use, but that most of them had been got together, either because she had heard them praised, or because she had seen the authors of them. Among several that I examined, I very well remember these that follow:

Ogleby's Virgil.

Dryden's Juvenal.

Cassandra.

Cleopatra.

Astræa.

Sir Isaac Newton's Works.

The Grand Cyrus; with a pin stuck in one of the middle leaves.

Pembroke's Arcadia.

Locke on Human Understanding, with a paper of patches in it.

A Spelling-book.

A Dictionary for the explanation of hard words.

Sherlock upon Death.

The fifteen Comforts of Matrimony.

Sir William Temple's Essays.

Father Malebranche's Search after Truth, translated into English.

A book of Novels.

The Academy of Compliments.

Calpepper's Midwifery.

The Ladies' Calling.

Tales in Verse by Mr. Durfey: bound in red leather, gilt on the back, and doubled down in several places.

All the Classic Authors in Wood.

A set of Elzevirs by the same Hand.

Clelia: which opened of itself in the place that describes two lovers in a bower.

Baker's Chronicle.

Advice to a Daughter.

The New Atalanta, with a Key to it.

Mr. Steele's Christian Hero.

A Prayer-book: with a bottle of Hungary Water by the side of it.

Dr. Sacheverell's Speech.

Fielding's Trial.

Seneca's Morals.

Taylor's Holy Living and Dying.

La Ferte's Instructions for Country Dances.

I was taking a catalogue in my pocket-book of these and several other authors, when Leonora entered, and upon my presenting her with a letter from the knight, told me, with an unspeakable grace, that she hoped Sir Roger was in good health; I answered yes, for I hate long speeches, and after a bow or two retired.

Leonora was formerly a celebrated beauty, and is still a very lovely woman. She has been a widow for two or three first marriage, ture upon a se care of, and let my good friend rally sinks into that is not agite pursuits, Leon sex into a love verses chiefly self), but it is very few male whom she heard scandal. As her romances, it he thinking, and gardens, and I tained me an h country-seat, v ness, about a b and looks like about her are with woodbine into shady wall cages of turtle among pebbles very agreeably beautiful lake and empties i through a gree mily by the n knight likewise game better country, not (e a value upon h her larks and a bird which is k cert, and that year.

When I thin learning, I loo tion and pity. ments which s more valuable sex, who empla less reasonable provements w susceptible of she been guide to enlighten th sions, as well use than to di But the ma usefully in rea paper, in whic ular books as of the sex. A nature, I shall their thoughts

No. 38.]

— C

One wou

A LATE con an opportunity in a very hand ingenious man absurdity in tion. The fa (upon which tempted to sho

BRITISH ESSAYISTS.

is diligent to do
to her beauteous
on the stretch
and what they
the writhed her-
to engage him.
to sever at a show her teeth;
a distance, that sundness of her
what she saw,
and is so wholly e adjusted, her n put into new ing all this, the g very pleasant
e unkind obser-er vanity. These rally led me to which so gene-
most people we

Theory of the
at every thought representative-
d to it but what
n of conscience,
is so presented ct of the mind
proper behaviour
farther than to
of their present
ruption in every ess is employed
n conceptions;
e call affectation.
n our bosoms as it is a very diffi-
t for things that en, whose hearts ave in the con-
of love and ad-
of their counte-
their bodies, to with new sense
rt of our sex,
e sillier part of
asy condition to hat cocked with chosen coat, or are impatient to

from an ill-go-
to be wondered as these: but es of worth and but lament, not es into the heart of the coxcomb.
t about for apelination to be ense, even from nothing but his is weakness? or t or not? The
at fondness for
to throw off the ot in themselves
er no praise from s in men's per-which will natu-
we think not of them, but lose their force in proportion to our endeavour to make them such.

When our consciousness turns upon the main design of life, and our thoughts are employed upon the chief purpose either in business or pleasure, we shall never betray an affectation, for we cannot be guilty of it: but when we give the passion for praise an unbridled liberty, our pleasure in little perfection robs us of what is due to us for great virtues, and worthy qualities. How many excellent speeches and honest actions are lost, for want of being indifferent where we ought? Men are oppressed with regard to their way of speaking and acting, instead of having their thoughts bent upon what they should do say; and by that means bury a capacity for great things, by their fear of failing in indifferent things.
This, perhaps, cannot be called affectation; but it has some tincture of it, at least so far, as that their fear of erring in a thing of no consequence, argues they would be too much pleased in performing it.

It is only from a thorough disregard to himself in such particulars, that a man can act with a laudable sufficiency; his heart is fixed upon one point in view; and he commits no errors, because he thinks nothing an error but what deviates from that intention.

The wild havoc affectation makes in that part the world which should be most polite, is visible wherever we turn our eyes: it pushes men not only into impertinencies in conversation, but also in the premeditated speeches. At the bar it torments the bench, whose business it is to cut off all superfluties in what is spoken before it by the practitioners; as well as several little pieces of injustice which arise from the law itself. I have seen it make a man run from the purpose before a judge, who was when at the bar himself, so close and logical a pleader, that with all the pomp of eloquence in his power, he never spoke a word too much.*

It might be borne even here, but it often ascends the pulpit itself; and the declaimer in that sacred place is frequently so impertinently witty, speaks the last day itself with so many quaint phrases, that there is no man who understands raillery, but must resolve to sin no more. Nay, you may behold him sometimes in prayer, for a proper delivery of the great truths he is to utter, humble himself with a very well-turned phrase, and mention his own unworthiness in a way so very becoming, that the air the pretty gentleman is preserved, under the lowliness of the preacher.

I shall end this with a short letter I write the other day to a very witty man, overrun with the fault I am speaking of:

"DEAR SIR,

"I spent some time with you the other day, and must take the liberty of a friend to tell you of that unsufferable affectation you are guilty of in all you say and do. When I gave you a hint of it, you asked me whether a man is to be cold to what his friends think of him? No, but praise is not to be the entertainment of every moment. He that hopes for it must be able to suspend the possession of it till proper periods of life, or death itself. If you would not rather be commended than be praised worthy, condemn little merits; and allow no man to be so free with you, as to praise you to your face.
Your vanity by this means will want its food.
At the same time your passion for esteem will be more fully gratified; men will praise you in their actions

* This seems to be intended as a compliment to Chancellor Cowper.

where you now receive one compliment, you will then receive twenty civilities. Till then you will never have of either, farther than,

"Sir, your humble servant."

T

No. 39.] SATURDAY, APRIL 14, 1711.

Nulla fero, ut placem genus irritabile vatum, Cum scribo ——— Hon. 2 Ep. II. 102.

IMITATED.

Much do I suffer, much, to keep in peace
This jealous, waspish, wrong-head'd rhyming race.—POPE.

As a perfect tragedy is the noblest production of human nature, so it is capable of giving the mind one of the most delightful and most improving entertainments. A virtuous man (says Seneca) struggling with misfortunes, is such a spectacle as gods might look upon with pleasure; and such a pleasure it is which one meets with in the representation of a well-written tragedy. Diversions of this kind wear out of our thoughts every thing that is mean and little. They cherish and cultivate that humanity which is the ornament of our nature. They soften insolence, soothe affliction, and subdue the mind to the dispensations of Providence.

It is no wonder, therefore, that in all the polite nations of the world, this part of the drama has met with public encouragement.

The modern tragedy excels that of Greece and Rome in the intricacy and disposition of the fable; but, what a Christian writer would be ashamed to own, falls infinitely short of it in the moral part of the performance.

This I may show more at large hereafter: and in the mean time, that I may contribute something towards the improvement of the English tragedy, I shall take notice, in this and in other following papers, of some particular parts in it that seem liable to exception.

Aristotle observes, that the Iambic verse in the Greek tongue was the most proper for tragedy; because at the same time that it lifted up the discourse from prose, it was that which approached nearer to it than any other kind of verse. "For," says he, "we may observe that men in ordinary discourse very often speak iambics without taking notice of it." We may make the same observation of our English blank verse, which often enters into our common discourse, though we do not attend to it, and is such a due medium between rhyme and prose, that it seems wonderfully adapted to tragedy. I am therefore very much offended when I see a play in rhyme; which is as absurd in English, as a tragedy of hexameters would have been in Greek or Latin. The solecism is, I think, still greater in those plays that have some scenes in rhyme and some in blank verse, which are to be looked upon as two several languages; or where we see some particular similes dignified with rhyme at the same time that every thing about them lies in blank verse. I would not however debar the poet from concluding his tragedy, or, if he pleases, every act of it, with two or three couplets, which may have the same effect as an air in the Italian opera after a long recitative, and give the actor a graceful exit. Besides that, we see a diversity of numbers in some parts of the old tragedy in order to hinder the ear from being tired with the same continued modulation of voice. For the same reason I do not dislike the speeches in our English tragedy that close with a hemistic, or half verse, notwithstanding the person who speaks after it begins a new verse, which is not with a sudden change of a verse, but is expressed by a new verse.

Since I am now speaking of the English style, I cannot but observe that the English style is more elegant than the Greek language is in sense either way; contrary, in those of Corneille, are very great and swells the sentiment that infinitely before all the sound of this defect in genius, know from their country readers, who of the sentiment more than the lieve it might of the other, texture of his turned it into the perusal of thought of its tragic ornament imposed upon of the thought great enough deserves to show itself in made use of the

I must in these thoughts are by the sound expressions in is often very fine observations have never sought to be of the fable, tious, and the and passions (namely, the apt to be observed expressions. criticisms after the foregoing

Et tragicus Telephus est
Proicit am
Si curat co

Tragedians Pelus and Forget the

Among our who has a be- stead of favour had restrain bounds. His tragedy, but that it is has an infinite first that it does frequently succeed, but efforts, and metaphors in which be more natu

describes the

would talk!

turning the
to an admira-
d wonderfully
n that speaks
that outshines

guage of his sionate parts
As there is fable of his her poet, he expressions.
mirably suc-
rt of his tra-
at familiarity
stotle's rule,
ed by the dig-

this poet has on so wrong are those of his play dis-
ference of his
d subversion,
admire him;
ly say of him
line, that his atriâ sic con-
of his country.
C.

6, 1711.

useum,

t Athens.

lor. 2 Ep. l. 208.

nes,

ains,

gus:

rt,

the air,

where.—Pope.

possessed with irtuous or in-

not to leave

his troubles,

. This error

doctrine in d to an equal

as, and an im-

Who were the

not; but I am

reason, or in

nd that good

this side the tragedy is to

minds of the

, if we always

ad successful.

a good man

ey will make

when we know

the end of his

wishes and desires. When we see him engaged in the depth of his afflictions, we are apt to comfort ourselves, because we are sure he will find his way out of them; and that his grief, how great soever it may be at present, will soon terminate in gladness. For this reason, the ancient writers of tragedy treated men in their plays, as they are dealt with in the world, by making virtue sometimes happy and sometimes miserable, as they found it in the fable which they made choice of, or as it might affect the audience in the most agreeable manner. Aristotle considers the tragedies that were written in either of these kinds, and observes, that those which ended unhappily had always pleased the people, and carried away the prize in the public disputes of the stage, from those that ended happily. Terror and commiseration leave a pleasing anguish on the mind, and fix the audience in such a serious composure of thought, as is much more lasting and delightful than any little transient starts of joy and satisfaction. Accordingly we find, that more of our English tragedies have succeeded, in which the favourites of the audience sink under their calamities, than those in which they recover themselves out of them. The best plays of this kind are, The Orphan, Venice Preserved, Alexander the Great, Theodosius, All for Love, Edipus, Oroonoko, Othello, &c. King Lear is an admirable tragedy of the same kind, as Shakspeare wrote it; but as it is reformed according to the chimerical notion of poetical justice, in my humble opinion it has lost half its beauty. At the same time I must allow, that there are very noble tragedies which have been framed upon the other plan and have ended happily; as indeed most of the good tragedies, which have been written since the starting of the above-mentioned criticism, have taken their turn; as The Mourning Bride, Tamerlane, Ulysses, Phædra and Hippolytus, with most of Mr. Dryden's. I must also allow, that many of Shakspeare's, and several of the celebrated tragedies of antiquity, are cast in the same form. I do not therefore dispute against this way of writing tragedies, but against the criticism that would establish this as the only method; and by that means would very much cramp the English tragedy, and perhaps give a wrong bent to the genius of our writers.

The tragi-comedy, which is the product of the English theatre, is one of the most monstrous inventions that ever entered in a poet's thoughts. An author might as well think of weaving the adventures of Aeneas and Hudibras into one poem, as of writing such a motley piece of mirth and sorrow. But the absurdity of these performances is so very visible, that I shall not insist upon it.

The same objections which are made to tragi-comedy, may in some measure be applied to all tragedies that have a double plot in them; which are likewise more frequent upon the English stage, than upon any other; for though the grief of the audience, in such performances, be not changed into another passion, as in tragi-comedies; it is diverted upon another object, which weakens their concern for the principal action, and breaks the tide of sorrow, by throwing it into different channels. This inconvenience, however, may in a great measure be cured, if not wholly removed, by the skillful choice of an under plot, which may bear such a near relation to the principal design, as to contribute toward the completion of it, and be concluded by the same catastrophe.

There is also another particular, which may be reckoned among the blemishes, or rather the false ities of our English tragedy: I mean those particular speeches which are commonly known by the name of Rants. The warm and passionate parts of tragedy are always the most taking with the audience; for which reason we often see the players pronouncing, in all the violence of action, several parts of the tragedy which the author writ with great temper, and designed that they should have been so. I have seen Powell very often raise himself loud clap by this artifice. The poets that were acquainted with this secret, have given frequent occasion for such emotions in the actor, by adding vehemence to words where there was no passion, or flaming a real passion into fustian. This hath led the mouths of our heroes with bombast; and even them such sentiments as proceed rather from swelling than a greatness of mind. Unnatural exclamations, curses, vows, blasphemies, a defiance of ankind, and an outraging of the gods, frequently ass upon the audience for towering thoughts, and are accordingly met with infinite applause.

I shall here add a remark, which I am afraid our tragic writers may make an ill use of. As our heroes are generally lovers, their swelling and blustering upon the stage very much recommends them to the ear part of the audience. The ladies are wonderfully pleased to see a man insulting kings, or affronting the gods, in one scene, and throwing himself at the feet of his mistress in another. Let him behave himself insolently towards the men, and abjectly towards the fair one, and it is ten to one but he proves a favourite with the boxes. Dryden and Lee, in several of their tragedies, have practised this secret with good success.

But to show how a rant pleases beyond the most just and natural thought that is not pronounced with vehemence, I would desire the reader, when he sees the tragedy of Œdipus, to observe how quietly the hero is dismissed at the end of the third act, after having pronounced the following lines, in which the thought is very natural, and apt to move compassion:

To you, good gods, I make my last appeal;
Or clear my virtues, or my crimes reveal.
If in the maze of fate I blindly run,
And backward tread those paths I sought to shun; Impute my errors to your own decree!
My hands are guilty, but my heart is free.

Let us then observe with what thunder-claps of applause he leaves the stage, after the impieties and execrations at the end of the fourth act; and you will wonder to see an audience so cursed and so pleased at the same time.

O that, as oft I have at Athens seen

[Where, by the way, there was no stage till many years after Œdipus.]

The stage arise, and the big clouds descend; So now, in very deed, I might behold This pond'rous globe, and all yon marble roof, Meet, like the hands of Jove, and crush mankind—
For all the elements, &c.

ADVERTISEMENT.

Having spoken of Mr. Powell, as sometimes raising himself applause from the ill taste of an audience, I must do him the justice to own, that he is excellently formed for a tragedian, and, when he pleases, deserves the admiration of the best judges; as I doubt not but he will in the Conquest of Mexico, which is acted for his own benefit to-morrow night.

C.

No. 41.] T

— Tu non lo
So found, is ve

COMPASSION
following letter
upon the fair se frequently faired postures are not
I think his mi a warning for o admire.

"Sir,

"Supposing
ledge, I make n ticular occasion
my wife, and ho
will be of opini divorce. I am very little impr plays. I remem
Dr. Cutherd, on one of the caus
—when a man
be the same w but another. I
actly my case.
tator, that ther
bands see their
"Not to kee
that part of th
them so exquis
them but a tole they will make by their own i a man so enam
neck, and arms
but to my gre
the effect of a practice, that v
scarce seems y whom I carrie take the liber
tunity, unless suitable to her
This I thought
means.

"Y

I cannot tel lady will do fo
low he has ve indeed very lo
those of our w in borrowed British. The
ment to judge
a lively anim
so beautiful,
The muscles
soft passion, s agreeable con
them, or the imagination.
the same air
same fixed in A Pict, thoug approach of li
tain distance fetched too n a kiss snatch complexion o

BRITISH ESSAYISTS.

without saying
only recom-
like to come are themselves
this practice

an adventure
ad wit, as well
siness to gain the torments
advances to er of scruple
on. Her ill-
y easily proof
conversation;
ing blemished
every day inactions every ed Will irre-
as such, and ty, she at last over strove in doom; till at a round sum
apt attendant
the hangings
e stood very g seen. The wear that day,
worked a full
same woman.
complexion, for thought fit to that verse of

t

utmost confu-
able on the fi-
s on the other.
d washes, and rushes, scraps
nts. The lady
ared.
ot with cheats, itself void. I ladies to sin-ut Lindamira y: for her own
ught to be ala punishment
art extant, in
. As for my women, and of the species, a beauty, as a roduce several
many years,
ery pretty enen I have abo-ies, when they aces.
mproving their
ceable Statira.
cheerfulness of an alacrity to fecting an air, careless. Her nd, makes her

How like is this lady, and how unlike is a Pict to that description Dr. Donne gives of his mistress — Her pure and eloquent blood Spoke in her cheeks, and so distinctly wrought, That one would almost say her body thought.

ADVERTISEMENT.

A young gentlewoman of about nineteen years of age (bred in the family of a person of quality, lately deceased), who paints the finest flesh-colour, wants a place, and is to be heard of at the house of Mynheer Grotesque, a Dutch painter in Barbican.

N.B. She is also well skilled in the drapery part and puts on hoods, and mixes ribands, so as to suit the colours of the face, with great art and success.

R.

No. 42.] WEDNESDAY, APRIL 18, 1711.

Garganum mugire putes nemus, aut mare Thuscum; Tantum cum strepitu ludi spectantur, et aries, Divitiæque peregrinæ: quibus oblitus actor Cum stetit in ænea, concurrat dextera lævæ Dixit adhuc aliquid? Nil sane. Quid placet ergo?
Lana Tarentino violas imitata veneno.—HON. 2 Ep. l. 202.

IMITATED.

Loon as the wolves on Orca's stormy steep, Howl to the roarings of the northern deep:
Such is the shout, the long applauding note,
At Quin's high plume, or Oldfield's petticoat:
Or when from court a birth-day suit bestow'd Sinks the lost actor in the tawdry load.
Booth enters—hark! the universal peal!— But has he spoken?—Not a syllable—What shook the stage, and made the people stare?
Cato's long wig, flower'd gown, and lacker'd chair.—PORA.

ARISTOTLE has observed, that ordinary writers in tragedy endeavour to raise terror and pity in their audience, not by proper sentiments and expression but by the dresses and decorations of the stage.
There is something of this kind very ridiculous in the English theatre. When the author has a mind to terrify us, it thunders; when he would make us melancholy, the stage is darkened. But among a our tragic artifices, I am the most offended at those which are made use of to inspire us with magnificent ideas of the persons that speak. The ordinary method of making a hero, is to clap a huge plume of feathers upon his head, which rises so very high that there is often a greater length from his chin to the top of his head than to the sole of his foot. Or we would believe that we thought a great man and tall man the same thing. This very much embam-barrasses the actor, who is forced to hold his neck extremely stiff and steady all the while he speaks; and notwithstanding any anxieties which he pretends for his mistress, his country, or his friends, one may see by his action that his greatest care and concern is to keep the plume of feathers from falling off his head.
For my own part, when I see a man uttering his complaints under such a mountain of feathers, I am apt to look upon him rather as an unfortunate lunatic than a distressed hero. As these superfluous ornaments upon the head make a great man, a prince generally receives her grandeur from those additional encumbrances that fall into her tail—I mean the broad sweeping train that follows her in all her motions, and finds constant employment for a boy who stands behind her to open and spread it to advantage.
I do not know how others are affected at this sight, but I must confess my eyes are wholly taken up with the page's part; and, as for the queen, I am not so attentive to any thing she speaks, as to the right adjusting of her train, lest it should chance to trip up her heels, or incommode her, as she wal-to and fro upon the stage. It is, in my opinion, a very odd spectacle, to see a queen venting her passions in a disordered motion, and a little boy taking care all the while that they do not ruffle the tail of her gown. The parts that the two persons act on the stage at the same time are very different. The princess is afraid lest she should incur the displeasure of the king her father, or lose the hero her lover, whilst her attendant is only concerned lest she should entangle her feet in her petticoat.

We are told, that an ancient tragic poet, to move the pity of his audience for his exiled kings and distressed heroes, used to make the actors represent them in dresses and clothes that were thread-bare and decayed. This artifice for moving pity seems as ill contrived as that we have been speaking of to inspire us with a great idea of the persons introduced upon the stage. In short, I would have our conceptions raised by the dignity of thought and sublimity of expression, rather than by a train of robes or a plume of feathers.

Another mechanical method of making great men, and adding dignity to kings and queens, is to accompany them with halberds and battle-axes. Two or three shifters of scenes, with the two candle-snuffers, make up a complete body of guards upon the English stage; and by the addition of a few porters dressed in red coats, can represent above a dozen legions. I have sometimes seen a couple of armies drawn up together upon the stage, when the poet has been disposed to do honour to his generals. It is impossible for the reader's imagination to multiply twenty men into such prodigious multitudes, or to fancy that two or three hundred thousand soldiers are fighting in a room of forty or fifty yards in compass. Incidents of such nature should be told, not represented.

Non tamen intus
Digna geri promissis in scenam: multaque tolles Ex oculis, quæ mox narret facundia presans.
HOR. Ars. Poet. ver. 182.

Yet there are things improper for a scene, Which men of judgment only will relate.—ROSCOMMON.

I should, therefore, in this particular, recommend to my countrymen the example of the French stage, where the kings and queens always appear unattended, and leave their guards behind the scenes. I should likewise be glad if we imitated the French in banishing from our stage the noise of drums, trumpets, and huzzas, which is sometimes so very great, that when there is a battle in the Haymarket theatre, one may hear it as far as Charing-cross.

I have here only touched upon those particulars which are made use of to raise and aggrandize the persons of a tragedy; and shall show, in another paper, the several expedients which are practised by authors of a vulgar genius to move terror, pity, or admiration in their hearers.

The tailor and the painter often contribute to the success of a tragedy more than the poet. Scenes affect ordinary minds as much as speeches; and our actors are very sensible that a well-dressed play has sometimes brought them as full audiences as a well-written one. The Italians have a very good phrase to express this art of imposing upon the spectators by appearances: they call it the "Fourberia della scena," "The knavery, or trickish part of the drama." But however the show and outside of the tragedy may work upon the vulgar, the more understanding part of the audience immediately see through it, and despise it.

A good poet will give the reader a more lively idea of an army actually savagely, or of minds shou inflamed with speaks, mo trappings of half that po a few lines

No. 43.
Hæ tibi erunt
Parcere subje
Be these Chain up
O'er subj
And teach

THERE is it is that trades; it b laid by some are such as who for wa vacancy of meddling v cannot give presenting belongs to at Oxford.

"SIR,
"In som sketches to me to s light. I h that the m carried on for the goo are equally that nature

"I must many clubs sequence to give you up to own, tha than the sc and wittic Meeting: least, and grave, serio it our duty, constitution res capiat pu sons or this nation at h where and people are It were bet then cond affairs of ou

"Verily, the act for two of good made a nig this plaguy money, but of it before would have But let that "I must look upon a junction w

BRITISH ESSAYISTS.

onsieur Palm-and we are by are not at the te letters leave matters of this etrating friend

e business with hall clap up a

lo, or what the or three other among us; and in of the next authentic intel-
ad, indeed, it is esort, the abso-

at the gallant long about the
ld not imagine
t a tittle on it
e secret; and ices, should do
e thought abso-
positive in it,
who had talked
o should know,
urman reported
amine into that at be something ou, but my two e and Slyboots eady. I am, in etator,

amble servant,
AHAM FROTH," eir minds tends a in any thing-
to come to cer-
ravel them, and dull fellows do ercise. I do not

ay of accounting
that dull fellows Business relieves ess, by furnish-business to mer-
their real exist-
all part of man-
ents, it were to e, because they akes their wants upplying them.

of good educa-
ay leisure upon ne of those two ence, politics or the study of all fulness is lodged it generally ex-here mention a et entertainment
upidity of their
of their hearts.

gives vigour to oil which would ince, that celehe reign of King
y called by the he effect of such
of. From among many other distichs no less to be quoted on this account, I cannot but recite the two following lines :

A painted vest Prince Voltiger had on,
Which from a naked Piet his grandsire won.

Here, if the poet had not been vivacious as we as stupid, he could not, in the warmth and hurry nonsense, have been capable of forgetting that nether Prince Voltiger nor his grandfather could stria naked man of his doublet; but a fool of a cold constitution would have staid to have flayed the Pic-and made buff of his skin, for the wearing of th conqueror.

To bring these observations to some useful pu-poses of life—what I would propose should be, th we imitated those wise nations, wherein every ma learns some handicraft-work.—Would it not ema beau prettily enough, if, instead of eternally playing with a snuff-box, he spent some part of his tim in making one? Such a method as this would ver-much conduce to the public emolument, by makin every man living good for something; for ther would then be no one member of human society b would have some little pretension for some degree i it: like him who came to Will's coffee-house, upo the merit of having writ a posy of a ring.—R.

No. 44.] FRIDAY, APRIL 20, 1711.

Tu, quid ego et populus mecum desideret. audi.

Hos. Ars. Poet. ver. 12

Now hear what evcry auditor expects.—ROSCOMMON.

AMONG the several artifices which are put i practice by the poets to fill the minds of an audience with terror, the first place is due to thund and lightning, which are often made use of at th descending of a god, or the rising of a ghost, at th vanishing of a devil, or at the death of a tyrant I have known a bell introduced into several tragdies with good effect; and have seen the whole asembly in a very great alarm all the while it ha-been ringing. But there is nothing which delighand terrifies our English theatre so much as a ghos-especially when he appears in a bloody shirt. A spectre has very often saved a play, though he ha-done nothing but stalked across the stage, or rothrough a cleft of it, and sunk again without speaking one word. There may be a proper season f these several terrors; and when they only come as aids and assistances to the poet, they are n only to be excused, but to be applauded. Thus th sounding of the clock in Venice Preserved makthe hearts of the whole audience quake; and co-veys a stronger terror to the mind than it is possib for words to do. The appearance of the ghost i Hamlet is a master-piece in its kind, and wrought with all the circumstances that can create eith attention or horror. The mind of the reader wonderfully prepared for his reception by the di-courses that precede it. His dumb behaviour at h first entrance strikes the imagination very strongh but every time he enters, he is still more terrifyin Who can read the speech with which young Hamaccosts him without trembling?

Hos. Look, my lord, it comes!

HAM. Angels and ministers of grace defend us!

Be thou a spirit of health, or goblin damn'd:

Bring'st with thee airs from heav'n, or blasts from hell;

Be thy events* wicked or charitable;

Thou com'st in such a questionable shape

That I will speak to thee. I'll call thee Hamlet, * Events for adrements, comings, or visits. We read in oth copies, intents.

King, Father, Royal Dane. Oh! answer me.
 Let me not burst in ignorance; but tell Why thy canoniz'd bones, hearers in death, Have burst their cerements? Why the sepulchre Wherein we saw thee quietly inurn'd, Hath op'd his ponderous and marble jaws To cast thee up again? What may this mean?
 That thou, dead corse, again in complete steel Revisit'st thus the glimpses of the moon, Making night hideous?

I do not therefore find fault with the artifices above mentioned, when they are introduced with skill, and accompanied by proportionable sentiments and expressions in the writing.

For the moving of pity, our principal machine is the handkerchief; and indeed, in our common tragedies, we should not know very often that the persons are in distress by any thing they say, if they did not from time to time apply their handkerchiefs to their eyes. Far be it from me to think of banishing this instrument of sorrow from the stage; I know a tragedy could not subsist without it; all that I would contend for, is to keep it from being misapplied. In a word, I would have the actor's tongue sympathise with his eyes,

A disconsolate mother, with a child in her hand, has frequently drawn compassion from the audience, and has therefore gained a place in several tragedies. A modern writer, that observed how this had took in other plays, being resolved to double the distress, and melt his audience twice as much as those before him had done, brought a princess upon the stage with a little boy in one hand, and a girl in the other. This too had a very good effect. A third poet being resolved to outwrite all his predecessors, a few years ago introduced three children with great success: and as I am informed, a young gentleman, who is fully determined to break the most obdurate hearts, has a tragedy by him, where the first person that appears upon the stage is an afflicted widow in her mourning weeds, with half-a-dozen fatherless children attending her, like those that usually hang about the figure of Charity. Thus several incidents that are beautiful in a good writer, become ridiculous by falling into the hands of a bad one.

But among all our methods of moving pity or terror, there is none so absurd and barbarous, and which more exposes us to the contempt and ridicule of our neighbours, than that dreadful butchering of one another, which is so very frequent upon the English stage. To delight in seeing men stabbed, poisoned, racked, or impaled, is certainly the sign of a cruel temper: and as this is often practised before the British audience, several French critics, who think these are grateful spectacles to us, take occasion from them to represent us as a people that delight in blood. It is indeed very odd, to see our stage strewed with carcases in the last scenes of a tragedy, and to observe in the wardrobe of the play-house several daggers, poniards, wheels, bows for poison, and many other instruments of death. Murders and executions are always transacted behind the scenes in the French theatre; which in general is very agreeable to the manners of a polite and civilised people: but as there are no exceptions to this rule on the French stage, it leads them into absurdities almost as ridiculous as that which falls under our present censure. I remember in the famous play of Corneille, written upon the subject of the Horatii and Curiatii; the fierce young hero who had overcome the Curiatii one after another (instead of being congratulated by his sister for his victory, being upbraided in the height of her. If attention, it would the sentiment take place shed, as soon as he follows and forbear drawn behind murdered might have very unnatural To give my not to have if there was

It may now how Sophocles like delicate same condition mother having session of her terer. That mined to re filled his stratagem solution to know would have dreadful re the mother and the so mercy to be that she is that she is our plays scenes, though ture to be believe my something dialogue between scenes, that acted before after meets and by a killing him he should his soul before him to retire had slain him in the very By this means which Horace forbearing orders before

Nec pu

Let not
 And sp

The French Horace's r kinds of de had too mu a better eff behind the to my coun who were and rather if it could audience. though the seldom sla

BRITISH ESSAYISTS.

bodies were has always o that the
have been an impro-

trens;
anguem;
edi.
Poet. ver. 135.

COMMON.

tragic ine ignorant
and by the would wish with cauconsider com-
the innu-
dice to raise Norris in a n ordinary
ed hat are of the scene
n a pair of age with his ght a very time; and
age. But compassion, gh are infi-
t make us e for comic ce a much
-C.

el, 1711.

e than a safe same time I quences that to our poliundation of us! What il we be ex-
great evils I ct of parlia-
of French

ave already is ludicrous (as there is ing it) they
I remember
ntrywomen
sooth, a man
one of their
e male Abi-
oking-glass
air a whole ere was any with child by tell; but I think at present the whole race of them is extinct in our own country.

About the time that several of our sex were taken into this kind of service, the ladies likewise brought up the fashion of receiving visits in their beds. It was then looked upon as a piece of ill-breeding for a woman to refuse to see a man because she was not stirring; and a porter would have been thought unfit for his place, that could have made so awkward an excuse. As I love to see every thing that is new, I once prevailed upon my friend Will Honeycomb to carry me along with him to one of these travelled ladies, desiring him, at the same time, to present me as a foreigner who could not speak English; that so I might not be obliged to bear a part in the discourse. The lady, though willing to appear undrest, had put on her best looks, and painted herself for our reception. Her hair appeared in a very nice disorder, as the night-gown which was thrown upon her shoulders was ruffled with great care. For my part, I am so shocked with every thing which looks immodest in the fair sex, that I could not forbear taking off my eye from her when she moved in bed, and was in the greatest confusion imaginable every time she stirred a leg or an arm. As the coquettes who introduced this custom grew old they left it off by degrees, well knowing that a woman of threescore may kick and tumble her heart out without making any impression.

Sempronius is at present the most professed admirer of the French nation, but is so modest as to admit her visitants no farther than her toilet. It is a very odd sight that beautiful creature makes, when she is talking politics with her tresses flowing about her shoulders, and examining that face in the glass which does such execution upon all the male standers-by. How prettily does she divide her discourse between her woman and her visitants! What sprightly transitions does she make from an opera or a sermon to an ivory comb or a pincushion! How have I been pleased to see her interrupted in an account of her travels, by a message to her footman; and holding her tongue in the midst of a moral reflection, by applying the tip of it to a patch!

There is nothing which exposes a woman to greater dangers, than that gaiety and airiness of temper which are natural to most of the sex. It should be therefore the concern of every wise and virtuous woman to keep this sprightliness from degenerating into levity. On the contrary, the whole discourse and behaviour of the French is to make the sex more fantastical, or (as they are pleased to term it) more awakened, than is consistent either with virtue or discretion. To speak loud in public assemblies, to let every one hear you talk of things that should only be mentioned in private or in whisper, are looked upon as parts of a refined education. At the same time a blush is unfashionable, and silence more ill-bred than any thing that can be spoken. In short, discretion and modesty, which in all other ages and countries have been regarded as the greatest ornaments of the fair sex, are considered as the ingredients of a narrow conversation, and family behaviour.

Some years ago I was at the tragedy of Macbeth, and unfortunately placed myself under a woman of quality that is since dead, who, as I found by the noise she made, was newly returned from France. A little before the rising of the curtain, she broke out into a loud soliloquy, "When will the dear witches enter?" and immediately upon their first ape, Love is a

pearance, asked a lady that sat three boxes from her on her right hand, if those witches were not charming creatures. A little after, as Betterton was in one of the finest speeches of the play, she shook her fan at another lady who sat as far on her left hand, and told her with a whisper that might be heard all over the pit, "We must not expect to see Balloon to-night." Not long after, calling out to a young baronet by his name, who sat three seats before me, she asked him whether Macbeth's wife was still alive; and before he could give an answer, fell a talking of the ghost of Banquo. She had by this time formed a little audience to herself, and fixed the attention of all about her. But as I had a mind to hear the play, I got out of the sphere of her impertinence, and planted myself in one of the remotest corners of the pit.

This pretty childishness of behaviour is one of the most refined parts of coquetry, and is not to be attained in perfection by ladies that do not travel for their improvement. A natural and unconstrained behaviour has something in it so agreeable, that it is no wonder to see people endeavouring after it. But at the same time it is so very hard to hit, when it is not born with us, that people often make themselves ridiculous in attempting it.

A very ingenious French author tells us, that the ladies of the court of France in his time thought it ill-breeding, and a kind of female pedantry, to pronounce a hard word right; for which reason they took frequent occasion to use hard words, that they might show a politeness in murdering them. He farther adds, that a lady of some quality at court having accidentally made use of a hard word in a proper place, and pronounced it right, the whole assembly was out of countenance for her.

I must however be so just to own, that there are many ladies who have travelled several thousands of miles without being the worse for it, and have brought home with them all the modesty, discretion, and good sense that they went abroad with. As, on the contrary, there are great numbers of travelled ladies who have lived all their days within the smoke of London. I have known a woman that never was out of the parish of St. James's, betray as many foreign fopperies in her carriage, as she could have gleaned in half the countries of Europe.—C.

No. 46.] MONDAY, APRIL 23, 1711.

Non bene junctarum discordia semina rerum.

Ovum. Met. l. i. ver. 9.

The jarring seeds of ill-concerted things.

WHEN I want materials for this paper, it is my custom to go abroad in quest of game; and when I meet any proper subject, I take the first opportunity of setting down a hint of it upon paper. At the same time, I look into the letters of my correspondents, and if I find any thing suggested in them that may afford matter of speculation, I likewise enter a minute of it in my collection of materials. By this means I frequently carry about me a whole sheetful of hints, that would look like a rhapsody of nonsense to anybody but myself. There is nothing in them but obscurity and confusion, raving and inconsistency. In short, they are my speculations in the first principles, that (like the world in its chaos) are void of all light, distinction, and order.

About a week since there happened to me a very odd accident, by reason of one of these my papers of minutes which I had accidentally dropped at Lloyd's coffee-house, where the auctions are usually kept. Before I missed it, there were a cluster of people who had found it, and were diverting themselves with it. I raised so much noise, that I observed with courage to do what they had done, asking every one paper; but those merry fellows to get up in the whole room. The boy asked a very audacious

Sir Roger hate long sp be a conj dog, scree London, in rico—A Library—L Bucephalus Charles Lil relief to en sions—King ham of back Procrastina hogs in arm —Admissio provable—L parrot's sch —No man Club of sig chairs, tape rings to the married to w turned up w Flower dye nothing, sa with golde drum-sticks —The black barber's po Caesar's pe stances—P percussus A ogle-master The read house very written by had been t who had th zen, told us that he wis what was ex upon the d pole, to si usually me the coffee-m paper to on added, that ish man wi young Oxfo uncle at the Pactolus w scheme of t they were t this innocen as he was c which he the whole a cursory |

l it into a th it. My iness of my four during d laugh on d suspicion sified, and an, took no
d about me.
y made use
ing paper;
ects which s as I had t as I have ent, I shall
to the two t have pub-
is many a ivate affairs
as is here-
y the barp of Salis-
acta est im-
e impious."

are plagued
g dissenters
e morning,
non-serious
is very rare
ss when the
a tribe, all ers, really any time I
ermon pop-
proofs, and er weary I I not let me
of my case, nd your pity ct, in a little d into want,
ked to death
m, &c.

"R. G."
ling-master,

ve travelled which time
hole art of n the polite
d, I intend,
or an ogling-
e morning,
ht. I have ogle fit for the evening,
g one of my called The ady to show
beg you will n advertise-

our, &c."

4, 1711.

man Nature,
the best of all his works, after some very curious observations upon laughter, concludes thus: "The passion of laughter is nothing else but sudden glory arising from some sudden conception of some eminency in ourselves, by comparison with the infirmities of others, or with our own formerly: for men laugh at the follies of themselves past, when they come suddenly to remembrance, except they bring with them any present dishonour."

According to this author, therefore, when we hear a man laugh excessively, instead of saying he is very merry, we ought to tell him he is very proud. And indeed, if we look into the bottom of this matter, we shall meet with many observations to confirm us in this opinion. Every one laughs at somebody that is in an inferior state of folly to himself. It was formerly the custom for every great house in England to keep a tame fool dressed in petticoats, that the heir of the family might have an opportunity of joking upon him, and diverting himself with his absurdities. For the same reason, idiots are still in request in most of the courts of Germany, where there is not a prince of any great magnificence, who has not two or three dressed, distinguished, undisputed fools in his retinue, whom the rest of the courtiers are always breaking their jests upon.

The Dutch, who are more famous for their industry and application than for wit and humour, hang up in several of their streets what they call the sign of the Gaper, that is, the head of an idiot dressed in a cap and bells, and gaping in a most immoderate manner. This is a standing jest at Amsterdam.

Thus every one diverts himself with some person or other that is below him in point of understanding, and triumphs in the superiority of his genius, whilst he has such objects of derision before his eyes. Mr. Dennis has very well expressed this in a couple of humorous lines, which are part of a translation of a satire in Monsieur Boileau:—

Thus one fool tells his tongue out at another, And shakes his empty noddle at his brother.

Mr. Hobbs's reflection gives us the reason why the insignificant people above-mentioned are stirrers up of laughter among men of a gross taste: but as the more understanding part of mankind do not find their risibility affected by such ordinary objects, it may be worth the while to examine into the several provocatives of laughter in men of superior sense and knowledge.

In the first place I must observe, that there is a set of merry drolls, whom the common people of all countries admire, and seem to love so well, "that they could eat them," according to the old proverb: I mean those circumforaneous wits whom every nation calls by the name of that dish of meat which it loves best: in Holland they are termed Pickled Herrings; in France, Jean Pottages; in Italy, Macaronies; and in Great Britain, Jack Puddings. These merry wags, from whatsoever food they receive their titles, that they may make their audiences laugh, always appear in a fool's coat, and commit such blunders and mistakes in every step they take, and every word they utter, as those who listen to them would be ashamed of.

But this little triumph of the understanding, under the disguise of laughter, is no where more visible than in that custom which prevails every where among us on the first day of the present month, when every body takes it into his head to make as many fools as he can. In proportion as there are more follies discovered, so there is more laughter on this day than on any other in the whole year. A neigh-

bear of mine, who is a haberdasher by trade, and a very shallow conceited fellow, makes his boast that for these ten years successively he has not made less than a hundred April fools. My landlady had a falling out with him about a fortnight ago, for sending every one of her children upon some sleeveless errand, as she terms it. Her eldest son went to buy a halfpenny-worth of inkle at a shoemaker's; the eldest daughter was dispatched half a mile to see a monster; and in short the whole family of innocent children made April fools. Nay, my landlady herself did not escape him. This empty fellow has laughed upon these conceits ever since.

This art of wit is well enough, when confined to one day in a twelvemonth; but there is an ingenious tribe of men sprung up of late years, who are for making April fools every day in the year. These gentlemen are commonly distinguished by the name of Biters: a race of men that are perpetually employed in laughing at those mistakes which are of their own production.

Thus we see, in proportion as one man is more refined than another, he chooses his fool out of a lower or higher class of mankind; or to speak in a more philosophical language, that secret elation or pride of heart which is generally called laughter, arises in him, from his comparing himself with an object below him, whether it so happens that it be a natural or an artificial fool. It is, indeed, very possible that the persons we laugh at may in the main of their characters be much wiser men than ourselves; but if they would have us laugh at them, they must fall short of us in those respects which stir up this passion.

I am afraid I shall appear too abstracted in my speculations, if I show, that when a man of wit makes us laugh, it is by betraying some oddness or infirmity in his own character, or in the representation which he makes of others; and that when we laugh at a brute, or even at an inanimate thing, it is at some action or incident that bears a remote analogy to any blunder or absurdity in reasonable creatures.

But to come into common life; I shall pass by the consideration of those stage coxcombs that are able to shake a whole audience, and take notice of a particular sort of men who are such provokers of mirth in conversation, that it is impossible for a club or merry meeting to subsist without them—I mean those honest gentlemen that are always exposed to the wit and raillery of their well-wishers and companions; that are pelted by men, women, and children, friends and foes, and in a word, stand as butts in conversation, for every one to shoot at that pleases. I know several of these butts who are men of wit and sense, though by some odd turn of humour, some unlucky cast in their person or behaviour, they have always the misfortune to make the company merry. The truth of it is, a man is not qualified for a butt, who has not a good deal of wit and vivacity, even in the ridiculous side of his character. A stupid butt is only fit for the conversation of ordinary people: men of wit require one that will give them play, and bestir himself in the absurd part of his behaviour. A butt with these accomplishments frequently gets the laugh on his side, and turns the ridicule upon him that attacks him. Sir John Falstaff was a hero of this species, and gives a good description of himself in his capacity of a butt, after the following manner: "Men of all sorts," says that merry knight, "take a pride to gird at me. The brain of man is not able to invent any thing that tends to laughter more than I invent, or is invented on me.

I am
is in

No.

My
time letter
some which that I fit to

To

"I
you
ciety.
that my o
to th tions
come
seat
didat
you,
are n bly ex liness
before day i add Pict
since
hand
quire consi

"
ple o

"
weak
enou
so, I
reco
will may catic
hair,
must
side
agre
up t
pret appe
conv
the whic
wish as y face
the
of y
to i
to n

BRITISH ESSAYISTS.

so prythee make deformity in the
be sure bring it
of my heart,
and servant,
"HECATISSA."

affectation, and examined my own
and found out its tion to be aware to my sorrow I al follies which I an old fellow, and but having al-
pleasing in the ment's ease, but I
with a glazed wax-
severe fit, I was city, where I be-my usual com-upon them. A company, and kind fortunate additions eman of the fa-
soon after the re of the whole
graded me into an operation before
a coxcomb) was they admit the
ity. The return obligation laid my body from ever from a folly.
my thanks this noble servant."

Cpping, April 18.
the morning they well entertained
ments of person
y. What made
bly among us is,
pany of strollers,
impertinent splen-
far from falling stage is here in

Alexander the per cravat. The
to have no dis-Foppington the ans to show him-
ings of different
have had a full nerants are still you can prevail to the playhouse, beggars, and the
at one part which propriety, and that so well done; that no, in the midst

Quixote in the
that he told them,
it should be in characters of dis-
told them, if way to people's and of bridges or ation of beggars.
pect, since they could not be contented to act heathen warriors, as such fellows as Alexander, but must presume make a mockery of one of the quorum.

R. "Your servant."

No. 49.] THURSDAY, APRIL 26, 1711.

—Hominem pagina nostra sapit.—MART.

Men and manners I describe.

It is very natural for a man who is not turned f mirthful meetings of men, or assemblies of the fa sex, to delight in that sort of conversation which i find in coffee-houses. Here a man of my temper in his element; for if he cannot talk, he can st be more agreeable to his company, as well as pleas in himself, in being only a hearer. It is a secret known but to few, yet of no small use in the condu of life, that when you fall into a man's conversatio the first thing you should consider is, whether he h a greater inclination to hear you, or that you shou hear him. The latter is the more general desire, a I know very able flatterers that never speak a wo in praise of the persons from whom they obtain dai favours, but still practise a skilful attention to whi ever is uttered by those with whom they conver We are very curious to observe the behaviour great men and their clients; but the same passio and interests move men in lower spheres; and (that have nothing else to do but make observation see in every parish, street, lane, and alley, of th populous city, a little potentate that has his cot and his flatterers, who lay snares for his affecti and favour by the same arts that are practised up men in higher stations.

In the place I most usually frequent, men dif rather in the time of day in which they make figure, than in any real greatness above one a other. I, who am at the coffee-house at six in t morning, know that my friend Beaver, the hab dasher, has a levee of more undissembled friends a admirers than most of the courtiers or generals Great Britain. Every man about him has, perhap a newspaper in his hand; but none can pretend guess what step will be taken in any one court Europe, till Mr. Beaver has thrown down his pij and declares what measures the allies must en into upon this new posture of affairs. Our coff house is near one of the inns of court, and Beav has the audience and admiration of his neighbor from six till within a quarter of eight, at which ti he is interrupted by the students of the house; so of whom are ready dressed for Westminster at eig in a morning, with faces as busy as if they were tained in every cause there; and others come their night-gowns to saunter away their time, as they never designed to go thither. I do not kn that I meet in any of my walks, objects which mo both my spleen and laughter so effectually, as the young fellows at the Grecian, Squire's, Searle's, a all other coffee-houses adjacent to the law, who r early for no other purpose but to publish their la ness. One would think these young virtuosos ta a gay cap and slippers, with a scarf and party-coloured gown, to be the ensigns of dignity; for t vain things approach each other with an air, whi shows they regard one another for their vestmen I have observed, that the superiority among the proceeds from an opinion of gallantry and fashio The gentleman in the strawberry sash, who presid so much over the rest, has, it seems, subscribed every opera this last winter, and is supposed to ceive favours from one of the actresses.

When the day grows too busy for these gentlemen to enjoy any longer the pleasures of their dishabille with any manner of confidence, they give place to men who have business or good sense in their faces, and come to the coffee-house either to transact affairs, or enjoy conversation. The persons to whose behaviour and discourse I have most regard, are such as are between these two sorts of men; such as have not spirits too active to be happy and well pleased in a private condition, nor complexions too warm to make them neglect the duties and relations of life. Of these sort of men consist the worthier part of mankind; of these are all good fathers, generous brothers, sincere friends, and faithful subjects. Their entertainments are derived rather from reason than imagination: which is the cause that there is no impetuosity or instability in their speech or action. You see in their countenances they are at home, and in quiet possession of the present instant as it passes, without desiring to quicken it by gratifying any passion, or prosecuting any new design. These are the men formed for society, and those little communities which we express by the word neighbourhood.

The coffee-house is the place of rendezvous to all that live near it, who are thus turned to relish calm and ordinary life. Eubulus presides over the middle hours of the day, when this assembly of men meet together. He enjoys a great fortune handsomely, without launching into expense; and exerts many noble and useful qualities, without appearing in any public employment. His wisdom and knowledge are serviceable to all that think fit to make use of them; and he does the office of a counsel, a judge, an executor, and a friend, to all his acquaintance, not only without the profits which attend such offices, but also without the deference and homage which are usually paid to them. The giving of thanks is displeasing to him. The greatest gratitude you can show him is, to let him see that you are a better man for his services; and that you are as ready to oblige others, as he is to oblige you.

In the private exigencies of his friends, he lends a legal value considerable sums which he might highly increase by rolling in the public stocks. He does not consider in whose hands his money will improve most, but where it will do most good.

Eubulus has so great an authority in his little journal audience, that when he shakes his head at any piece of public news, they all of them appear dejected; and on the contrary, go home to their dinners with a good stomach and cheerful aspect when Eubulus seems to intimate that things go well. Nay, their veneration towards him is so great, that when they are in other company they speak and act after him; are wise in his sentences, and are no sooner set down at their own tables, but they hope or fear, rejoice or despond, as they saw him do at the coffee-house. In a word, every man is Eubulus as soon as his back is turned.

Having here given an account of the several reigns that succeed each other from day-break till dinner-time, I shall mention the monarchs of the afternoon on another occasion, and shut up the whole series of them with the history of Tom the Tyrant;* who, as the first minister of the coffee-house, takes the government upon him between the hours of eleven and twelve at night, and gives his orders in the most arbitrary manner to the servants below him, as to the disposition of liquors, coal, and cinders.—R.

* The waiter of that coffee-house, frequently nicknamed Sir Thomas.

WHEN the (about a twelve rabble, and for being wonder thing that is n departure, em ries of their their manners the remarks w next to the for I should be des conceived of u

The upholst about these hi a little bundle written by kin as he supposes papers are no of very odd ob ternity of king Great Britain, short specimen haps communi article of Lou without doubt

"On the me a huge house, tion of which O Koam, kin made by the h consecrated.

Nations believ and produced moon. But st tion that I cou that this prod it now bears which they ha It was probab grew upon the the country (a figure) bored a industry, till t tiful vaults an this day. As scooped to the must have bee it, which is not and is in sev stand like the the top with g when this gre been many hu

gion among t of a temple, signed for mer there are seve the natives of some sort of w day as sacred holy houses o circumstance was indeed a the rest, and s deal of vehem him, instead of the place, they

APRIL 30, 1711.

o talibus animos
prole parentem.

VIAN. ÆN. l. 78.

shall be ever thine,
beautecus line.

It, like a sprightly wife, I did not think my ternity would have occurred since I had promised as they think they canon for my person, they answer. As to the pro-myself and the match-objection to it; which expect to be acquainted of keeping a woman's ve so much choice? I because the lady seems a of their make.
art upon her; and think ress for an epigram a-ought, against her; it nd her to me. At the cover that his malice is si non videare, videare, places

soft hand I hung,
men in thy tongue,
that anguish I endur'd!
d, I was cur'd.

ve received, as a signal rotherly affection. We your short face in Ox-of our legislature has speculations, and our sort by you recorded to ves in gratitude bound to pect, all such persons as you shall think fit, from unto the board. As for an easy chair prepared le: which we doubt not very hideous aspect, and at in the native and un-person, than with all ncil, which (as you have vanish with a breath, er may deface the shrine the literal sense of our his balmy kisses, and de-short, the only faces of ndure the weather, must though his, in truth, has ing; but then he boasts pingo; and oft jocosely they acquire colours that must no longer paint, but a maxim that in this our no ill success; and has fects, as the famous cosostman, and invented by ocrates of the pestle and after a due course, rosy, t and most approved re-ever of the spirits. But lidate, who, I understand, will no longer hang out first of her sex that has r, she will certainly in a rose and verse, be a lady formity now living, and meet with many admirers here as frightful self. But being a long-headed gentlewoman apt to imagine she has some farther design I have yet penetrated; and perhaps has more the Spectator than any of his fraternity, as son of all the world she could like for a pa-And if so, really I cannot but applaud her and should be glad, if it might lie in my p-effect an amicable accommodation betwixt t of such different extremes, as the only posspedient to mend the breed, and rectify the nomy of the family on both sides. And a she is a lady of a very fluent elocution, y not fear that your child will be born dumb otherwise you might have some reason to b-hensive of. To be plain with you, I can see shocking in it; for though she has not a fa-john-apple, yet as a late friend of mine, sixty-five ventured on a lass of fifteen, y quently in the remaining five years of his me to understand, that as old as he then when they were first married he and his spomake but fourscore; so may Madam Hecat justly allege hereafter, that as long-visage may then be thought, upon their wedding Spectator and she had but half an ell of twixt them; and this my worthy predecessor Serjeant Chin, always maintained to be than the true oval proportion between man But as this may be a new thing to you, hitherto had no expectations from women allow you what time you think fit to considnot without some hope of seeing at last your hereupon subjoined to mine, and which is s much desired by.

" Sir, your assured friend,

" And most humble, s

" HUGH GOBLIN,

The following letter has not much in it, is written in my own praise, I cannot from suppress it.

" Sir,

" You proposed, in your Spectator of last Mr. Hobbs's hypothesis for solving that phenomenon of laughter. You have maipothesis valuable by espousing it yourself it continued Mr. Hobbs's, nobody would ha-it. Now here this perplexed case arises.
company laughed very heartily upon the that very paper of yours; and the truth o must be a man of more than ordinary that could stand out against so much co-not do as we did. Now there are few in world so far lost to all good sense, as to you to be a man in a state of folly ' inferself.'—Pray then how do you justify your sis of laughter?

" Your most humble,

" Thursday, the 26th of the month of fools

" Sir,

In answer to your letter, I must desire collect yourself; and you will find, that did me the honour to be so merry over my laughed at the idiot, the German courtier, the merry-andrew, the haberdasher, the butt, and not at

" Your humble se

" THE SP

R

No. 53.] TUESDAY, MAY 1, 1711.

—Alquando bonus dormitat Homerus.

HOM. ARS. POET. VER. 359.

Homer himself hath been observed to nod.

ROSCOMMON.

My correspondents grow so numerous, that I cannot avoid frequently inserting their applications to me.

"MR. SPECTATOR,

"I am glad I can inform you, that your endeavours to adorn that sex, which is the fairest part of the visible creation, are well received, and like to prove not unsuccessful. The triumph of Daphne over her sister Lætitia has been the subject of conversation at several tea-tables where I was present; and I have observed the fair circle not a little pleased to find you considering them as reasonable creatures, and endeavouring to banish that Mahometan custom, which had too much prevailed even in this island, of treating women as if they had no souls. I must do them the justice to say, that there seems to be nothing wanting to the finishing of these lovely pieces of human nature, besides the turning and applying their ambition properly, and the keeping them up to a sense of what is their true merit. Epictetus, that plain honest philosopher, as little as he had of gallantry, appears to have understood them as well as the polite St. Evremont, and has hit this point very luckily. 'When young women,' says he, 'arrive at a certain age, they hear themselves called Mistresses, and are made to believe that their only business is to please the men; they immediately begin to dress, and to place all their hopes in the adorning of their persons; it is therefore,' continues he, 'worth the while to endeavour by all means to make them sensible that the honour paid to them is only upon account of their conducting themselves with virtue, modesty, and discretion.'

"Now to pursue the matter yet farther, and to render your cares for the improvement of the fair ones more effectual, I would propose a new method like those applications which are said to convey their virtue by sympathy; and that is, that in order to embellish the mistress, you should give a new education to the lover, and teach the men not to be any longer dazzled by false charms and unreal beauty. I cannot but think that if our sex knew always how to place their esteem justly, the other would not be so often wanting to themselves in deserving it. For as the being enamoured with a woman of sense and virtue is an improvement to a man's understanding and morals, and the passion is ennobled by the object which inspires it; so on the other side, the appearing amiable to a man of a wise and elegant mind, carries in itself no small degree of merit and accomplishment. I conclude, therefore, that one way to make the women yet more agreeable is, to make the men more virtuous.

"I am, Sir, your most humble servant,

"R. B."

"SIR,

April 26th.

"Yours of Saturday last I read, not without some resentment; but I will suppose when you say you expect an inundation of ribands and brocades, and to see many new vanities which the women will fall into upon a peace with France, that you intend only the unthinking part of our sex: and what methods can reduce them to reason is hard to imagine.

"But, Sir, there are others yet, that your instructions might be of great use to, who, after their best endeavours, are sometimes at a loss to acquit themselves to you can ladies and nour and vation no nished, the good man berties yo people sh best-bred do not. of good u

"Sir,

No an scription world.

"Mr

"I am have been that my s great a d keeping t bear the l of behavi this as a v find, that say, exen spleen. N tavern kit and only b and wastin throw off t dishonours great and these fellow they cannot mouths, or out the int this with a wholly quit with the v

"SIR,

"This is formed Sta practice fro But as you ofus men a parently pa unobserved attract our looking at t into a few bloom of yo I had not ro kept my ey till one of t to bring do self. You with her ha tually in actually the the congreg to behave t so placed h She display which heav delicate and It was not i object. I c fan, which b

BRITISH ESSAYISTS.

the body of nopy furred
ked, attend-
ied in fan-
as drawn a threatening
ered to turn
ined by the d long prac-
g glances of
and I hope
he Peepers,
out you will ous than a
feared than

t servant."
to be consi-
y.

GREETING,
d from our ence with a spect to all not esteem it
ks for what confinement
nd for your misfortune.
e hearts of propose the into consi-
which will be nd not unac-
ert of music
ll, for Wed-
honour the ence, where shillings and is, that you injunction
the cities of d you hearti-

e Volscians.
rd, Story the

2, 1711.

Ep. xi. 28.

at I have re-ambridge, I
ublishing it.
philosophers
ce of learn-
age is likely ge, April 26.

ourager of li-information

ccount of a g us, but not nber, by any d not be un-
this sect are,
ed loungers,
r things, so n defective,
f this sort.

Some indeed will affirm that they are a kind of Peri-patetics, because we see them continually walking about. But I would have these gentlemen consider, that though the ancient Peripatetics walked much, yet they wrote much also; witness to the sorrow of this sect, Aristotle and others: whereas it is notorious that most of our professors never lay out a farthing either in pen, ink, or paper. Others are for deriving them from Diogenes, because several of the leading men of the sect have a great deal of cynical humour in them, and delight much in sunshine.
But then, again, Diogenes was content to have his constant habitation in a narrow tub, whilst our philosophers are so far from being of his opinion, that it is death to them to be confined within the limits of a good handsome convenient chamber but for half an hour. Others there are, who from the clearness of their heads deduce the pedigree of loungers from that great man (I think it was either Plato or Socrates) who, after all his study and learning, professed, that all he then knew was, that he knew nothing. You easily see this is but a shallow argument, and may be soon confuted.

"I have with great pains and industry made my observations from time to time upon these sages; and having now all materials ready, am compiling a treatise, wherein I shall set forth the rise and progress of this famous sect, together with their maxims, austerities, manner of living, &c. Having prevailed with a friend who designs shortly to publish a new edition of Diogenes Laertius, to add this treatise of mine by way of supplement, I shall now, to let the world see what may be expected from me (first begging Mr. Spectator's leave that the world may see it,) briefly touch upon some of my chief observations, and then subscribe myself your humble servant. In the first place I shall give you two or three of their maxims: the fundamental one, upon which their whole system is built, is this, viz. 'That Time being an implacable enemy to, and destroyer of, all things, ought to be paid in his own coin, and be destroyed and murdered without mercy, by all the ways that can be invented.' Another favourite saying of theirs is, 'That business was designed only for knaves, and study for blockheads.' A third seemed to be a ludicrous one, but has a great effect upon their lives; and is this, 'That the devil is at home.' Now for their manner of living: and here I shall have a large field to expatiate in; but I shall reserve particulars for my intended discourse, and now only mention one or two of their principal exercises. The elder proficients employ themselves in inspecting mores hominum multorum, in getting acquainted with all the signs and windows in the town. Some are arrived at so great knowledge, that they can tell every time any butcher kills a calf, every time any old woman's cat is in the straw, and a thousand other matters as important. One ancient philosopher contemplates two or three hours every day over a sun-dial! and is true to the dial,

—As the dial to the sun,

Although it be not shone upon.

Our younger students are content to carry their speculations as yet no farther than bowling-greens, billiard-tables, and such-like places. This may serve for a sketch of my design; in which I hope I shall have your encouragement.

"I am, Sir, yours."

I must be so just as to observe, I have formerly seen of this sect at our other university; though no distinguished by the appellation which the learned historian my correspondent reports they bear a

Cambridge. They were ever looked upon as a people that impaired themselves more by their strict application to the rules of their order, than any other students whatever. Others seldom hurt themselves any farther than to gain weak eyes, and sometimes head-aches; but these philosophers are seized all over with a general inability, indolence, and weariness, and a certain impatience of the place they are in, with a heaviness in removing to another.

The loungers are satisfied with being merely part of the number of mankind, without distinguishing themselves from amongst them. They may be said rather to suffer their time to pass than to spend it, without regard to the past, or prospect of the future. All they know of life is only the present instant, and do not taste even that. When one of this order happens to be a man of fortune, the expense of his time is transferred to his coach and horses, and his life is to be measured by their motion, not his own enjoyments or sufferings. The chief entertainment one of these philosophers can possibly propose to himself, is to get a relish of dress. This, methinks, might diversify the person he is weary of (his own dear self) to himself. I have known these two amusements make one of these philosophers make a very tolerable figure in the world; with variety of dresses in public assemblies in town, and quick motion of his horses out of it, now to Bath, now to Tunbridge, then to Newmarket, and then to London, he has in process of time brought it to pass, that his coach and his horses have been mentioned in all those places. When the loungers leave an academic life, and, instead of this more elegant way of appearing in the polite world, retire to the seats of their ancestors, they usually join in a pack of dogs, and employ their days in defending their poultry from foxes. I do not know any other method, that any of this order has ever taken to make a noise in the world; but I shall inquire into such about this town as have arrived at the dignity of being loungers by the force of natural parts, without having ever seen a university; and send my correspondent, for the embellishment of his book, the names and history of those who pass their lives without any incidents at all; and how they shift coffee-houses and chocolate-houses from hour to hour, to get over the insupportable labour of doing nothing.—R.

No. 55.] THURSDAY, MAY 3, 1711.

——Intus et in Jecore ugro Nascuntur Domini. — PERS. SAT. v. 129.

Our passions play the tyrants in our breasts

MOST of the trades, professions, and ways of living among mankind, take their original either from the love of pleasure, or the fear of want. The former, when it becomes too violent, degenerates into luxury, and the latter into avarice. As these two principles of action draw different ways, Persius has given us a very humorous account of a young fellow who was roused out of his bed in order to be sent upon a long voyage by Avarice, and afterward over-persuaded and kept at home by Luxury. I shall set down the pleadings of these two imaginary persons as they are in the original, with Mr. Dryden's translation of them:

Mene, piper, stertis: surge, inquit Avaritia, eja Surge. Negas: instat: surge, inquit. Non queo. Surge.
Et quid agas? Rogitas? sperdas advehe ponto, Castoreum, stuppas, hebenum, thus, lubrica Coa.
Tolle recens prius piper: sitiente camelo.
Verie aliquid: jura. Sed Jupiter audiet. Eheu!

SPECTATOR.—Nos. 9 & 10.

Baro. s Conten
Jam p
Ocyus
Ægeus
Seduct
Quid t
Intum
Tun' u
Cona s
Exhale
Quid p
Nutrie
Indulge Quod v
Vive m
En quid
Huncet

Whethe
When t
Up, up,
Stretch
The rug
At his c
What n
Why ris
With fa
Flax, co
Of pepp
With th
And wil
Be sure
'Tis wh
Swear, f
A trades
Resolv
Each sa
Nothing
That sof
And be s
What do
Art thou
Stark, st
Cubb'd i
On a bro
Dead wi
From a f
Say, wo
From six Indulge
For, not Death st
Does son
Live, wh
A name,
Speak:
To be th

When a is secure fr
all the plea
are very ex
to them u
all the meth
that avaric plicated pri
wholly set
The most torians obs formidable Romans, t a quite diff accordingly
the wealth squandered commonwe
and riches,
settled in times men
ther in pos
to alarm t

* See Boileau's happy.

No. 56.] FRIDAY, MAY 4, 1711.

Felix erroris auctor — LUCAN, l. 454.

Happy in their mistake.

an get into es avarice,
and riches.
cultation of
ld not for-nd of alle-represent my

ts engaged
the name d Avarice.
an univer-
nd. Lux-no did him
p, and Fang in his yer, Induslikewise a elbow, and the name s Avarice
verty, his states and seller and measures
nt. While ng for em-
—Luxury
f another.
ge himself
son under nd would erent par-
often side
her in his orld stood
not consinates had one ano-
which none
It is said
having re-
which they unkness of
ieved they not for the counsellor,
him with
To this enty (the uch more at he was ng all the sequently
e govern-
n order to
is prelimi-
ately dis-
were thus ifferences
t for the s and con-
ever con-
his reason
possession person be-that since
mentioned,
Plenty, as verty, as
C,

THE Americans believe that all creatures have souls, not only men and women, but brutes, vegetables, nay, even the most inanimate things, as stocks and stones. They believe the same of all the works of art, as of knives, boats, looking-glasses; and that as any of these things perish, their souls go into another world, which is inhabited by the ghosts of men and women. For this reason they always place by the corpse of their dead friend a bow and arrows, that he may make use of the souls of them in the other world, as he did of their wooden bodies in this. How absurd soever such an opinion as this may appear, our European philosophers have maintained several notions altogether as improbable. Some of Plato's followers in particular, when they talk of the world of ideas, entertain us with substances and beings no less extravagant and chimerical. Many Aristotelians have likewise spoken as unintelligibly of their substantial forms. I shall only instance Albertus Magnus, who, in his dissertation upon the loadstone, observing that fire will destroy its magnetic virtues, tells us that he took particular notice of one as it lay glowing amidst a heap of burning coals, and that he perceived a certain blue vapour to arise from it, which he believed might be the substantial form, that is, in our West Indian phrase, the soul of the loadstone.

There is a tradition among the Americans, that one of their countrymen descended in a vision to the great repository of souls, or, as we call it here, to the other world: and that upon his return he gave his friends a distinct account of every thing he saw among those regions of the dead. A friend of mine, whom I have formerly mentioned, prevailed upon one of the interpreters of the Indian kings, to inquire of them, if possible, what tradition they have among them of this matter: which, as well as he could learn by those many questions which he asked them at several times, was in substance as follows:

The visionary, whose name was Marraton, after having travelled for a long space under a hollow mountain, arrived at length on the confines of this world of spirits, but could not enter it by reason of a thick forest made up of bushes, brambles, and pointed thorns, so perplexed and interwoven with one another, that it was impossible to find a passage through it. Whilst he was looking about for some track or pathway that might be worn in any part of it, he saw a huge lion couched under the side of it, who kept his eye upon him in the same posture as when he watches for his prey. The Indian immediately started back, whilst the lion rose with a spring, and leaped towards him. Being wholly destitute of all other weapons, he stooped down to take a huge stone in his hand; but to his infinite surprise grasped nothing, and found the supposed stone to be only the apparition of one. If he was disappointed on this side, he was as much pleased on the other, when he found the lion, which had seized on his left shoulder, had no power to hurt him, and was only the ghost of that ravenous creature which it appeared to be. He no sooner got rid of his impotent enemy, but he marched up to the wood, and after having surveyed it for some time, endeavoured to press into one part of it that was a little thinner than the rest; when again, to his great surprise, he found the bushes made no resistance, but that he walked through briars and brambles with the same ease as through the open air; and in short, that the whole wood was nothing else but a wood of shades. He immediately concluded, that this huge thicket of thorns and brakes was designed as a kind of fence or quickset hedge to the ghosts it enclosed; and that probably their soft substances might be torn by these subtle points and prickles, which were too weak to make any impressions on flesh and blood. With this thought, he resolved to travel through this intricate wood; when by degrees he felt a gale of perfumes breathing upon him, that grew stronger and sweeter in proportion as he advanced. He had not proceeded much farther, when he observed the thorns and briers to end, and give place to a thousand beautiful green trees covered with blossoms of the finest scents and colours, that formed a wilderness of sweets, and were a kind of lining to those ragged scenes which he had before passed through. As he was coming out of this delightful part of the wood, and entering upon the plains it enclosed, he saw several horsemen rushing by him, and a little while after heard the cry of a pack of dogs. He had not listened long before he saw the apparition of a milk-white steed, with a young man on the back of it, advancing upon full stretch after the souls of about a hundred beagles, that were hunting down the ghost of a hare, which ran away before them with an unspeakable swiftness. As the man on the milk-white steed came by him, he looked upon him very attentively, and found him to be the young prince Nicharagua, who died about half a year before, and, by reason of his great virtues, was at that time lamented over all the western parts of America.

He had no sooner got out of the wood, but he was entertained with such a landscape of flowery plains, green meadows, running streams, sunny hills, and shady vales, as were not to be represented by his own expressions, nor, as he said, by the conceptions of others. This happy region was peopled with innumerable swarms of spirits, who applied themselves to exercises and diversions, according as their fancies led them. Some of them were tossing the figure of a quoit; others were pitching the shadow of a bar; others were breaking the apparition of a horse; and multitudes employing themselves upon ingenious handicrafts with the souls of departed utensils, for that is the name which in the Indian language they give their tools when they are burnt or broken. As he travelled through this delightful scene, he was very often tempted to pluck the flowers that rose every where about him in the greatest variety and profusion, having never seen several of them in his own country; but he quickly found, that though they were the objects of his sight, they were not liable to his touch. He at length came to the side of a great river, and being a good fisherman himself, stood upon the banks of it some time to look upon an angler that had taken a great many shapes of fishes, which lay flouncing up and down by him.

I should have told my reader, that this Indian had been formerly married to one of the greatest beauties of his country, by whom he had several children. This couple were so famous for their love and constancy to one another, that the Indians to this day, when they give a married man joy of his wife, wish they may live together like Marraton and Yaratilda. Marraton had not stood long by the fisherman when he saw the shadow of his beloved Yaratilda, who had for some time fixed her eye upon him, before he discovered her. Her arms were stretched out towards him, floods of tears ran down her eyes: her looks, her hands, her voice, called him over to her; and at the same time, she was impatiently made up of that rose. Yaratilda, tears, which looked upon long, before him: a phantom of he arose of tilda flew himself down from his dearments bower which that could. She had every day ton stood her habit came from she was pr well know faithful de him to th at an end. him, who her in the breed up to such a m meet toget

The travel ward a sig the portion veral molt the souls o sword so u sake of th touched up exceeded t any further

No. 5

Quem
Quæ
What Inur'd

WHEN t courses wit he was goi leave the maids, and intimates, themselves matters onl

I am at tleman, wh the nursery or a sack- He is like muslins, a sweet-meat with obser and court; her dress; wig; who snuff-box; marks, that

On the opportunity

BRITISH ESSAYISTS.

of the great-
s of hounds ping over a
gish story,
n jest, and servant neg-
out of the call a sub-
member one name of a company of the broad

in their own when they
d imperfec-
her appear
I shall not self about to make wo-
art of crea-those little among the
upon them, vice. The ar them of,
very much
its nature,
angry and want to the endearing Women
soothe them
et an edge
those pas-
own accord. ing calum-
ve given to bled to see
grow pale,
la is one of
on, and yet
ago of one both. The entered the
a tea-table, nd chanced
dispute, she a upon her off the de-
ended.

would ear-
aders, and with them.
so bad for atured cast
to the look:
rong, and
seen a wo-
been talk-
never seen
rty-woman

I would they value
ates of this d give free artisans to will be no ces, or of

but a woman is too sincere to mitigate the fury of her principles with temper and discretion, and to act with that caution and reservedness which are requisite in our sex. When this unnatural zeal gets into them, it throws them into ten thousand heats and extravagancies; their generous souls set no bounds to their love or to their hatred; and whether a whig or a tory, a lap-dog or a gallant, an opera or a puppet-show, be the object of it, the passion, while it reigns, engrosses the whole woman.

I remember, when Dr. Titus Oates* was in all his glory, I accompanied my friend Will Honeycomb in a visit to a lady of his acquaintance. We were no sooner sat down, but upon casting my eyes about the room, I found in almost every corner of it a print that represented the doctor in all magnitudes and dimensions. A little after, as the lady was discoursing with my friend, and held her snuff-box in her hand, who should I see in the lid of it but the doctor? It was not long after this when she had occasion for her handkerchief, which, upon first opening, discovered among the plaits of it the figure of the doctor. Upon this my friend Will, who loves raillery, told her, that if he was in Mr. Truelove's place (for that was the name of her husband), he should be made as uneasy by a handkerchief as ever Othello was. "I am afraid," said she, "Mr. Honeycomb, you are a tory: tell me truly, are you a friend to the doctor, or not?" Will, instead of making her a reply, smiled in her face (for indeed she was very pretty) and told her, that one of her patches was dropping off. She immediately adjusted it, and looking a little seriously, "Well," says she, "I will be hanged if you and your silent friend there are not against the doctor in your hearts; I suspected as much by his saying nothing." Upon this she took her fan in her hand, and upon the opening of it, again displayed to us the figure of the doctor, who was placed with great gravity among the sticks of it. In a word, I found that the doctor had taken possession of her thoughts, her discourse, and most of her furniture; but finding myself pressed too close by her question, I winked upon my friend to take his leave, which he did accordingly.—C.

No. 58.] MONDAY, MAY 7, 1711.

Ut pictura, poesis erit.—Hos. Ars. Poet. ver. 361.

Poems like pictures are.

NOTHING is so much admired, and so little understood, as wit. No author that I know of has written professedly upon it, and as for those who make any mention of it, they only treat on the subject as it has accidentally fallen in their way, and that too in little short reflections, or in general exclamatory flourishes, without entering into the bottom of the matter. I hope, therefore, I shall perform an acceptable work to my countrymen, if I treat at large upon this subject; which I shall endeavour to do in a manner suitable to it, that I may not incur the censure which a famous critic bestows upon one who had written a treatise on "the sublime," in a low grovelling style. I intend to lay aside a whole week for this undertaking, that the scheme of my thoughts may not be broken and interrupted; and I dare promise myself, if my readers will give me a week's attention, that this great city will be very

an odious
a party;

* Though the name of Dr. T. Oates is made use of here, Dr. Sacheverel is the person alluded to.

much changed for the better by next Saturday night. I shall endeavour to make what I say intelligible to ordinary capacities; but if my readers meet with any paper that in some parts of it may be a little out of their reach, I would not have them discouraged, for they may assure themselves the next shall be much clearer.

As the great and only end of these my speculations is to banish vice and ignorance out of the territories of Great Britain, I shall endeavour as much as possible to establish among us a taste of polite writing. It is with this view that I have endeavoured to set my readers right in several points relating to operas and tragedies; and shall from time to time impart my notions of comedy, as I think they may tend to its refinement and perfection. I find by my bookseller, that these papers of criticism, with that upon humour, have met with a more kind reception than indeed I could have hoped for from such subjects; for which reason I shall enter upon my present undertaking with greater cheerfulness.

In this, and one or two following papers, I shall trace out the history of false wit, and distinguish the several kinds of it as they have prevailed in different ages of the world. This I think the more necessary at present, because I observed there were attempts on foot last winter to revive some of those antiquated modes of wit that have been long exploded out of the commonwealth of letters. There were several satires and panegyrics handed about in acrostic, by which means some of the most arrant undisputed blockheads about the town began to entertain ambitious thoughts, and to set up for polite authors. I shall therefore describe at length those many arts of false wit, in which a writer does not show himself a man of a beautiful genius, but of great industry.

The first species of false wit which I have met with is venerable for its antiquity, and has produced several pieces which have lived very near as long as the Iliad itself: I mean those short poems printed among the minor Greek poets, which resemble the figure of an egg, a pair of wings, an axe, a shepherd's pipe, and an altar.

As for the first, it is a little oval poem, and may not improperly be called a scholar's egg. I would endeavour to hatch it, or, in more intelligible language, to translate it into English, did not I find the interpretation of it very difficult; for the author seems to have been more intent upon the figure of his poem than upon the sense of it.

The pair of wings consists of twelve verses, or rather feathers, every verse decreasing gradually in its measure according to its situation in the wing. The subject of it (as in the rest of the poems which follow) bears some remote affinity with the figure, for it describes a god of love, who is always painted with wings.

The axe, methinks, would have been a good figure for a lampoon, had the edge of it consisted of the most satirical parts of the work; but as it is in the original, I take it to have been nothing else but the posy of an axe which was consecrated to Minerva, and was thought to have been the same that Epeus made use of in the building of the Trojan horse; which is a hint I shall leave to the consideration of the critics. I am apt to think that the posy was written originally upon the axe, like those which our modern cutlers inscribe upon their knives; and that therefore the posy still remains in its original shape, though the axe itself is lost.

The shepherd's pipe may be said to be full of music, for verses, which nine stops likewise the

The altar the son of believe that ancient the ascribed: a fine a writer of any

It was in performance least a desirable outline of upon, and figure of his dilate itself cast. In an extended to prepared for persons who his iron belt them on a off a part which he had

Mr. Dryden one of the which an does not above-men

Some There And to

This fast poets of the with among mistaken, not remember moderns who have mentioned Charles the psalms written of the head one of the could not reason of travellers, of curiosity eminent w all the who and if the wigs which promises to that should signed this disposed of of the fore fore the w for the fac

But to would hum smattered brethren a vices. I have poetical lo present his the shape already fin likewise p tress's mar l exactly fit it. good hint, that readers will ap- particular: and very little time puff-boxes, and therefore con- ose admirable ndaric writers, his kind of wit ed better than es and dimen-

8, 1711.

han that every , notwithstanding- solidity are apt or as flash and occasion, that t the character

For this rea- ing at works of in the produc- better be a gal- in that title by een the inven- asters of great

e of these false e shall give the hem, that flou- world. The first atists or letter- an exception, ular letter in ce into a whole eat master in an Odyssey or eses, consisting tirely banished ich was called ause there was as inscribed , the poet ex- letters in their other, that he have seen this e much as an- ing his escape lects, when he syllable. For he whole lan- th a flaw in it, rong letter. I t if the work I tant, the Ody- ty, would have pedants, than perpetual fund s and phrases, urd spellings, o question but ne of the most e.

that ingenious distinguish by ak a letter, but a whole word, by substituting a picture in its place. When Cæsar was one of the masters of the Roman mint, he placed the figure of an elephant upon the reverse of the public money; the word Cæsar signifying an elephant in the Punic language. This was artificially contrived by Cæsar, because it was no lawful for a private man to stamp his own figure upon the coin of the commonwealth. Cicero, who was so called from the founder of his family, that was marked on the nose with a little wen like a vetch (which is Cicer in Latin,) instead of Marcus Tullius Cicero, ordered the words Marcus Tullius with the figure of a vetch at the end of them, to be inscribed on a public monument. This was done probably to shew that he was neither ashamed of his name or his family, notwithstanding the envy of his competitor had often reproached him with both. In the same manner, we read of a famous building that was marked in several parts of it with the figures of a frog and a lizard; those words in Greek having been the names of the architects, who by the laws of their country were never permitted to inscribe their own names upon their works. For the same reason it is thought that the forelock of the horse, in the antique equestrian statue of Marcus Aurelius, represents at a distance the shape of an owl, to intimate the country of the statuary who, in all probability was an Athenian. This kind of wit was very much in vogue among our own countrymen about an age or two ago, who did not practise it for any oblique reason as the ancients above-mentioned, but purely for the sake of being witty. Among innumerable instances that may be given of this nature, I shall produce the device of one Mr. Newberry, as I find it mentioned by our learned Camden in his remains. Mr. Newberry, to represent his name by a picture, hung up at his door the sign of a yew-tree, that had several berries upon it, and in the midst of them a golden N hung upon the bough of the tree, which by the help of a little false spelling made up the word N-ew-berry.

I shall conclude this topic with a rebus, which has been lately hewn out in freestone, and erected over two of the portals of Blenheim House, being the figure of a monstrous lion tearing to pieces a little cock. For the better understanding of which device, I must acquaint my English reader, that a cock has the misfortune to be called in Latin by the same word that signifies a Frenchman, as a lion is the emblem of the English nation. Such a device, in a noble pile of building, looks like a pun in an heroic poem; and I am very sorry the truly ingenious architect would suffer the statuary to blemish his excellent plan with so poor a conceit. But I hope what I have said will gain quarter for the cock, and deliver him out of the lion's paw.

I find likewise in ancient times the conceit of making an echo talk sensibly, and give rational answers. If this could be excusable in any writer it would be in Ovid, where he introduces the Echo as a nymph, before she was worn away into nothing but a voice. The learned Erasmus, though a man of wit and genius, has composed a dialogue upon this silly kind of device, and made use of an echo who seems to have been a very extraordinary linguist, for she answers the person she talks with in Latin, Greek, and Hebrew, according as she found the syllables which she was to repeat in any of the learned languages. Hudibras, in ridicule of this false kind of wit, has described Bruin bewailing the loss of his bear to a solitary Echo, who is of great use to the poet in several distichs, as she does in only repeat after him, but helps out his verse, and furnishes him with rhymes :

He rag'd, and kept as heavy a coil as Stout Hercules for loss of Hylas: Forcing the valleys to repeat The accents of his sad regret.
He beat his breast, and tore his hair,
For loss of his dear crony bear,
That Echo from the hollow ground, His doleful wailings did resound More wistfully by many times, Than in small poet's splay-foot rhymes,
That make her, in their rueful stories,
To answer to interrogatories,
And most unconscionably depose Things of which she nothing knows;
And when she has said all she can say,
'Tis wrested to the lover's fancy.
Quoth he, O whither, wicked Bruin, Art thou fled to my—Echo, "ruin?"
I thought th' had'st scorn'd to budge a step For fear. (Quoth Echo) "Marry guen." Am I not here to take thy part?
Then what has quell'd thy stubborn heart?
Have these bones rattl'd, and this head So often in thy quarrel bled?
Ner did I ever wince or grudge it, For thy dear sake, (Quoth she) "Mum budget.
Thinks't thou 'twill not be laid i' th' dish.
Thou turn'dst thy back? (Quoth Echo) "Fish."
To run from those th' hadst overcome Thus cowardly? (Quoth Echo) "Mum." But what a vengeance makes thee fly From me too as thine enemy?
Or if thou hast no thought of me, Nor what I have endur'd for thee; Yet shame and honour might prevail To keep thee thus from turning tail: For who would grudge to spend his blood in His honour's cause? (Quoth she) "A pudding."

C.

No. 60.] WEDNESDAY, MAY 9, 1711.

Hec est quod palles? Carquis non prandeat, hec est?
PERR. Sat. iii. 65.

Is it for this you gain those meagre looks,
And sacrifice your dinner to your books?

SEVERAL kinds of false wit that vanished in the refined ages of the world, discovered themselves again in the times of monkish ignorance.

As the monks were the masters of all that little learning which was then extant, and had their whole lives entirely disengaged from business, it is no wonder that several of them, who wanted genius for higher performances, employed many hours in the composition of such tricks in writing as required much time and little capacity. I have seen half the Æneid turned into Latin rhymes by one of the beaux esprits of that dark age; who says in his preface to it, that the Æneid wanted nothing but the sweets of rhyme to make it the most perfect work in its kind. I have likewise seen a hymn in hexameters to the Virgin Mary, which filled a whole book, though it consisted but of the eight following words :

Tot, tibi, sunt, Virgo, dotes, quot, sidera, celo.

Thou hast as many virtues, O Virgin, as there are stars in heaven.

The poet rung the changes upon these eight several words, and by that means made his verses almost as numerous as the virtues and the stars which they celebrated. It is no wonder that men who had so much time upon their hands did not only restore all the antiquated pieces of false wit, but enrich the world with inventions of their own. It was to this age that we owe the production of ana-grams, which is nothing else but a transmutation of one word

same set of change nig Chance, wh
sorts of co
a witty aut
calls his ri
had his lim
long to the

When th
upon, he c up, which w he shall hav
for it is his ceals itself
in all the va sibly be ra
who, when deavoured
was one of
by the nam
not being a tain libertie
verted it int
up for half duced an a mistress, w
herself degra
his infinite
name, for th

The lover v insomuch th
senses, whic
by that con
anagram.

The acros same time w
to decide w other were acrostic is son, or thing
ral verses,
manner of
But besides when the pr
I have seen
not only bee
but have ha
seam throug

There is
and acrostic gram. This many moder
when they
which they
of Gustavus DuX ERGO
to pick the range them
amount to the medal v distinguish
their fellows
capacity, bo
rious Germa
for one of think they term, but word that

BRITISH ESSAYISTS

scriptions,
he thought,
the French
at a time They were drawn up
who was to order that ore uncom-
dinary was commodate
greater in-among the lension of this foolish
the trouble
to the new ery month
the ingenie public in
That for lies before

auriers uerriers usette
sette

esars tendars oulette olette

ed a man as of trifle in me that he te when he e sentence wn part, I when I was got all my chaps three day shewed

his nature,
of the four
rne, Arne;
He told

ood for non, he said,
and for that
ry,' says I,
for all the sieur Gomerity of the id Menaginom I have

més made were tasks se on their him above-
e any thing
e apt to bend did not inished his

alse wit has rasin, in a poem entitled, La Defaite des Bouts-Rimés, The Rout of the Bouts-Rimés.

I must subjoin to this last kind of wit the double rhymes, which are used in doggerel poetry, and generally applauded by ignorant readers. If the thought of the couplet in such compositions is good, the rhyme adds little to it; and if bad, it will not be in the power of the rhyme to recommend it. I am afraid that great numbers of those who admire the incomparable Hudibras, do it more on account of those doggerel rhymes than of the parts that really deserve admiration. I am sure I have heard the Pulpit, drum ecclesiastic, Was beat with fist, instead of a stick;

and

There was an ancient sage philosopher Who had read Alexander Ross over; more frequently quoted, than the finest pieces of wit in the whole poem.—C.

No. 61.] THURSDAY, MAY 10, 1711.

Non equidem studeo bullatis ut mihi nugis Pagina turgescat, dare pondus idonea fumo.

PRAS. SAT. v. 19.

'Tis not indeed my talent to engage In lofty trifles, or to swell my page With wind and noise.—DAYDEN.

THERE is no kind of false wit which has been so recommended by the practice of all ages, as that which consists in a jingle of words, and is comprehended under the general name of punning. It is indeed impossible to kill a weed which the soil has a natural disposition to produce. The seeds of punning are in the minds of all men; and though they may be subdued by reason, reflection, and good sense, they will be very apt to shoot up in the greatest genius that is not broken and cultivated by the rules of art. Imitation is natural to us, and when it does not raise the mind to poetry, painting, music, or other more noble arts, it often breaks out in puns and quibbles.

Aristotle, in the eleventh chapter of his book of rhetoric, describes two or three kinds of puns, which he calls paragrams, among the beauties of good writing, and produces instances of them out of some of the greatest authors in the Greek tongue. Cicero has sprinkled several of his works with puns, and in his book where he lays down the rules of oratory, quotes abundance of sayings as pieces of wit, which also upon examination prove arrant puns. But the age in which the pun chiefly flourished was in the reign of King James the First. That learned monarch was himself a tolerable punster, and made very few bishops or privy-counsellors that had not some time or other signalised themselves by a clinch or a conundrum. It was therefore in this age that the pun appeared with pomp and dignity. It had been before admitted into merry speeches and ludicrous compositions, but was now delivered with great gravity from the pulpit, or pronounced in the most solemn manner at the council-table. The greatest authors, in their most serious works, made frequent use of puns. The sermons of Bishop Andrews, and the tragedies of Shakspeare, are full of them. The sinner was punned into repentance by the former, as in the latter nothing is more usual than to see a hero weeping and quibbling for a dozen lines together.

I must add to these great authorities, which seem to have given a kind of sanction to this piece of false the writers of rhetoric have treated of with very great respect, and divided the kinds of it into hard names, that are reckoned the figures of speech, and recommended as such in discourse. I remember a countryman of my acquaintance told me once, that he was in company with a gentleman whom he thought to be the greatest paragrammatist of the moderns. Upon inquiry, I found my friend had dined that day with Mr. Swan, a great punster; and desiring him to give me some of Mr. Swan's conversation, he told me he generally talked in the Paranomasia, sometimes gave into the Plocé, but that in his opinion he shined most in the Antanaclassis. I do not here omit, that a famous university of France was formerly very much infested with puns; and that no this might not arise from the fens in which it was situated, and which are called, I must leave to the determination of the naturalists.

In this short history of punning, one would think it should be so entirely banished out of the world as it is at present, especially since it has no place in the writings of the most delicate authors. To account for this, we consider that the first race of authors, who were heroes in writing, were destitute of all rules of criticism; and for that reason, though later writers in greatness of genius, they differed from them in accuracy and correctness. They cannot reach their beauties, but can avoid their defects. When the world was furnished with authors of the first eminence, there grew up a set of writers, who gained themselves a reputation by the remarks which they made on the works of those who preceded them. It was one of the arguments of these secondary authors to disguise several kinds of wit by terms of art, and to represent them as more or less perfect according to the rules founded in truth. It is no wonder, that even such authors as Isocrates, Plato, and Aristotle, should have such little blemishes as are met with in authors of a much inferior character. I have written since those several blemishes were discovered. I do not find that there is any separation made between puns and the writings of the ancient authors, except Quintilian and Longinus. But when this distinction was made, it was very natural for all men of sense to reject it. As for the revival of this false wit, it was about the time of the revival of letters; soon as it was once detected, it immediately vanished and disappeared. At the same time it was a question, but as it has sunk in one age, it will again recover itself in another period of time, as pedantry and ignorance prevail upon wit and sense. And, in the truth, I do very much apprehend, by the last winter's productions, which had the admiration of admirers, that our posterity will in a little time degenerate into a race of punsters: at least it may be very excusable for any apprehension of this kind, that has seen acrostics about the town with great secrecy and mystery, to which I must also add a little epigram on the 'Witches' Prayer, that fell into verse and was read either backward or forward, exactly as that it cursed one way and blessed another.

When one sees there are actually such persons among our British wits, who can tell you the end in? If we must lash one another, let it be with the manly style, for I am of the old philosophy, and must suffer from one or the other. It should be from the paw of an ass. I do not speak of a party. There is a most modest side. I have seen torments, anagrams, and do not quarrel with them, because they are whigs or tories, anagrams and acrostics.

But to return to punning. The history of a pun, from its origin, I shall here define it to be the use of two words that agree in the sense. The only way of wit, is to translate it. If it bears the test, you may say it vanishes in the expression it to have been a pun. A pun is as the countryman says, that it is "vox et præterea" nothing but a sound." It represents true wit by the tenet makes of a fine woman she is beautiful, when she is foolish; or, as Mercerus has ironically, "Induitur, formæ est."*

No. 62.] FRIDAY.

Scribendi recte sapere.

Sound judgment is the

MR. LOCKE has an advantage in the difference of wit and judgment, and he has the pleasure to shew the reason of the difference of the talents of the same person. And hence, perhaps, the reason of that common observation, that some men have a great deal of wit, but not always the clearest judgment. For wit lying most in the putting those together, wherein can be found an analogy, thereby to make up pleasurable visions in the fancy; judgment lies quite on the other side, and is one from another ideas, without the least difference, thereby to maintain a multitude, and by affinity to connect them together. This is a way of wit, to metaphor and allusion, which part, lies that entertainment which strikes so lively on the imagination, so acceptable to all people.

This is, I think, the reason, on account that I have ever observed, though not always with exactness and congruity of ideas, I shall only add to it, that every resemblance of ideas is wit, unless it be such a surprise to the reader. It is essential to wit, more particularly in order, therefore, that to be wit, it is necessary that it be too near one another to be distinguished where the likeness is obvious.

* Dressed she is beautiful.

another, or by that of us by those ess, besides farther conce capable of when a poet te as snow, en he adds, vs into wit.

For this who endea- conceptions surprising, can be called h this short ecies of wit, nas, mottoes, ic writings, on. There mote soever e foregoing ill be found resemblance y consists in es of single ograms, and echoes and as in puns sentences or s, or altars : ar, as to as- to look upon resemble the nce of ideas, s, according ther kind of nce of ideas, s, which for

This kind more than Mr. Waller ryden is very ch above it. n. The Ita- of it. Mon- the ancient corn. If we ters, we shall ists. There tle poem as- ell as many ern compos- ters, we find etius, or Ca- at deal of it lartial.

mixed wit, I met with in on of love in ble fire; for are made use efore have eaning of the f witticisms. is mistress's of producing glasses made live in the greatest extremities of love, concludes the torrid zone to be habitable. When his mistress has read his letter written in juice of lemon, by holding it to the fire, he desires her to read it over a second time by love's flame. When she weeps, he wishes it were inward heat that distilled those drops from the limbeck. When she is absent, he is beyond eighty, that is, thirty degrees nearer the pole than when she is with him. His ambitious love is a fire that naturally mounts upwards; his happy love is the beams of heaven, and his unhappy love flames of hell. When it does not let him sleep, it is a flame that sends up no smoke; when it is opposed by counsel and advice, it is a fire that rages the more by the winds blowing upon it. Upon the dying of a tree, in which he had cut his loves, he observed that his written flames had burnt up and withered the tree. When he resolves to give over his passion, he tells us that one burnt like him for ever dreads the fire. His heart is an Ætna, that instead of Vulcan's shop, encloses Cupid's forge in it. His endeavouring to drown his love in wine, is throwing oil upon the fire. He would insinuate to his mistress that the fire of love, like that of the sun (which produces so many living creatures), should not only warm, but beget. Love in another place cooks pleasure at his fire. Sometimes the poet's heart is frozen in every breast, and sometimes scorched in every eye. Sometimes he is drowned in tears and burnt in love, like a shipset on fire in the middle of the sea.

The reader may observe in every one of these instances, that the poet mixes the qualities of fire with those of love; and in the same sentence speaking of it both as a passion and as real fire, surprises the reader with those seeming resemblances or contradictions, that make up all the wit in this kind of writing. Mixed wit therefore is a composition of pure and true wit, and is more or less perfect as the resemblance lies in the ideas or in the words. Its foundations are laid partly in falsehood and partly in truth; reason puts in her claim for one half of it and extravagance for the other. The only province therefore for this kind of wit is epigram, or those little occasional poems that in their own nature are nothing else but a tissue of epigrams. I cannot conclude this head of mixed wit, without owning that the admirable poet, out of whom I have taken the examples of it, had as much true wit as any author that ever writ; and indeed, all other talents of an extraordinary genius.

It may be expected, since I am upon this subject that I should take notice of Mr. Dryden's definition of wit; which, with all the deference that is due to the judgment of so great a man, is not so properly definition of wit as of good writing in general. What as he defines it, is "a propriety of words and thought adapted to the subject." If this be a true definition of wit, I am apt to think that Euclid was the greatest wit that ever set pen to paper. It is certain there never was a greater propriety of words and thoughts adapted to the subject, than what that author has made use of in his Elements. I shall not appeal to my reader if this definition agrees with an notion he has of wit. If it be a true one, I am sure Mr. Dryden was not only a better poet, but a greater wit, than Mr. Cowley; and Virgil a much more facetious man than either Ovid or Martial.

Bouhours, whom I look upon to be the most penetrating of all the French critics has taken pains to shew, that it is impossible for any thought to be beautiful which is not just, and has not its foundation in the nature of things; that the basis of a h; and that no thought can be valuable, good sense is not the ground-work. Boiadeavoured to inculcate the same notion parts of his writings, both in prose and is is that natural way of writing, that mplicity, which we so much admire in the is of the ancients; and which nobody om, but those who want strength of geake a thought shine in its own natural Poets who want this strength of genius t majestic simplicity to nature, which we dmire in the works of the ancients, are unt after foreign ornaments, and not to ee of wit of what kind soever escape ok upon these writers as Goths in poetry, hose in architecture, not being able to the beautiful simplicity of the old Greeks s, have endeavoured to supply its place e extravagancies of an irregular fancy. a makes a very handsome observation on ing a letter from Dido to Æneas, in the rds: "Ovid," says he, speaking of Vir-of Dido and Æneas, "takes it up after in the same age, and makes an ancient Virgil's new-created Dido; dictates a er just before her death to the ungrateful nd very unluckily for himself, is for a sword with a man so much superior in im on the same subject. I think I may of this, because I have translated both. s author of the Art of Love has nothing ; he borrows all from a greater master profession, and, which is worse, improves hich he finds. Nature fails him, and, ed to his old shift, he has recourse to wit-his passes indeed with his soft admirers, him the preference to Virgil in their not supported by so great an authority Mr. Dryden, I should not venture to obthe taste of most of our English poets, readers, is extremely Gothic. He quotes Segrais, for a threefold distinction of the poetry; in the first of which he comprehensible of readers, whom he does not treat rith regard to their quality, but to their nd the coarseness of their taste. His as follow: "Segrais has distinguished the 'poetry, according to their capacity of to three classes." [He might have said f writers too, if he had pleased.] "In the a he places those whom he calls Les Petits uch things as are our upper-gallery audilayhouse; who like nothing but the husk f wit, and prefer a quibble, a conceit, an efore solid sense and elegant expression. mob readers. If Virgil and Martial stood nent-men, we know already who would But though they made the greatest apthe field, and cried the loudest, the best y are but a sort of French huguenots, or rs, brought over in herds, but not natuho have not lands of two pounds per anrnassus, and therefore are not privileged The authors are of the same level, fit nt them on a mountebank's stage, or ers of the ceremonies in a bear-garden; re they who have the most admirers. But ppeus, to their mortification, that as their prove their stock of sense (as they may is used here as signifying to vote; but in prohi, the poll only ascertains the majority of votes.

by reading better books (men of judgment), they

I must not dismiss this that as Mr. Locke in th has discovered the mos there is another of a d which does likewise br kinds. For not only t position of ideas, does v could shew in several lit theses, that I may pos future speculation.—C.

No. 63.] SATUR

Humano capiti cervicem Jungere si velit, et vari Undique collatis membris Desinat in pacem multum Spectatum admitti risu Credite, Placones, isti te Persimilem, culus, vel Fingentur species.—H
If in a picture, Piso, y
A handsome woman w Or a man's head upon Or limbs of beasts, of th Cover'd with feathers d Wou'd you not laugh, s Trust me that book is Whose incoherent styl Varies all shapes, and

It is very hard for t from a subject on which The thoughts will be risi to time, though we give the tossings and fluctuat ral hours after the winds

It is to this that I imp or vision, which formed the several schemes of w true, that have been the Methought I was tran was filled with prodigies by the goddess of Falseh of False Wit. There w woods, and the rivers, th ral of the trees blossom produced bone-lace, an stones. The fountains b and were filled with stag that lived among the wa dolphins and several ki banks, or took their past birds had many of the voices. The flowers perf incense, ambergrease, an interwoven with one an pieces of embroidery. T sighs and messages of walking to and fro in th could not forbear breaki the several wonders whic my great surprise, I fo echoes in every walk tha words which I spoke, agre me, in every thing I said versation with these invi vered in the centre of a v fabric built after the ge with innumerable device sculpture. I immediat it to be a kind of heath

• Fulvius

aw the deity onk, with a
her. Upon np burning
h a monkey
there stood
I afterward
smply with on the altar
e, and eggs,
The temple
emselves to
ected them.
grams, who he right or ranks, shift-
ives into all ost change-

f acrostics,
s. It was
ers planting
ach column.
x feet high,
en; but the es between and scare-
hem without stics two or d only from ed (like the e hand and osts promis-
they com-

re the very phantom of ed in a ball
ued him by rhythms of a
rtake him.
the western

they were er the great
al things of andles, and ggots. You nd a hobby-
e workmen
e there was se bundles, pleased; I n I was in going out of it a clusartily, and I heard
hem, which

t of merry
the whole
er. To give ey were di-
from head gh perhaps their faces,
s mistaken
ack-a-moor uced great
e a party of out of this my brain,

I left the temple, and crossed over the fields that lay about it with all the speed I could make. I was not gone far, before I heard the sound of trumpets and alarms, which seemed to proclaim the march of an enemy; and, as I afterward found, was in reality what I apprehended it. There appeared at a great distance a very shining light, and in the midst of it a person of a most beautiful aspect; her name was Truth. On her right hand there marched a male deity, who bore several quivers on his shoulders, and grasped several arrows in his hand. His name was Wit. The approach of these two enemies filled all the territories of False Wit with an unspeakable consternation, insomuch that the goddess of those regions appeared in person upon her frontiers, with the several inferior deities, and the different bodies of forces which I had before seen in the temple, who were now drawn up in array, and prepared to give their foes a warm reception. As the march of the enemy was very slow, it gave time to the several inhabitants who bordered upon the regions of Falsehood to draw their forces into a body, with a design to stand upon their guard as neutrals, and attend the issue of the combat.

I must here inform my reader, that the frontiers of the enchanted region which I have before described, were inhabited by a species of Mixed Wit, who made a very odd appearance when they were mustered together in an army. There were men whose bodies were stuck full of darts, and women whose eyes were burning-glasses: men that had hearts of fire, and women that had breasts of snow. It would be endless to describe several monsters of the like nature, that composed this great army; which immediately fell asunder, and divided itself into two parts, the one half throwing themselves behind the banner of Truth, and the other behind those of Falsehood.

The goddess of Falsehood was of a gigantic stature, and advanced some paces before the front of her army; but as the dazzling light which flowed from Truth began to shine upon her, she faded insensibly; insomuch that in a little space, she looked rather like a huge phantom, than a real substance. At length, as the goddess of Truth approached still nearer to her, she fell away entirely, and vanished amidst the brightness of her presence; so that there did not remain the least trace or impression of her figure in the place where she had been seen.

As at the rising of the sun the constellations grow thin, and the stars go out one after another, till the whole hemisphere is extinguished; such was the vanishing of the goddess: and not only of the goddess herself, but of the whole army that attended her, which sympathised with their leader, and shrunk into nothing, in proportion as the goddess disappeared. At the same time the whole temple sank the fish betook themselves to the streams, and the wild beasts to the woods, the fountains recovered their murmurs, the birds their voices, the trees their leaves, the flowers their scents, and the whole face of nature its true and genuine appearance. Though I still continued asleep, I fancied myself, as it were awakened out of a dream, when I saw this region a prodigies restored to woods and rivers, fields and meadows.

Upon the removal of that wild scene of wonders which had very much disturbed my imagination, I took a full survey of the persons of Wit and Truth: for indeed it was impossible to look upon the first, without seeing the other at the same time. There was behind them a strong compact body of figures. The genius of Heroic Poetry appeared with a sword

, and a laurel on her head. Tragedy was clothed in cypress, and covered with robes dipped in blood. Satire had smiles in her look, and a dagger in her garment. Rhetoric was known by her mask; and Comedy by her mask. After her figures, Epigram marched up in the van, and had been posted there at the beginning of the procession, that he might not revolt to the honour he was suspected to favour in his country. He was very much awed and delighted with the presence of the god of Wit; there was something so amiable, and yet so piercing in his looks, as to strike at once with love and terror. As I was talking to my unspeakable joy he took an arrow from his shoulder, in order to make a present of it; but as I was reaching out my hand to receive it of him, I knocked it against a wall, by that means awaked.

64.] MONDAY, MAY 14, 1711.

—Hic virtutis ambitiosa aspertae ommes— Juv. Sat. iii. 183.
The face of wealth in poverty we wear.

First improper things we commit in the course of our lives, we are led into by the force of custom. Instances might be given, in which a precept makes us act against the rules of nature, and common sense; but at present I shall only consider to the effect it has upon us, by looking into our behaviour when it is obliged to go into mourning. The custom of wearing the grief we have for the loss of the deceased habits, certainly had its rise from the want of such as were too much distressed to give proper care they ought of their dress. By that prevailed, that such as had this inward sorrow upon their minds, made an apology for going with the rest of the world in their ordinary dress by a dress suited to their condition. Therefore, was at first assumed by such only as were in real distress; to whom it was a relief to have nothing about them so light and gay as was otherwise. It was so like the gloom and melancholy of sad reflections, or that might misrepresent others. In process of time this laudable custom of the sorrowful was lost, and mourning grew by heirs and widows. You see nothing of the confidence and solemnity in the equipage of the prince, and an air of release from servitude in the dress of a son who has lost a wealthy father. Mourning of sorrow is now become a generous ceremony between princes and sovereigns; in the language of all nations, are common to each other, and put on the purple at the death of any potentate with whom they live. Courtiers, and all who wish themselves to be immediately seized with grief from head to foot in this disaster to their prince; so that one may see by the very buckles of a gentleman-usher, that he is of friendship any deceased monarch who is dead with the court to which he belongs. A courtier's habit and behaviour is hieroglyphical on such occasions. He deals much in whispers, and may see he dresses according to the best of his power.

General affection among men, of appearing as they are, makes the whole world run in the habit of the court. You see the lady, who before was as various as a rainbow, upon the time appointed for her mourning, as a cloud. This humour is in those whose fortunes can afford them an equipage, nor on those who have the wantonness of new clothes, also who have just enough of acquaintance of mine, who has naturally the vanity of new clothes deep at his heart, is very mortal to the mortality of princes.

Upon the death of the late king, for the King of Portugal, the king's chamber while it is so close, is a good economist in his dress, only a fresh black button, any potentate of small rank, his crape hatband for a mourning, is admired in the Gazette, may be made on these occasions are the mercers, silkmen. A prince of a merciful heart, reflect with great anxiety on death, if he considered reduced to misery by that death, think it of moment enough to the satisfaction of his departure might be restrained to the prince to whom it should think a general mourning, the same ceremony which is the custom, of killing their slaves of their kings.

I had been wonderful together, to guess at the time it came now and then to end a newspaper with see all the foreign princes you asked, "Pray, Sir, Vienna?" He answered, "German princes are all from Barcelona?"—"The country agrees very After very much inquiry, universal loyalty was a war, ribands. His way is, if or workman, to have it all this shall be well and no foreign potentate shall time above mentioned, mournings that the manner our habits, are during the sent want, or terrified with All the atonement which expenses (which is a burden under which others labour of the wealthy give support; but instead of the affection of being ing, all order seems to true honour which one occasion, loses its force foreign minister behold flourishes in riches and loss of his master, all confidence, though the he will conceive a great to his master, than when people in the same habit ask the wife of a tradesman family; and after some know whom she mourns hear her explain herself and princely mourners are clad in purple.

BRITISH ESSAYISTS.

re elevated so it is a presump-
honours done to erity for it by
to the court friendship, and in the sense of al, by assuming all possession of 15, 1711.

thedras.
a. 1 Sat. x. 90.
place;
ool-boy race.

that wit is, and all that labour
t some time be f it. The seat of the town and therefore fill se of it in that he theatre has ers of our gen-
the writings of like a very pre-
from the duty of such as have nation; but I nd nature, the f those are for no consequence
e, the general

ng to look into nd see whether ent bear in the

I shall chiefly pective play is er shall be em-

The received
the pattern of arriet are the nd if these are e play is very fine gentleman

d refined in his o in this piece a clown in his
and friend; in sooth a greater
t reasonable to
t, whose virtue,
ll she is a wife,
are, as he is an sehood to Mrs.
phing over her
instance of his
As to his fine
who, it seems,
own jade, with alutes her with

was Beau Hewit,
in Hertfordshire,
esented in Bellair.

a pretty phrase of "How now, Double Triple?" Upon the mention of a country-gentlewoman, whom he knows nothing of (no one can imagine why), "he will lay his life she is some awkward ill-fashioned country toad, who, not having above four dozen of hairs on her head, has adorned her baldness with a large white furz, that she may look sparkishly in the fore-front of the king's box at an old play." Unnatural mixture of senseless common-place!

As to the generosity of his temper, he tells his poor footman, "If he did not wait better," he would turn him away—in the insolent phrase of "I'll uncase you."

Now for Mrs. Harriet. She laughs at obedience to an absent mother, whose tenderness Busy describes to be very exquisite, for, "that she is s-pleased with finding Harriet again, that she cannot chide her for being out of the way." This witty daughter and fine lady has so little respect for this good woman, that she ridicules her air in taking leave, and cries, "In what struggle is my poor mother yonder! See, see, her head tottering, her eyes staring, and her under-lip trembling." But all this is atoned for, because "she has more wit than is usual in her sex, and as much malice, though she is as wild as you could wish her, and has a demurness in her looks that makes it so surprising." Then to recommend her as a fit spouse for his her-the poet makes her speak her sense of marriage very ingenuously: I think," says she, "I might be brought to endure him, and that is all a reasonable woman should expect in a husband." It is no thinks unnatural, that we are not made to unde-stand, how she that was bred under a silly pious mother, that would never trust her out of her sight came to be so polite.

It cannot be denied, but that the negligence every thing which engages the attention of the ber and valuable part of mankind, appears ve-well drawn in this piece. But it is denied, that is necessary to the character of a fine gentleman that he should in that manner trample upon all o-der and decency. As for the character of Dormant, it is more of a coxcomb than that of Poplin.
He says of one of his companions, that a good exrespondence between them is their mutual intere-Speaking of that friend, he declares, their be-much together "makes the women think the bettof his understanding, and judge more favourably my reputation. It makes him pass upon some a man of very good sense, and me upon others a very civil person."

This whole celebrated piece is a perfect condiction to good manners, good sense, and comm-honesty; and as there is nothing in it but what built upon the ruin of virtue and innocence, ac-ding to the notion of merit in this comedy, I take the shoemaker* to be in reality the fine gentleman of the play: for it seems he is an atheist, if may depend upon his character as given by orange-woman, who is herself far from being lowest in the play. She says of a fine man is Dorimant's companion, there "is not such a ther heathen in the town, except the shoemaker." His pretension to be the hero of the drama, appestill more in his own description of his way of liv-with his lady. "There is," says he, "never a man in town lives more like a gentleman with his v-

* He also was a real person, and got vast employment the representation of him in this play.

I never mind her motions; she never sto mine. We speak to one another as one another heartily; and because it is so and so together, we have each of us settled-bed." That of "soaking together," good as if Dorimant had spoken it himself, since he puts human nature in as much as the circumstance will bear, and is a believer, he is very much wronged in part of the good fortune bestowed in the plain of this whole work, I think nothing lost to a sense of innocence and virtue, any one see this comedy, without observant occasion to move sorrow and in than mirth and laughter. At the same time it to be nature, but it is nature in its up tation and degeneracy.*—R.

WEDNESDAY, MAY 16, 1711.

si doceri gaudet Ionicos ara virgo, et fugitur artibus as nunc, et incestos amores De lenere meditatur ungui.—Ilex. I Od. vi. 21.

old a ripe and melting maid ad prentice to the wanton trade:
an artists, at a mighty price, ruct her in the mysteries of vice,
at nets to spread, where subtle baits to lay:
with an early hand they form the temper'd clay.
Roscommon.

following letters are upon a subject of importance, though expressed without gravity.

"TO THE SPECTATOR.

the freedom of asking your advice in a young country kinswoman of mine who me to town, and under my care for her

She is very pretty, but you cannot imagine a creature it is. She comes to just as nature left her, half finished, and acquired improvements. When I look often think of the Belle Sauvage mention of your papers. Dear Mr. Spectator, make her comprehend the visible graces and the dumb eloquence of motion; for present a perfect stranger to both. She way to express herself but by her tongue, always to signify her meaning. Her eyes only to see with, and she is utterly a to the language of looks and glances. In you could help her better than any body. owed two months in teaching her to sigh not concerned, and to smile when she is, and am ashamed to own she makes little improvement. Then she is no more able k, than she was to go at a year old. By on will easily know I mean that regular motion which gives our persons so irreplace as if we moved to music, and is a engaged figure; or, if I may so speak, lancing. But the want of this I cannot r, for I find she has no ear, and means walking but to change her place. I on too her blushing, if she knew how to lf in it, and if it did not manifestly in-plexion.

did it be otherwise, when the author of this play is Etheridge, and the character of Dorimant that of Rochester?

"They tell me you are a judge of the world, and are a judge of what makes me ambitious of for her improvement: you have favoured me with, I shall be about the disposal of the matter, for I will make it no secret, and education are to be the

"Yo

"Sir,

"Being employed by you, I send to you her letter, in the case therein mentioned, because she and I have notions. I, who am a young girl is in a fair way to pray, Mr. Spectator, let this fine thing called fine it differs too much from breeding.

"Yo

The general mistake of our children is, that in of their persons and notions we are so intent on that we wholly neglect to that you shall see a young mired in all the assemblies, elder brother is afraid of this ill management it observe a man's life is his notice of; and a woman is out of fashion and not consider upon some other stick to the girl: and I this, because I have several to me, that my female room for some days last year be unconcerned in the p—When a girl is safe before she is capable of of any thing in life, she her dancing master; and neck, the pretty wild the gravity of behaviour, and of holding her head, heavy with her whole body; never having a husband moves away. This gives workings of imagination her and this husband, told of, and for whom Thus her fancy is engaged yours to the ornament of determine her good and naturally thinks, if she is enough, for any thing for her think she is designed able person is the main part that is all their cost, to and from this general for present numerous race of tions puzzle me, when I on the subject of management in the letter of sure there is a middle way nagement of a young lady

BRITISH ESSAYISTS.

and is much
this is ma-
appetites of
of the mind.
ce of motion
sed with the hts, that she and good-will,
d. The true and body im-
ake gesture
be employed

7, 1711.

SALLUST.

duces a phi-
a lover of e other un-
sion, which,
dless Rheia,
elf from the
eds to show,
st men in all lancer; and
gility which ruished him Greeks and

putation by er his name, Lacedæmo-
reece, gave and made the French
e were still d to the hoe wondered are himself
ns whom he
and Hesiod;
dancing toestowed for-position for rates (who,

st of men),
exercise in an old man.
affected by becomes a d take him

oles of great owed that it
ulations to n I suppose man about

est industry
ve my chil-
s an utter er, a girl of e tuition of the city;

common sense,

and I was prevailed upon by her and her mother to go last night to one of his balls. I must own to you, Sir, that having never been to such a place before, I was very much pleased and surprised with that part of his entertainment which he called French Dancing. There were several young men and women whose limbs seemed to have no other motion but purely what the music gave them. After this part was over, they began a diversion which they call country dancing, and wherein there were also some things not disagreeable, and divers emblematical figures, composed, as I guess, by wise men, for the instruction of youth.

"Among the rest, I observed one which, I think, they call 'Hunt the Squirrel,' in which, while the woman flies, the man pursues her; but as soon as she turns, he runs away, and she is obliged to follow.

"The moral of this dance does, I think, very aptly recommend modesty and discretion to the female sex.

"But as the best institutions are liable to corruption, so, Sir, I must acquaint you, that very great abuses are crept into this entertainment. I was amazed to see my girl handed by and handing young fellows with so much familiarity; and I could not have thought it had been in the child. They very often made use of a most impudent and lascivious step called 'Setting,' which I know not how to describe to you, but by telling you that it is the very reverse of 'Back to Back.' At last an impudent young dog bid the fiddlers play a dance called 'Moll Pately,' and after having made two or three capers, ran to his partner, locked his arms in hers, and whisked her round cleverly above ground in such a manner that I, who sat upon one of the lowest benches, saw farther above her shoe than I can think fit to acquaint you with. I could no longer endure those enormities; wherefore, just as my girl was going to be made a whirligig, I ran in, seized on the child, and carried her home.

"Sir, I am not yet old enough to be a fool. I suppose this diversion might be first invented to keep up a good understanding between young men and women, and so far I am not against it; but I shall never allow of these things. I know not what you will say to this case at present, but am sure, had you been with me, you would have seen matter of great speculation.

"I am, yours," &c.

I must confess I am afraid that my correspondent had too much reason to be a little out of humour at the treatment of his daughter, but I conclude that he would have been much more so, had he seen one of those kissing dances in which Will Honeycomb assures me they are obliged to dwell almost a minute on the fair one's lips or they will be too quick for the music, and dance quite out of time.

I am not able, however to give my final sentence against this diversion; and am of Mr. Cowley's opinion, that so much of dancing, at least, as belongs to the behaviour and a handsome carriage of the body, is extremely useful, if not absolutely necessary.

We generally form such ideas of people at first sight, as we are hardly ever persuaded to lay aside afterward; for this reason, a man would wish to have nothing disagreeable or uncomely in his approaches, and to be able to enter a room with a good grace.

I might add, that a moderate knowledge in the little rules of good breeding, gives a man some assurance, and makes him easy in all companies. For want of this, I have seen a professor of a liberal science at a loss to salute a lady; and a most excelemetician not able to determine whether stand or sit while my lord drank to him. proper business of a dancing-master to these matters; though I take it to be a just n, that unless you add something of your at these fine gentlemen teach you, and y are wholly ignorant of themselves, you sooner get the character of an affected well-bred man.

country dancing, it must indeed be cont the great familiarities between the two his occasion may sometimes produce very consequences; and I have often thought ladies' hearts are so obdurate as not to be the charms of music, the force of motion, and some young fellow, who is continually fore their eyes, and convincing them that perfect use of all his limbs.

his kind of dance is the particular inven- own country, and as every one is more or ficient in it, I would not discountenance it; suppose it may be practised innocently as well as myself, who am often partner to dy's eldest daughter.

POSTSCRIPT.

I heard a good character of the collection which is to be exposed to sale on Friday and concluding from the following letter, that n who collected them is a man of no inele- I will be so much his friend as to publish the reader will only look upon it as the place of an advertisement:

Three Chairs, in the Piazza, Covent Garden.

May 16, 1711.

As you are a spectator, I think we who make it less to exhibit any thing to public view, supply ourselves to you for your approbation. travelled Europe to furnish out a show for have brought with me what has been ad- every country through which I passed. declared in many papers, that your great- its are those of the eye, which I do not I shall gratify with as beautiful objects as r beheld. If castles, forests, ruins, fine and graceful men, can please you, I dare on much satisfaction, if you will appear at on on Friday next. A sight is, I suppose, al to a Spectator as a treat to another per- therefore I hope you will pardon this invi- m.

"Sir,

"Your most obedient humble servant,

"J. GRAHAM."

[68.] FRIDAY, MAY 18, 1711.

sed duo turba sumus—Ovid, Met. l. 355. two are a multitude.

ould think that the larger the company is we are engaged, the greater variety of nd subjects would be started in discourse; d of this, we find that conversation is never trainted and confined as in numerous as-

When a multitude meet together on any f discourse, their debates are taken up th forms and general positions; nay, if we a more contracted assembly of men and e talk generally runs upon the weather, ews, and the like public topics. In pro- conversation gets into clubs and knots of descends into particulars, and grows more communicative: but the most open, in- tor.—Nos. 11 & 12.

structive, and unreserve passes between two pers- imate friends. On the loose to every passion at permost, discovers his n- sons and things, tries the sentiments, and expose- mination of his friend.

Tully was the first wh improves happiness an doubling of our joy, an thought in which he ha essayers upon friendship time. Sir Francis Bacon advantages, or, as he cal and, indeed, there is ne has been better handled this. Among the several spoken of it, I shall beg a very ancient author, wh by our modern wits as on of morality that is extan name of a Confucius, or philosopher: I mean the entitled The Wisdom of finely has he described t an obliging and affable that precept, which a la- livered as his own, That wishers, but few friends multiply friends; and a crease kind greetings.

I vertheless have but one d With what prudence doe of our friends! And w (I could almost say of the behaviour of a trea friend! "If thou would first, and be not hasty to is a friend for his own e in the day of thy troubl who being turned to enn thy reproach." Again, nion at the table, and w of thy affliction: but in thyself, and will be bold be brought low he will himself from thy face."† and pointed than the fol thyself from thine enem friends." In the next of those fruits of friend length by the two famou and falls into a gener which is very just as w faithful friend is a strong found such a one hath doth countervail a faithf is invaluable. A faithf life; and they that fear Whoso feareth the Lord aright; for as he is, so s his friend) be also, "† met with any saying tha that of a friend's being press the efficacy of frie and anguish which natur in this world; and am w turn in the last sentenc as a blessing meet with as himself. There is a • Ecclus. vi. 5, 6. † Ibid. vi.

much admired
an old friend,
a new friend
hast drink it
of allusion,
the breaches
so casteth a
and he that ship. Though spair not, for If thou hast fear not, for
for upbraid-
a treacherous
friend will de-several other liar instances
admired in the setus. There are in the fol-
written on the secrets loath
to his mind.
; but if thou
er him: for as thou lost the
a bird go out
go, and shall no more, for he
t of the snare.
and after re-
but he that a good friend,

out constancy
these, others
on, equality in it, Morum co-
If I were to asted subject,
ons, a certain
A man often n perhaps he conversation;
our breaks out
r suspected at him. There
ain periods of
and in others as given us a pecies, in the m,

pig. xii. 47.
low,
low:
about thee,
thee.

ntangled in a anges and vi-
amiable and are at some on of mind, it
of wisdom to ad never to go
ct of our cha-

To d. xxvii. 16.

No. 69.] SATURDAY, MAY 19, 1711.

Hic segetes, illic veniunt felicius uvæ: Arbori factus alibi, atque infussa virescent Gramina. Nonne vides, croceos ut Tmolus odores, India mittit ebur, molles sua thura Sabæ?
At Chalybes nudi ferrum, virosaque Pontus Castorea, Eliadum palmas Epirus equarum?
Continuo has leges, æternaque fœdera certis Imposuit natura locis. VIRG. Georg. l. 34.
This ground with Bacchus, that with Ceres suits;
That other loads the trees with happy fruits,
A fourth with grass, unbidden, decks the ground:
Thus Tmolus is with yellow saffron crown'd;
India black ebon and white iv'ry bears;
And soft Idume weeps her od'rous tears:
Thus Pontus sends her beaver stones from far;
And naked Spaniards temper steel for war: Epirus for th' Elean chariot breeds (In hopes of palms) a race of running steeds.
This is th' original contract; these the laws Impos'd by nature, and by nature's cause.—DRYDEN.

THERE is no place in the town which I so much love to frequent as the Royal Exchange. It gives me a secret satisfaction, and in some measure gratifies my vanity, as I am an Englishman, to see so rich an assembly of countrymen and foreigners, consulting together upon the private business of mankind, and making this metropolis a kind of emporium for the whole earth. I must confess I look upon high change to be a great council, in which all considerable nations have their representatives. Factors in the trading world are what ambassadors are in the politic world; they negotiate affairs, conclude treaties, and maintain a good correspondence between those wealthy societies of men that are divided from one another by seas and oceans, or live on the different extremities of a continent. I have often been pleased to hear disputes adjusted between an inhabitant of Japan and an alderman of London; or to see a subject of the Great Mogul entering into league with one of the Czar of Muscovy. I am infinitely delighted in mixing with these several ministers of commerce, as they are distinguished by their different walks and different languages. Sometimes I am jostled among a body of Armenians, sometimes I am lost in a crowd of Jews; and sometimes make one in a group of Dutchmen. I am Dane, Swede, or Frenchman, at different times; or rather fancy myself like the old philosopher, who upon being asked what countryman he was, replied that he was a citizen of the world.

Though I very frequently visit this busy multitude of people, I am known to nobody there but my friend Sir Andrew, who often smiles upon me as he sees me bustling in the crowd, but at the same time connives at my presence without taking farther notice of me. There is indeed a merchant of Egypt who just knows me by sight, having formerly committed me some money to Grand Cairo; but as I am not versed in modern Coptic, our conferences go no farther than a bow and a grimace.

This grand scene of business gives me an infinite variety of solid and substantial entertainments. As I am a great lover of mankind, my heart naturally overflows with pleasure at the sight of a prosperous and happy multitude, insomuch that at many public solemnities I cannot forbear expressing my joy with tears that have stolen down my cheeks. For this reason I am wonderfully delighted to see such a body of men thriving in their own private fortunes, and at the same time promoting the public stock; or, in other words, raising estates for their own families by bringing into their country whatever is wanting, and carrying out of it whatever is superfluous.

Nature seems to have taken a particular care her blessings among the different regions of the world, with an eye to this mutual inter-traffic among mankind, that the natives of all parts of the globe might have a kind of commerce upon one another, and be united by their common interest. Almost every nation has something peculiar to it. The food is different in one country, and the sauce in another. The fruits of Portugal are corrected by the Barbadoes, and the infusion of a China tea is softened by the pith of an Indian cane. The tropic Islands give a flavour to our European. The single dress of a woman of quality is the product of a hundred climates, and the fan come together from different parts of the earth. The scarf is sent from the torrid zone, the tippet from beneath the pole. The tunic rises out of the mines of Peru, the amethyst necklace out of the bowels of consider our own country in its natural situation, without any of the benefits and advantages of commerce, what a barren uncomfortable land falls to our share! Natural historians tell us, no fruit grows originally among us, but haws, acorns and pig-nuts, with berries of the like nature; that our climate without the assistance of art, can make no advances towards a plum than to a sloe, an apple to no greater perfection than a melon, our peaches, our figs, our cherries, are strangers among us, indifferent ages, and naturalized in our Islands; and that they would all degenerate if they fell into the trash of our own country, if wholly neglected by the planter, and left to the decay of our sun and soil. Nor has traffic added to our vegetable world, than it has improved the whole face of nature among us. Our gardens with the harvest of every climate.

are stored with spices, and oils, and our rooms are filled with pyramids of goods adorned with the workmanship of Jamorica's draught comes to us from the corners of the earth. We repair our bodies in America, and repose ourselves under the tropics. My friend, Sir Andrew, calls the gardens of France our gardens; the spice-islands are the Persians our silk-weavers, and the earthenware our potters. Nature, indeed, furnishes us with the necessaries of life, but traffic gives us the variety of what is useful, and at the same time enriches us with every thing that is convenient and ornamental. Nor is it the least part of this our commerce that whilst we enjoy the remotest provinces north and south, we are free from those extremes of weather which give them birth; that we are refreshed with the green fields of Britain at the same time that our palates are gratified with the fruits that rise between the tropics.

For these reasons there are not more useful members of the commonwealth than merchants. They are united together in a mutual intercourse of commerce, distribute the gifts of nature, find work for the poor, add wealth to the rich, and magnify the power of the great. Our English merchant converts his own country into gold, and exchanges his wool for rubies. The Mahometans are the British manufacture, and the inhabitants of the frozen zone warmed with the fleeces of often fauced one of our countrymen, where he is represented down upon the wealthy, which that place is every how would he be surprised of Europe spoken in the dominions, and to see so his time would have been a full baron, negotiating like of money than were formerly royal treasury! Trade, in the British territories, has given empire. It has multiplied made our landed estates more than they were formerly, the possession of other estates themselves.—C.

No. 70.] MONDAY

Interdum vulgus rectus
Sometimes the vulgar

WHEN I travelled, I took pleasure in hearing the songs and dances of the father to son, and are most common people of the country, for it is impossible that any man who has not been sally tasted and approved they are only the rabble of the country in it some peculiar aptness of mind of man. Human beings are reasonable creatures; and will meet with admirers of their qualities and conditions. Monsieur Boileau, used to tell me of an old woman who was his friend with him at her work by which she could foretell the success of any thing from the reception it met with from the audience always followed her, never failed to laugh in the face of the

I know nothing which is more perfect and inherent perfection than that which I call the wit, than this—that the first is the first, and the latter only the latter, themselves a wrong artificial authors and writers of the age, or Milton, so far as the wit is understood, will please a sense, who would neither the wit of an epigram of Martial, or a the contrary, an ordinary delight of the common people, all such readers as are not contented by their affectation, reason is plain—because the wit which recommends a reader will appear beautiful.

The old song of Chevy Chase, the old of the common people, Jonson used to say, he had more of it than of all his wit in his discourse of Poets, following words: "I never saw a man more moved than with a trumpet, some blind crowder with a style; which being so and cobweb of that untrimmed in the gorge of For my own part, I am have been upon the 'Change, I have

BRITISH ESSAYISTS.

my reader a apology for aid it down as founded upon adapted to the poet writes.

plans in this many govern-
g themselves,
as their com-
them by their er,* in order ch was so nee-
them upon the
who were en-
siatic prince,
enemy gained a we are now
ns of the ba-nces, ran very hemselves, or unspeakable
to deter men bes a bloody occasioned by amilies of an he designed we may learn the example
n it a precept

d
e atest heroic

and actions Virgil's hero
a prince of Flaccus and be justly def the Golden subjects of

d out a hero ation of it by ne first who
The Eng-
battle; the ep the field
h fifty-five :
battle. But s kind is the
and English
of the great

the time Homer
did not exist.
Ecks and Asia-
Herod. Lib. I.

ry-Chase, was England, and ability have
7. of England,

Like tidings to King Henry came Within as short a space,* That Percy of Northumberland Was slain in Chevy-chace.
Now God be with him, said our king, Sith 'twill no better be,
I trust I have within my realm Five hundred good as he.
Yet shall not Scot or Scotland say, But I will vengeance take,
And be revenged on them all For brave Lord Percy's sake.
This vow full well the king perform'd After on Humble-down,
In one day fifty knights were slain,
With lords of great renown.
And of the rest of small account Did many thousands die, &c.

At the same time that our poet shows a laudable partiality to his countrymen, he represents the Scots after a manner not unbecoming so bold and brave a people :—

Earl Douglas on a milk-white steed, Most like a baron bold, Rode foremost of the company, Whose armour shone like gold,

His sentiments and actions are every way suitable to a hero. One of us two, says he, must die: I am an earl as well as yourself, so that you can have no pretence for refusing the combat: however, says he, it is pity, and indeed would be a sin, that so many innocent men should perish for our sakes: rather let you and I end our quarrel in a single fight :—

Ere thus I will out-braved be,
One of us two shall die:
I know thee well, an earl thou art, Lord Percy, so am I.
But trust me, Percy, pity it were
And great offence to kill Any of these our harmless men, For they have done no ill.
Let thou and I the battle try,
And set our men aside;
Accurst be he, Lord Percy said,
By whom it is deny'd.

When these brave men had distinguished themselves in the battle, and in single combat with each other, in the midst of a generous parley, full of heroic sentiments, the Scotch earl falls; and with his dying words encourages his men to revenge his death, representing to them, as the most bitter circumstance of it, that his rival saw him fall :—

With that there came an arrow keen Out of an English bow, Which struck Earl Douglas to the heart A deep and deadly blow.
Who never spoke more words than these,
Fight on, my merry-men all,
For why? my life is at an end, Lord Percy sees my fall.

Merry-men, in the language of those times, is no more than a cheerful word for companions and fellow-soldiers. A passage in the eleventh book of Virgil's Æneid is very much to be admired, where Camilla, in her last agonies, instead of weeping over the wound she had received, as one might have expected from a warrior of her sex, considers only (like the hero of whom we are now speaking) how the battle should be continued after her death :—

Tum sic expirans, &c.—Æn. xi. 820.

A gathering mist o'erclouds her cheerful eyes,
And from her cheeks the rosy colour flies, Then turns to her, whom, of her female train, She trusted most, and thus she speaks with pain :

* Impossible! for it was more than three times the distance.

" 'tis past! he swims before my sight,
 Able death; and claims his right.
 My last words to Turnus: fly with speed,
 And him timely to my charge succeed:
 The Trojans, and the town relieve:
 Hell— " DRYDEN.

did not die in so heroic a manner, though seems to have had his eye upon Turnus's his last verse:—

And Percy sees my fall.

— Vicisti, et victum tendere palmas sonni videre.—Æn. xii. 936.

Latin chiefs have seen me beg my life.

DRYDEN.

Percy's lamentation over his enemy is general, and passionate: I must only caution not to let the simplicity of the style, which will pardon in so old a poet, prejudice him against the greatness of the thought:—

When leaving life, Earl Percy took The dead man by the hand, And said, Earl Douglas, for thy life Would I had lost my land.

Christ! my very heart doth bleed With sorrow for thy sake; I sure a more renowned knight Mischance did never take.

ful line, "Taking the dead man by the hand," put the reader in mind of Æneas's behaviour towards Lausus, whom he himself had slain as the rescue of his aged father:—

vultum vidit morientis, et ora, Anchisiades pallentia miris; miserans graviter, dextramque tetendit.

Æn. x. 821.

since beheld young Lausus dead;
 he wept, then grasp'd his hand, and said, &c.

DRYDEN.

take another opportunity to consider the
 of this old song. C.

[.] TUESDAY, MAY 22, 1711.

here jussit amor.—Ovid, Epist. iv. 10.

he bade me write.

re conquest of our passions is so difficult that they who despair of it should think of a task, and only attempt to regulate them. is a third thing which may contribute not ease, but also to the pleasure of our life; refining our passions to a greater ele-we receive them from nature. When is Love, this work is performed in innorude and uncultivated minds, by the and dignity of the object. There are naturally create respect in the behold-mance inflame and chastise the imagina-in impression as this gives an immediate deserve, in order to please. This cause re beautifully described by Mr. Dryden of Cymon and Iphigenia. After he has Cymon so stupid, that hastled as he went, for want of thought;

him fall into the following scene, and thence upon him so excellently, that it natural as wonderful—

on a summer's holiday, greenwood shade he took his way;
 staff, which he could ne'er forsake, stole, and half behind his back.
 Jong, unknowing what he sought, as he went for want of thought.

By chance conducted, or The deep recesses of the grove Where in a plain, defended Crept through the matted grass By which an alabaster fount And on the margin of the font (Attended by her slaves) a slave Like Dian and her nymphs, To rest by cool Eurotas they
 The dame herself the goddess Not more distinguish'd by her Than by the charming features And e'en in slumber a superior Her comely limbs compos'd Her body shaded with a light Her bosom to the view was The fanning wind upon her To meet the fanning wind he
 The fanning wind and purling

The fool of nature stood w And gaping mouth, that test Fix'd on her face, nor could New as he was to love, and Long mute he stood, and lea His wonder witness'd with a Then would have spoke, but First found his want of word Doubled for what he was he By his clown-accents, and his

But lest this fine descripagainst, as the creation Dryden, and not an accouhappened in the world, is the epistle of an enamourto his mistress. Their asserted, because their passspect than is due to their in a great family, and daughter of one as nume-lover. James, before he his strength, a rough w cudgel-player; Betty a p a romp at stool-ball: he women, she playing am country bully, she a cou has made her constantly i where the young lady gra her own, by making Betty is become a constant wait-ment, in reading, as well cannot learn who Molly is, miles to carry the angry m sion to what follows:

"MY DEAR BETTY,

"Remember your bleedin at the wounds Cupid made rowed at the eyes of Ve person.

"Nay more, with the to love and service offered to was your base respects to alas! there is no ill condit trary; all love and purity person; but all this I take

"But the sad and dis brought me struck me to seems, and is, your ill co respects to you.

"For she told me, if I you would not speak with sure is a great grief to me.

"Now, my dear, if I may sweet company, and to hav ing with your sweet person to accept of this my secret hath so long lodged in m do not accept, I believe heart.

—Genus immortale manet, nullifortis per amos Stat fortuna domus, et avi numerantur averum.

Viseo. Georg. iv. 205.

The immortal line in sure succession reigns,
The fortune of the family remains,
And grandsires' grandsons the long list contains.

Days

above all the ster's daugh-

to marry her,
t. Oh, dear
who marry Oh, my dear
here we used

the blessing of
have the hap-
a few lines in you please permit me, I y short, and failing lover MES —."

aper were so
well of both. er (the style
craps he had d not under-

as forgot all ne away his you appear in the most e of her. All ation, that I so manifest.
But the cer-
lly, that you omfort. She ave so much may kiss the
I love you
n, what you
he most ex-lady and a
to marry for ns, and hear for fashion-
se they have I hear these le you stood
e that we are a earth above
as I love you,
" JAMES."

ames means,
ancy.—R.

as a servant to ring a parcel of which he had ts stead one of e blander, but y was the first ndulged his cu-
ured footman.
" No, James,"
and this letter

y's " till condi-
t, but the mar-
nes Hirst, soon
ried her sister,
e, in the neigh-
ster and suc-
miles to carry ng letter.

HAVING already given my reader an account of several extraordinary clubs, both ancient and modern, I did not design to have troubled him with any more narratives of this nature; but I have lately received information of a club, which I can call neither ancient nor modern, that I dare say will be no less surprising to my reader than it was to myself; for which reason I shall communicate it to the public as one of the greatest curiosities in its kind.

A friend of mine complaining of a tradesman who is related to him, after having represented him as a very idle worthless fellow, who neglected his family, and spent most of his time over a bottle, told me, to conclude his character, that he was a member of the Everlasting club. So very odd a title raised my curiosity to inquire into the nature of a club that had such a sounding name; upon which my friend gave me the following account:

The Everlasting club consists of a hundred members, who divide the whole twenty-four hours among them in such a manner, that the club sits day and night from one end of the year to another; no party presuming to rise till they are relieved by those who are in course to succeed them. By this means a member of the Everlasting club never wants company; for though he is not upon duty himself, he is sure to find some who are; so that if he be disposed to take a whet, a nooning, an evening's draught, or a bottle after midnight, he goes to the club, and finds a knot of friends to his mind.

It is a maxim in this club, that the steward never dies; for as they succeed one another by way of rotation, no man is to quit the great elbow-chair which stands at the upper end of the table, till his successor is in readiness to fill it; insomuch that there has not been a sede vacante in the memory of man.

This club was instituted towards the end (or as some of them say, about the middle) of the civil wars, and continued without interruption till the time of the great fire,* which burnt them out, and dispersed them for several weeks. The steward at that time maintained his post till he had like to have been blown up with a neighbouring house (which was demolished in order to stop the fire); and would not leave the chair at last, till he had emptied all the bottles upon the table, and received repeated directions from the club to withdraw himself. This steward is frequently talked of in the club and looked upon by every member of it as a greater man than the famous captain mentioned in my Lord Clarendon, who was burnt in his ship because he would not quit it without orders. It is said, that towards the close of 1700, being the great year of jubilee, the club had under consideration whether they should break up or continue their session; but after many speeches and debates, it was at length agreed to sit out the other century. This resolution passed in a general club nomine contradicente.

Having given this short account of the institution and continuation of the Everlasting club, I should here endeavour to say something of the manner and characters of its several members, which I shall * Anno, 1666.

ling to the best lights I have received in
er.

ars by their books in general, that, since institution, they have smoked fifty tons of drunk thirty thousand butts of ale, one hogsheads of red port, two hundred barrels y, and a kilderkin of small beer. There likewise a great consumption of cards. It id, that they observe the law in Ben Jon-b,* which orders the fire to be always kept (perennis esto) as well for the convenience ag their pipes, as to cure the dampness of room. They have an old woman in the a vestal, whose business it is to cherish etuate the fire which burns from generation tion, and has seen the glass-house fires in above a hundred times.

verlasting club treats all other clubs with contempt, and talks even of the Kit-Cat ber as of a couple of upstarts. Their ordicourse (as much as I have been able to learn as altogether upon such adventures as have their own assembly; of members who have e glass in their turns for a week together, tiring out of the club; of others who have hundred pipes at a sitting; of others, who missed their morning's draught for twenty gether. Sometimes they speak in raptures of ale in King Charles's reign; and somefect with astonishment upon games at whist, ave been miraculously recovered by members society, when in all human probability the desperate.

delight in several old catches, which they ll hours to encourage one another to moisten y, and grow immortal by drinking; with her edifying exhortations of the like nature. are four general clubs held in a year, at mes they fill up vacancies, appoint waiters, the old fire-maker, or elect a new one, settle tions for coals, pipes, tobacco, and other ies.

enior member has outlived the whole club er, and has been drunk with the grandfathers of the present sitting members.—C.

73.] THURSDAY, MAY 24, 1711.

—O Dea certe!—VING. ÆN. l. 322.

O Goddess! for no less you seem.

very strange to consider, that a creature n, who is sensible of so many weaknesses and tions, should be actuated by a love of fame:
s and ignorance, imperfection and misery, ontend for praise, and endeavour as much ble to make themselves objects of admiration. otwithstanding man's essential perfection is little, his comparative perfection may be siderable. If he looks upon himself in an ed light, he has not much to boast of; but nsiders himself with regard to others, he d occasion of glorying, if not in his own at least in the absence of another's imperfection.

This gives a different turn to the reflec-the wise man and the fool. The first ens to shine in himself, and the last to outshine The first is humbled by a sense of his own es, the last is lifted up by the discovery of ich he observes in other men. The wise man considers what he abounds in. The wise his own approbation, a mends himself to the ap

But however unreasonfor admiration may ap-man, it is not wholly t often produces very good strains him from doing a contemptible, but as it p are great and glorious.
fective or faulty, but t are so good, that, for ought not to be extingui

It is observed by Ciceand the most shining pas-ambition; and if we loo lieve we shall find this in women than in men.

The passion for praise in the fair sex, produces of sense, who desire to which deserves admirat-observe, without a comp of them do not only live of virtue, but with an their honour, than what our own sex. How m chastity, fidelity, devottinguish themselves by dren, care of their fam-bands,—which are the ments of woman-kind, carrying on of traffic, t are those by which men selves a name.

But as this passion fo according to reason, in our species in every thi thing is more destructverned by vanity and fo here to say, only regar whom for certain reas hereafter see at large, name of idols. An ido adorning of her person of her body, air of her f that it is her business adorers. For this rea public places and assem-to their worship. The filled with idols; severa cession every evening a them set up their worsh are to be accosted in Deity. Life and death heaven, and pains of paradise is in their arm ment that you are pre-transports, and ecstasi they confer: sighs and hearts, are the offering Their smiles make men them to despair. I sha that Ovid's book of t heathen ritual, which c ship which are made us

It would be as difficu different kinds of idols, those that were known adjoining. Most of the losh in fire and flames.

the Leges Convivales of this club, in Langbaine's English Poets, &c. Art. Ben Jonson.

at and slashed, and shed-Some of them, like the have treats and collary night. It has indeed them have been used by like the Chinese idols, ged when they refuse to at are offered to them.
at those idolaters who de-I am here speaking of,
other kinds of idolaters.
se they worship different el because they worship of the idol is quite conolaters; as the one desires self, the whole business is to multiply adorers. retly described in a tale s one of them sitting at staries about her, who are avour, and paying their on one, drank to another, oot which was under the three, says the old bard, rite? In troth, says he,

id idol in Chaucer, puts ul Clarinda, one of the oderns. She is worshipelight, in the midst of a ally called an assembly. in the nation endeavour eye, while she sits in pers burning about her.
her idolaters, she bestows every one of them, be-sence. She asks a ques-another, glances an ogle of snuff from the fourth, nt to give the fifth an oc-in short, every one goes cess, and encouraged to same canonical hour that ged by many accidental ular is a kind of counter-inverted.—When a man goddess, she quickly sinks at decayer of your idol.

is not a more unhappy ed idol, especially when ers and behaviour as are rshippers are about her.
that in these and many erally outlives the idol, I f this paper, and desire proper direction to their in order to which, they emselves the objects of a iration. This is not to or dress, or fashion, but nts which are not to be e, and which appear most ost acquainted with them.

No. 74.] FRIDAY, MAY, 25, 1

—Pendent opera interrupta— Viro. 2
The works unfinished and neglected lie.

In my last Monday's paper I gave son instances of those beautiful strokes which reader in the old song of Chevy-Chase; I according to my promise, be more parti-shew that the sentiments in that ballad are natural and poetical, and full of the maplicity which we admire in the greatest cient poets; for which reason I shall quo passages of it, in which the thought is alto-same with what we meet in several passa-Æneid; not that I would infer from th the poet (whoever he was) proposed to th imitation of those passages, but that he wa to keep them in general by the same kind cal genius, and by the same copyings afte

Had this old song been filled with epical turns and points of wit, it might per-pleased the wrong taste of some reade would never have become the delight of mon people, nor have warmed the heart o lip Sidney like the sound of a trumpet; nature that can have this effect, and pl tastes which are the most unprejudiced, o refined. I must, however, beg leave to di-so great an authority as that of Sir Phil in the judgment which he has passed as to style and evil apparel of this antiquated there are several parts in it where not thought but the language is majestic, and bers sonorous; at least the apparel is n gorgeous than many of the poets made Queen Elizabeth's time, as the reader several of the following quotations.

What can be greater than either the the expression in that stanza,

To drive the deer with hound and he Earl Percy took his way!
The child may rue that is unborn
The hunting of that day!

This way of considering the misfortunes battle would bring upon posterity, not on who were born immediately after the battl their fathers in it, but on those also who p future battles which took their rise from th of the two earls, is wonderfully beautiful formable to the way of thinking among tl poets.

Audiet pugnas vitio parentum Rara juvenus.—Hos. 1, Od. ii. 23.
Posterity, thinn'd by their father's crimes, Shall read with grief the story of their tir

What can be more sounding and poetical, ble more the majestic simplicity of the than the following stanzas?

The stout Earl of Northumberland A vow to God did make.
His pleasure in the Scottish woods Three summers' days to take:
With fifteen hundred bowmen bold, All chosen men of might,
Who knew full well, in time of need To aim their shafts aright.
The hounds ran swiftly through the
The nimble deer to take:
And with their cries the hills and d An echo shrill did make.

—Vocat ingenti clamore Cithæron Taygetique canes, domitrixque Epidaurus equon Et vox assensu nemorum ingeminata remiguit.—G Cithæron loudly calls me to my way; Thy hounds Taygetus, open and pursue the prey us urges on my speed, hills, and for his horses' breed:

d dales the cheerful cries rebound;
its along, and propagates the sound.—DAYDEN yonder doth Earl Douglas come, s men in armour bright;

twenty hundred Scottish spears, l marching in our sight.

men of pleasant Tivdale, st by the river Tweed, &c of the Scotch warriors, described in st verses, has a fine romantic situation, couple of smooth words for verse. If mpares the foregoing six lines of the following Latin verses, he will see how e written in the spirit of Virgil:

apo apparent, hastasque reductis longe dextris; et spicula vibrant:— m Præneste viri, quique arva Gabina ldumque Anienem, et rosida rivis ta colunt:—qui rosea rura Velini, s horrentes rupes, montemque Severum, ue colunt, Forlusque et flumen Himellæ:
s Fabarimque bibunt,——

Æn. xi. 605. viii. 682. 712

In a line, they couch their spears—its sends a chosen band, who plough Saturnia's Gabine land:
succours which cold Anien yields;
f Hæmicus—besides a band, red from Velinum's dewy land—lainers that from Severus came:
he craggy cliffs of Tetrica;
where yellow Tiber takes his way, Himella's wanton waters play:
ends her arms, with those that lie s, and fruitful Foruli.—DAYDEN

ed:

l Douglas on a milk-white steed, lost like a baron bold, e foremost of the company—hose armour shone like gold.

anivolvans tardum prænecesserat agmen, &c o Turnus equo, quibus ibat in armis

Æn. ix. 47. 269.

English archers bent their bows, heir hearts were good and true;
he first flight of arrows sent,
all threescore Scots they slew y clos'd full fast on every side, o slackness there was found;
l many a gallant gentleman ay gasping on the ground.

h that there came an arrow keen ut of an English bow, ich struck Earl Douglas to the heart, deep and deadly blow.

wounded after the same manner by an ind in the midst of a parley.

tr voces, media inter talia verba, ro stridens alis allapsa sagitta est, n qua pulsa manu— Æn. xii. 318.

hile he spake, unmindful of defence, d arrow struck the pious prince;
ther from a human hand it came,
le god, is left unknown by fame.—DAYDEN.

the descriptive parts of this song, there ore beautiful than the four following ch have a great force and spirit in them, l with very natural circumstances. The the third stanza was never touched by oet, and is such a one as would have mer or in Virgil:

hus did both these nobles die, hose courage none could stain; English archer then perceiv'd he noble Earl was slain.

had a bow bent in his hand, ade of a trusty tree,
arrow of a cloth-yard long,
he too head drew he.

Against Sir Hugh Montgomerie So right his shaft he
The grey-goose wing
In his heart-blood This fight did last for Till setting of the sun For when they rang the
The battle scarce was

One may observe, likewise, the slain, the author has folgreat ancient poets, not on-the dead, but by diversifyin-of particular persons.

And with Earl Douglas Sir Hugh Montgomerie
Sir Charles Carrel, the One foot would never Sir Charles Murrel of His sister's son was Sir David Lamb so we Yet saved could not

The familiar sound in these jesty of the description;
mention this part of the poeral cast of thought which a-last verses look almost like

—Cadit et Ripheus
Qui fuit in Teucris et serv Diis aliter visum—

Then Ripheus fell in the Just of his word, observan-Heav'n thought not so.—I

In the catalogue of the Enington's behaviour is in the larized very artfully, as the by that account which is gi-ning of the battle; though buffoon readers (who have culed in Hudibras) will re-beauty of it; for which rea-as quote it.

Then stept a gallant Witherington was his Who said, I would not To Henry our king for That e'er my captain for
And I stood looking on

We meet with the same he-

Non pudet, O Rutili, cune Objectare animam? nume Non sumus—? Æn. 2

For shame, Rutilians, can Of one expos'd for all, in Can we before the face of Our courage colder, or our

What can be more natural the circumstances in which viour of those women who on this fatal day?

Next day did many wid Their husbands to be They wash'd their wou
But all would not pre
Their bodies bathed in They bore with them
They kiss'd them dead
When they were clad

Thus we see how the thoug-naturally arise from the suband sometimes exquisitely is often very sounding, and with a true poetical spirit.

If this song had been wrner, which is the delight of writers or readers, it would so many ages, and have pl-

BRITISH ESSAYISTS.

eg pardon for which I should eared my own lar on such a practice and 26, 1711.

a, et res.
Ep. xvii. 23.
ecm.

I suffered the ance, for calla clown. She e of my invin-
on with great
e, the face, the judge so arro-
gation, jaunty
one of those rant, for per-
She had the after she had t so charming
e began with ead, by way of
s. "Tis she!
wanton eyes,
t her mouth,
e lottery, and air."

fly:
that die!
is alternately,

and

continues she, is begins to tease
h, the pretty
mb to please,
verful charms.

wild and gay

te,

our for a man o so nimble a discourse gave left her combut consider ons the gene-
have of what
"fine gentle-
that subject in re, an idea of

of the rest of isagreeable to ndards of beves What is on and good e in the carriage of a well-bred man. I did not, I confess, explain myself enough on this subject, when I call'd Dorimant a clown, and made it an instance of it that he call'd the orange wench Double Tripe: should have shewn, that humanity obliges a gentleman to give no part of human kind reproach, for what they, whom they reproach, may possibly have in common with the most virtuous and worthy amongst us. When a gentleman speaks coarsely, he has dressed himself clean to no purpose: The clothing of our minds certainly ought to be regarded before that of our bodies. To betray in a man's talk a corrupt imagination, is a much greater offence against the conversation of gentlemen than any negligence of dress imaginable. But this sense of the matter is so far from being received among people of condition, that Vocifer even passes for a fine gentleman. He is loud, haughty, gentle, soft, lewd, and obsequious by turns, just as a little understanding and great impudence prompt him at the present moment. He passes among the silly part of our women for a man of wit, because he is generally in doubt. He contradicts with a shrug, and confutes with a certain sufficiency, in professing such and such a thing is above his capacity. What makes his character the pleasanter is, that he is a professed deluder of women; and because the empty coxcomb has no regard to any thing that is of itself sacred and inviolable, I have heard an unmarried lady of fortune say, it is a pity so fine a gentleman as Vocifer is so great an atheist. The crouds of such inconsiderable creatures, that infest all places of assembling, every reader will have in his eye from his own observation; but would it not be worth considering what sort of figure a man who formed himself upon those principles among us which are agreeable to the dictates of honour and religion would make in the familiar and ordinary occurences of life?

I hardly have observed any one fill his several duties of life better than Ignotus. All the undesired parts of his behaviour, and such as are exposed to common observation, have their rise in him from great and noble motives. A firm and unshaken expectation of another life makes him become this humanity and good-nature, fortified by the sense of virtue, have the same effect upon him as the neglect of all goodness has upon many others. Being firmly established in all matters of importance, the certain inattention which makes men's actions look easy, appears in him with greater beauty: by a the rough contempt of little excellences, he is perfectly master of them. This temper of mind leaves him under no necessity of studying his air, and he has this peculiar distinction, that his negligence is unaffected.

He that can work himself into a pleasure in considering this being as an uncertain one, and thence to reap an advantage by its discontinuance, is in a fair way of doing all things with a graceful uncon-cern, and a gentleman-like ease. Such a one does not behold his life as a short transient perplexing state, made up of trifling pleasures and great anxieties; but sees it in quite another light: his griefs are momentary and his joys immortal. Reflection upon death is not a gloomy and sad thought of resigning every thing that he delights in, but it is a short night followed by an endless day. What would here contend for is, that the more virtuous the man is, the nearer he will naturally be to the character of genteel and agreeable. A man whose fortune is plentiful, shows an ease in his countenance sidence in his behaviour, which he that is ants and difficulties cannot assume. It is the state of the mind; he that governs his with the everlasting rules of reason and ust have something so inexpressibly grace-words and actions, that every circumstance some him. The change of persons or things um does not at all alter his situation, but he interested in the occurrences with which e distracted, because the greatest purpose of to maintain an indifference both to it and joyments. In a word, to be a fine gentle-to be a generous and a brave man. What e a man so much in constant good humour, e, as we call it, than to be supported by a never fail him, and to believe that what-pens to him was the best thing that possibly fal him, or else he on whom it depends t have permitted it to have befallen him at

1. 76.] MONDAY, MAY 28, 1711.

utram, sic nos te, Celce, feremus.

HOR. 1 Ep. viii. 17.

your fortune bear, we will bear you.—CREECH.

It is nothing so common as to find a man, the general observation of his carriage you se of a uniform temper, subject to such unac-e starts of humour and passion, that he is as like himself, and differs as much from the t at first thought him, as any two distinct can differ from each other. This proceeds want of forming some law of life to our-fixing some notion of things in general, y affect us in such a manner as to create abits both in our minds and bodies. The ce of this leaves us exposed not only to an ing levity in our usual conversation, but e same instability in our friendships, in-und alliances. A man who is but a mere of what passes around him, and not encommerces of any consideration, is but an ill the secret motions of the heart of man, and degrees it is actuated to make such visible as in the same person: but, at the same en a man is no way concerned in the effect inconsistencies in the behaviour of men of d, the speculation must be in the utmost de-th diverting and instructive; yet to enjoy servations in the highest relish, he ought to d in a post of direction, and have the deal-their fortunes to them. I have therefore aderfully diverted with some pieces of secret which an antiquary, my very good friend, as a curiosity. They are memoirs of the life of Pharamond of France. "Phara-ays my author, "was a prince of infinite and generosity, and at the same time the sant and facetious companion of his time.
peculiar taste in him, which would have icky in any prince but himself; he thought ld be no exquisite pleasure in conversation g equals; and would pleasantly bewail him-he always lived in a crowd, but was the in France that could never get into com-his turn of mind made him delight in mid-bles, attended only with one person of his er. He would in these excursions get ac-with men (whose temper he had a mind to recommend them privately to the particular n of his first minister. He generally found himself neglected by as they had hopes of such occasions to re-

justice to tax princes their high fortunes, could with constancy creatures." My auth-passage that gives us mon genius of Pharam-whom he had put to all those he had a mind to him for his purpose.
day, he gave him an-much would satisfy all mediately revealed he spoke to him in this m-what you desired, by th-look to it, that you are last you shall ever recesider you as mine; and you my royal word y-
less than you are at prcluded the prince, smilhave put you in, which for you have hereafter

His majesty having a friend and compani-
the pleasures of an ag-great and powerful m-with his companion, th-for he punished his coufolly, not by any act of morously practising up-observed a man untracfind an opportunity to of him, and render hall his own looks, words pretations; and his friehe was called) having a he could communicate fear no artful use woul-It was no small delight to reflect upon all which Pharamond would c-

power in his country, and with one whisper n-friends and acquaintanknowledge of men by lo-profess altering the w-tempers, by thrice spe-was in his power, he tainment in managing the treatment they desecast of his eye, and hal-who hated, embrace, anecks, with as much ea-their real inclinations, another. When he w-would lay the scene wit-night exercise the passi-was pleased to see a ha-of a man she had long his being taken notice lover conceive higher he he was dying for the damen speak affection in like in the faintest, it w-dents to see disguises th-increased on the other, grace attended the re-
probation or diseste-upon the meanness of

BRITISH ESSAYISTS

he could give shall immed- and he that angel." He should not be of his court, as meanly or in, the good like Phara- an else can. He gave ew could re- a noble and d not regard himself, but y this means ate; and no who had not a -R.

, 1711.

nobia.
tr. Epig. l. 87.
you,

of those sort ersion, and ait. A little e walking to- picked up a aid he would ent virtuoso. le a full stop Will knowing ock of an af- tch, and told ok a turn or I saw him way into the nis looks put is fob. As I lking, and do rs, especially ft him to be nd continued nces and dis- make them ign, when I olemishes in ; and helped tin proverb, he following

d,* ide.*

that I distin- he thinks of t because he too innocent e distractions ly accounted on some par- with mathe- are wholly ementum.—Se-

taken up with some violent passion, such as anger, fear, or love, which ties the mind to some distant object; or lastly, these distractions proceed from a certain vivacity and fickleness in a man's temper, which, while it raises up infinite numbers of ideas in the mind, is continually pushing it on, without allowing it to rest on any particular image. Nothing therefore is more unnatural than the thoughts and conceptions of such a man, which are seldom occasioned either by the company he is in, or any of those objects which are placed before him. While you fancy he is admiring a beautiful woman, it is an even wager that he is solving a proposition in Euclid; and while you may imagine he is reading the Paris Gazette, it is far from being impossible that he is pulling down and rebuilding the front of his country-house.

At the same time that I am endeavouring to expose this weakness in others, I shall readily confess that I once laboured under the same infirmity myself. The method I took to conquer it was a firm resolution to learn something from whatever I was obliged to see or hear. There is a way of thinking, if a man can attain to it, by which he may strike somewhat out of any thing. I can at present observe those starts of good sense and struggles of unimproved reason in the conversation of a clown, with as much satisfaction as the most shining periods of the most finished orator; and can make a shift to command my attention at a puppet-show or an opera, as well as at Hamlet or Othello. I always make one of the company I am in; for though I say little myself, my attention to others, and those nods of approbation which I never bestow unmerited, sufficiently show that I am among them. Whereon Will Honeycomb, though a fellow of good sense, is every day doing and saying a hundred things, which he afterward confesses, with a well-bred frankness were somewhat mal à propos and undesigned.

I chanced the other day to get into a coffee-house where Will was standing in the midst of several auditors, whom he had gathered round him, and was giving them an account of the person and character of Moll Hinton. My appearance before him put him in mind of me, without making him reflect that I was actually present. So that keeping his eyes full upon me, to the great surprise of his audience, he broke off his first harangue, and proceeded thus:—"Why now there's my friend," mentioning me by name, "he is a fellow that thinks a great deal, but never opens his mouth; I warrant you he is now thrusting his short face into some coffee-house about 'Change. I was his bail in the time of the Popish plot, when he was taken up for a Jesuit." I he had looked on me a little longer, he had certainly described me so particularly without ever considering what led him into it, that the whole company must necessarily have found me out; for which reason remembering the old proverb, "Out of sight out of mind," I left the room; and upon meeting him an hour afterward, was asked by him, with a great deal of good humour, in what part of the world I lived that he had not seen me these three days.

Monsieur Bruyere has given us the character of an absent man with a great deal of humour, which he has pushed to an agreeable extravagance: wit the heads of it I shall conclude my present paper.

"Menalcas," says that excellent author, "come down in the morning, opens his door to go out. He shuts it again, because he perceives that he has his night-cap on; and examining himself farther, finds that he is but half-shaved, that he has stuck in word on his right side, that his stockings are about his heels, and that his shirt is over his breeches. When he is dressed, he goes to court, comes into the dining-room, and walking bolt upright under a bunch of candlesticks, his wig is caught by one of them, and hangs dangling in the air. All the courtiers fall a laughing, but Menalcas laughs louder than any of them, and looks about for the person who is the jest of the company. Coming down to the court-gate he finds a coach, which taking for his own, he whips into it; and the coachman drives off, not doubting but he carries his master. As soon as he stops, Menalcas throws himself out of the coach, crosses the court, ascends the stair-case, and runs through all the chambers with the greatest familiarity; reposes himself on a couch, and fancies himself at home. The master of the house at last comes; Menalcas rises to receive him, and desires him to sit down; he talks, muses, and then talks again. The gentleman of the house is tired and amazed; Menalcas is no less so, but is every moment in hopes at his impertinent guest will at last end his tedious sit. Night comes on, when Menalcas is hardly deceived.

"When he is playing at back-gammon, he calls for a full glass of wine and water; it is his turn to draw; he has the box in one hand, and his glass in the other; and being extremely dry, and unwilling to lose time, he swallows down both the dice, and at the same time throws his wine into the tables. He writes a letter, and flings the sand into the ink-bottle; he writes a second, and mistakes the supercriptions. A nobleman receives one of them, and upon opening it reads as follows: 'I would have you, honest Jack, immediately upon the receipt of this, take in hay enough to serve me the winter.' His farmer receives the other, and is amazed to see it, 'My lord, I received your grace's commands, with an entire submission too.'—If he is at an entertainment, you may see the pieces of bread continually multiplying round his plate. It is true the rest of the company want it, as well as their knives and forks, which Menalcas does not let them keep long. Sometimes in a morning he puts his whole family in a hurry, and at last goes out without being able to stay for his coach or dinner, and for that day you may see him in every part of the town, except the very place where he had appointed to be upon business of importance. You would often take him for every thing that he is not; for a fellow quite stupid, for he hears nothing; for a fool, for he talks to himself, and has a hundred grimaces and motions in his head, which are altogether involuntary; for a proud man, for he looks full upon you, and takes no notice of your saluting him. The truth of it is, his eyes are open, but he makes no use of them, and neither sees you—nor any man, nor any thing, else. He came once from his country-house, and his own footmen attempted to rob him, and succeeded. They held a flambeau to his throat, and bid him deliver his purse; he did so, and coming home told his friends he had been robbed; they desired to know the particulars: 'Ask my servants,' says Menalcas, 'for they were with me.'"—X.

WEDNESDAY, MAY 30, 1711.

Locutus est, utinam nostri esset!

Locutus est, utinam nostri esset!

And as letters are so pleasant, that I doubt not the reader will be as much diverted with them as I was. entertainment, of the Cambridge of my paper, to companion with as to be his.

"SIR,

"I send you think them were which so surprised wonder if all men into a paper will

"As to the really carried on you have a full do whatever you had the satisfaction with some thing Sir, and prosper your very affect

"MR. SPE

"You well clear titles, and in the proper assure you that tuted originally of King Charles is not difficult to club, so (I remember intention of dining to Clare-h (though now the handsomely to be made to very great them without being at London by with a great certainly been one that indeed one to kiss him, but during his kisses Another would but it was proved into a room, married two children was taken by a one of the hand inquiry it was for one eye, and the cline. A fourth in his vindication his daughter, who with a good fortune the young lady run away with him supposed, that he him, was only in pleasant to hear made, inasmuch be excused, as however, at last officers were appointed the entertainment pleasant fellow Crab, from his not pretend to get and nothing was elbow chair by of the table; and was no content made so great at Newmarket,

BRITISH ESSAYISTS.

It be there him-
of bucks.'
this affair in a nished in so im-
man who shall aint the world,
e Ugly Club at were admitted
be among fu-
at club, which only for? And author may then was an interpounbridge. This life-time; but I will not make

nion: though I
any acts of the
in a public ca-
have certainly anded they will
and the Loungers
iversity itself.
want no motives
ed to tell you,
ad eundem at enture safely to university."

and which,

a forlorn and nom we should there is hardly d us. Nay, we rself, whom we last of all man-
having given us descended of ity and honour supplanted us.
sighted by the
ers at the bar!
one of the most niverse, to our
That THAT that us had justice
, 'that which hemselves, the graded us, and ecree was ever
of parliament,
e done to every ves often either nother. In the ght, they learn art in heaven,'
n heaven;' and ates, refused to ar general Con-O God, which
be, 'who con-
en have we of
ers of our very ed in all facul-
ant us, and our es?
o muda conscio,
his mind, a fool
ir, a very pro per person to address to, since we know you to capable of being convinced, and of changing y judgment. You are well able to settle this aff and to you we submit our cause. We desire you assign the butts and bounds of each of us; and if for the future we may both enjoy our own. I would desire to be heard by our counsel, but that fear in their very pleadings they would betray cause: besides, we have been oppressed so ma years, that we can appear in no other way but forma pauperis. All which considered, we hope y will be pleased to do that which to right and just shall appertain.

R.

"And your petitioners," &c.

No. 79.] THURSDAY, MAY, 31, 1711.

Oderunt peccare boni virtutis amore.—Hos. 1 Ep. xvi. 21
The good, for virtue's sake, abhor to sin.—Cæciliæ.

I HAVE received very many letters of late fr my female correspondents, most of whom are w angry with me for abridging their pleasures, a looking severely upon things in themselves indif ferent. But I think they are extremely unjust to in this imputation. All I contend for is, that the excellences which are to be regarded but in the cond place should not precede more weighty c siderations. The heart of man deceives him, spite of the lectures of half a life spent in discour on the subjection of passion; and I do not kn why one may not think the heart of a woman as faithful to itself. If we grant an equality in the culties of both sexes, the minds of women are cultivated with precepts, and consequently m without disrespect to them, be accounted more li to illusion, in cases wherein 'natural inclination out of the interests of virtue. I shall take up present time in commenting upon a billet or t which came from ladies, and from thence leave reader to judge whether I am in the right or not, thinking it is possible fine women may be mistak The following address seems to have no other des in it, but to tell me the writer will do what she pl ses, for all me.

"MR. SPECTATOR;

"I am young, and very much inclined to foll the paths of innocence; but at the same time, I have a plentiful fortune, and am of quality, I unwilling to resign the pleasure of distinction, an little satisfaction in being admired in general, a much greater in being beloved by a gentleman whom I design to make my husband. But I ha a mind to put off entering into matrimony till a ther winter is over my head, which (whatever, mu Sir, you may think of the matter) I design to p away in hearing music, going to plays, viating, a all other satisfactions which fortune and youth, p tected by innocence and virtue, can procure for,

"Sir, your most humble servant, M. T.

"My lover does not know I like him, therefo having no engagements upon me, I think to w and know whether I may not like any one else bette

I have heard Will Honeycomb say, "A w man seldom writes her mind but in her postscript I think this gentlewoman has sufficiently discover hers in this. I will lay what wager she pleas against her present favorite, and can tell her, th she will like ten more before she is fixed, and th will take the worst man she ever liked in her li There is no end of affection taken in at the ey only; and you may as well satisfy those eyes w mean, as control any passion received by them only. It is from loving by sight, that coxcombs so frequently succeed with women, and very often a young lady is bestowed by her parents to a man who weds her as innocence itself, though she has, in her own heart, given her approbation of a different man in very assembly she was in the whole year before. That is wanting among women as well as among men, is the love of laudable things, and not to rest only in the forbearance of such as are reproachful.

How far removed from a woman of this light imagination is Eudisia! Eudisia has all the arts of life and good-breeding with so much ease, that the virtue of her conduct looks more like instinct than choice. It is as little difficult to her to think justly of persons and things, as it is to a woman of different accomplishments to move ill or look awkward. That which was, at first, the effect of instruction, is grown into a habit; and it would be as hard for Eudisia to indulge a wrong suggestion of thought, as it would be to Flavia, the fine dancer, to come into a room with an unbecoming air.

But the misapprehensions people themselves have of their own state of mind, is laid down with much discerning in the following letter, which is but an extract of a kind epistle from my charming mistress Iocastiana, who is above the vanity of external beauty, and is the better judge of the perfections of the mind.

"Ms. SPECTATOR,

"I write this to acquaint you, that very many ladies, as well as myself, spend many hours more than we used at the glass, for want of the female library, of which you promised us a catalogue. I hope, Sir, in the choice of authors for us, you will use a particular regard to books of devotion. What they are, and how many, must be your chief care; for upon the propriety of such writings depends a great deal. I have known those among us, who think if they every morning and evening spend an hour in their closet, and read over so many prayers in six or seven books of devotion, all equally non-sensical, with a sort of warmth (that might as well be raised by a glass of wine, or a dram of citron), they may all the rest of their time go on in whatever their particular passion leads them to. The beautiful Philautia, who is (in your language) an idol, is one of these votaries; she has a very pretty-furnished closet, to which she retires at her appointed hours. This is her dressing-room, as well as chapel; she has constantly before her a large looking-glass; and upon the table, according to a very witty author,

Together lie her prayer-book and paint,
At once to improve the sinner and the saint.

"It must be a good scene, if one could be present at it, to see this idol by turns lift up her eyes to heaven, and steal glances at her own dear person. It cannot but be a pleasing conflict between vanity and humiliation. When you are upon this subject, choose books which elevate the mind above the world, and give a pleasing indifference to little things in it. For want of such instructions I am apt to believe so many people take it in their heads to be sullen, cross, and angry, under pretence of being abstracted from the affairs of this life, when at the same time they betray their fondness for them by doing their duty as a task, and pouting and reading good books for a week together. Much of this I take to proceed from the indiscretion of the books themselves, whose very titles of weekly preparations, and such limited godliness, lead people of ordinary capacities into great errors, and raise in them a mechanical religion. I know a lady that though she is twenty-four at an hour of prayer, cards, to which she is not less till two or three are but empty made to virtue with any true piety, thence I presume themselves virtuous in an absence of civilities, upon no other her silly phrase 'eye.' She has made her affairs she is impertinent and unseasonable. Sir, be pleased may make our some of us, that of vice is always This and other from you by our

R.

No. 80.

Cælum non as

Those that be
They change

In the year
year, were born
of exquisite fear Brunetta, the d
tween their par quaintance the played, dressed dance and mak
inseparable com ments their ten innocent happi
of their fifteen had a head-dre
that instead of
for their amity bourhood were parison of their
the ease of mit
they were form actions were every excellen looked upon a other. These proved into a coldness, and hatred.

These two were, in their very much alie
in their absen
the one must g
were hardly d
they were ap together. Wh tertaining to a detractio from

BRITISH ESSAYISTS.

th as her ad-
th meditation
nd inventing
observed the
of the other, on at each other's ne report of a withered upon to which wo-
tifie their re-
ben violences,
ts of a regu-
sual, engaged al pretensions sen sort of ex-
ntiful fortunes
their parents colours ima-
and were ex-
nce for supe-

appened, that e the heart of all the colours
ot distinguish American, in and too gay ent upon her
oured attrac-
netta had the f in a wealthy
d to in a mann of all men,
arried to the
es. Brunetta
by every op-
hear of her
fanned into and carried
of barbarous
dure these re-
ts and charms
of the same
ont her once
ceeded in her tleman whose enemy's hus-
ate the many e beauties la-
cess of time
e island con-
directions to pparel, before ival. He did ys in a bro-
d ever before anguished at ne up to the anicated her no, by an int, procured a Phillis took ere she was now prepared ll in a plain autiful negro
with which ention of the appy Phillis conveyed to rself, she fled rd a ship in the road, and is now landed in inconsolable despair at Plymouth.

POSTSCRIPT.

After the above melancholy narration, it may perhaps be a relief to the reader to peruse the following expostulation:

"TO MR. SPECTATOR.

"The just Remonstrance of affronted THAT.

"THOUGH I deny not the petition of Mess. WHO and WHICH, yet you should not suffer them to be rude, and to call honest people names: for that bears very hard on some of those rules of decency which you are justly famous for establishing. They may find fault, and correct speeches in the senate and at the bar, but let them try to get themselves so often, and with so much eloquence, repeated in a sentence, as a great orator doth frequently introduce me.

"My lords!" says he, "with humble submission, That That I say is this; That, That That gentleman has advanced, is not That That he should have proved to your lordships.' Let these two questionary petitioners try to do thus with their Who and their Whiches.

"What great advantage was I of to Mr. Dryden in his Indian Emperor,

"You force me still to answer you in That."

to furnish out a rhyme to Morat? and what a poor figure would Mr. Bayes have made without his 'Egad and all That?' How can a judicious man distinguish one thing from another, without saying 'This here,' or 'That there?' And how can a sober man, without using the expletives of oaths (in which indeed the rakes and bullies have a great advantage over others), make a discourse of any tolerable length, without 'That is;' and if he be a very gay man indeed, without 'That is to say?' And how instructive as well as entertaining are those usual expressions in the mouths of great men, 'Such things as That,' and 'The like of That.'

"I am not against reforming the corruptions of speech you mention, and own there are proper reasons for the introduction of other words beside That; but I scorn as much to supply the place of Who or a Which at every turn, as they are unequal always to fill mine; and I expect good language and civil treatment, and hope to receive it for the future That, That I shall only add is, That I am,

"Yours,

"THAT."

R.

No. 81.] SATURDAY, JUNE 2, 1711.

Qualis ubi audito venantium murmure tigris Horruit in maculas. SEAT. Theb. li. 128.

As when the tigress hears the hunter's din, Dark angry spots disdain her glossy skin.

ABOUT the middle of last winter I went to see an opera at the theatre in the Hay-market, where I could not but take notice of two parties of very fine women, that had placed themselves in the opposite side-boxes, and seemed drawn up in a kind of battle array one against another. After a short survey of them, I found they were patched differently; the faces on one hand being spotted on the right side of the forehead, and those upon the other on the left. I quickly perceived that they cast hostile glances upon one another; and that their patches were placed in those different situations, as party-signals to distinguish friends from foes. In the middle boxes, between these two opposite bodies, were se-and retreated hither in order to rally their forces I cannot tell; but the next night they came in so great a body to the opera, that they outnumbered the enemy.

This account of party-patches will, I am afraid, appear improbable to those who live at a distance from the fashionable world; but as it is a distinction of a very singular nature, and what perhaps may never meet with a parallel, I think I should not have discharged the office of a faithful Spectator, had not I recorded it.

I have, in former papers, endeavoured to expose this party-rage in women, as it only serves to aggravate the hatreds and animosities that reign among men, and in a great measure deprives the fair sex of those peculiar charms with which nature has endowed them.

When the Romans and Sabines were at war, and just upon the point of giving battle, the women, who were allied to both of them, interposed with so many tears and entreaties, that they prevented the mutual slaughter which threatened both parties, and united them together in a firm and lasting peace.

I would recommend this noble example to our British ladies, at a time when their country is torn with so many unnatural divisions, that if they continue, it will be a misfortune to be born in it. The Greeks thought it so improper for women to interest themselves in competitions and contentions, that for this reason, among others, they forbade them, under pain of death, to be present at the Olympic games, notwithstanding these were the public diversions of all Greece.

As our English women exceed those of all nations in beauty, they should endeavour to outshine them in all other accomplishments proper to the sex, and to distinguish themselves as tender mothers and faithful wives, rather than as furious partisans. Female virtues are of a domestic turn. The family is the proper province for private women to shine in. If they must be shewing their zeal for the public, let it not be against those who are perhaps of the same family, or at least of the same religion or nation, but against those who are the open, professed, undoubted enemies of their faith, liberty, and country. When the Romans were pressed with a foreign enemy, the ladies voluntarily contributed all their rings and jewels to assist the government under a public exigence, which appeared so laudable an action in the eyes of their countrymen, that from thenceforth it was permitted by a law to pronounce public orations at the funeral of a woman in praise of the deceased person, which till that time was peculiar to men. Would our English ladies, instead of sticking on a patch against those of their own country, shew themselves so truly public-spirited as to sacrifice every one her necklace against the common enemy, what decrees ought not to be made in favour of them?

Since I am recollecting upon this subject such passages as occur to my memory out of ancient authors, I cannot omit a sentence in the celebrated funeral oration of Pericles, which he made in honour of those brave Athenians that were slain in a fight with the Lacedæmonians.* After having addressed himself to the several ranks and orders of his countrymen, and shewn them how they should behave themselves in the public cause, he turns to the female part of his audience: "And as for you," says he, "I shall advise you in very few words. Aspire only * Thucyd. Hist. II. p. 120, edit. H. Steph. 1688, Editio.

BRITISH ESSAYISTS.

our sex; follow your greatest way or other."

C.

4, 1711.

husta.
Sat. III. 33
slave.

day, I heard thought I had ar to the grate, and desired I
; I was out of id me, by put-reflecting upon
men, and how ll sorts of con-
me is now, I with him till ch time a good elation. Upon ne, he ran into was frequently
heads, talked
ose above, and ot but remark,
which worked
the same little ameless in poe upon the cir-
l, and solve in to fall into this e it must needs
As for myself,
of conversation
rality of man-
ns to expense;
ry narrow com-
man who takes or his quarterly
linen my laun-
er once a week.
for my signing;
at the respective iefs, and stock-
how to reckon
ost all the busi-
of my own afpon what others
d economy.
erve the hurry

says they run;

of persons and take for the ac-
ed in the above
a wonder at the nely astonished danger of run-
impossible that ebts should not at moment in uch as that de-
ur, liberty, and t know that his

ha were freemen of the year 1762, and house

creditor can say the worst thing imaginable of him, to wit, "That he is unjust," without defamation; and can seize his person, without being guilty of an assault. Yet such is the loose and abandoned turn of some men's minds, that they can live under those constant apprehensions, and still go on to increase the cause of them. Can there be a more low and servile condition, than to be ashamed or afraid to see any one man breathing? Yet he that is much in debt, is in that condition with relation to twenty different people. There are indeed circumstances wherein men of honest natures may become liable to debts, by some unadvised behaviour in any great point of their life, or mortgaging a man's honesty as a security for that of another, and the like; but these instances are so particular and circumstanced, that they cannot come within general considerations. For one such case as one of these there are ten where a man, to keep up a false or retinue and grandeur within his own house, shall shrink at the expectation of surly demands at his doors. The debtor is the creditor's criminal; and all the officers of power and state, whom we behold make so great a figure, are no other than so many persons in authority to make good his charge against him. Human society depends upon his having the vengeance law allot to him; and the debtor owes his liberty to his neighbour, as much as the murderer does his life to his prince.

Our gentry are, generally speaking, in debt; as many families have put it into a kind of method, being so from generation to generation. The father mortgages when his son is very young; and the he is to marry, as soon as he is at age, to redeem it and find portions for his sisters. This, forsooth, is a great inconvenience to him; for he may wend keep a public table, or feed dogs, like a worthy English gentleman, till he has out-run half his estate and leave the same encumbrance upon his first-born and so on; till one man of more vigour than ordinary goes quite through the estate, or some man whose sense comes into it, and scorns to have an estate in partnership, that is to say, liable to the demand and insult of any man living. There is my friend Sir Andrew, though for many years a great and generous trader, was never the defendant in a law suit, in the perplexity of business, and the iniquity of mankind at present; no one had any colour for the least complaint against his dealings with him. This certainly is uncommon, and in its proportion as laudable in a citizen, as it is in a general never to have suffered a disadvantage in fight. How differs from this gentleman is Jack Truepenny, who has been an old acquaintance of Sir Andrew and myself from boys, but could never learn our caution. He has a whorish unresisting good nature, which makes him incapable of having a property in any thing. His fortune, his reputation, his time, and his capacity, are at any man's service that comes first. When he was at school he was whipped thrice a week for faults he took upon him to excuse others; since he came into the business of the world, he has been arrested twice or thrice a-year for debts he had nothing to do with, but as surety for others; and I remember when a friend of his had suffered in the way of the town, all the physic his friend took was conveyed to him by Jack, and inscribed "A bolus an electuary for Mr Truepenny." Jack had a good estate left him, which came to nothing; because he believed all who pretended to demands upon him. This easiness and credulity destroy all the other merit he has; and he has all his life been a sacrific without ever receiving thanks, or doing action.

and this discourse with a speech which I make to one of his creditors (of whom I had gentler usage) after lying a whole night at his suit.

My ingratitude for the many kindnesses I do you, shall not make me unthankful for you have done me, in letting me see there is no man as you in the world. I am obliged to you for the diffidence I shall have all the rest of my life hereafter trust no man so far as to be deceived by him.

R.

83.] TUESDAY, JUNE 5, 1711.

— Animus pictura pascit inanem.

VIRG. Æn. l. 464.

with the shadowy picture feeds his mind.

The weather hinders me from taking my walk without doors, I frequently make a little party of two or three select friends, to visit any persons that may be seen under covert. My entertainments of this nature are pictures, that when I have found the weather set in, I have taken a whole day's journey to a gallery that is furnished by the hands of the masters. By this means, when the heavens are dark with clouds, when the earth swims in rain, when nature wears a lowering countenance, I divert myself from these uncomfortable scenes to the visionary worlds of art; where I meet with landscapes, gilded triumphs, beautiful faces, those other objects that fill the mind with pleasure, and disperse that gloominess which is apt to come upon it in those dark disconsolate seasons. Some weeks ago in a course of these diversions I had taken such an entire possession of pictures, that they formed in it a short morning, which I shall communicate to my reader, the first sketch and outlines of a vision, the finished piece.

At that I was admitted into a long, spacious gallery which had one side covered with pieces of famous painters who are now living, and the other with the works of the greatest masters that on the side of the living, I saw several persons drawing, colouring, and designing. On the other side of the dead painters, I could not discover more than one person at work, who was exceedingly slow in his motions, and wonderfully nice in his touches. I resolved to examine the several artists that were before me, and accordingly applied myself to the first of the living. The first I observed at work in the gallery was Vanity, with his hair bound in a riband, and dressed like a gentleman. All the faces he drew were very respectful for their smiles, and a certain smirking air bestowed indifferently on every age and of either sex. The toujours gai appeared in his judges, bishops, and privy counsellors. Indeed, all his men were petits maitres, and all his women coquettes. The drapery of his figures was very well suited to his faces, and was made up of glaring colours that could be mixed together in every part of the dress was in a flutter, and seemed to distinguish itself above the rest.

On the left hand of Vanity stood a laborious workman. I found he was his humble admirer, and I thought him. He was dressed like a German, a very hard name, that sounded something oddity.

The third artist that I saw was dressed like a Venetian, with an excellent hand at chime, and a distorted and grimacing countenance, that affrighted himself with the work of his pencil. In short, his pieces was at best but a poor thing, and I could say nothing more than that they were agreeable to the eye.

The fourth person I saw was unable for his hasty hand, and was unfinished that the beauty of his design (to continue a metaphor) faded sooner than the ink it was drawn. He made his business, that he did not clean his pencils, nor make his work expeditious workman.

Not far from this artist was a different nature, who was a Dutchman, and known by his figures were wonderful in the portraiture of a man's hair in his face; if the figure was a rope among the tackle, it was likewise hung a great number of pieces, that seemed to be a set of dials which were lighted up, and were so inflamed, that they suddenly fell upon themselves, and scarce forbear crying out.

The five foregoing artists were all able on this side the gallery, but on the other side of them, however, I could find no more than one very busy in redrawing, though he produced no more than a pencil aggravated even to overcharged, loaded even to the colour it touched. This was much mischief on the gallery, and turned his eye towards the gallery was Envy.

Having taken a curious view of the gallery, I turned myself to the works of those great masters. Immediately I fancied a multitude of spectators, and they all upon me at once: for I saw men and women, that I saw figures. Raphael's figure in another, Guido Rhe's figure in the wall was peopled with other by Correggio, and so on. In short, there was no dead who had not contented of this side of the gallery, their being to these several figures to be real and another only in the variety of their complexions, and clothes; and of different nations of the same.

Observing an old man I before mentioned, as he was working on this side of the gallery, I went down from one picture to another, and saw all the fine pieces that he had done, but he very attentive to his pencil was so very light, and, after a thousand times any visible effect in his work, employed. However,

BRITISH ESSAYISTS.

without rest or very little disature. He also ades and mel-
every picture
ne fresh from forbear look-
man, and im-
his forehead,

of my dream in my taking a sleep left me.

C.

E 6, 1711.

as Ulysses

6.

ear,

ar?

t wherein the down by way which gave me upon the same hought it very
d in that age,
uary who lent
r of Eucrate,
from an author
he gives both nd, will not be have occasion ps, into which ht.

to retire for an ss and fatigue te, by putting negligently on peared indiffe-
Upon such nontire intimacy
ed to his own
e was a secret which Eucrate
earance in the
-keepers made of the palace.
er of Eucrate,
This entrance unhappy,' and efore him, he erate; for Eu-rit of all men who was always was communirable, Eucrate
ms of distress,
ut courts, who d never obtain es which arise
es that happen
of parents
nds to wives,
ire, the falling
e disasters to n cases of this d enjoyed this out being en-
y whose means
brought about.
came into the apartment of Eucrate, he found him extremely dejected: upon which he asked (with a smile that was natural to him,) 'What, is there any one too miserable to be relieved by Pharamond, that Eucrate is melancholy?' 'I fear there is,' answered the favourite: 'A person without, of a good air, well dressed, and though a man in the strength of his life, seemsto faint under some inconsolable calamity.

All his features seem suffused with agony of mind; but I can observe in him, that it is more inclined to break away in tears than rage. I asked him what he would have. He said he would speak to Pharamond. I desired his business. He could hardly say to me, 'Eucrate, carry me to the king, my story is not to be told twice; I fear I shall not be able to speak it at all.' Pharamond commanded Eucrate to let him enter; he did so, and the gentleman approached the king with an air which spoke him under the greatest concern in what manner to demean himself. The king, who had a quick discerning, relieved him from the oppression he was under;
and with the most beautiful complacency said to him,
'Sir, do not add to that load of sorrow I see in your countenance the awe of my presence. Think you are speaking to your friend. If the circumstances of your distress will admit of it, you shall find me so.' To whom the stranger: 'Oh, excellent Pharamond, name not a friend to the unfortunate Spina-mont.* I had one, but he is dead by my own hand; but, oh Pharamond, though it was by the hand of Spinamont, it was by the guilt of Pharamond. I come not, oh excellent prince, to implore your pardon; I come to relate my sorrow, a sorrow too great for human life to support; from henceforth shall all occurrences appear dreams, or short intervals of amusement from this one affliction, which has seized my very being. Pardon me, oh Pharamond, if my griefs give me leave, that I lay before you the anguish of a wounded mind, that you, good as you are, are guilty of the generous blood spilt this day by this unhappy hand. O that it had perished before that instant!' Here the stranger paused and recollecting his mind, after some little meditation, he went on in a calmer tone and gesture as follows:

"There is an authority due to distress, and as none of human race is above the reach of sorrow, none should be above the hearing the voice of it; I am sure Pharamond is not. Know then, that I have this morning unfortunately killed in a duel, the man whom of all men living I most loved. I command myself too much in your royal presence, to say Pharamond gave me my friend! Pharamond has taken him from me! I will not say, shall the merciful Pharamond destroy his own subjects? Will the father of his country murder his people? But the merciful Pharamond does destroy his subjects, the father of his country does murder his people. For fortune is so much the pursuit of mankind, that all glory and honour is in the power of a prince, because he has the distribution of their fortunes. It is therefore the inadvertency, negligence, or guilt of princes to let any thing grow into custom which is against their laws. A court can make fashions and duty walk together; it can never, without the guilt of a court, happen, that it shall not be unfashionable to do what is unlawful. But, alas! in the dominions of Pharamond, by the force of tyrant custom, which is misnamed a point of honour

* Mr. Thornhill, the gentleman here alluded to under a fictitious or translated name of Spinamont, killed Sir Chas-mondley Deering, of Kent, Bart. in a duel. May 9, 1711.

a duellist kills his friend whom he loves; and the judge condemns the duellist while he approves his behaviour. Shame is the greatest of all evils; what will laws, when death only attends the breach of them, and shame obedience to them? As for me, Pharamond, were it possible to describe the nameless kinds of compunctions and tendernesses I feel, when I reflect upon the little accidents in our former familiarity, my mind swells into sorrow which cannot be resisted enough to be silent in the presence of Pharamond. (With that he fell into a flood of tears, and wept aloud.) Why should not Pharamond hear the anguish he only can relieve others from in time to come? Let him hear from me, what they feel who have given death by the false mercy of his administration, and form to himself the vengeance called for by those who have perished by his negligence."—R.

No. 85.] THURSDAY, JUNE 7, 1711.

Interdum speciosa locis, morataque recte Falsula, nullius Veneris, sine pondere et arte, Valdus oblectat populum, meliusque moratur, Quam versus inopes rerum, nugæque canoræ.
Hos. Ars. Poet. ver. 319.

When the sentiments and manners please,
And all the characters are wrought with ease,
Your tale, though void of beauty, force, and art,
More strongly shall delight, and warm the heart:
Than where a lifeless pomp of verse appears,
And with sonorous trifles charms our ears.—FRANCIS.

It is the custom of the Mahometans, if they see any printed or written paper upon the ground, to take it up and lay it aside carefully, as not knowing but it may contain some piece of their Alcoran. I must confess I have so much of the Mussulman in me, that I cannot forbear looking into every printed paper which comes in my way, under whatsoever despicable circumstances it may appear; for as no mortal author, in the ordinary fate and vicissitude of things, knows to what use his works may some time or other be applied, a man may often meet with very celebrated names in a paper of tobacco. I have lighted my pipe more than once with the writings of a prelate; and know a friend of mine, who, for these several years, has converted the essays of a man of quality into a kind of fringe for his candlesticks. I remember in particular, after having read over a poem of an eminent author on a victory, I met with several fragments of it upon the next rejoicing day, which had been employed in squibs and crackers, and by that means celebrated its subject in a double capacity. I once met with a page of Mr. Baxter under a Christmas-pie. Whether or no the pastry-cook had made use of it through chance or waggery, for the defence of that superstitious rite, I know not; but upon the perusal of it, I conceived so good an idea of the author's piety, that I bought the whole book. I have often profited by these accidental readings, and have sometimes found very curious pieces that are either out of print, or not to be met with in the shops of our London booksellers. For this reason, when my friends take a survey of my library, they are very much surprised to find upon the shelf of folios, two long band-boxes standing upright among my books; till I let them see that they are both of them lined with deep erudition and abstruse literature. I might likewise mention a paper-kite, from which I have received great improvement; and a hat-case which I would not exchange for all the beavers in Great Britain. This is my inquisitive temper, or rather impertinent humour of prying into all sorts of writing, with my natural aversion to loquacity. I am sensible that my employment when I am alone is very idle, for I cannot forgoe the perusal of several printed books. The last occasion gave me an opportunity to think I am that the piece of the ballad of the T. one of the dark has been the part of their

This song is a tribute of the help it is a pretty to reason but because even a despicable because the selected, they a polite reader with compassion. and are such as for which reason in it very move (whoever he be) phrase and position any of it would ridicule. But thoughts, as I other, are natural those who are notwithstanding true and unpretention, speech, with the age, it are set forth in impossible for be affected with the robin-red-namant; and all his simplicity which one of made use of in passage in Homer he was a child covered with on him.

Me Alt
I
I Te Me
Up
I
Ain

I have heard the greatest and was one of poets of his English ballads reading of the den, and know our present age. I might likewise thoughts on the character who are endogenius, can deridicule, and nakedness. A

BRITISH ESSAYISTS.

finding fault,
e productions
but the beau-
how to relish
the beauties
antages of art.

1711.

Met. il. 447.
—ADDISON.

men are in ving been at e that speaks ecian, though
the rules of in books and ne is in some generally dis-
y: and natu-
or fortune of aments of his o any one we liately struck an affable, or rst going into ence or avery towards see heard them
who they are.
t to the coun-
some feature
half an hour
a scoundrel.
s to complain,
a dumb-show.
e a notion of
by his looks,
elf from Cha-
a drawing the y me. When I cannot for-meet with an
the happiness
s. amous saying
his company,
with submis-
by our looks peech is much ance. In this whole face is s of it. The thing else but de visible.
nomy into an men's tempers
es much more igram on this

Je Jussus :
—Epiq. liv. 12.

Je :

Je,
h chest.

er on this sub-
e supposition,
face a remote lion, a hog, or any other creature; he hath the same resemblance in the frame of his mind, and is subject to those passions which are predominant in the creature that appears in his countenance. Accordingly he gives the prints of several faces that are of a different mould, and by a little overcharging the likeness, discovers the figures of these several kinds of brutal faces in human features.* I remember, in the life of the famous Prince of Condé, the writer observes, the face of that prince was like the face of an eagle, and that prince was very well pleased to be told so. In this case therefore we may be sure, that he had in his mind some general implicit notion of this art of physiognomy which I have just now mentioned; and that when his courtiers told him his face was made like an eagle's, he understood them in the same manner as if they had told him, there was something in his looks, which shewed him to be strong, active, piercing, and of a royal descent. Whether or no the different motions of the animal spirits, in different passions, may have any effect on the mould of the face when the lineaments are pliable and tender, or whether the same kind of souls require the same kind of habitations, I shall leave to the consideration of the curious. In the mean time I think nothing can be more glorious than for a man to give the lie to his face, and to be an honest, just, good-natured man, in spite of all those marks and signatures which nature seems to have set upon him for the contrary. This very often happens among those who, instead of being exasperated by their own looks, or envying the looks of others, apply themselves entirely to the cultivating of their minds, and getting those beauties which are more lasting, and more ornamental. I have seen many an amiable piece of deformity; and have observed a certain cheerfulness in as bad a system of feature as ever was clapped together, which hath appeared more lovely than all the blooming charms of an insolent beauty. There is a double praise due to virtue, when it is lodged in a body that seems to have been prepared for the reception of vice; in many such cases the soul and the body do not seem to be fellows.

Socrates was an extraordinary instance of this nature. There chanced to be a great physiognomist in his time at Athens, who had made strange discoveries of men's tempers and inclinations by the outward appearances. Socrates' disciples, that he might put this artist to the trial, carried him to the master, whom he had never seen before, and did not know he was then in company with him. After short examination of his face, the physiognomist pronounced him the most lewd, libidinous, drunkard old fellow that he had ever met with in his whole life. Upon which the disciples all burst out a-laughing, as thinking they had detected the falsehood and vanity of his art. But Socrates told them, that the principles of his art might be very true, notwithstanding his present mistake; for that he himself was naturally inclined to those particular vices which the physiognomist had discovered in his countenance, but that he had conquered the strong dispositions he was born with, by the dictates of philosophy.*

We are indeed told by an ancient author,† that Socrates very much resembled Silenus in his face which we find to have been very rightly observed.

* This doubtless refers to Baptista della Porta's famous book De Humana Physiognomia: which has run through many editions, both in Latin and Italian. He died in 1615.
† Cicero. Tusc. Qu. 5 et De Facto. † Plat. Conviv.

atoes and busts of both, that are still excellent as on several antique seals and precious ich are frequently enough to be met with nets of the curious. But however observ- this nature may sometimes hold, a wise d be particularly cautious how he gives a man's outward appearance. It is an injustice we are guilty of towards one when we are prejudiced by the looks and those whom we do not know. How often reive hatred against a person of worth, or an to be proud or ill-natured by his aspect, think we cannot esteem too much when we nt with his real character? Dr. Moore, irable System of Ethics, reckons this par- lination to take a prejudice against a man ks, among the smaller vices in morality, member, gives it the name of a prosopo-

L.

7.] SATURDAY, JUNE 9, 1711.

Nimium ne crede colori.—VIRG. Ecc. ii. 17.

Is too much to an enchanting face.—DAYDEN.

seen the purpose of several of my specula- ing people to an unconcerned behaviour, ion to their persons, whether beautiful or

As the secrets of the Ugly club were ex- be public, that men might see there were le spirits in the age who are not at all dis- th themselves upon considerations which o choice in; so the discourse concern- ed to lessen the value people put upon from personal advantages and gifts of s to the latter species of mankind—the hether male or female—they are generally ntractable people of all others. You are ely perplexed with the particularities in iour, that to be at ease, one would be apt re were no such creatures. They expect owances, and give so little to others, that ave to deal with them find, in the main, a better person than ordinary, and a beau- i, might be very happily changed for such ature has been less liberal. The hand- is usually so much a gentleman, and the i has something so becoming, that there ring either of them. It has therefore been y choice to mix with cheerful ugly crea- er than gentlemen who are graceful omit or do what they please, or beauties arins enough to do and say what would be in any but themselves.

e and presumption, upon account of our e equally faults; and both arise from the owing, or rather endeavouring to know, and for what we ought to be valued or

But indeed I did not imagine these little ns and coquetries could have the ill con- I find they have by the following letters pondents, where it seems beauty is thrown out, in matters of sale, to those who re- our from the charmers.

SPECTATOR,

June 4.

I have assured you I am in every respect ndomest young girls about town, I need verd, used in the N. T. Rom. ii. 11, and Eph. vi. e said that "God is no respecter of persons." is a prejudice against a person formed from his ke, too hastily.

be particular in nothing which has the misfortune take to proceed from a to me both to speak and be

With this account have the vanity to offer I now do, to the soci- Hecatissa have been a plause. I don't want to defective I am in ever too sensible of my own ticular, and therefore I on to the club.

"You see how honest my imperfections, which from a woman, and what with the favour of your in

"There can be no obj- the matchless Hecatissa, in no danger of giving jealousy; and then a join place at the table is all th

"Your most humble a

"P. S. I have sacrific- the public lottery against last Saturday, about three I began to patch indiffer- face."

"MR. SPECTATOR,

"Upon reading your la- idols, I cannot but comp- in six or seven places of t by persons of that sisterh receive all day long the ad such and such districts. goods are not entered a custom-house, nor law rep by reason of one beauty w chants too long near 'Cha who keeps the students' should be at study. It we see how the idolaters alt- their idols, and what hear who wait for their turn to those little thrones which lovers, call the bars. I pale as ashes, because an tea-dish for his rival, and to serve him, with a 'Si the gentleman the box to it is, that a very hopeful y leads in his pockets below- to drown himself, becaus dish in which she had but would let him use it.

"I am, Sir, a person pa- not give this information o I am a real sufferer by it thing for tea and coffee; I to make his court! and all loud in the commendatio- against every body in the While these young fellow with their hearts, and d manner, we who come to d are utterly poisoned. Th those who are more ename it is very common for such- tution to ogle the idol upon

ers: thus all to a fever or do not look idols or the
from this re-
may not be that from the idols would
and take more

ours,
"T. T."

1711.

Ecl. iii. 16.
a presume?

ay 30, 1711.

adeavours to their observa-

service. You

ny subjects;

ery different

pus of man-

omit circum-

of the world,

the greater.

h I wonder

the general

of Great Bri-

d and seen

last past re-

twenty miles

a numerous

people, and n their serv-

nishment to oreign coun-

serve, that rvants have n England.

d diet, large

is no place

they are so

negligent, or

asters. To the frequent

on the high

indeed which

nd is, that a

the prettiest

n ten miles;

a register of

by the neg-

ould mount a

our observa-

these rogues,

asures to re-

in general

"Yours,

BRITANNICUS.

n of grooms

irous that I

a great deal

now no evil

this of the wholly upon

entionousness

g them, to nothing but what a hundred before me have ascribed it to, the custom of giving board-wages. This one instance of false economy is sufficient to debauch the whole nation of servants, and makes them as it were but for some part of their time in that quality. They are either attending in places where they meet and run into clubs, or else, if they wait at taverns, they eat after their masters, and reserve their wages for other occasions. From hence it arises, that they are but in a lower degree what their masters themselves are; and usually affect an imitation of their manners: and you have in liveries, beaux, fops, and coxcombs, in as high perfection as among people that keep equipages. It is a common humour among the retinue of the people of quality, when they are in their revels—that is, when they are out of their masters' sight—to assume in a humorous way the names and titles of those whose liveries they wear. By which means, characters and distinctions become so familiar to them, that it is to this, among other causes, one may impute a certain insolence among our servants, that they take no notice of any gentleman, though they know him ever so well, except he is an acquaintance of their master.

My obscurity and taciturnity leave me at liberty, without scandal, to dine, if I think fit, at a common ordinary, in the meanest as well as the most sumptuous house of entertainment.—Falling in the other day at a victualling-house near the house of peers, I heard the maid come down and tell the landlady at the bar, that my lord bishop swore he would throw her out at window, if she did not bring up more mild beer, and that my lord duke would have a double mug of purl. My surprise was increased, in hearing loud and rustic voices speak and answer to each other upon the public affairs, by the names of the most illustrious of our nobility; till of a sudden one came running in, and cried the house was rising. Down came all the company together, and away! The alehouse was immediately filled with clamour, and scoring one mug to the marquis of such a place, oil and vinegar to such an earl, three quarts to my new lord for wetting his title, and so forth. It is a thing too notorious to mention the crowds of servants, and their insolence, near the courts of justice, and the stairs towards the supreme assembly, where there is a universal mockery of all order, such riotous clamour and licentious confusion, that one would think the whole nation lived in jest, and that there were no such thing as rule and distinction among us.

The next place of resort, wherein the servile world are let loose, is at the entrance of Hyde-park, while the gentry are at the ring. Hither people bring their lackeys out of state, and here it is that all they say at their tables, and act in their houses, is communicated to the whole town. There are men of wit in all conditions of life; and mixing with these people at their diversions, I have heard coquettes and prudes as well rallied, and insolence and pride exposed (allowing for their want of education) with as much humour and good sense, as in the politest companies. It is a general observation, that all dependants run in some measure into the manners and behaviour of those whom they serve. You shall frequently meet with lovers and men of intrigue among the lackeys as well as at White's or in the side-boxes. I remember some years ago an instance of this kind. A footman to a captain of the guards used frequently, when his master was out of the way, to carry on amours and make assignments in his master's clothes. The fellow had a erson, and there are very many women o farther than the outside of a gentle-s which, he was almost as learned a olonel* himself: I say, thus qualified, old scrawl billets-doux so well, and furrsation on the common topics, that he call it, a great deal of business on his happened one day that, coming down a s, in his master's fine guard-coat, with ed woman masked, he met the colonel with other company; but with ready as-quitted his lady, came up to him, and I know you have too much respect for came me in this honourable habit. But re is a lady in the case, and on that score I put off your anger till I have told you time." After a little pause the colonel his countenance, and with an air of fahispered his man apart, "Sirrah, bring with you to ask pardon for you!" then ok to it, Will, I'll never forgive you else." went back to his mistress, and telling loud voice and an oath, that was the ellow in the world, conveyed her to a ach.

many irregularities committed by servants is above-mentioned, as well as in theatres, masters are generally the occasions, are not to need being resumed on another
R.

[J] TUESDAY, JUNE 12, 1711.

*tite hinc, juvenesque senesque, no certum, miserisque viatica canis.
I. Idem cras fiet. Quid? quasi magnum, n donas? sed cum lux altera venit, sternum consumpsimus: ecce aliud cras uones, et semper paulum erit ultra.
as prope te, quamvis temone sub uno, esse frustra sectabere canthum.—PERR. Sat. v. 64.*

om thee both old and young with profit learn of good and evil to discern.

shabby he, who does this work adjourn, morrow would the search delay:
orrow will be like to-day.

t is one day of ease too much to borrow?
is, sure? for yesterday was once to-morrow day is gone, and nothing gain'd; fruitless days will thus be drain'd at more to-morrows yet to ask, ever to begin thy task;

the hindmost chariot-wheels, are curst, near, but ne'er to reach the first.—DRYDEN.

correspondents upon the subject of love amorous, it is my design, if possible, to under several heads, and address myself different times. The first branch of them, rvice I shall dedicate this paper, are those o do with women of dilatory tempers, who ning out the time of courtship to an im-ngth, without being able either to close overs or to dismiss them. I have many se filled with complaints against this sort

In one of them no less a man than a the coiff tells me, that he began his suit so: Caroli secundi, before he had been a h at the Temple; that he prosecuted it sars after he was called to the bar; that he is a serjeant at law; and notwithhoped that matters would have been long ht to an issue, the fair one still demurs.
ell pleased with this gentleman's phrase, sect. in folio, and in the edit. of 1712, in 8vo, ryed both captain and colonel gent at law.

that I shall distinguish title of Demurrers. I f one who calls himself Th been demurring above the all my plaintiffs of this n fortunate Philander, a n and plentiful fortune, wh rous and irresolute Sylv past child-bearing. Stre to be a very choleric lover with one that demurs out me with great passion the of his youth; that she dr and that he verily believe old age, if she can find shall conclude this narrati Sam Hopewell, a very ple has at last married a De mise, that Sam, who is a nion, has been the diver account of his passion, a thousand six hundred and

"DEAR SIR,

"You know very well tha, and what a dance s me out at the age of tw with me above thirty ye she is grown as gray as a become the master of h present. She is however i old woman. We often lan sooner, but she has nobo self. You know very w think of me whilst she h have put the date of my p (ino primo) instead of pos expect you should send m or, if you please, an epitha

"Mrs. Martha's a

In order to banish an does not only produce a g persons, but has also a public, I shall endeavour rage, from two or three rel recommend to the thought

First of all, I would hav the shortness of their time for a coquette to play all woman drops into her gray berating. Were the age was before the flood, a la century to a scruple, an demurring. Had she nin might hold out to the con she thought fit to be pre she ought to play her part siders that she is sudden make room for others.

In the second place, I w ers to consider that as the of beauty is much shorter, in a few years, and loses t so soon, that we have sc might embellish this subje and several other ingenio possibly reserve for anothe

There is a third conse
wise recommend to a demu danger of her falling in lov score, if she cannot satisf

BRITISH ESSAYISTS.

atter spring,
old woman,
animal. I
sider what a ances to get
l resolution,

by any thing
ral modesty
rom the first and graceful.
en they are demur only ires. A vir-
of marriage, but I would persist in re-ould in this e to all her r in the foltranscribing es are to my

his hands :

rem'd now
in'd, nuf'd

vak'd

t,

low

en,

eye,

haust fulfill'd
n !

elf."
y brought,

orth.
e won,

ight,
in'd.
ew,

er

il. 469—511.

13, 1711.

il. 99.

as fire.

eration more es in the soul
his followers
every passion
al during her er in a sepa-
dy, or out of an does from
in open air.
in particular

have once taken root, and spread themselves in the soul, they cleave to her inseparably, and remain in her for ever, after the body is cast off and thrown aside. As an argument to confirm this their doctrine, they observe, that a lewd youth who goes on in a continued course of voluptuousness, advances by degrees into a libidinous old man; and that the passion survives in the mind when it is altogether dead in the body; nay, that the desire grows more violent, and (like all other habits) gathers strength by age, at the same time that it has no power of executing its own purposes. If, say they, the soul is the most subject to these passions at a time when it has the least instigations from the body, we may well suppose she will still retain them when she is entirely divested of it. The very substance of the soul is festered with them, the gangrene is gone too far to be ever cured; the inflammation will rage to all eternity.

In this therefore (say the Platonists) consists the punishment of a voluptuous man after death. He is tormented with desires which it is impossible for him to gratify; solicited by a passion that has neither objects nor organs adapted to it. He lives in a state of invincible desire and impotence, and always burns in the pursuit of what he always despairs to possess. It is for this reason (says Plato) that the souls of the dead appear frequently in cemeteries, and hover about the places where their bodies are buried, still hankering after their old brutal pleasures, and desiring again to enter the body that gave them an opportunity of fulfilling them.

Some of our most eminent divines have made use of this Platonic notion, so far as it regards the subsistence of our passions after death, with great beauty and strength of reason. Plato indeed carries the thought very far when he grafts upon it his opinion of ghosts appearing in places of burial. Though, I must confess, if one did believe that the departed souls of men and women wandered up and down these lower regions, and entertained themselves with the sight of their species, one could not devise a more proper hell for an impure spirit than that which Plato has touched upon.

The ancients seem to have drawn such a state of torments in the description of Tantalus, who was punished with the rage of an eternal thirst, and set up to the chin in water that fled from his lips whenever he attempted to drink it.

Virgil, who has cast the whole system of Platonic philosophy, so far as it relates to the soul of man, into beautiful allegories, in the sixth book of his Æneid gives us the punishment of a voluptuary after death, not unlike that which we are here speaking of :

—Lucent genitalibus altis Aurea fulcra toris, epulaeque ante ora parata; Regifico luxu : furiarum maxima iuxta Accubat, et manibus prohibet contingere mensas; Exurgitque facem attollens, atque intonat ore.

They lie below on golden beds display'd,
And genial feasts with regal pomp are made;
The queen of furies by their side is set,
And snatches from their mouths the unlasted meat;
Which, if they touch, her hissing snakes she rears.
Tossing her torch, and thundering in their ears.—Davies.

That I may a little alleviate the severity of this my speculation (which otherwise may lose me several of my polite readers,) I shall translate a story that has been quoted upon another occasion by one of the most learned men of the present age, as I find it in the original. The reader will see it is too foreign to my present subject, and I dare say will a lively representation of a person lying in the torments of such a kind of tantalism, or hell, as that which we have now under consideration. Monsieur Pontignan, speaking of a sentence that happened to him in the country, the following account of it.*

When I was in the country last summer, I was in company with a couple of charming women, all the wit and beauty one could desire in companions, with a dash of coquetry, that no time gave me a great many agreeable moments. I was, after my way, in love with both, and had such frequent opportunities of pleading passion to them when they were asunder, and reason to hope for particular favours from both. As I was walking one evening in company with nothing about me but my night-gown, they both came into my room, and told me a very pleasant trick to put upon a gentleman that was in the same house, provided I would start in it. Upon this they told me such a story, that I laughed at their contrivance, and said to do whatever they should require of me, immediately began to swaddle me up in my night-gown, with long pieces of linen, which they did about me till they had wrapped me in a hundred yards of swath. My arms were tied to my sides, and my legs closed together by my wrappers one over another, that I looked like an Egyptian mummy. As I stood bolt-upright, they ended in this antique figure, one of the most burst out a-laughing. "And now, Pontignan," says she, "we intend to perform the promise we find you have extorted from each of us. We have often asked the favour of us, and I dare say we are a better-bred cavalier than to refuse to oblige two ladies that desire it of you." After this stood a fit of laughter, I begged them to undo me, and do with me what they pleased. "No," said they, "we like you very well as you are;" and then they ordered me to be carried to one of the rooms, and put to bed in all my swaddles. When I was lighted up on all sides: and I was very decently between a pair of sheets, with my only limb that was indeed the only part I could move) I lay on a very high pillow: this was no sooner done, than two female friends came into bed to me in their night-clothes. You may easily guess at the addition of a man that saw a couple of the most beautiful women in the world undressed and a-bed in, without being able to stir hand or foot, and ed them to release me, and struggled all I could to get loose, which I did with so much violence that about midnight they both leaped out of bed, crying out they were undone. But seeing that they took their posts again, and renewed theirillery. Finding all my prayers and endeavours lost, I composed myself as well as I could, and told them that if they would not unbind me, I would fall asleep between them, and by that disgrace them for ever. But, alas! this was vain; could I have been disposed to it, they have prevented me by several little ill-natured jests and endearments which they bestowed upon me as much devoted as I am to womankind, I could not pass such another night to be master of my own sex. My reader will doubtless be curious to know what became of me the next morning. Why truly my bed-fellows the next day, and told me, if they would send some one to me, it was time for me to be up. At six o'clock in the morning they swathe me. I bore all this, and solved to take my revenge, and keep no measures with them; but upon asking them to become of the two ladies, they were by that time gone, and that they went away at six o'clock in the morning.

No. 91.] THURSDAY

In furias ignemque ruas

— They rush in
For love is lord of all,

THOUGH the subject of this story be much more properly the story of a woman, I cannot forbear inserting it, as it pleased me in the account of the loves of a family; and less; or rather, for the sake of the history, instead of making them call them by feigned names, you are to know that Westminster lives the daughter of a man the age of forty, of a handsome and elegant person. She is like a girl, affects a child's voice, sometimes covering the top of her head, and looking down her eyes on her fan. Her health would ever have turned of twenty; but she has a tall daughter, who impertinently comes so much towards women, checked by her presence, as Flavia droops at the entrance. Flavia would be what her mother Honoria; but she is partial to an affectionate daughter up to, than of what she is gone for ever. It is to look forward, but not Flavia is no way dependent on her fortune, almost upon an equal. Honoria has given her daughter a little ill-bred to be always displeased never to be so, this means, that these all places where they are, and daughter never in spite. Flavia one night drew the eyes of several who sat by her, and by her her snuff-box for when a lover of Honoriaing the favour to kiss the room, kneeled down. Several of the have raised between the generally converse with company, by way of talking one another. Honoriatain sufficiency in the

*The substance of the story here paraphrased is taken from the book entitled Académie Galante, printed at Paris in 1682, and afterward at Amst. in 1708. See p. 125; and first Dutch edit. p. 160.

BRITISH ESSAYISTS.

carrying all
cessors of the ut a year be-or deceased.
e to observe,
nothing, and ow they can-will not allow e themselves
continue in on all occa-
same lovers,
the other the Tom Tulip,
pretenders in Flavia. Dick-ge, and Tom order of men

stances of a
the spirit in unt from re-
honour to be e admirer of er to Flavia,
e ladies, that ver had the
that sort of n call a fine
e gross taste
se, than the
of it in their lip is ever
person, the professes a
ress's mind.
ss ravisher,
Poetry is n love; and cations, the
ers. These e their man-
ne another,
at they said
zed his mis-
Art of Love,

ght,
n air of de-
repeated,

way
day.*
rses with a
and respect, Flavia, as urtship, and of Tulip's.
turn began
gentlemen,
on as far as
lves forgot,
endation of
me time he thin legs,

from Lord

meagre looks, and spare body. The old gentleman immediately left the room with some disorder, and the conversation fell upon untimely passion, after-love, and unseasonable youth. Tulip sang, danced, moved before the glass, led his mistress half a minuet, hummed

Celia the fair, in the bloom of fifteen!
when there came a servant with a letter to him, which was as follows:—

"SIR,
"I understand very well what you meant by your mention of Platonic love. I shall be glad to meet you immediately in Hyde-park, or behind Montague-house, or attend you to Barn-elms, or any other fashionable place that's fit for a gentleman to die in, that you shall appoint for, "SIR,

"Your most humble servant,
"RICHARD CRASTIN."

Tulip's colour changed at the reading of this epistle; for which reason his mistress snatched it to read the contents. While she was doing so, Tulip went away; and the ladies now agreeing in a common calamity, bewailed together the danger of their lovers. They immediately undressed to go out, and took hackneys to prevent mischief; but after alarming all parts of the town, Crastin was found by his widow in his pumps at Hyde-park, which appointment Tulip never kept, but made his escape into the country. Flavia tears her hair for his inglorious safety, curses and despises her charmer, and is fallen in love with Crastin; which is the first part of the history of the rival mother. R.

No. 92.] FRIDAY, JUNE 15, 1711.

—Convivæ prope dissentire videntur.
Poscentes vario multum diversa palato; Quid dem? Quid non dem?—HOK. 2 Ep. li. 61.

IMITATED.

—What would you have me do, When out of twenty I can please not two?
One likes the pheasant's wing, and one the leg;
The vulgar boil, the learned roast an egg; Hard task, to hit the palate of such guests.—POPE

LOOKING over the late packets of letters which have been sent to me, I found the following one:

"MR. SPECTATOR,
"Your paper is a part of my tea equipage; and my servant knows my humour so well, that calling for my breakfast this morning (it being my usual hour), she answered, the Spectator was not yet come in; but that the tea-kettle boiled, and she expected it every moment. Having thus in part signified to you the esteem and veneration which I have for you, I must put you in mind of the catalogue of books which you have promised to recommend to our sex; for I have deferred furnishing my closet with authors, till I receive your advice in this particular, being your daily disciple and humble servant,
"LEONORA."

In answer to my fair disciple, whom I am very proud of, I must acquaint her and the rest of my readers, that since I have called out for help in my catalogue of a lady's library, I have received many letters upon that head, some of which I shall give an account of.

In the first class I shall take notice of those which come to me from eminent booksellers; who every one of them mention with respect the authors they have printed, and consequently have an eye to their own advantage more than to that of the ladies. One tells me, that he thinks it absolutely necessary for

o have true notions of right and equity, therefore they cannot peruse a better book than Country Justice. Another thinks not be without The Complete Jockey. A serving the curiosity and desire of prying into, which he tells me is natural to the fair, of opinion this female inclination, if well might turn very much to their advantage, therefore recommends to me Mr. Mede upon actions. A fourth lays it down as an undoubted truth, that a lady cannot be thoroughly educated who has not read The Secret Treatises of Marshal d'Estrades. Mr. Jacob junior, is of opinion, that Bayle's Dictionnaire be of very great use to the ladies, in make them general scholars. Another, me I have forgotten, thinks it highly proper every woman with child should read Mr. History of Infant Baptism; as another is fortunate with me to recommend to all my readers The Finishing Stroke; being a Vindication of the Patriarchal Scheme, &c.

A second class I shall mention books which amended by husbands, if I may believe the of them. Whether or no they are real husband personated ones, I cannot tell; but the I recommend are as follow:—A Paraphrase History of Susannah. Rules to keep Lent. Christian's Overthrow prevented. A Dissuade to the Playhouse. The Virtues of Camphire, recensions to make Camphire Tea. The Plea of a Country Life. The Government of the

A letter dated Cheapside, desires me that advise all young wives to make themselves of Wingate's Arithmetic, and concludes with script, that he hopes I will not forget The of Kent's Receipts.

I reckon the ladies themselves as a third class these my correspondents and privy-council. In a letter from one of them, I am advised Pharamond* at the head of my catalogue, think proper, to give the second place to rat. Coquetilla begs me not to think of women upon their knees with manuals of denunciation of scorching their faces with books of tery. Florella desires to know if there are books written against prudes, and entreats me, are, to give them a place in my library. All sorts have their several advocates: All is mentioned in above fifteen letters; Socrates, or Hannibal's Overthrow, in a dozen; Innocent Adultery is likewise highly approved; Ates, King of Pontus, has many friends; Her the Great and Aurengzebe have the same of voices; but Theodosius, or the Force of carries it from all the rest.

I, in the last place, mention such books as are proposed by men of learning, and those near competent judges of this matter, and I take occasion to thank A.B., whoever it conceals himself under these two letters, for ce upon this subject. But as I find the have undertaken to be very difficult, I shall be executing of it till I am farther acquainted with thoughts of my judicious contemporaries, to time to examine the several books they me: being resolved, in an affair of this moment, proceed with the greatest caution. Meanwhile, as I have taken the ladies under particular care, I shall make it my business to find out in the best and such passages as may be your to accommodate the taste; not questioning sex will easily pardon laugh at those little vanities in the behaviour of some more proper for ridicule. Most books being calculated generally written with makes a work of this besides, I am the more myself that I see the same my speculations. My father scholars than the best of them who talk much better that make a figure at receive letters from the I cannot but observe that the other, not only in the This cannot but have a world, and keep them from empty coxcombs that among the women, though

* celebrated French romances, written by M. La

I am credibly informed an impertinent fellow, be smoked, and that within a month of a continue this paper. Finess in some measure stray weak minds by and judgment, humour fail to lend the best light for the continuation of

No. 93.] SATURDAY.

Spem longam resecas:
Ætas: carpe diem, quæ

Thy lengthen'd hopes Proportion'd to the fly While thus we talk in c The envious moments Instant the fleeting plea Nor trust to-morrow's

We all of us complain saith Seneca, and yet have what to do with. Our life in doing nothing at all purpose, or in doing. We are always complaining as though the That noble philosopher's tendency with ourselves in various turns of expression peculiar to his writings.

I often consider man with itself in a point of former. Though we of life in general, we at an end. The minor be a man of business, then to arrive at home although the whole life be short, the several tedious. We are long but would fain contract posed. The usurer who have all the time and present moment and man would be content

BRITISH ESSAYISTS.

are which he revolution of
ke out of his pass away be-as our time
parts of our es. Several nay we wish ugh time as d and empty
that we may or imaginary
nd down in it.
twenty parts,
them are mere ed with plea-
include in who are in a only who are
; and I hope
of service to tain methods of life. The follow.
the most ge-
nical scheme
may give emer, and find a active station
ve the needy,
ll in our way
has frequent
ss of a party;
serving man;
e angry, and
l of them em-re, and bring busy himself

may find em-
which we are e of company
urse and comreature ought is being. The of the divine
ess of temper,
on of thinkest and best of upon him: it s thoughts and
h hours when tive. He no s heart burns
rumps in the n every where pours out its
to the great

necessity of a ve something
at the exercise or the time it
to those parts
he grave, and ts colour from n virtue or in
for putting in our time.
k to improve,
all to good ace suffers nineteen parts of it to lie dead, and perhaps employ even the twentieth to his ruin or disadvantage) But because the mind cannot be always in its fervours, nor strained up to a pitch of virtue, it is necessary to find out proper employments for it in its relaxations.

The next method therefore that I would propose to fill up our time, should be useful and innocent diversions. I must confess I think it is below reasonable creatures to be altogether conversant in such diversions as are merely innocent, and have nothing else to recommend them but that there is no hurt in them. Whether any kind of gaming has even this much to say for itself I shall not determine; but I think it is very wonderful to see persons of the best sense passing away a dozen hours together in shuf-fling and dividing a pack of cards, with no other conversation but what is made up of a few game phrases, and no other ideas but those of black or red spots ranged together in different figures. Would not a man laugh to hear any one of this species complaining that life is short?

The stage might be made a perpetual source of the most noble and useful entertainments, were it under proper regulations.

But the mind never unbends itself so agreeably as in the conversation of a well-chosen friend. There is indeed no blessing of life that is any way comparable to the enjoyment of a discreet and virtuous friend. It eases and unloads the mind, clears and improves the understanding, engenders thoughts and knowledge, animates virtue and good resolution, soothes and allays the passions, and finds employments for most of the vacant hours of life.

Next to such an intimacy with a particular pe-son, one would endeavour after a more general conversation with such as are able to entertain and improve those with whom they converse, which a qualifications that seldom go asunder.

There are many other useful employments of life which one would endeavour to multiply, that one might on all occasions have recourse to something rather than suffer the mind to lie idle, or run adrift with any passion that chances to rise in it.

A man that has a taste of music, painting, architecture, is like one that has another sense when compared with such as have no relish of the arts. The florist, the planter, the gardener, the husbandman, when they are only as accomplishments to the man of fortune, are great reliefs to country life, and many ways useful to those who are possessed of them.

But of all the diversions of life, there is none proper to fill up its empty spaces as the reading of useful and entertaining authors. But this I shall only touch upon, because it in some measure interferes with the third method, which I shall propose in another paper, for the employment of our deunactive hours, and which I shall only mention general to be the pursuit of knowledge.—L.

No. 94.] MONDAY, JUNE 18, 1711.

Hoc est

Vivere bis, vita posse priore frui.—MART. Epig. xxiii. 10.
The present joys of life we doubly taste,
By looking back with pleasure to the past.

THE last method which I proposed in my Sat-day's paper, for filling up those empty spaces of which are so tedious and burdensome to idle people, is the employing ourselves in the pursuit of knowledge. I remember Mr. Boyle, speaking of a c tain mineral, tells us, that a man may consume his whole life in the study of it, without arriving at the knowledge of all its qualities. The truth of it is, there is not a single science, or any branch of it, that might not furnish a man with business for life, though it were much longer than it is.

I shall not here engage on those beaten subjects of the usefulness of knowledge; nor of the pleasure and perfection it gives the mind; nor on the methods of attaining it; nor recommend any particular branch of it; all which have been the topics of many other writers; but shall indulge myself in a speculation that is more uncommon, and may therefore perhaps be more entertaining.

I have before shewn how the unemployed parts of life appear long and tedious, and shall here endeavour to shew how those parts of life which are exercised in study, reading, and the pursuits of knowledge, are long, but not tedious, and by that means discover a method of lengthening our lives, and at the same time of turning all the parts of them to our advantage.

Mr. Locke observes, "That we get the idea of time or duration, by reflecting on that train of ideas which succeed one another in our minds: that for this reason, when we sleep soundly without dreaming, we have no perception of time, or the length of it whilst we sleep; and that the moment wherein we leave off to think, till the moment we begin to think again, seems to have no distance." To which the author adds, "and so I doubt not but it would be to a waking man if it were possible for him to keep only one idea in his mind, without variation, and the succession of others: and we see, that one who fixes his thoughts very intently on one thing, so as to take but little notice of the succession of ideas that pass in his mind whilst he is taken up with that earnest contemplation, lets slip out of his account a good part of that duration, and thinks that time shorter than it is."

We might carry this thought farther; and consider a man as, on one side, shortening his time by thinking on nothing, or but a few things; so on the other, as lengthening it, by employing his thoughts on many subjects, or by entertaining a quick and constant succession of ideas. Accordingly, Monsieur Mallebranche, in his Inquiry after Truth (which was published several years before Mr. Locke's Essay on Human Understanding), tells us, "that it is possible some creatures may think half an hour as long as we do a thousand years; or look upon that space of duration which we call a minute, as an hour, a week, a month, or a whole age."

This notion of Monsieur Mallebranche is capable of some little explanation from what I have quoted out of Mr. Locke; for if our notion of time is produced by our reflecting on the succession of ideas in our mind, and this succession may be infinitely accelerated or retarded, it will follow, that different beings may have different notions of the same parts of duration, according as their ideas, which we suppose are equally distinct in each of them, follow one another in a greater or less degree of rapidity.

There is a famous passage in the Alcoran, which looks as if Mahomet had been possessed of the notion we are now speaking of. It is there said, that the Angel Gabriel took Mahomet out of his bed one morning to give him a sight of all things in the seven heavens, in paradise, and in hell, which the prophet took a distinct view of: and after having held ninety thousand conferences with God, was brought back again to his bed. All this, says the

Alcoran, was that Mahomet and took up down at the vied him away

There is a which relates tor, and bea now upon.

used to laugh life, as what but conversin law, who had told him he v of this passa would consen Upon this th by a huge tul and as he s great men, t into the wate cordingly thr same time fo on the sea-sh rage against and witchera vain to be at methods for country. A people whom wood: these stood at a lit some advent beauty and f long, that b daughters. H and forced t porter for his alone by the lancholy refle state of life, him, he thre himself, acco before he said

After his t raised his he standing by of his court side. He in having sent betrayed him itude; but v that the state lusion; that he then stood into the wate

The Maho structing the with God; a years are bu a single day, of his creatu

I shall lea fables with phers whom only, by way how we may sions, by ap suits of knov

* The Spect passage is to b in some of the ned by his sions. The es not know er, because ch useful or because the ther always in the man sdom, from orance and of a barren ect of naked

either pro-
a beautiful
ghtful gar-
can scarce essions, that flower.—L.

1711.

SCA TRAG.
ain.—P a with much se of them hing I could er any other;

e, and I do n mourning,
who is well e of distress
he relief of at subject I

ind as great a something
modesty to
for this cor-
of what she the price of course upon

d to you if deeply, and n sense the
ons of grief,
most solemn elations and a sick friend, observes the y were prog-
happens to surrounded expect a me-etrical shake
tion of your e for the de-
occasions, weeping. As imagine the
ed visibly in indness you
ars you pour wants that with, he is in sible or illfiship whose o wet such a ce has told us, nothing is so fallacious as this outward sign of sorrow; and the natural history of our bodies will teach us that this flux of the eyes, this faculty of weeping, is peculiar only to some constitutions. We observe in the tender bodies of children, when crossed in their little wills and expectations, how dissolvable they are into tears. If this were what grief is in men, nature would not be able to support them in the excess of it for one moment. Add to this observation, how quick is their transition from this passion to that of their joy! I will not say we see often, in the next tender things to children, tears shed without much grieving. Thus it is common to shed tears without much sorrow, and as common to suffer much sorrow without shedding tears. Grief and weeping are indeed frequent companions; but, I believe, never in their highest excesses. As laughter does not proceed from profound joy, so neither does weeping from profound sorrow. The sorrow which appears so easily at the eyes, cannot have pierced deeply into the heart. The heart distended with grief, stops all the passages for tears or lamentations.

"Now, Sir, what I would incline you to in all this is, that you would inform the shallow critics and observers upon sorrow, that true affliction labours to be invisible, that it is a stranger to ceremony, and that it bears in its own nature a dignity much above the little circumstances which are affected under the notion of decency. You must know, Sir, I have lately lost a dear friend, for whom I have not yet shed a tear, and for that reason your animadversions on that subject would be the more acceptable to,

"Sir, your most humble servant,

"B. D."

"MR. SPECTATOR,

June the 15th.

"As I hope there are but few who have so little gratitude as not to acknowledge the usefulness of your pen, and to esteem it a public benefit; so I am sensible, be that as it will, you must nevertheless find the secret and incomparable pleasure of doing good, and be a great sharer in the entertainment you give. I acknowledge our sex to be much obliged, and I hope improved, by your labours, and even your intentions more particularly for our service. If it be true, as it is sometimes said, that our sex have an influence on the other, your paper may be a yet more general good. Your directing us to reading is certainly the best means to our instruction; but I think with you, caution in that particular very useful, since the improvement of our understandings may or may not be of service to us, according as it is managed. It has been thought we are not generally so ignorant as ill-taught; or that our sex does not so often want wit, judgment, or knowledge, as the right application of them. You are so well-bred, as to say your fair readers are already deeper scholars than the beaux, and that you could name some of them that talk much better than several gentlemen that make a figure at Will's. This may possibly be, and no great compliment, in my opinion, even supposing your comparison to reach Tom's and the Grecian. Surely you are too wise to think that the real commendation of a woman. Were it not rather to be wished we improved in our own sphere, and approved ourselves better daughters, better wives, mothers, and friends?

"I cannot but agree with the judicious trader in Cheapside (though I am not at all prejudiced in his favour) in recommending the study of arithmetic; and must dissent even from the authority which you mention, when it advises the making our sex scholars.

Indeed a little more philosophy, in order to the subduing our passions to our reason might be sometimes serviceable, and a treatise of that nature I should approve of, even in exchange for Theodosius, or the Force of Love; but as I well know you want not hints, I will proceed no farther than to recommend the Bishop of Cambray's Education of a Daughter, as it is translated into the only language I have any knowledge of, though perhaps very much to its disadvantage. I have heard it objected against that piece, that its instructions are not of general use, but only fitted for a great lady: but I confess I am not of that opinion; for I do not remember that there are any rules laid down for the expenses of a woman—in which particular only I think a gentleman ought to differ from a lady of the best fortune, or highest quality, and not in their principles of justice, gratitude, prudence, or modesty. I ought perhaps to make an apology for this long epistle; but as I rather believe you a friend to sincerity than ceremony, shall only assure you I am,

"Sir, your most humble servant,

T. "ANNABELLA."

No. 96.] WEDNESDAY, JUNE 20, 1711.

Amicum

Mancipium domino, et frugi—HOR. 2 Sat. vii. 2.

The faithful servant, and the true.—CREECH.

"MR. SPECTATOR,

"I HAVE frequently read your discourse upon servants, and as I am one myself, have been much offended that in that variety of forms wherein you considered the bad, you found no place to mention the good. There is, however, one observation of yours I approve, which is, 'That there are men of wit and good sense among all orders of men, and that servants report most of the good or ill which is spoken of their masters.' That there are men of sense who live in servitude, I have the vanity to say I have felt to my woeful experience. You attribute very justly the source of our general iniquity to board-wages, and the manner of living out of a domestic way; but I cannot give you my thoughts on this subject any way so well as by a short account of my own life, to this the forty-fifth year of my age—that is to say, from my first being a foot-boy at fourteen, to my present station of a nobleman's porter in the year of my age abovementioned.

"Know then, that my father was a poor tenant to the family of Sir Stephen Rackrent. Sir Stephen put me to school, or rather made me follow his son Harry to school, from my ninth year; and there, though Sir Stephen paid something for my learning, I was used like a servant, and was forced to get what scraps of learning I could by my own industry, for the schoolmaster took very little notice of me. My young master was a lad of very sprightly parts; and my being constantly about him, and loving him, was no small advantage to me. My master loved me extremely, and has often been whipped for not keeping me at a distance. He used always to say, that when he came to his estate I should have a lease of my father's tenement for nothing. I came up to town with him to Westminster-school; at which time he taught me at night all he learnt, and put me to find out words in the dictionary when he was about his exercise. It was the will of Providence that master Harry was taken very ill of a fever, of which he died within ten days after his first falling sick. Here was the first sorrow I ever knew;

SPECTATOR—Nos. 15 & 16,

and I assure you, a beautiful action, as fresh as if it were a new thing, it must be any thing fall, would cry, 'I am some more joyful than you are.' He would cry when he saw I was in danger, and could not have a good heart.' In the mouth, he fell down, and I hear him quickly turned, and beat my head with his hand, for grief I was in. I thought it would be days my old lady would be in the world, though I put her in a proposed putting in an excellent manner, throw away his sense enough to see her discarded, had loved so much, ramble wherever

"The third I was strolling in the Temple. A young man (as I heard he was) starved and was ready to his hands. Did I want a horse, so, and in a very pious creature, in carrying letters to ladies of my master from tavern to berry-garden, my master engaged which and drove had money. the pleasure of a night, playing like idleness. was generally pieces of poets, life held till the prudence secret of his in

"I was uttered when at last one of his misadventures happening at, clothed me for a sharp fellow. times I was to pitched upon. turn, I was to. She would of change;† and she would set humble servant came immediately home; then s

* The mulberry ment near Buckle what like the mo

† The New Ed and York-build of millinery ware dwelling-houses

No. 97.] THURSDAY, JUNE, 21, 1711.

Projicere animas.—VIRG. ÆN. VI. 436.

They prodigally threw their lives away.

Among the loose papers which I have frequently spoken of heretofore, I find a conversation between Pharamond and Eucrate upon the subject of duels, and the copy of an edict issued in consequence of that discourse.

Eucrate argued, that nothing but the most severe and vindictive punishment, such as placing the bodies of the offenders in chains, and putting them to death by the most exquisite torments, would be sufficient to extirpate a crime which had so long prevailed, and was so firmly fixed in the opinion of the world as great and laudable. The king answered, "that indeed instances of ignominy were necessary in the cure of this evil; but, considering that it prevailed only among such as had a nicety in their sense of honour, and that it often happened that a duel was fought to save appearances to the world, when both parties were in their hearts in amity and reconciliation to each other, it was evident that turning the mode another way would effectually put a stop to what had been only as a mode; that to such persons poverty and shame were torments sufficient; that he would not go farther in punishing in others, crimes which he was satisfied he himself was most guilty of, in that he might have prevented them by speaking his displeasure sooner." Besides which the king said, "he was in general averse to tortures, which was putting human nature itself, rather than the criminal, to disgrace; and that he would be sure not to use this means where the crime was but an ill effect arising from a laudable cause, the fear of shame." The king, at the same time, spoke with much grace upon the subject of mercy; and repented of many acts of that kind which had a magnificent aspect in the doing, but dreadful consequences in the example. "Mercy to particulars," he observed, "was cruelty in the general. That though a prince could not revive a dead man by taking the life of him who killed him, neither could he make reparation to the next that should die by the evil example; or answer to himself for the partiality in not pardoning the next as well as the former offender.—As for me," says Pharamond, "I have conquered France, and yet have given laws to my people. The laws are my methods of life; they are not a diminution but a direction to my power. I am still absolute to distinguish the innocent and the virtuous, to give honours to the brave and generous; I am absolute in my good will; none can oppose my bounty, or prescribe rules for my favour. While I can, as I please, reward the good, I am under no pain that I cannot pardon the wicked; for which reason," continued Pharamond, "I will effectually put a stop to this evil, by exposing no more the tenderness of my nature to the importunity of having the same respect to those who are miserable by their fault, and those who are so by their misfortune. Flatterers (concluded the king, smiling) repeat to us princes, that we are heaven's viceregents; let us be so, and let the only thing out of our power be to do ill."

Soon after the evening wherein Pharamond and Eucrate had this conversation, the following edict was published against duels.

PHARAMOND'S EDICT AGAINST DUELS.

"Pharamond, King of the Gauls, to all his loving subjects sendeth greeting:

"Whereas it has come to our royal notice and signs to me ad—it was xt turning,

in his way
ices of this ters; some at such a ing the ter-
—others exts was such was willing he knew he rd, my half ne outwrite le; and as enough in reatest morprised with

married to might pos-
; therefore

marriage, I people, for ose families
ur servants, ide upon a fortably for my master,
et with the well to think retended to that my faith a bounty

single man, half. Most for when I
ore than he a good hu-
ever had, by

s of my life;
her places I angest fellow
ld had such e unluckiest forth. All you that we us too gene-
we are, ac-
ors. In the one sin but n my gown
all day long,
ors, and my
I am to let et abroad, a ps time with the gallery
so properly
are staring
nt incidents.
right place,
speech, or a
the people:
by, Sir,
vant,
TRUSTY."

tion, that, in contempt of all laws divine and it is of late become a custom among the and gentry of this our kingdom, upon slight as well as great and urgent provocations, teach other into the field—there, by their nds, and of their own authority, to decide atrocities by combat; we have thought fit the said custom into our royal consideration upon inquiry into the usual causes whereon al decisions have arisen, that by this wicked maugre all the precepts of our holy religion rules of right reason, the greatest act of the mind, forgiveness of injuries, is become vile amoral; that the rules of good society and conversation are hereby inverted; that the e vain, and the impudent, insult the careful, rest, and the modest; that all virtue is supand all vice supported, in the one act of apable to dare to the death. We have also with great sorrow of mind, observed that adful action, by long impunity (our royal at-being employed upon matters of more gene-era), is become honourable, and the refusal re in it ignominious. In these our royal inquiries we are yet farther made to under-that the persons of most eminent worth, and peful abilities, accompanied with the strong-ion for true glory, are such as are most liable involved in the dangers arising from this li-—Now, taking the said premises into our se-rideration, and well weighing that all such icies (wherein the mind is incapable of com-itself, and where the injury is too sudden equisite to be borne) are particularly pro-by laws heretofore enacted; and that the of less injuries, like those of ingratitude, nice and delicate to come under general re do resolve to blot this fashion, or wantonanger, out of the minds of our subjects, by d resolutions declared in this edict as follow:
person who either sends or accepts a chalthe posterity of either, though no death enreupon, shall be, after the publication of this t, capable of bearing office in these our as.

person who shall prove the sending or g a challenge, shall receive to his own use perty the whole personal estate of both pa nd their real estate shall be immediately n the next heir of the offenders, in as ample as if the said offenders were actually deceased. cases where the laws (which we have already to our subjects) admit of an appeal for blood; ie criminal is condemned by the said appeal, not only suffer death, but his whole estate, ked, and personal, shall from the hour of b be vested in the next heir of the person lood he spill.

it shall not hereafter be in our royal power, or our successors, to pardon the said offences, nor the offenders in their estates, honour, or life ever.

en at our court of Blois, the 8th of February, 120, in the second year of our reign."—T.

p. 98.] FRIDAY, JUNE 22, 1711.

Tanta est querendi cura decoris.—Juv. Sat. vi. 500.
As for their persons they adorn.

It is not so variable a thing in nature as a bad dress. Within my own memory, I have it rise and fall above thirty degrees. About ten years ago it shot us somuch that the fem much taller than the such an enormous st grasshoppers before the sex is in a manner dw of beauties that seem remember several lad seven foot high, that a five. How they came learn; whether the w any penance which we they have cast their he us with something in tirely new; or whether being too cunning for method to make themse secret; though I find at present like trees i will certainly sprout u heads than before. F love to be insulted by myself, I admire the s sent humiliation, which natural dimensions, th their persons and len formidable and gigant to the beautiful edific any whimsical supers must therefore repeat with the coiffure now

the good sense which among the valuable p serve that women in than men to adorn the indeed I very much ad fects, who raise such w bands, lace, and wire,
their respective invent been as many orders i in those which have b times they rise in the s like a tower, and somet nal's time the building stories, as he has ver

Tot premit ordinibus, t Ædificat caput; Andre Post minor est: aliam

With curls on curls the
And mount it with a fo
A giantess she seems;
And then she dwindles

But I do, not remember that the head-dress as gance as in the four built up in a couple of so exceedingly high on woman, who was but dress, appeared like a Monsieur Paradin say fontanges rose an ell ab pointed like steeples, a crape fastened to the t riously fringed, and h streamers."

The women might po

* This refers to the comtange"), a kind of head-dre-ning of the last century, wh hair and fore-part of the ca-lace, to a prodigious height opposite extrema was very † Numb. xlii, §3.

BRITISH ESSAYISTS.

nous monk,
t with great
avelled from astrous com-
, as the ma-
nes upon the omen threw
the sermon,
t of the pul-
the sanctity
that he had
and people;
e side of his
at appeared riter) like a hing to the
the people it lay under appeared in
, who flung ut notwith-
he preacher
again some in Monsieur
, like snails
hot them out This extra-a that age, is e in his his-
as, as well as

reign is the st the exor-
an excessive
ctually when e recommend
f prevention.
der how im-
that can be ster-piece of appearance,
man figure.
ntifying the h, planted in eat of smiles
d it with the ch side with and graces
oded it with its beauties
she seems to
to the most load it with s, we destroy and foolishly
nd real beau-
ue-lace.—L.

23, 1711.

, Sat. vi. 63.

strong.

clared myself
n a discourse
int of honour
a great many ght were ence the several
, and present
of this day;
any thing in this paper which seems to differ with any passage of last Thursday's, the reader will consider them as the sentiments of the club, and the other as my own private thoughts, or rather those of Pharamond.

The great point of honour in men is courage, and in women chastity. If a man loses his honour in one encounter, it is not impossible for him to regain it in another: a slip in a woman's honour is irrecoverable. I can give no reason for fixing the point of honour to these two qualities, unless it be that each sex sets the greatest value on the qualification which renders them the most amiable in the eyes of the contrary sex. Had men chosen for themselves, without regard to the opinion of the fair sex, I should believe the choice would have fallen on wisdom or virtue; or had women determined their own point of honour, it is probable that wit or good-nature would have carried it against chastity.

Nothing recommends a man more to the female sex than courage; whether it be that they are pleased to see one who is a terror to others fall like a slave at their feet; or that this quality supplies their own principal defect, in guarding them from insults, and avenging their quarrels; or that courage is a natural indication of a strong and sprightly constitution. On the other side, nothing makes women more esteemed by the opposite sex than chastity; whether it be that we always prize those most who are hardest to come at; or that nothing beside chastity, with its collateral attendants, truth, fidelity, and constancy, gives the man a property in the person he loves, and consequently endears her to him above all things.

I am very much pleased with a passage in the inscription on a monument erected in Westminster-abbey to the late Duke and Duchess of Newcastle. "Her name was Margaret Lucas, youngest sister to the Lord Lucas of Colchester; a noble family, for all the brothers were valiant, and all the sisters virtuous."

In books of chivalry, where the point of honour is strained to madness, the whole story runs on chastity and courage. The damsel is mounted on a white palfrey, as an emblem of her innocence; and, to avoid scandal, must have a dwarf for her page. She is not to think of a man, until some misfortune has brought a knight-errant to her relief. The knight falls in love, and, did not gratitude restrain her from murdering her deliverer, would die at her feet by her disdain. However, he must waste many years in the desert, before her virgin heart can think of a surrender. The knight goes off, attacks every thing he meets that is bigger and stronger than himself, seeks all opportunities of being knocked on the head, and after seven years' rambling returns to his mistress, whose chastity has been attacked in the mean time by giants and tyrants, and undergone as many trials as her lover's valour.

In Spain, where there are still great remains of this romantic humour, it is a transporting favour for a lady to cast an accidental glance on her lover from a window, though it be two or three stories high; as it is usual for a lover to assert his passion for his mistress, in a single combat with a mad bull.

The great violation, in point of honour from man to man, is giving the lie. One may tell another he whores, drinks, blasphemes, and it may pass unresented; but to say he lies, though but in jest, is an affront that nothing but blood can expiate. The reason perhaps may be, because no other vice implies a want of courage so much as the making a lie; and therefore telling a man he lies, is touching him in the most sensible part of honour, and indirectly calling him a coward. I cannot admit under this head what Herodotus tells us of the ancient Persians—that from the age of five years to twenty they instruct their sons only in three things, to manage the horse, to make use of the bow, and to speak truth.

The placing the point of honour in this false kind of courage, has given occasion to the very refuse of mankind, who have neither virtue nor common sense, to set up for men of honour. An English peer who has not long been dead,* used to tell a pleasant story of a French gentleman that visited him early one morning at Paris, and after great professions of respect, let him know that he had it in his power to oblige him; which, in short, amounted to this—that he believed he could tell his lordship the person's name who jostled him as he came out from the opera: but before he would proceed, he begged his lordship that he would not deny him the honour of making him his second. The English lord, to avoid being drawn into a very foolish affair, told him, he was under engagements for his two next duels to a couple of particular friends:—upon which the gentleman immediately withdrew, hoping his lordship would not take it ill if he meddled no farther in an affair from whence he himself was to receive no advantage.

The beating down this false notion of honour in so vain and lively a people as those of France, is deservedly looked upon as one of the most glorious parts of their present king's reign. It is a pity but the punishment of these mischievous notions should have in it some particular circumstances of shame and infamy: that those who are slaves to them may see, that instead of advancing their reputations, they lead them to ignominy and dishonour.

Death is not sufficient to deter men who make it their glory to despise it; but if every one that fought a duel were to stand in the pillory, it would quickly lessen the number of these imaginary men of honour, and put an end to so absurd a practice.

When honour is a support to virtuous principles, and runs parallel with the laws of God and our country, it cannot be too much cherished and encouraged: but when the dictates of honour are contrary to those of religion and equity, they are the greatest depravations of human nature, by giving wrong ambitions and false ideas of what is good and laudable; and should therefore be exploded by all governments, and driven out as the bane and plague of human society.

L.

No. 100.] MONDAY, JUNE 25, 1711.

Nihil est contulerim jucundo sanus amico.—HOR. 1 Sat. v. 44

The greatest blessing is a pleasant friend.

A MAN advanced in years that thinks fit to look back upon his former life, and call that only life which was passed with satisfaction and enjoyment, excluding all parts which were not pleasant to him, will find himself very young, if not in his infancy. Sickness, ill-humour and idleness will have robbed him of a great share of that space we ordinarily call our life. It is therefore the duty of every man that would be true to himself, to obtain, if possible, a disposition to be pleased, and place himself in a constant aptitude for the satisfactions of his being. Instead of this in proportion. An affected meet with others. Thelves, but false pleasures. tudinarians come into the air. If a ment to meet ber. When plains he is some posset sort of people tion in other when he is p

It is a w not reckoned they conver pains and ad quota of the meanest he think at all when he find by another' Mutual goo in whenever tion of wha matters whe indeed ther selves in no such are the sons. Indol between ple coming any nurse's arms constant we make existe descends fro that being His life cons of a body, world, migh habitation o

Of this couple, Har the days of who have n Mrs. Rebec that the fire towards ma people of se and, passion sense in ei stand; their their fortune loss of taste we talk of t not mean, t should be al chaplets of ancients are sidering the too much de serve a dis delight in a

This port the parts at manner, th all pass wit of loads (w

* The editor has been told this was William Cavendish, the first duke of Devonshire, who died August 18, 1707.

BRITISH ESSAYISTS.

the highest
he appears.
icholy, show ng them. At ing that Va-
on; but the er, that he is man thinks ntribute any nd yet upon
y his being aid of a gen-
d be the best
a well-cor-
breeding are y it to be one ures of life.
ten times the hearing no-
as expected
know every by one who s mentioned in the best ate, because nd but what tiful pictures
nd deformat-
towards the ion wherein ellence; and in nothing is
T.

6, 1711.

Pollux,
cepti;
opera bella
unt;

s.

ne.

;

nd:

nd

—Porz.

thor, "is the g eminent."
e of escaping
it. All the eed of every his fiery per-reproach but to greatness,
ial part of a

o censure on attery on the
are not due
which they do
high post is e, but always or this reason
eir true cha-
their deaths.
must cease.
be at an end,
have justice
ast opportunities of knowing the truth, they are in the best disposition to tell it.

It is therefore the privilege of posterity to adjust the characters of illustrious persons, and to set matters right between those antagonists, who by their rivalry for greatness divided a whole age into factions. We can now allow Cæsar to be a great man, without derogating from Pompey; and celebrate the virtues of Cato, without detracting from those of Cæsar. Every one that has been long dead has a due proportion of praise allotted him, in which, whilst he lived, his friends were too profuse, and his enemies too sparing.

According to Sir Isaac Newton's calculations, the last comet that made its appearance in 1680, imbibed so much heat by its approaches to the sun, that it would have been two thousand times hotter than red hot iron, had it been a globe of that metal; and that supposing it as big as the earth, and at the same distance from the sun, it would be fifty thousand years in cooling, before it recovered its natural temper. In the like manner, if an Englishman considers the great ferment into which our political world is thrown at present, and how intensely it is heated in all its parts, he cannot suppose that it will cool again in less than three hundred years. In such a tract of time it is possible that the heats of the present age may be extinguished, and our several classes of great men represented under their proper characters. Some eminent historian may then probably arise that will not write recentibus aditis (as Tacitus expresses it)—with the passions and prejudices of a contemporary author—but make an impartial distribution of fame among the great men of the present age.

I cannot forbear entertaining myself very often with the idea of such an imaginary historian describing the reign of Anne the first, and introducing it with a preface to his reader that he is now entering upon the most shining part of the English story. The great rivals in fame will be then distinguished according to their respective merits, and shine in their proper points of light. Such a one (says the historian), though variously represented by the writers of his own age, appears to have been a man of more than ordinary abilities, great application, and uncommon integrity: nor was such a one (though of an opposite party and interest) inferior to him in any of these respects. The several antagonists who now endeavour to depreciate one another, and are celebrated or traduced by different parties, will then have the same body of admirers, and appear illustrious in the opinion of the whole British nation. The deserving man, who can now recommend himself to the esteem of but half his countrymen, will then receive the approbations and applauses of a whole age.

Among the several persons that flourish in this glorious reign, there is no question but such a future historian, as the person of whom I am speaking, will make mention of the men of genius and learning, who have now any figure in the British nation. For my own part, I often flatter myself with the honourable mention which will then be made of me; and have drawn up a paragraph in my own imagination, that I fancy will not be altogether unlike what will be found in some page or other of this imaginary historian.

It was under this reign, says he, that the Spectator published those little diurnal essays which are still extant. We know very little of the name or person of this author, except only that he was a man of a very short face, extremely addicted to silence, and so great a lover of knowledge, that he made a voyage to grand Cairo for no other reason but to take the measure of a pyramid. His chief friend was one Sir Roger de Coverley, a whimsical country knight—and a Templar, whose name he has not transmitted to us. He lived as a lodger at the house of a widow-woman, and was a great humourist in all parts of his life. This is all we can affirm with any certainty of his person and character. As for his speculations, notwithstanding the several obsolete words and obscure phrases of the age in which he lived, we still understand enough of them to see the diversions and characters of the English nation in his time: not but that we are to make allowance for the mirth and humour of the author, who has doubtless strained many representations of things beyond the truth. For if we interpret his words in their literal meaning, we must suppose that women of the first quality used to pass away whole mornings at a puppet-show; that they attested their principles by their patches; that an audience would sit out an evening, to hear a dramatical performance written in a language which they did not understand: that chairs and flower-pots were introduced as actors upon the British stage: that a promiscuous assembly of men and women were allowed to meet at midnight in masks within the verge of the court; with many improbabilities of the like nature. We must, therefore, in these and the like cases, suppose that these remote hints and allusions aimed at some certain follies which were then in vogue, and which at present we have not any notion of. We may guess by several passages in the speculations, that there were writers who endeavoured to detract from the works of this author: but as nothing of this nature is come down to us, we cannot guess at any objections that could be made to this paper. If we consider his style with that indulgence which we must show to old English writers, or if we look into the variety of his subjects, with those several critical dissertations, moral reflections,

The following part of the paragraph is so much to my advantage, and beyond any thing I can pretend to, that I hope my reader will excuse me for not inserting it.—L.

No. 102.] WEDNESDAY, JUNE 27, 1711.

—Locus animi debent aliquando dari,

Ad cogitandum melior ut redeat sibi.—PRÆD. Fab. xiv. 3.

The mind ought sometimes to be diverted, that it may return the better to thinking.

I do not know whether to call the following letter a satire upon coquettes, or a representation of their several fantastical accomplishments, or what other title to give it; but, as it is, I shall communicate it to the public. It will sufficiently explain its own intentions, so that I shall give it my reader at length, without either preface or postscript.

“MR. SPECTATOR,

“Women are armed with fans as men with swords, and sometimes do more execution with them. To the end, therefore, that ladies may be entire mistresses of the weapon they bear, I have erected an academy for the training up of young women in the exercise of the fan, according to the most fashionable airs and motions that are now practised at court. The ladies who carry fans under me are drawn up twice a-day in my great hall, where they are instructed in the use of their arms, and exercised by the following words of command: Handle your fans, Un-Ground your fans. By the words of com-

who will apply the space of b
her fan all the
that little mod

“But to th themselves a leave to expla
my female reg
one her weap
word to Hand
fan at me wit
woman a tap-
lips with the e
fall in an eas
receive the n
done with a c
the first week.

“The next which are con brations, as s
with many vo self, that are tice. This par more than an infinite numb
beasts, rainbo
display them regiment hold

“Upon my fans, they giv
at a considera
This is one of but I have sev entrance coul
heard at the discharge a fa
a report like a care (in order
off their fans sions) to show
may come in fan, with whi
little wind wh sticks, can m
fifty with an c

“When th
command, in teaches a lad throws it asid adjust a curl herself to an
part of the e fan with an a for that purpos
as well as in

“When m generally let time; when,
their watches hasten to the place themse
calling out, exercise is n
her thoughts
“The flut

the master-
does not mi mistress of

BRITISH ESSAYISTS.

the summer
rcise; for as ur fans, the and gentle
season of the o ladies of a otions to be There is the
orous flutter,
edious, there
ch does not
; insomuch, ned lady, I frowns, or gry, that it
nt lover who wind of it;
that I have
as at a suffi-
that a fan
g to the na-
conclude my ave from my re for the use of the Fan;
you think it
ve a general
you shall be th your pre-
I am, &c.
whole art of
as made for 88, 1711.

ret
v. 240.

ain,
vain.
FRANCIS.

d with words
be properly
ould be only
, was so ex-
of speaking urse against this remark,
ent made in Every one each knew
ced that the ce, which we
where the stitution of part of what press. Our ed to us two the first serrchbishop's
t I ever read as it is the
the sublime
f this author of rhetoric

incerity, from he preached,

on this occasion, and treats it with a more than ordinary simplicity, at once to be a preacher and an example. With what command of himself does he lay before us, in the language and temper of his profession, a fault which, by the least liberty and warmth of expression, would be the most lively wit and satire! But his heart was better disposed, and the good man chastised the great wit in such a manner, that he was able to speak as follows:

"—Amongst too many other instances of the great corruption and degeneracy of the age wherein we live, the great and general want of sincerity in conversation is none of the least. The world is grown so full of dissimulation and compliment, that men's words are hardly any signification of their thoughts; and if any man measure his words by his heart, and speak as he thinks, and do not express more kindness to every man than men usually have for any man, he can hardly escape the censure of want of breeding. The old English plainness and sincerity—that generous integrity of nature, and honesty of disposition, which always argues true greatness of mind and is usually accompanied with undaunted courage and resolution, is in a great measure lost amongst us. There hath been a long endeavour to transform us into foreign manners and fashions, and to bring us to a servile imitation of none of the best of our neighbours, in some of the worst of their qualities. The dialect of conversation is now-a-days so swelled with vanity and compliment, and so surfeited (as I may say) of expressions of kindness and respect, that if a man that lived an age or two ago should return into the world again, he would really want a dictionary to help him to understand his own language, and to know the true intrinsic value of the phrase in fashion—and would hardly at first believe at what a low rate the highest strains and expressions of kindness, imaginable do commonly pass in current payment; and when he should come to understand it, it would be a great while before he could bring himself with a good countenance and a good conscience to converse with men upon equal terms, and in their own way.

"And in truth it is hard to say, whether it should more provoke our contempt or our pity, to hear what solemn expressions of respect and kindness will pass between men, almost upon no occasion; how great honour and esteem they will declare for one whom perhaps they never saw before, and how entirely they are all on the sudden devoted to his service and interest, for no reason; how infinitely and eternally obliged to him, for no benefit; and how extremely they will be concerned for him, yet, and afflicted too, for no cause. I know it is said, in justification of this hollow kind of conversation, that there is no harm, no real deceit in compliment, but the matter is well enough, so long as we understand one another; et verba valent ut nummi, "words are like money;" and when the current value of them is generally understood, no man is cheated by them.
This is something, if such words were any thing; but being brought into the account, they are mere ciphers. However it is still a just matter of complaint, that sincerity and plainness are out of fashion, and that our language is running into a lie; that men have almost quite perverted the use of speech, and made words to signify nothing; that the greatest part of the conversation of mankind is little else but driving a trade of dissimulation; insomuch that it would make a man heartily sick and weary of the world, to see the little security that is in use and practice among men."

When the vice is placed in this contemptuous light, he argues unanswerably against it, in words and thoughts so natural, that any man who reads them would imagine he himself could have been the author of them.

"If the shew of any thing be good for any thing, I am sure sincerity is better: for why does any man dissemble, or seem to be that which he is not, but because he thinks it good to have such a quality as he pretends to? For to counterfeit and dissemble, is to put on the appearance of some real excellency. Now the best way in the world to seem to be any thing, is really to be what he would seem to be. Besides, that it is many times as troublesome to make good the pretence of a good quality, as to have it; and if a man have it not, it is ten to one but he is discovered to want it; and then all his pains and labour to seem to have it, are lost."

In another part of the same discourse he goes on to shew, that all artifice must naturally tend to the disappointment of him that practises it.

"Whatsoever convenience may be thought to be in falsehood and dissimulation, it is soon over; but the inconvenience of it is perpetual, because it brings a man under an everlasting jealousy and suspicion, so that he is not believed when he speaks truth, nor trusted when perhaps he means honestly. When a man has once forfeited the reputation of his integrity, he is set fast, and nothing will then serve his turn, neither truth nor falsehood."—R.

No. 104.] FRIDAY, JUNE 29, 1711.

Qualis equos Threissa fatigat Harpalyce.—VIRG. Æn. l. 316.

With such array Harpalyce bestrode Her Thracian courser.—DRYDEN.

It would be a noble improvement, or rather a recovery of what we call good-breeding, if nothing were to pass amongst us for agreeable which was the least transgression against that rule of life called decorum, or a regard to decency. This would command the respect of mankind, because it carries in it deference to their good opinion, as humility lodged in a worthy mind is always attended with a certain homage which no haughty soul, with all the arts imaginable, will ever be able to purchase.

Tully says, virtue and decency are so nearly related, that it is difficult to separate them from each other but in our imagination. As the beauty of the body always accompanies the health of it, so certainly is decency concomitant to virtue. As beauty of body, with an agreeable carriage, pleases the eye, and that pleasure consists in that we observe all the parts with a certain elegance are proportioned to each other; so does decency of behaviour which appears in our lives obtain the approbation of all with whom we converse, from the order, consistency, and moderation of our words and actions. This flows from the reverence we bear towards every good man and to the world in general; for to be negligent of what any one thinks of you, does not only show you arrogant, but abandoned. In all these considerations we are to distinguish how one virtue differs from another. As it is the part of justice never to do violence, it is of modesty never to commit offence. In the last particular lies the whole force of what is called decency; to this purpose that excellent moralist above-mentioned talks of decency; but this quality is more easily comprehended by an ordinary capacity, than expressed with all his eloquence. This decency of behaviour is generally transgressed among all of them though themselves often very masters of life. It was his behaviour, if ever actions, were daughter, or seemed in of themselves. Women are lured to courted to do. Nothing can preservation of their own equestrian meets in and would take the tion. In order not be wholly

"Mr. S.

"Going late beautiful even was admiring hours of the every way an off from these horsemen I saw of them escape son that my youth who had have been drawn. His features, able effeminate appeared in his dered, hung ders, and was mistress, in a streamer behind of blue camlet a cravat of cock, a little more sprightly was a pacer, ner, and seen. As I was pity who appeared an object of proach, and of the equipage petticoat of. After this day the fair Amazon thought those by their soft proper a bold mouth seemed. I am not certain was a very handsome very indifferent.

"There is itself against tures of dress upon that principle which the best and if they are present, would blies into a general Amazonian it, first impresses the quality anything, so help thinking modesty. T nk fit to go

y, they ought eir triumph

ly the man-
are pleased
more honour
their own ex-
deceive us
to be repre-
d a spaniel;
rthy family,
dress and air
d those who ght never to is so large a
the fair sex
d into these me occasion
needs to be hemselves—
d to see their
t them look
feminacy of appear to us
f a man.
e servant.”

00, 1711.

act. I, Sc. 1.
e too much ad-

-Eno. Prov.

himself very
of mankind,
youth; for
as met with among the es he should e not broke rbed honest beat up a oung fellow.
e Will calls
e knowledge
Will ingefe his head men over-nder certain
e, that with-ainted with oks upon as ds all other
of one whom philosopher.
ed company,
o out of his making his
Our club
ripping, at
For as Will
e town, we our know-
three letters lady. The ough for a kily, several aughed this off at first as well as he could; but finding himself pushed on all sides, and especially by the Templar, he told us with a little passion, that he never liked pedantry in spelling, and that he spelt like a gentleman, and not like a scholar: upon this Will had recourse to his old topic of shewing the narrow-spiritedness, the pride, and ignorance of pedants; which he carried so far, that upon my retiring to my lodgings, I could not forbear throwing together such reflections as occurred to me upon that subject.

A man who has been brought up among books, and is able to talk of nothing else, is a very indifferent companion, and what we call a pedant. But, methinks, we should enlarge the title, and give it to every one that does not know how to think out of his profession and particular way of life.

What is a greater pedant than a mere man of the town? Bar him the play-houses, a catalogue of the reigning beauties, and an account of a few fashionable distempers that have befallen him, and you strike him dumb. How many a pretty gentleman's knowledge lies all within the verge of the court! He will tell you the names of the principal favorites, repeat the shrewd sayings of a man of quality, whisper an intrigue that is not yet blown upon by common fame; or, if the sphere of his observations is a little larger than ordinary, will perhaps enter into all the incidents, turns, and revolutions, in a game of ombre. When he has gone thus far, he has shewn you the whole circle of his accomplishments; his parts are drained, and he is disabled from any farther conversation. What are these but rank pedants? and yet these are the men who value themselves most on their exemption from the pedantry of colleges.

I might here mention the military pedant, who always talks in a camp—and is storming towns, making lodgments, and fighting battles, from one end of the year to the other. Every thing he speaks smells of gunpowder; if you take away his artillery from him, he has not a word to say for himself. I might likewise mention the law pedant, that is perpetually putting cases, repeating the transactions of Westminster-hall, wrangling with you upon the most different circumstances of life, and not to be convinced of the distance of a place, or of the most trivial point in conversation, but by dint of argument. The state pedant is wrapped up in news, and lost in politics. If you mention either of the king of Spain or Poland, he talks very notably; but if you go out of the Gazette,* you drop him. In short a mere courtier, a mere soldier, a mere scholar, a mere any thing, is an insipid pedantic character, and equally ridiculous.

Of all the species of pedants which I have mentioned, the book pedant is much the most supportable: he has at least an exercised understanding, a head which is full, though confused—so that a man who converses with him may often receive from his hints of things that are worth knowing, and what he may possibly turn to his own advantage, though they are of little use to the owner. The worst kind of pedants among learned men, are such as are naturally endued with a very small share of common sense, and have read a great number of books without taste or distinction.

The truth of it is, learning, like travelling, and all other methods of improvement, as it finishes

* A newspaper, so called from gazette, the name of a piece of current money, which was the stated price at which it was originally sold.

se, so it makes a silly man ten thousand e insufferable, by supplying variety of mats impertinence, and giving him an opporabounding in absurdities.

pedants cry up one another much more of solid and useful learning. To read the y give an editor, or collator of a manuu would take him for the glory of the com-h of letters, and the wonder of his age! haps upon examination you find that he rectified a Greek particle, or laid out a tence in proper commas.

re obliged indeed to be thus lavish of their hat they may keep one another in countend it is no wonder if a great deal of know-ch is not capable of making a man wise, has tendency to make him vain and arrogant.

L.

106.] MONDAY, JULY 2, 1711.

—Hinc tibi copia
it ad plenum, benigno onorum opulenta cornu.—HON. 1 Od. xvii. 14. lenty's liberal horn shall pour ts for thee a copious show'r, mours of the quiet plain.

is often received an invitation from my Roger de Coverley, to pass away a month in the country, I last week accompanied er, and am settled with him for some time ntry-house, where I intend to form several using speculations. Sir Roger, who is acquainted with my humour, lets me rise bed when I please, dine at his own table chamber as I think fit, sit still and say without bidding me be merry. When the of the country come to see him, he only at a distance. As I have been walking in I have observed them stealing a sight of a hedge, and have heard the knight demand not to let me see them, for that I hated ed at.

more at ease in Sir Roger's family, be-consists of sober and staid persons; for as t is the best master in the world, he seldom is servants; and as he is beloved by all his servants never care for leaving him; means his domestics are all in years, and I with their master. You would take his hambre for his brother, his butler is gray-his groom is one of the gravest men that I see, and his coachman has the looks of unseller. You see the goodness of the en in his old house-dog, and in a gray pad-pt in the stable with great care and tenut of regard to his past services, though useless for several years.

not but observe with a great deal of pleajoy that appeared in the countenances of nt domestics upon my friend's arrival at seat. Some of them could not refrain at the sight of their old master; every one pressed forward to do something for seemed discouraged if they were not em-at the same time the good old knight, with of the father and the master of the family, he inquiries after his own affairs with se-questions relating to themselves. This nd good-nature engages every body to at when he is pleasant upon any of them, ly are in good humour, and none so much on whom he diverts himself with: on the contrary, if he coughs old age, it is easy for cret concern in the too

My worthy friend has care of his butler, who as well as the rest of fully desirous of pleas-often heard their master friend.

My chief companion,
himself in the woods or man who is ever with his house in the nature years. This gentleman and some learning, of a ing conversation: he knows that he is very teem, so that he lives in tion than a dependant.

I have observed in se-friend Sir Roger, amid something of a humor well as imperfections, attain extravagance, which his, and distinguishes th-This cast of mind, as it itself, so it renders his able, and more delight-sense and virtue would ordinary colours. As I night, he asked me how I have just now mentifor my answer, told me insulted with Latin and which reason he desired the university to find his plain sense than much le-clear voice, a sociable man that understood a l-friend," says Sir Roger, who, besides the endow-they tell me, a good s-shew it. I have given parish; and because I k-upon him a good annui-me, he shall find that b-than perhaps he thinks h-me thirty years; and t-have taken notice of it, asked any thing of me fo-day soliciting me for son-other of my tenants h-not been a lawsuit in th-among them; if any dis-selves to him for the dquiesce in his judgment, pened above once or twme. At his first settlin-present of all the good printed in English, and every Sunday he would the pulpit. Accordingly such a series, that they fo-and make a continued sy-

As Sir Roger was going tlemen we were talking of the knight's asking him (for it was Saturday night) St. Asaph* in the morn-afternoon. He then she-

BRITISH ESSAYISTS

a great deal of Saunderson,
living authors
tical divinity.
in the pulpit,
and's insisting ect and a clear
e gracefulness
with the dis-
I never passed
A sermon re-composition of
r.
f our country
nd instead of impositions of ndsome elocu-
are proper to great masters.
to themselves,

3, 1711.

tlei,
si,
m.
br. Epilog. 1. 2.
Esop, and placed
to show, that the ce, undisturbed

th here in the union I always anners in servsters. The asso much satis-
happy lot which of it. There
m seen but at aces, that serv-
through which ary, here they way; and it is as a visit, when This proceeds of the man of knows how to
omy as ever to his own mind
to vent peevish
nsistent orders
and love go to n performance ion of the lower nt is called be-ith an expecta-
e trivial fault,
with any other masters often
often to know,
eadily back ac-
ed by such a
in good health;
ove to him, or nded on his be-rather like a his orders are s; and the dist of the reward
him.

There is another circumstance in which my friend excels in his management, which is the manner of rewarding his servants. He has ever been of opinion, that giving his cast clothes to be worn by valets has a very ill effect upon little minds, and creates a silly sense of equality between the parties, in persons affected only with outward things. I have heard him often pleasant on this occasion, and describe a young gentleman abusing his man in that coat, which a month or two before was the most pleasing distinction he was conscious of in himself. He would turn his discourse still more pleasantly upon the bounties of the ladies in this kind; and I have heard him say he knew a fine woman, who distributed rewards and punishments in giving becoming or unbecoming dresses to her maids.

But my good friend is above these little instances of good-will, in bestowing only trifles on his servants: a good servant to him is sure of having it in his choice very soon of being no servant at all. As I before observed, he is so good a husband, and knows so thoroughly that the skill of the purse is the cardinal virtue of this life; I say he knows so well that frugality is the support of generosity, that he can often spare a large fine when a tenement falls, and give that settlement to a good servant who has a mind to go into the world, or make a stranger pay the fine to that servant for his more comfortable maintenance, if he stays in his service.

A man of honour and generosity considers it would be miserable to himself to have no will but that of another, though it were of the best person breathing, and, for that reason, goes on as fast as he is able to put his servants into independent livelihoods. The greatest part of Sir Roger's estate is tenanted by persons who have served himself or his ancestors. It was to me extremely pleasant to observe the visitants from several parts to welcome his arrival into the country: and all the difference that I could take notice of between the late servants who came to see him, and those who stayed in the family was, that these latter were looked upon as finer gentlemen and better courtiers.

This manumission and placing them in a way of livelihood, I look upon as only what is due to a good servant; which encouragement will make his successor be as diligent, as humble, and as ready as I was. There is something wonderful in the narrowness of those minds which can be pleased, and I barren of bounty to those who please them.

One might, on this occasion, recount the sense that great persons in all ages have had of the merit of their dependants, and the heroic services which men have done their masters in the extremity of their fortunes, and shown to their undone patrons that fortune was all the difference between them; but as I design this my speculation only as a general admonition to thankless masters, I shall not go on of the occurrences of common life, but assert it as a general observation, that I never saw, but in Sir Roger's family and one or two more, good servants treated as they ought to be. Sir Roger's kindness extends to their children's children; and this very morning he sent his coachman's grandson to practice. I shall conclude this paper with an account of a picture in his gallery, where there are many which will deserve my future observation.

At the very upper end of this handsome structure I saw the portraiture of two young men standing by a river, the one naked, the other in a livery. The person supported seemed half dead, but still so much alive as to show in his face exquisite joy and other. I thought the fainting figure re-friend Sir Roger; and looking at the stood by me, for an account of it, he in-that the person in the livery was a serv-Roger's, who stood on the shore while was swimming, and observing him taken sudden illness and sink under water, and saved him. He told me Sir Roger e dress he was in as soon as he came by a great bounty at that time, followed ur ever since, had made him master of seat which we saw at a distance as we his house. I remembered, indeed, Sir , there lived a very worthy gentleman, to as highly obliged, without mentioning any er. Upon my looking a little dissatisfied rt of the picture, my attendant informed was against Sir Roger's will, and at the quest of the gentleman himself, that he in the habit in which he had saved his

 R.

.] WEDNESDAY, JULY 4, 1711.

ma, multa agendo nihil agens.—PURBA. Fab. v. 2 a to no purpose, and very busy about nothing.

as yesterday morning walking with Sir ore his house, a country fellow brought him b, which, he told him, Mr. William Winn-caught that very morning; and that he it with his service to him, and intended to dine with him. At the same time he de-tetter, which my friend read to me as soon senger left him.

ROGER,
 e you to accept of a jack, which is the best aught this season. I intend to come and ou a river, and see how the perch bite in river. I observed with some concern, the I saw you upon the bowling-green, that wanted a lash to it; I will bring half a me that I twisted last week, which I hope you all the time you are in the country. st been out of the saddle for six days last ag been at Eton with Sir John's eldest son.
 to his learning hugely.

"I am, Sir, your humble servant,
 "WILL WIMBLE."

ctraordinary letter, and message that ac-d it, made me very curious to know the and quality of the gentleman who sent ich I found to be as follow:—Will Wimble r brother to a baronet, and descended of it family of the Wimbles. He is now bety and fifty; but being bred to no busi-born to no estate, he generally lives with rother as superintendent of his game. He pack of dogs better than any man in the and is very famous for finding out a hare. emely well-versed in all the little handian idle man. He makes a May-fly to a and furnishes the whole country with angle-he is a good-natured officious fellow, and e esteemed upon account of his family, he ome guest at every house, and keeps up a spondence among all the gentlemen about carries a tulip root in his pocket from one ; or exchanges a puppy between a couple beho gentleman, whose name was Mr. Thomas of friends that live perha the country. Will is a p the young heirs, whom he net that he has weaved, o made himself. He now a garters of his own knitting ters; and raises a great d by inquiring as often as h wear!" These gentlema obliging little humours, a

 the country.

Sir Roger was proceedi when he saw him make u hazle twigs in his hand Roger's woods, as he cam to the house. I was ver on one side the hearty a which Sir Roger received secret joy which his guest the good old knight. A over, Will desired Sir Ro servants to carry a set of him in a little box, to a h off, to whom it seems he h for above this half-year.
 sooner turned, but honest large cock pheasant that the neighbouring woods, ventures of the same nat characters are the game t light in; for which reas with the novelty of the p he could be for his life wi saut, and therefore liste ordinary attention.

In the midst of his disc ner, where the gentlema had the pleasure of seei caught served up for the tuous manner. Upon ou us a long account how with it, foiled it, and at l bank—with several othe the first course. A dish terward furnished conve dinner, which concluded Will's for improving the Upon withdrawing int was secretly touched wi honest gentleman that ha not but consider with a g so good a heart and su employed in trifles; tha be so little beneficial to try so little advantageous per of mind and applica recommended him to th raised his fortune in and good to his country or hi a merchant have done w nary qualifications!

Will Wimble's is the c ther of a great family, w dren starve like gentle or profession that is be humour fills several part beggary. It is the hap like ours, that the youn of any liberal art or pr such a way of life, as m vie with the best of the find several citizens tha

BRITISH ESSAYISTS.

by an honest in-
of their elder bro-
will was formerly
and that, finding parents gave him But certainly,
been for studies
y well turned for mmerce. As I
e too much inculcompare what I have said in my

LY 5, 1711.

.2 Sat. ii. 3.

the schools.

the gallery, when posite to me, and as glad to meet erleys, and hoped n good company, ew he alluded to an who does not cient descent, I
account of them.
nd of the gallery,
of the pictures,
red into the mat-
ings as they oc-
lar introduction,
chain of thought.
e to consider the s of one age dif-
y that only. One
sion of one age
set of people in rom one generaetting coat and n Henry the Seen of the guard;
ew, because they alf broader—bee expanded, and r to stand at the

see, is dressed
would be no lar-
I am. He was Tilt yard (which hitehall). You
y his right foot.
ry all to pieces;
in this manner,
the target of the
and taking him n the pummel of urnament over,
ather to perform
is enemy: how-ake use of a vic-
hed up to a gal-
were rivals),
ourtesy and par-
but it might be w.

or was not only
he arts of peace,
as any gentle-

in being.

man at court; you see where his viol hangs by his basket-hilt sword. The action at the Tilt-yard, you may be sure, won the fair lady, who was a maid of honour and the greatest beauty of her time; but she stands, the next picture. You see, Sir, my great great grandmother has on the new-fashion petticoat; except that the modern is gathered at the waist; my grandmother appears as if she stood a large drum, whereas the ladies now walk as if they were in a go-cart. For all this lady was bred court, she became an excellent country-wife; she brought ten children, and when I show you the library, you shall see in her own hand (allowing for the difference of the language) the best receipt in England both for a hasty-pudding and a white-p-

"If you please to fall back a little, because it necessary to look at the three next pictures at a view; these are three sisters. She on the right hand who is so very beautiful, died a maid; the next her, still handsomer, had the same fate, against I will; this homely thing in the middle had both the portions added to her own, and was stolen by a nei-bouring gentleman, a man of stratagem and reso-tion; for he poisoned three mastiffs to come at her and knocked down two deer-stealers in carrying her off. Misfortunes happen in all families. The loss of this romp, and so much money, was no great matter to our estate. But the next heir that possessed it was this soft gentleman whom you see there. He serve the small buttons, the little boots, the lace the slashes about his clothes, and above all the picture he is drawn in (which to be sure was his choosing): you see he sits with one hand on a de-writing, and looking as it were another way, like an easy writer, or a sonneteer. He was one those that had too much wit to know how to live the world; he was a man of no justice, but of good manners; he ruined every body that had a thing to do with him, but never said a rude thing his life; the most indolent person in the world, would sign a deed that passed away half his estate with his gloves on, but would not put on his hat before a lady if it were to save his country. He said to be the first that made love by squeezing hand. He left the estate with ten thousand pound debt upon it; but, however, by all hands I have been informed, that he was every way the finest gentleman in the world. That debt lay heavy on our house for one generation, but it was retrieved by gift from that honest man you see there, a citizen our name, but nothing at all akin to us. I know Sir Andrew Freeport has said behind my back, that this man was descended from one of the ten children of the maid of honour I showed you above; but was never made out. We winked at the thing deed, because money was wanting at that time."

Here I saw my friend a little embarrassed; he turned my face to the next portraiture.

Sir Roger went on with his account of the gall-in the following manner: "This man (pointing him I looked at) I take to be the honour of house, Sir Humphry de Coverley; he was in dealings as punctual as a tradesman, and as ge-racious as a gentleman. He would have thought his self as much undone by breaking his word, as if were to be followed by bankruptcy. He served country as knight of the shire to his dying day.
found it no easy matter to maintain an integrity his words and actions, even in things that regard the offices which were incumbent upon him, in care of his own affairs and relations of life, and therefore dreaded (though he had great talents) go into employments of state, where he must be exposed to the snares of ambition. Innocence of life, and great ability, were the distinguishing parts of his character; the latter, he had often observed, had led to the destruction of the former, and he used frequently to lament that great and good had not the same signification. He was an excellent husbandman, but had resolved not to exceed such a degree of wealth; all above it he bestowed in secret bounties many years after the sum he aimed at for his own use was attained. Yet he did not slacken his industry, but to a decent old age spent the life and fortune which were superfluous to himself, in the service of his friends and neighbours."

Here we were called to dinner, and Sir Roger ended the discourse of this gentleman, by telling me, as we followed the servant, that this his ancestor was a brave man, and narrowly escaped being killed in the civil wars; "for," said he, "he was sent out of the field with a private message, the day before the battle of Worcester." The whim of narrowly escaping by having been within a day of danger, with other matters above-mentioned, mixed with good sense, left me at a loss whether I was more delighted with my friend's wisdom or simplicity.

R.

No. 110.] FRIDAY, JULY 6, 1711.

Horror ubique animos, simul ipsa silentia terrent.

VIRG. Æn. li. 755.All things are full of horror and affright, And dreadful ev'n the silence of the night.—DRYDEN.

At a little distance from Sir Roger's house, among the ruins of an old abbey, there is a long walk of aged elms; which are shot up so very high, that when one passes under them, the rooks and crows that rest upon the tops of them seem to be cawing in another region. I am very much delighted with this sort of noise, which I consider as a kind of natural prayer to that Being who supplies the wants of his own creation, and who, in the beautiful language of the psalms,* feedeth the young ravens that call upon him. I like this retirement the better, because of an ill report it lies under of being haunted; for which reason (as I have been told in the family) no living creature ever walks in it besides the chaplain. My good friend the butler desired me with a very grave face not to venture myself in it after sun-set, for that one of the footmen had been almost frightened out of his wits by a spirit that appeared to him in the shape of a black horse without a head; to which he added, that about a month ago one of the maids, coming home late that way with a pail of milk upon her head, heard such a rustling among the bushes that she let it fall.

I was taking a walk in this place last week between the hours of nine and ten, and could not but fancy it one of the most proper scenes in the world for a ghost to appear in. The ruins of the abbey are scattered up and down on every side, and half covered with ivy and elder bushes, the harbours of several solitary birds which seldom make their appearance till the dusk of the evening. The place was formerly a churchyard, and has still several marks in it of graves and burying-places. There is such an echo among the old ruins and vaults that, if you stamp but a little louder than ordinary, you hear the sound repeated. At the same time the walk of elms, with the croaking of the ravens which from time to time are exceedingly so, naturally raise the night heightened pours out her thing in it, I fill it with spec

Mr. Locke, Ideas, has very prejudice of e into the mind to one another several instan following: "I have really no yet let but a the mind of a possibly he sh again so long after bring wi shall be so join than the other.

As I was wa of the evening sions of terror from me, which tle might easi without a head lost his wits up

My friend great deal of estate, he four useless; that of being haun up; that noise so that he coe eight o'clock chambers was in the family the self in it; and age, had shut which either he died. The kn so small a cor out of his own ordered all the exorcised by h one after anoth fears which had

I should not ridiculous horre prevail in all time I think a imagination of sonable than or historians, sac and to the trad pearance of sp not I give my mankind, I sho sons who are n in other matte not only the hi poets, but like have favoured t by the course maintain that the body, mal ritious, and th death. This I pressed with th have the conf * Psal. civ. 12. He shall feed the young ravens which call upon him.

BRITISH ESSAYISTS.

and uphilo-
He tells us,
actually flying
ter another;
that included
he body, like
seen entire which means
s of persons

ry out of Joe story itself
the author
down in his er of King
rst husbands
other to her ve with her,
ake room for
of a dream.
band coming
n with great asure which e reproached phyra,' says
y that women
e husband of thee? How to enter into a third, nay,
as so shame-
However,

all free thee
the mine for veral women
' I thought
n this place,
des that the f, as it con-rtality of the y man thinks
own opinion
o disturb the is nature are

7, 1711.

2 Ep. li. 43.

d me insens-
ays meditate
tality of the n one of my
y agreeably,
veral argu-
which is the
the pleasing
the heart of hose several

elf, and par-
gh not abso-
eration, has stration.
ntiments, as ts horror of ty, with that e practice of virtue, and that uneasiness which follows in it upon the commission of vice

Thirdly, from the nature of the Supreme Being, whose justice, goodness, wisdom, and veracity, are all concerned in this great point.

But among these and other excellent arguments for the immortality of the soul, there is one drawn from the perpetual progress of the soul to its perfection, without a possibility of ever arriving at it; which is a hint that I do not remember to have seen opened and improved by others who have written on this subject, though it seems to me to carry a great weight with it. How can it enter into the thoughts of man, that the soul, which is capable of such immense perfections, and of receiving new improvements to all eternity, shall fall away into nothing almost as soon as it is created? Are such abilities made for no purpose? A brute arrives at the point of perfection that he can never pass: in a few years he has all the endowments he is capable of; and, were he to live ten thousand more, would be the same thing he is at present. Were a human soul thus at a stand in her accomplishments; were her faculties to be full blown, and incapable of farther enlargements, I could imagine it might fall away insensibly, and drop at once into a state of annihilation. But can we believe a thinking being, that is in a perpetual progress of improvements, and travelling on from perfection to perfection, after having just looked abroad into the works of its Creator, and made a few discoveries of his infinite goodness, wisdom, and power, must perish at her first setting out, and in the beginning of her inquiries?

A man, considered in his present state, seems only sent into the world to propagate his kind. He provides himself with a successor, and immediately quits his post to make room for him.

—Hæres
Hæredem alterius, velut unda supervenit undam.
Hos. 2 Ep. li. 173.

—Their crowds heir, as in a rolling flood Wave urges wave. CRÆCH.

He does not seem born to enjoy life, but to deliver it down to others. This is not surprising to consider in animals, which are formed for our use, and can finish their business in a short life. The silkworm, after having spun her task, lays her eggs and dies. But a man can never have taken in his full measure of knowledge, has not time to subdue his passions, establish his soul in virtue, and come up to the perfection of his nature, before he is hurried off the stage. Would an infinitely wise Being make such glorious creatures for so mean a purpose? Can he delight in the production of such abortive intelligences, such short-lived reasonable beings? Would he give us talents that are not to be exerted? capacities that are never to be gratified? How can we find that wisdom, which shines through all his works in the formation of man, without looking on this world as only a nursery for the next, and believing that the several generations of rational creatures, which rise up and disappear in such quick successions, are only to receive their first rudiments of existence here, and afterward to be transplanted into a more friendly climate, where they may spread and flourish to all eternity!

There is not, in my opinion, a more pleasing and triumphant consideration in religion than this of the perpetual progress which the soul makes towards the perfection of its nature, without ever arriving at a period in it. To look upon the soul as going on from strength to strength, to consider that she is to ever with new accessions of glory, and all eternity; that she will be still adding virtue, and knowledge to knowledge; car- something wonderfully agreeable to that which is natural to the mind of man. Nay, a prospect pleasing to God himself, to see in for ever beautifying in his eyes, and dearer to him, by greater degrees of reis this single consideration of the progress spirit to perfection, will be sufficient to all envy in inferior natures, and all con- superior. That cherubim, which now ap- God to a human soul, knows very well eriod will come about in eternity, when soul shall be as perfect as he himself now hen she shall look down upon that degree on, as much as she now falls short of it. the higher nature still advances, and by preserves his distance and superiority in of being; but he knows that how high station is of which he stands possessed at e inferior nature will at length mount up shine forth in the same degree of glory.

hat astonishment and veneration may we ur own souls, where there are such hidden virtue and knowledge, such inexhausted perfection? We know not yet what we or will it ever enter into the heart of man e the glory that will be always in reserve The soul, considered with its Creator, is f those mathematical lines that may draw another for all eternity without a possi- ouching it;* and can there be a thought ting, as to consider ourselves in these per- oaches to him, who is not only the stand- fection but of happiness!—L.

12.] MONDAY, JULY 9, 1711.

t, in obedience to thy country's rites, ship th' immortal gods.—PYTHAG.

always very well pleased with a country and think, if keeping holy the seventh day a human institution, it would be the best it could have been thought of for polishing ing of mankind. It is certain, the country uld soon degenerate into a kind of savages rians, were there not such frequent re- stated time, in which the whole village ther with their best faces, and in their habits, to converse with one another upon subjects, hear their duties explained to join together in adoration of the Supreme unday clears away the rust of the whole only as it refreshes in their minds the no- ligious, but as it puts both the sexes upon in their most agreeable forms, and exert- h qualities as are apt to give them a figure of the village. A country fellow distin- self as much in the churchyard, as a ci- upon the Change, the whole parish-poli- generally discussed in that place either in or before the bell rings.

nd Sir Roger, being a good churchman, sed the inside of his church with several own choosing. He has likewise given a pulpit-cloth, and railed in the communionnes are what the geometers call the asymp- topochia, and the allusion to them here is, per- the most beautiful that has ever been made.

tor—Nos. 17 & 18.

table at his own expense that at his coming to his ioners very irregular: a them kneel and join in t one of them a hassock at and at the same time em- master, who goes about pose, to instruct them

Psalms; upon which th themselves, and indeed churches that I have eve

As Sir Roger is land- tion, he keeps them in suffer nobody to sleep in chance he has been sud- sermon, upon recovering looks about him, and if ding, either wakes them to them. Several other larities break out upon th he will be lengthening e Psalms half a minute af- tion have done with it pleased with the matter nounces amen three or prayer; and sometimes else is upon their knees, or see if any of his tenan

I was yesterday very old friend, in the midst of one John Matthews to m not disturb the congrega it seems is remarkable fo at that time was kicking

This authority of the kno odd manner which accom- cumstances of life, has a parish, who are not pol- ridiculous in his behavior good sense and worthine friends observe these litt rather set off than blemis

As soon as the sermo- sumes to stir till Sir Roge The knight walks down f between a double row of ing to him on each side; inquires how such a one' father do, whom he does understood as a secret re is absent.

The chaplain has often chising day, when Sir R a boy that answers well be given to him next d and sometimes accompan to his mother. Sir Roge pounds a year to the cler encourage the young fe perfect in the church ser death of the present inc bestow it according to me

The fair understanding his chaplain, and their n good, is the more remark village is famous for the that arise between the live in a perpetual state ways preaching at the sq revenged on the parson The squire has made a tithe-stealers; while the

BRITISH ESSAYISTS.

and insinuates to that he is a better matter are come to he has not said his te this half year; he does not mend e face of the whole so frequent in the nary people, who hes, that they pay nding of a man of ng; and are very h, how important ed to them, when of five hundred a L.

LY 10, 1711.

—VINO. Æn. iv. 4.
heart.

mpany in which I embered, that I ch my friend Sir h; which was no ve. It happened ery pleasing walk soon as we came old man, looking ard, that any part one who has used id; and yet I am any bough of this reflect upon her ly the finest hand are to know, this use upon her; and ne into it but the my mind, as if I beautiful creature ol enough to carve of these trees; so n love, to attempt the methods which She has certainly he world."

ce; and I was not alling so naturally r before taken no- after a very long t of this great cir- r which I thought I had ever had e of that cheerful stroke which has actions. But he

enty-second year, f the most worthy d this spot of earth pitality and good ny fame; and in or the sake of my I was obliged to d in my servants, lged the pleasure nk ill of his own ion of showing my You may easily nce I made, who am pretty tall, rode well, and was very well am at the head of a whole country, with music o me, a feather in my hat, and my horse wou as I can assure you I was not a little pleased wu kind looks and glances I had from all the aiics and windows as I rode to the hall where the as were held. But, when I came there, a deas creature in a widow's habit sat in court to bow event of a cause concerning her dower. This manding creature (who was born for the destru of all who beheld her) put on such a resignatic her countenance, and bore the whispers of all an the court with such a pretty uneasiness, I was you, and then recovered herself from one eye to ther, until she was perfectly confused by me something so wistful in all she encountered, the last, with a murrain to her, she cast her bewitz eye upon me. I no sooner met it but I bowed a great surprised booby; and knowing her can be the first which came on, I cried, like a captiv calf as I was, 'Make way for the defendant's nesses.' This sudden partiality made all the co immediately see the sheriff also was become a to the fine widow. During the time her came upon trial, she behaved herself, I warrant you, such a deep attention to her business, took opp nities to have little billets handed to her cou then would be in such a pretty confusion, occasio you must know, by acting before so much comp that not only I but the whole court was prej in her favour; and all that the next heir to her band had to urge was thought so groundless an volous, that when it came to her counsel to n there was not half so much said as every one be in the court thought he could have urged to he vantage. You must understand, Sir, this per woman is one of those unaccountable creatures secretly rejoice in the admiration of men, bu dge themselves in no farther consequences. H it is that she has ever had a train of admirers, she removes from her slaves in town to those i country, according to the seasons of the year.

is a reading lady, and far gone in the pleasu friendship. She is always accompanied by a fidant, who is witness to her daily protesta against our sex, and consequently a bar to her steps towards love, upon the strength of her maxims and declarations.

"However, I must need say, this accompl mistress of mine has distinguished me above the and has been known to declare Sir Roger de Cov was the tamest and most humane of all the bas the country. I was told she said so by one thought he rallied me; but upon the strength o slender encouragement of being thought less d able, I made new liveries, new-paired my c horses, sent them all to town to be bitted, and to throw their legs well, and move all together fore I pretended to cross the country, and wait- her. As soon as I thought my retinue suitable i character of my fortune and youth, I set out hence to make my addresses. The particular of this lady has ever been to inflame your w and yet command respect. To make her miste this art, she has a greater share of knowledge, and good sense than is usual even among ex merit. Then she is beautiful beyond the w women. If you will not let her go on with a ce artifice with her eyes, and the skill of beauty, sh arm herself with her real charms, and strik with admiration instead of desire. It is certain if you were to behold the whole woman, there is her aspect, that composure in her motion, placency in her manner, that if her form I hope, her merit makes you fear. But then is such a desperate scholar, that no country I can approach her without being a jest. going to tell you, when I came to her house sitted to her presence with great civility; at time she placed herself to be first seen such an attitude, as I think you call the picture, that she discovered new charms, and came towards her with such an awe as speechless. This she no sooner observed made her advantage of it, and began a discourse concerning love and honour, as they followed by pretenders and the real votaries.

When she discussed these points in a disquisit, I verily believe, was as learned as the sophist in Europe could possibly make, she whether she was so happy as to fall in with me on these important particulars. Her sat by her, and upon my being in the last and silence, this malicious aid of her's to her, says, 'I am very glad to observe Sir says upon this subject, and seems resolved all his sentiments upon the matter when s to speak.' They both kept their countenance after I had sat half an hour meditating have before such profound casuists, I rose took my leave. Chance has since that time me very often in her way, and she as often ted a discourse to me which I could not understand.

This barbarity has kept me ever at a distance the most beautiful object my eyes ever. It is thus also she deals with all mankind, must make love to her as you would conquer a, by posing her. But were she like other and that there were any talking to her, how must the pleasure of that man be, who could with such a creature. But, after all, you are her heart is fixed on some one or other: I have been credibly informed—but who we half that is said?—after she had done to me, she put her hand to her bosom, and her tucker: then she cast her eyes a little on my beholding her too earnestly. They sings excellently: her voice in her ordinary is something in it inexpressibly sweet. You saw I dined with her at a public table the day first saw her, and she helped me to some the eye of all the gentlemen in the country.

certainly the finest haud of any woman in L. I can assure you, Sir, were you to be, you would be in the same condition; for speech is music, her form is angelic. But I saw irregular while I am talking of her; but would be stupidity to be unconcerned at action. Oh, the excellent creature! she is able to all women, as she is inaccessible to and my friend begin to rave, and insensibly towards the house, that we might be joined other company; and am convinced that the secret cause of all that inconsistency appears in some part of my friend's discourse; he has so much command of himself as not to mention her, yet according to that of which one knows not how to render into idum tacet hanc loquitur. I shall end this in that whole epigram, which represents with honour my honest friend's condition:— id agit Rufus, nihil est, nisi Navia Rufo, tacet, si flet, si tacet, hanc loquitur

Conat, propinat, poscit.

Navia: si non sit Ne

Scriberet hesternam, patr

Navia lux, inquit, Na

Let Rufus weep, rejoice

Still he can nothing but Let him eat, drink, ask

Still he must speak of N

He writ to his father, en

I am, my lovely Navia.

No. 114 ] WEDNESDAY

—Paupertatis pudor

—The dread of

Than to be thought neces

ECONOMY in our affairs, and our fortunes which give conversation. There are in both cases, which instead renders them both miserable had yesterday, at Sir R's tablemen who dined with glass was taken, by thoughtfully. Among other tolerable good aspect, of liquor than any of thought he did not taste grew warm, he was said, and as he advanced his humour grew worse, sternness seemed to be raised in his own mind, than the company. Upon he to be a gentleman of a county, but greatly unhappy man this peevish estate is dipped, and is yet he has not the heart proud stomach, at the constant inquietudes, dangerous nameless inconvenience his fortune, rather than of fewer hundreds: a commonly reputed. Thus poverty, to avoid the you go to his house, you in a manner that she that the master's mind certain waste and carrying, and the whole ingence, a magnificent cheerfulness which attended within compass, is a wretched way of service.

This gentleman's way of management, it would be, who had but and should take the character rather than of a small and keep in a man's hand really has, is of all vanity, and must in the guilty of it to dishonour in any county of Great in this fatal error; if a name, which proceeds appearing what they real behaviour would in a condition which they p

Laertes has fifteen hundred is mortgaged for six thousand

BRITISH ESSAYISTS.

old as much as four shillings anity of being ertes did this,
tune; but then at twelve hunther than this well-born beg-month charges
t more by the

whose way of ther. Irus is nertes by the action is of so
ved into this,
greatest of all erent. Shame
o unnecessary
entertainments.
self only plain
f, sell his own
self a labourer.
every day a stirs up Irus ess from it.

excesses which
and provision
g, extortion,
read of want;
the shame of
ely below the After we have necessary for men suitable
ities is a vice of necessities

out of nature, od sense. It
ead Mr. Cowmagnanimity
rable men, as distinguishing
hed his works,
his mind and his means he amous. That
erty with Mr.
described; and the same turn
y of the wisest strengthen his unkind.

of life, if, ac-
whom I lately himself what

He might by quility on this that he should own pleasures
would exempt ess men above
apt of happy
lling by some ut to be eter-
ure gain, and hall

RACE, 3 Oct. 1.

putting on unnecessary armour against improbable blows of fortune, is a mechanic being which has no good sense for its direction, but is carried on by sort of acquired instinct towards things below our consideration, and unworthy our esteem. It is possible that the tranquillity I now enjoy at Sir Roger's may have created in me this way of thinking, which is so abstracted from the common relish of the world; but as I am now in a pleasing arbour surrounded with a beautiful landscape, I find no inclination as strong as to continue in these mansions so remote from the ostentatious scenes of life; and am at this present writing philosopher enough to conclude with Mr. Cowley,

If e'er ambition did my fancy cheat With any wish so mean as to be great; Continue, Heav'n, still from me to remove The humble blessings of that life I love.

T

No. 115.] THURSDAY, JULY 12, 1711.

—Ut sit mens sana in corpore sano.

Jev. Sat. x. 236

Pray for a sound mind in a sound body.

BODILY labour is of two kinds,—either that which a man submits to for his livelihood, or that which he undergoes for his pleasure. The latter of these generally changes the name of labour for that of exercise, but differs only from ordinary labour as it rises from another motive.

A country life abounds in both these kinds of labour—and for that reason gives a man a great stock of health, and consequently a more perfect enjoyment of himself, than any other way of life. Consider the body as a system of tubes and glands, or, to use a more rustic phrase, a bundle of pipes and strainers, fitted to one another after so wonderful a manner as to make a proper engine for the soul to work with. This description does not comprehend the bowels, bones, tendons, veins, nerves and arteries, but every muscle and every ligament which is a composition of fibres, that are so many imperceptible tubes or pipes interwoven on all sides with invisible glands or strainers.

This general idea of a human body, without considering it in the niceties of anatomy, lets us see how absolutely necessary labour is for the right preservation of it. There must be frequent motions and agitations, to mix, digest, and separate the juices contained in it, as well as to clear and clean that infinitude of pipes and strainers of which it is composed, and to give their solid parts a more firm and lasting tone. Labour or exercise ferments the humours, casts them into their proper channels, throws off redundancies, and helps nature in those secret distributions, without which the body cannot subsist in its vigour, nor the soul act with cheerfulness.

I might here mention the effects which this has upon all the faculties of the mind, by keeping the understanding clear, the imagination untroubled, and refining those spirits which are necessary for the proper exertion of our intellectual faculties, during the present laws of union between soul and body. It is to a neglect in this particular that we must ascribe the spleen, which is so frequent in men of studious and sedentary tempers, as well as the vapours, which those of the other sex are so often subject to.

Had not exercise been absolutely necessary for our well-being, nature would not have made the body so proper for it, by giving such an activity to the limbs, and such a pliancy to every part as to reduce those compressions, extensions, dilations, and all other kinds of motions necessary for the preservation of such aubes and glands as has been before mentioned that we might not want inducements as in such an exercise of the body as is its welfare, it is so ordered that nothing be procured without it. Not to mention honour, even food and raiment are come at without the toil of the hands and the brows. Providence furnishes materials, that we should work them up ourselves. must be laboured before it gives its in- when it is forced into its several pro- many hands must they pass through y are fit for use! Manufactures, trade, diture, naturally employ more than nine- of the species in twenty; and as for those obliged to labour, by the condition in are born, they are more miserable than mankind, unless they indulge themselves luntary labour which goes by the name nd Sir Roger has been an indefatigable siness of this kind, and has hung several is house with the trophies of his former The walls of his great hall are covered orns of several kinds of deer that he has the chase, which he thinks the most va- niture of his house, as they afford him fre- cs of discourse, and shew that he has not

At the lower end of the hall is a large a stuffed with hay, which his mother or- hung up in that manner, and the knight n it with great satisfaction, because it as but nine years old when his dog killed ttle room adjoining to the hall is a kind filled with guns of several sizes and in- with which the knight has made great he woods, and destroyed many thousands ts, partridges, and woodcocks. His stable- atched with noses that belonged to foxes ight's own hunting down. Sir Roger one of them that for distinction sake has il struck through it, which cost him about riding, carried him through half a dozen killed him a brace of geldings, and lost his dogs. This the knight looks upon as e greatest exploits of his life. The per- ow, whom I have given some account of, leath of several foxes; for Sir Roger has hat in the course of his amours he patched n door of his stable. Whenever the widow the foxes were sure to pay for it. In pro- his passion for the widow abated and old on, he left off fox-hunting; but a hare is fe that sits within ten miles of his house. is no kind of exercise which I would so d to my readers of both sexes as this of there is none which so much conduces to d is every way accommodated to the body, to the idea which I have given of it. denham is very lavish in its praises; and glish reader would see the mechanical it described at length, he may find them in blished not many years since, under the edicina Gymnastica.* For my own part, n in town, for want of these opportunities, myself an hour every morning upon a that is placed in a corner of my room, and it pleases me the n thing that I require of it in My landlady and her acquainted with my hours come into my room to dist

When I was some year sent, I used to employ diversion, which I learned exercises that is written there called the fighting and consists in the brand grasped in each hand, and at either end. This open limbs, and gives a man without the blows. I could men would lay out that controversies and disput method of fighting with might conduce very much which makes them uneasy themselves.

To conclude, as I am a I consider myself as ob duties; and think I have the day when I do not th and exercise, as well as t temptation.

No. 116.] FRIDA

——— Vocat inges

Taygetique canes—

The echoing hills and THOSE who have search serve that nothing so m the soul, as that its felici man has such an activ will find out something whatever place or state heard of a gentleman w ment in the Bastille sever he amused himself in s about his chamber, gat placing them in differ great chair. He often that unless he had found verily believed he should

After what has been s readers that Sir Roger, they are at present prett youth gone through the diversions which the cou seem to be extremely v industry a man may ob degree than in towns hinted at some of my frie youthful days taken for season; and tired many sisting of but a single and good wishes of the tended him on account o wards foxes; having de in one year, than it wa could have produced. scruple to own among that in order to establish has secretly sent for gre other counties, which he

* This is Hieronymus Me Gymnasticæ apud Antiquos, See lib. iv. cap. 5, and lib. vi.

etter signalize
y. His hunt-managed in all of the praises
taked himself with great so-

or fox-hunting.
of his beagles
at these want ends for by the riety of their anner to each complete con-
that a gentle-
ery fine hound
by the servant
vility; but deog he had sent that at present ld I believe my ould certainly Theseus in the kind,

re hung
dew,
alian bulls,
like bells,
horn.

hat he has been
own; and upon his easy pad, I to make one of ased, as we rid lence of all the

The farmers'
y could open a sed by; which a smile, and a
cles.

home, we came men began to me, when, as I
of the company,
re-brake almost
way she took,
mpany sensible
o purpose, till
y extraordinary me and asked on my answer-
e dogs, and put re going off, I uttering to his ey had not lost
ut gentleman's

g hedges, made rom whence I chase, without unds. The hare
le behind her;
ead of running
guage, "flying
ight have done,
sort of circle
station, in such et view of the y, and the dogs

h small spots.

some time afterward unravelling the whole track she had made, and following her through all her doubles.
I was at the same time delighted in observing that deference which the rest of the pack paid to each particular hound, according to the character he had acquired among them. If they were at fault, and an old hound of reputation opened but once, he was immediately followed by the whole cry; while a raw dog, or one who was a noted liar, might have yelped his heart out, without being taken notice of.

The hare now, after having squatted two or three times, and being put up again as often, came still nearer to the place where she was at first started.
The dogs pursued her, and these were followed by the jolly knight, who rode upon a white gelding, encompassed by his tenants and servants, and cheering his hounds with all the gaiety of five-and-twenty.
One of the sportsmen rode up to me, and told me that he was sure the chase was almost at an end, because the old dogs, which had hitherto lain behind now headed the pack. The fellow was in the right.
Our hare took a large field just under us, followed by the full cry in view. I must confess the brightness of the weather, the cheerfulness of every thing around me, the chiding of the hounds, which we returned upon us in a double echo from two neighbouring hills, with the hallooing of the sportsmen and the sounding of the horn, lifted my spirits into a most lively pleasure, which I freely indulged because I was sure it was innocent. If I was under any concern, it was on account of the poor hare, that was now quite spent, and almost within the reach of her enemies; when the huntsman getting forward threw down his pole before the dogs. They were now within eight yards of that game which they had been pursuing for almost as many hours; yet on the signal before-mentioned they all made a sudden stand, and though they continued opening as much as before, durst not once attempt to pass beyond the pole. At the same time Sir Roger rode forward and alighting, took up the hare in his arms; when he soon after delivered her up to one of his servants with an order if she could be kept alive, to let her go in his great orchard; where it seems he has several of these prisoners of war, who live together in very comfortable captivity. I was highly pleased to see the discipline of the pack, and the good-nature of the knight, who could not find in his heart to murder a creature that had given him so much diversion.

As we were returning home, I remembered that Monsieur Paschal, in his most excellent discourse on the Misery of Man, tells us, that all our endeavours after greatness proceed from nothing but desire of being surrounded by a multitude of persons and affairs that may hinder us from looking in ourselves, which is a view we cannot bear. He afterwards goes on to shew that our love of sports comes from the same reason, and is particularly severe upon hunting. "What," says he, "unless it be drown thought, can make them throw away so much time and pains upon a silly animal, which they might buy cheaper in the market?" The foregoing reflection is certainly just, when a man suffers his whole mind to be drawn into his sports, and altogether loses himself in the woods; but does not affect those who propose a far more laudable end from this exercise, I mean the preservation of health, and keep all the organs of the soul in a condition to execute her orders. Had that incomparable person whom I last quoted been a little more indulgent to himself in this point, the world might probably have joyed him much longer; whereas, through too great an application to his studies in his youth, he contracted that ill habit of body, which, after a tedious sickness, carried him off in the fortieth year of his age; and the whole history we have of his life till that time, is but one continued account of the behaviour of a noble soul struggling under innumerable pains and distempers.

For my own part, I intend to hunt twice a week during my stay with Sir Roger; and shall prescribe the moderate use of this exercise to all my country friends, as the best kind of physic for mending a bad constitution, and preserving a good one.

I cannot do this better, than in the following lines out of Mr. Dryden:

The first physicians by debauch were made;
Excess began, and Sloth sustains the trade.
By chase our long-liv'd fathers earn'd their food;
Till strung the nerves, and purify'd the blood;
But we their sons, a pamper'd race of men, Are dwindled down to three-score years and ten.
Better to hunt in fields for health unbought,
Than fee the doctor for a nauseous draught.
The wise for cure on exercise depend;
God never made his work for man to mend.

X.

No. 117.] SATURDAY, JULY 14, 1711.

— Ipsi sibi somnia fingunt.—VINO. Ecl. viii. 108.

With voluntary dreams they cheat their minds.

THERE are some opinions in which a man should stand neuter, without engaging his assent to one side or the other. Such a hovering faith as this, which refuses to settle upon his determination, is absolutely necessary in a mind that is careful to avoid errors and prepossessions. When the arguments press equally on both sides in matters that are indifferent to us, the safest method is to give up ourselves to neither.

It is with this temper of mind that I consider the subject of witchcraft. When I hear the relations that are made from all parts of the world, not only from Norway and Lapland, from the East and West Indies, but from every particular nation in Europe, I cannot forbear thinking that there is such an intercourse and commerce with evil spirits, as that which we express by the name of witchcraft. But when I consider that the ignorant and credulous parts of the world abound most in these relations, and the persons among us, who are supposed to engage in such an infernal commerce, are people of a weak understanding and crazed imagination—and at the same time reflect upon the many impostures and delusions of this nature that have been detected in all ages, I endeavour to suspend my belief till I hear more certain accounts than any which have yet come to my knowledge. In short, when I consider the question, whether there are such persons in the world as those we call witches, my mind is divided between two opposite opinions, or, rather (to speak my thoughts freely) I believe in general that there is, and has been, such a thing as witchcraft; but at the same time can give no credit to any particular instance of it.

I am engaged in this speculation, by some occurrences that I met with yesterday, which I shall give my reader an account of at large. As I was walking with my friend Sir Roger by the side of one of his woods, an old woman applied herself to me for my charity. Her dress and figure put me in mind of the following description in Otway:

In a close time, as I pursu'd my journey, I spy'd a wrinkled hag, with age grown double.

Picking o
Her eyes
Cold pale
And on h
The tatter
Which s
So there
Her lower
With diff
And seen

As I was
ing it with me, that th
a witch all served to be not a swite
did not be of miles.

found stick
before her,
and cried a
to conclud wards. Th would take bag of mot Moll White
several im
her. If th come so soc
the bottom
stable, Mo
hare makes the huntst Sir Roger,
upon such see if Moll

This acc begged my hovel, whic
of the wood winked to behind the found to be he whisper
cat that se
old knight White her accompany to have spo
have playe ordinary ca

I was se
so much w time could who is a li
her as a ju with the d
bour's catt
which was

In our Moll had b children sp and that into a pon
day, if it w

I have s
was severa
been brou
would freq sessions, h
suaded him

I have b because I that has argeable to a atch, and fills

cies, imagin-
In the mean
ent occasion
ed at herself,
es and fami-
a delirious
ity from the pires people or decrepid nature is de-
L.

6, 1711.

En. iv. 73.

—DRYDEN.

th so many f a wood, in that one can labyrinth of
e in the city,
site that the ight raises us
g enough to state of mind
f waters, the
and whether he earth, or ll struck with the voice of d insensibly
ow. "This most unintel-
she does not.
hat she doth
y resolution
, or that she en merit, she any ill con-
her rage or inst which it thoughts are object, must in conversa-
indeed per-
?—because not approach
ecked by too rms are not ed to worship
shed her un-
y of serving
ery imagina-ged! Well, upon her ac-
descended to een for that

ontinued he,
set a mark
le the most o observe in the merit of
y. Orestilla nger of sur-
least indif-
w acquaint-
th the old.

Themista, her favourite woman, is every whit as careful of, whom she speaks to, and what she says. Let the ward be a beauty, her confidant shall treat you with an air of distance; let her be a fortune, and she assumes the suspicious behaviour of her friend and patroness. Thus it is that very many of our unmarried women of distinction are to all intents and purposes married, except the consideration of different sexes. They are directly under the conduct of their whisperer; and think they are in a state of freedom, while they can prate with one of these attendants of all men in general, and still avoid the man they most like. You do not see one heiress in a hundred whose fate does not turn upon this circumstance of choosing a confidant. Thus it is that the lady is addressed to, presented, and flattered, only by proxy, in her woman. In my case, how is it possible that — Sir Roger was proceeding in his harangue, when we heard the voice of one speaking very importunately, and repeating these words, "What, not one smile?" We followed the sound till we came to a close thicket, on the other side of which we saw a young woman sitting as it were in a personated sullenness just over a transparent fountain. Opposite to her stood Mr. William, Sir Roger's master of the game. The knight whispered me, "Hist, these are lovers." The huntsman looking earnestly at the shadow of the young maiden in the stream—"Oh thou dear picture, if thou couldst remain there in the absence of that fair creature whom you represent in the water, how willingly could I stand here satisfied for ever, without troubling my dear Betty herself with any mention of her unfortunate William, whom she is angry with! But alas! when she pleases to be gone, thou wilt also vanish—yet let me talk to thee while thou dost stay. Tell my dearest Betty thou dost not more depend upon her than does her William; her absence will make away with me as well as thee. If she offers to remove thee, I will jump into these waves to lay hold on thee—herself, her own dear person, I must never embrace again. Still do you hear me without one smile.—It is too much to bear." He had no sooner spoken these words, but he made an offer of throwing himself into the water: at which his mistress started up, and at the next instant he jumped across the fountain, and met her in an embrace. She, half recovering from her fright, said in the most charming voice imaginable, and with a tone of complaint, "I thought how well you would drown yourself. No, no, you will not drown yourself till you have taken your leave of Susan Holiday." The huntsman, with a tenderness that spoke the most passionate love, and with his cheek close to hers, whispered the softest vows of fidelity in her ear, and cried, "Do not, my dear, believe a word Kate Willow says; she is spiteful, and makes stories, because she loves to hear me talk to herself for your sake." "Look you there," quoth Sir Roger, "do you see there, all mischief comes from confidants! But let us not interrupt them; the maid is honest, and the man dare not be otherwise, for he knows I loved her father: I will interpose in this matter, and hasten the wedding. Kate Willow is a witty mischievous wench in the neighbourhood, who was a beauty; and makes me hope I shall see the perverse widow in her condition. She was so flippant in her answers to all the honest fellows that came near her, and so very vain of her beauty, that she has valued herself upon her charms till they have ceased. She therefore now makes it her business to prevent other young women from being more discreet than she was never, the saucy thing said the other day to Sir Roger and I must make a match, both despised by those we loved.' The great deal of power wherever she comes, and her share of cunning.

When I reflect upon this woman, I do not, in the main, I am the worse for her: whenever she is recalled to my mind, my youth returns, and I feel a forgotten my veins. This affliction in my life has been my conduct with a softness, of which I have been incapable. It is owing to this dear image in my heart that I am not, that I easily forgive, and that many things are grown into my temper, which I have arrived at by better motives than that of being one day hers. I am pretty much such a passion as I have had is never far from me, and between you and me, I am often sure it has had some whimsical effect upon me. I frequently find, that in my most serious I let fall some comical familiarity of words, which makes the company laugh. I cannot but allow she is a most excellent friend. When she is in the country, I warrant she is in dairies, but reads upon the nature of the soil, but has a glass hive, and comes into the house of books to see them work, and observe the progress of their commonwealth. She understands, I would give ten pounds to hear her talk. My friend Sir Andrew Freeport about her, no, for all she looks so innocent as it may be, for word for it she is no fool."—T.

9.1 TUESDAY, JULY 17, 1711.

a dicunt Romani, Melibiose, putavi me autem nostrum similem.—VIRG. Ecl. l. 20.
we call Rome, unskilful clown, resembled this our humble town.—WARTON.

and most obvious reflections which arise from the change of the city for the country, are the different manners of the people whom he meets in those two different scenes of life. By the one we do not mean morals, but behaviour and conversation, as they shew themselves in the town and country.

In the first place I must observe a very great change that has happened in this article of conversation. Several obliging deferences, compliments, and submissions, with many outward ceremonious that accompany them, were brought up among the politer part of the world in courts and cities, and distinguished themselves from the rustic part of the species of men on occasions acted bluntly and naturally. Mutual complaisance and intercourse of these forms of conversation by degrees grew troublesome; the modish world set a constraint in them, and have therefrom most of them aside. Conversation, like religion, was so encumbered with show, that it stood in need of a reformation in its superfluities, and restore it to its nature and beauty. At present, therefore, a plain carriage, and a certain openness of conversation are the height of good-breeding. The world is grown free and easy; our manners are loose upon us. Nothing is so modish as to be negligent. In a word, good conversation is itself most, where to an ordinary eye it is least.

If after this we look out into the country, we find in them the same. They have no sooner felt the influence of the fashions of the polite world, than they are nearer to the same refinements which are in the court, and still prevailed. We now know a man that never was by his excess of good-breeding. An esquire shall make you a visit an hour, as would serve a country gentleman is infinitely more to do all in a meeting of justices' or of duchesses.

This rural politeness is a great part of my temper, who generally next me, and walk first or last, as chance directs. Sir Roger's dinner almost always could adjust the ceremony to sit down; and have heard when I have seen him for guests, as they sat at the table, that he might drink their health in their respective ranks and qualities, who I should have thought infected with ceremony, and trouble in this particular. Being all the morning, he was never until I am served. When he is in the hall, he runs behind the scenes, where we were walking in the fields, and I came up to it, and upon my return to get over, told me with a great deal of belief they had no manner of ceremony.

There has happened a great deal of point of good-breeding, which is a great point of conversation among men of modish look upon as very extraordinary. One of the first distinctions of conversation express every thing that is the appearance of being obscene and vulgar phrases; whilst the delicacy of conception and the ideas in those plain homely expressions are obvious and natural. This was perhaps carried to an excess, and conversation too stiff, formal, and reason (as hypocrisy is succeeded by atheism in another great measure relapsed into that at present several of particularly those who have made use of the most common language, and utter it in a manner as a clown would.

This infamous piece of conversation reigns among the coxcombs, and made its way into the country, and is so sensible for such an irrational creature last long among a people of religion, or show of modesty. Men get into it, they will not lurch. Their good-breeding is in them, and they will be the clowns, while they fancy they like men of wit and pleasure.

As the two points of good conversation hitherto insisted upon, conversation, there is a third. In this, too, the country and the rural beaux are not yet revolution, but

d laced hats,
still trying to head-dresses.
on the western
an account of
prevail in the ich he passes, ast topic till I ich I expect

Y 18, 1711.

itus illis Georg. l. 415.

erry with me
ne among his hrice looking tting an hour
ns. He tells ted with every articular cock
that his ducks
than himself.
sted with those
be made in a very much lain
cannot forbear
veral remarks
nd comparing ervation: the n the natural
emonstrative.
ifferent from
is not the least
es of any one,
roper for that any other cast

creatures are tual call upon
ter to preserve

ferent degrees
to the young,
the leaving a
eggs as chance
arther; as in-ers, of a nicer
t them in, and ecrocodile, and tend the birth

h directs every ticular plan in s all the same

It cannot be row under a
orks of its own
me, to the lay-ts of the same
were animals
as man, their s, according to would propose

ne temper of
nth in animals,
and the fields

with grass, for their security and concealment, and produce such infinite swarms of insects for the support and sustenance of their respective broods?

Is it not wonderful that the love of the parent should be so violent while it lasts, and that it should last no longer than is necessary for the preservation of the young?

The violence of this natural love is exemplified by a very barbarous experiment; which I shall quote at length, as I find it in an excellent author, and hope my readers will pardon the mentioning such an instance of cruelty, because there is nothing can so effectually shew the strength of that principle in animals of which I am here speaking. "A person who was well skilled in dissections opened a bitch and as she lay in the most exquisite tortures, offered her one of her young puppies, which she immediately fell a licking; and for the time seemed insensible of her own pain. On the removal, she kept her eye fixed on it, and began a wailing sort of cry which seemed rather to proceed from the loss of her young one, than the sense of her own torments."

But notwithstanding this natural love in brutes much more violent and intense than in rational creatures, Providence has taken care that it should be no longer troublesome to the parent than it is useful to the young; for so soon as the wants of the latter cease, the mother withdraws her fondness, and leaves them to provide for themselves; and what a very remarkable circumstance in this part of instinct, we find that the love of the parent may be lengthened out beyond its usual time, if the preservation of the species requires it; as we may see in birds that drive away their young as soon as they are able to get their livelihood, but continue to feed them if they are tied to the nest, or confined within a cage, or by any other means appear to be out of a condition of supplying their own necessities.

This natural love is not observed in animals ascend from the young to the parent, which is not at all necessary for the continuance of the species nor indeed in reasonable creatures does it rise in proportion, as it spreads itself downward; for in family affection, we find protection granted and favours bestowed, are greater motives to love and tenderness, than safety, benefits, or life received.

One would wonder to hear sceptical men dispute for the reason of animals, and telling us it is on our pride and prejudices that will not allow the the use of that faculty.

Reason shews itself in all occurrences of life whereas the brute makes no discovery of such a talent, but in what immediately regards his own preservation or the continuance of his species. Animals in their generation are wiser than the sons of men; but their wisdom is confined to a few particulars, and lies in a very narrow compass. Take the brute out of his instinct, and you find him wholly deprived of understanding. To use an instance that comes often under observation:

With what caution does the hen provide herself nest in places unfrequented, and free from noise and disturbance! when she has laid her eggs in such manner that she can cover them, what care does she take in turning them frequently, that all parts may partake of the vital warmth! when she leaves the nest to provide for her necessary sustenance, how punctually does she return before they have time to cool and become incapable of producing an animal! In the summer you see her giving herself greater freedoms, and quitting her care for above two hours together; but in winter, when the rigour of the chill the principles of life, and destroy one, she grows more assiduous in her attendance, and stays away but half the time. When she approaches, with how much nicety and does she help the chick to break its prison! notice of her covering it from the injurious weather, providing it proper nourishment, and helping it to help itself; not to mention her forethought, if after the usual time of reckoning one does not make its appearance. A generation could not be followed with greater patience, than is seen in the hatching of a egg, though there are many birds that shew an greater sagacity in all the forementioned at the same time the hen, that has all this gentility (which is indeed absolutely necessary for propagation of the species), considered in all respects, is without the least glimmering of common sense. She mistakes a piece of straw for an egg, and sits upon it in the same manner as if it were; is insensible of any increase or diminution of those she lays. She does not distinguish between her own and those of another bird, and when the birth appears of never so odd a bird, will cherish it for her own. In all instances, which do not carry an immediate advantage to the subsistence of herself or her species, she is a very idiot.

It is not, in my opinion, any thing more mysterious than this instinct in animals, which is above reason, and falls infinitely short of what is not to be accounted for by any properties in the matter, but at the same time works after so odd a manner, that one cannot think it the faculty of an inferior being. For my own part, I look upon this as the principle of gravitation in bodies, which is not to be explained by any known qualities in the bodies themselves, nor from the laws of natural philosophy, but according to the best notions of the great philosophers, is an immediate impression of the first mover, and the divine energy actuates.—L.

1. THURSDAY, JULY 19, 1711.

— Jovis omnia plena.—VIRG. Ecl. iii. 60.

— All things are full of Jove.

As I was walking this morning in the great yard of my friend's country house, I was very much pleased to see the different workings of nature in a hen followed by a brood of ducks. The hen, upon the sight of a pond, immediately ran to the water, and huddled the step-mother, with all imaginary fondness, over the borders of it, to call them to the element that appeared to her so dangerous. As the different principle which actuates these different animals cannot be termed instinct, when we call it instinct, we mean something we have no knowledge of. To me, as I hinted in my paper, it seems the immediate direction of the Supreme, and such an operation of the Supreme that which determines all the portions of the world to their proper centres. A modern philosopher, Monsieur Bayle in his learned treatise on the Souls of Brutes, delivers the same notion in a bolder form of words, where he says, est anima brutarum, "God himself is the instinct of the brute." Who can tell what to call that sagacity in animals, which directs them to do as is proper for them, and makes them avoid whatever is noxious or unwholesome?

Tully has observed, that a child, though it has its mother, but immediately it applies itself to the teat, which tells us, that when seamed upon the unknown coasts of Asia, upon the fruit of any tree may appear, unless they are with the pecking of birds, fear or apprehension wherefore them.

But notwithstanding the use of reason, we find the parts of our nature, the greatest strength and power, worth our observation, the prey are wonderfully subduer, and all the other animals animate them in search of those that are incapable of annoying others, or whose flight, are suspicious, feel every thing they see or hear of assistance and use to be armed with something mild means are qualified for a the passions generally co the body. We do not find weak and defenceless and meekness of a lamb in a and assault as the lion. I find that particular animals, exquisite sharpness and senses which most turn to which their safety and well.

Nor must we here omit with which nature has diff of several kinds of animals, horns, teeth, and tusks, a proboscis. It is likewise that it must be some hidden what we call reason, while use of these their arms, and them to the best advantage defend themselves with strength lies, before the is remarkable in lambs, within doors and never a species, push at those who foreheads, before the first.

I shall add to these instances, which Mr. Locke dence even in the imper seems the meanest and in animal world. "We make of an oyster, or not so many nor so quick as other animals; nor in state and incapacity of place to another, be better would sight and hearing move itself to or from the stance it perceives good quickness of sensation animal that must be substituted it, and there warmer, clean or foul was to it?"

I shall add to this instance other out of the learned Cardan, in relation to ad dence has left defective, shewn its wisdom in the

"What is
e; and yet vidence than xactly fitted
er dwelling
to be seen,
yes, that nave any sight
e is capable
er, she has
she is ex-er short tail
d with short
ose they are,
ground, and hey that bee, therefore,
n will serve
her fore-feet
ch earth at because she
t or mouse,
r the earth,
e. And she ment, which ater, it had a train be-
on her rear, leted or got

yle's remark
r somewhere
mole be not she has not jects. Her it, which is t of nothing
obably pain-
nes up into being taken,
riking upon
to bury her-t would be atal.

as seem the Providence
se creatures,
the several towed upon
ed and com-ding to the
d.

d compile a
could be ga-
ons. If the is particular
of its origi-
hostilities,
re of its iny those that
th their pe-
which Pro-
e of the best
y, and not a
e Contriver;
fter all the
nitely short illions of
ble artifices
ling wilder-
never come
re infinitely

more species of creatures which are not to be seen without, nor indeed with, the help of the finest glasses, than of such as are bulky enough for the naked eye to take hold of. However, from the consideration of such animals as lie within the compass of our knowledge, we might easily form a conclusion of the rest; that the same variety of wisdom and goodness runs through the whole creation, and puts every creature in a condition to provide for its safety and subsistence in its proper station.

Tully has given us an admirable sketch of natural history, in his second book concerning the Nature of the Gods; and that in a style so raised by metaphors and descriptions, that it lifts the subject above raillery and ridicule, which frequently fall on such nice observations when they pass through the hands of an ordinary writer.—L.

No. 122.] FRIDAY, JULY 20, 1711.

Comes Jucundus in via pro vehiculo est.—PONT. SYR. FRAG.

An agreeable companion upon the road is as good as a coach.

A MAN'S first care should be to avoid the reproaches of his own heart; his next, to escape the censures of the world. If the last interferes with the former, it ought to be entirely neglected; but otherwise there cannot be a greater satisfaction to an honest mind, than to see those approbations which it gives itself, seconded by the applauses of the public. A man is more sure of his conduct, when the verdict which he passes upon his own behaviour is thus warranted and confirmed by the opinion of all that know him.

My worthy friend Sir Roger is one of those who is not only at peace within himself, but beloved and esteemed by all about him. He receives a suitable tribute for his universal benevolence to mankind, in the returns of affection and good-will which are paid him by every one that lives in his neighbourhood. I lately met with two or three odd instances of that general respect which is shown to the good old knight. He would needs carry Will Wimble and myself with him to the county assizes. As we were upon the road, Will Wimble joined a couple of plain men who rid before us, and conversed with them for some time; during which my friend Sir Roger acquainted me with their characters.

"The first of them," says he, "that has a spaniel by his side, is a yeoman of about a hundred pounds a-year, an honest man. He is just within the game-act, and qualified to kill a hare or a pheasant. He knocks down a dinner with his gun twice or thrice a week; and by that means lives much cheaper than those who have not so good an estate as himself. He would be a good neighbour if he did not destroy so many partridges. In short, he is a very sensible man—shoots flying—and has been several times foreman of the petty-jury."

"The other that rides along with him is Tom Touchy, a fellow famous for taking 'the law' of every body. There is not one in the town where he lives that he has not sued at a quarter-sessions. The rogue had once the impudence to go to law with the widow. His head is full of costs, damages, and ejectments. He plagued a couple of honest gentlemen so long for a trespass in breaking one of his hedges, till he was forced to sell the ground it enclosed to defray the charges of the prosecution. His father left him fourscore pounds a year; but he has cast and been cast so often, that he is not now worth

I suppose he is going upon the old business blow-tree."

Roger was giving me this account of Tom Will Wimble and his two companions short till we came up to them. After having respects to Sir Roger, Will told him that chy and he must appeal to him upon a dis- arose between them. Will, it seems, had ing his fellow-traveller an account of his one day in such a hole; when Tom Touchy, of hearing out his story, told him that Mr. me, if he pleased, might "take the law of r fishing in that part of the river. My r Roger heard them both upon a round trot; r having paused some time, told them with of a man who would not give his judgment that "much might be said on both sides." ere neither of them dissatisfied with the determination, because neither of them self in the wrong by it. Upon which we best of our way to the assizes.

ourt was sat before Sir Roger came; but tanding all the justices had taken their on the bench, they made room for the old & the head of them; who for his reputation untry took occasion to whisper in the judge's t he was glad his lordship had met with so od weather in his circuit. I was listening roceedings of the court with much attention, itely pleased with that great appearance of y which so properly accompanies such a publi- cation of our laws; when, after about an iting, I observed, to my great surprise, in st of a trial, Sir Roger was getting up to I was in some pain for him, until I found he itted himself of two or three sentences with much business and great intrepidity. his first rising the court was hushed, and a whisper ran among the country people, that s "was up." The speech he made was so the purpose, that I shall not trouble my with an account of it; and I believe was not designed by the knight himself to inform t, as to give him a figure in my eye, and his credit in the country.

highly delighted, when the court rose, to see lemen of the country gathering about my old and striving who should compliment him t the same time that the ordinary people pon him at a distance, not a little admiring age, that he was not afraid to speak to the r return home we met with a very odd acci- hich I cannot forbear relating, because it ow desirous all who know Sir Roger are of im marks of their esteem. When we were upon the verge of his estate, we stopped at a to rest ourselves and our horses. The man ouse had, it seems, been formerly a servant night's family; and to do honour to his old had some time since, unknown to Sir Roger, up in a sign-post before the door; so that plat's head hung out upon the road about a bre he himself knew anything of the matter. as Sir Roger was acquainted with it, finding servant's indiscretion proceeded wholly from and good-will, he only told him that he had m too high a compliment; and when the eemed to think that could hardly be, added ore decisive look, that it was too great an or any man under a duke; but told him at time, that it might be altered with a very few touches, and that charge of it. According knight's directions to e face, and by a little ag change it to the Saracen known this story, had Roger's alighting, told honour's head was brot ations that he had ord this, my friend, with b the particulars above- head to be brought in bear discovering great ordinary upon the app under which, notwith and stare in a most e still discover a distant. Sir Roger, upon seeing him truly if I thought him in that disguise. I but upon the knight's whether it was not st Saracen, I composed manner I could, and be said on both sides."

These several adven- haviour in them, gave I met with in any of m

No. 123.] SATUR

Doctrina sed vim pro Rectique cultus pect Utunque defecere n Dedecorant bene nat

Yet the best blood be
And virtue arms the Whilst vice will stain
And the paternal sta

As I was yesterday friend Sir Roger, we ruddy young man who couple of servants belong who he was, Sir Roger tleman of a considera- cated by a tender moth from the place where a lady, says my friend, h son's health, that she h She quickly found that and that writing made loose among the woods on horseback, or to ea To be brief, I found, b that he had got a great else; and that if it v live, there would not b fellow in the whole cot

The truth of it is, si I have seen and hear young heirs and elde their own reflecting up to, and therefore think unnecessary, or from quently inculcated to servants and domestic thought prevailing in their education, are of up their families, an houses in a line to pos

This makes me of heard of two friends, v al of it may,

me circum-
ake a novel,

l with small
good sense
studies to-into such a

Eudoxus,
himself into ents and his one post to very consi-
ary, sought
study, con-
acquainted ost eminent

He knew
s, with the ould scarce
y person in alked to or digested
e made one
ge. During he kept up
who often men about eived from of forty (au r, "there is ed, pursuant beginning of der of their they both of

Leontine,
at a farm of the neigh-
purchased
were both of xus having ter; but to young wife
o) died in a
r. His af-
had not he versations
alking toge-
e, consider-daughter a Eudoxus rea son who estate, they en, namely,
ntine as his Eudoxus as em arrived
xus, know-
antageously
e, and cone perpetu-
s prevailed efore took l, and edu-
friends on an habitual
er their dis-sion of a
y. Florio, Leontine;
imaginable
oice at the sight of Eudoxus, who visited his friend very frequently, and was dictated by his natural affection, as well as by the rules of prudence, to make himself esteemed and beloved by Florio. The boy was now old enough to know his supposed father's circumstances, and that therefore he had to make his way in the world by his own industry. This consideration grew stronger in him every day, and produced so good an effect, that he applied himself with more than ordinary attention to the pursuits of every thing which Leontine recommended to him. His natural abilities, which were very good, assisted by the directions of so excellent a counsellor, enabled him to make a quicker progress than ordinary through all the parts of his education. Before he was twenty years of age, having finished his studies and exercises with great applause, he was removed from the university to the inns of court, where there are very few that make themselves considerable proficient in the studies of the place, who know they shall arrive at great estates without them. This was not Florio's case; he found that three hundred a year was but a poor estate for Leontine and himself to live upon, so that he studied without intermission till he gained a very good insight into the constitution and laws of his country.

I should have told my reader that, whilst Florio lived at the house of his foster-father, he was always an acceptable guest in the family of Eudoxus, where he became acquainted with Leonilla from her infancy. His acquaintance with her by degrees grew into love, which in a mind trained up in all the sentiments of honour and virtue became a very uneasy passion. He despaired of gaining an heiress of so great a fortune and would rather have died than attempted it by any indirect methods. Leonilla, who was a woman of the greatest beauty, joined with the greatest modesty, entertained at the same time a secret passion for Florio, but conducted herself with so much prudence that she never gave him the least intimation of it. Florio was now engaged in all those arts and improvements that are proper to raise a man's private fortune and give him a figure in his country, but secretly tormented with that passion which burns with the greatest fury in a virtuous and noble heart, when he received a sudden summons from Leontine to repair to him in the country the next day: for it seems Eudoxus was so filled with the report of his son's reputation, that he could no longer withhold making himself known to him. The morning after his arrival at the house of his supposed father, Leontine told him that Eudoxus had something of great importance to communicate to him; upon which the good man embraced him, and wept. Florio was no sooner arrived at the great house that stood in his neighbourhood, but Eudoxus took him by the hand, after the first salutes were over, and conducted him into his closet. He there opened to him the whole secret of his parentage and education, concluding after this manner: "I have no other way left of acknowledging my gratitude to Leontine, than by marrying you to his daughter. He shall not lose the pleasure of being your father by the discovery I have made to you. Leonilla, too, shall be still my daughter: her filial piety, though misplaced, has been so exemplary, that it deserves the greatest reward I can confer upon it.
You shall have the pleasure of seeing a great estate fall to you, which you would have lost the relish of had you known yourself born to it. Continue only to deserve it in the same manner you did before you were possessed of it. I have left your mother in the text room. Her heart yearns towards you. She is making the same discoveries to Leonilla which I have made to yourself." Florio was so overwhelmed with this profusion of happiness, that he was not able to make a reply, but threw himself down at his father's feet, and, amidst a flood of tears, kissed and embraced his knees, asking his blessing, and expressing in dumb show those sentiments of love, duty, and gratitude, that were too big for utterance. To conclude, the happy pair were married, and half Eudoxus's estate settled upon them. Leontine and Eudoxus passed the remainder of their lives together; and receiving in the dutiful and affectionate behaviour of Florio and Leonilla the just recompense, as well as the natural effects, of that care which they had bestowed upon them in their education.—L.

No. 124.] MONDAY, JULY 23, 1711.

A great book is a great evil.

A MAN who publishes his works in a volume, has an infinite advantage over one who communicates his writings to the world in loose tracts and single pieces. We do not expect to meet with any thing in a bulky volume, till after some heavy preamble, and several words of course, to prepare the reader for what follows. Nay, authors have established it as a kind of rule, that a man ought to be dull sometimes; as the most severe reader makes allowances for many rests and nodding-places in a voluminous writer. This gave occasion to the famous Greek proverb, which I have chosen for my motto, that, "a great book is a great evil."

On the contrary, those who publish their thoughts in distinct sheets, and as it were by piece-meal, have none of these advantages. We must immediately fall into our subject, and treat every part of it in a lively manner, or our papers are thrown by as dull and insipid. Our matter must lie close together, and either be wholly new in itself, or in the turn it receives from our expressions. Were the books of our best authors thus to be retailed by the public, and every page submitted to the taste of forty or fifty thousand readers, I am afraid we should complain of many flat expressions, trivial observations, beaten topics, and common thoughts, which go off very well in the lump. At the same time, notwithstanding some papers may be made up of broken hints and irregular sketches, it is often expected that every sheet should have been a kind of treatise, and make out in thought what it wants in bulk: that a point of humour should be worked up in all its parts; and a subject touched upon in its most essential articles, without the repetitions, tautologies, and enlargements, that are indulged in longer labours. The ordinary writers of morality prescribe to their readers after the Galenic way; their medicines are made up in large quantities. An essay-writer must practise in the chemical method, and give the virtue of a full draught in a few drops. Were all books reduced thus to their quintessence, many a bulky author would make his appearance in a penny-paper. There would be scarce such a thing in nature as a folio; the works of an age would be contained on a few shelves; not to mention millions of volumes that would be utterly annihilated.

I cannot think that the difficulty of furnishing out separate papers of this nature has hindered authors from communicating their thoughts to the world after such a manner: though I must confess I am amazed that the press should be only made use of in this manner of parties; as if mankind, to be instructed, were to be taught in politics by bands and societies. Had the philosophers who took so much pains to be so kind, and leave the world to find out what they found it; had the art of printing, which has made such a difference in their lectures, would be of good use to diffuse good sense, and clear up their ideas with virtue, discretion, or unbend the rigid maxims, with intelligence, instead of being confined in libraries and the public; which has exposed us to reflecting upon the dominion of the streets; she cries in the opening of her words, saying love simplicity, scorning? And

The many lessons of the best sense of their character little encourage undertaking: the demand for is at his instance, calculations to the made up separate those relating to or subjects of.

I am not at my works thrown. There is a kind hangs upon the thick for know are not to be e

—No

Black night

To these I must after having come of his sight, was spectacles; but of them, his most spectacles, though could be of no for the benefit daily essays.

But besides there are other it is said in the wolf to another is a mole to and discover beautiful eyes only for see the light, and their namesake them; they in and withdraw se dark una string of e of my pay moles.

, 1711.

En. vi. 832.

et,
breast.
DRYDEN.

are talking
y tells us an
as a school-
ods ran high liers. This ng, had oc-
St. Anne's-
spoke to, in-um a young ade Anne a u, inquired
to Anne's-
or his pains,
as told that
, and would s," says Sir
the former
of the neighame of that ound out the g offence to this narra-
t parties do
ghbourhood, nother; be-judice of the
ne.
ent befall a division as
and makes e to one an-different na-
pernicious
to those ad-
enemy, but in the heart is influence their under-on, and not e.

s in its full
bloodshed;
ts naturally
lummy, and a word, it
and extin-
compassion,

man should
; because,"
on some oc-
if you hate icious habit
upon those different to sharably this malignity of rom its object). answers to that great rule which was dictated to the world about a hundred years before this philosopher wrote;* but instead of that, I shall only take notice, with a real grief of heart, that the minds of many good men among us appear soured with party principles, and alienated from one another in such a manner as seems to me altogether inconsistent with the dictates either of reason or religion. Zeal for a public cause is apt to breed passions in the hearts of virtuous persons, to which the regard of their own private interest would never have betrayed them.

If this party-spirit has so ill an effect on our morals, it has likewise a very great one upon our judgments. We often hear a poor insipid paper or pamphlet cried up, and sometimes a noble piece deprecated, by those who are of a different principle from the author. One who is actuated by this spirit is almost under an incapacity of discerning either real blemishes or beauties. A man of merit in a different principle, is like an object seen in two different mediums, that appears crooked or broken however straight and entire it may be in itself. For this reason there is scarce a person of any figure in England, who does not go by two contrary characters, as opposite to one another as light and darkness. Knowledge and learning suffer in a particular manner from this strange prejudice, which at present prevails amongst all ranks and degrees in the British nation. As men formerly became eminent in learned societies by their parts and acquisition; they now distinguish themselves by the warmth and violence with which they espouse their respective parties.—Books are valued upon the like considerations. An abusive, scurrilous style passes for satire and a dull scheme of party notions is called fine writing.

There is one piece of sophistry practised by both sides—and that is, the taking any scandalous story that has been ever whispered or invented of a private man for a known undoubted truth, and raising suitable speculations upon it. Calumnies that have never been proved, or have been often refuted, as the ordinary postulatums of these infamous scribbles upon which they proceed as upon first principles granted by all men, though in their hearts they know they are false, or at best very doubtful. When they have laid these foundations of scurrility, it is no wonder that their superstructure is every way answerable to them. If this shameless practice of the present age endures much longer, praise and reproach will cease to be motives of action in good men.

There are certain periods of time in all governments, when this inhuman spirit prevails. Italy was long torn in pieces by the Guelfs and Ghibelines, and France by those who were for and against the League; but it is very unhappy for a man to be born in such a stormy and tempestuous season. It is the restless ambition of artful men that they break a people into factions, and draws severe well-meaning persons to their interest by a specious concern for their country. How many honest minds are filled with uncharitable and barbarous notions out of their zeal for the public good? What cruelties and outrages would they not commit against men of an adverse party, whom they would honour and esteem, if, instead of considering them as they are represented, they knew them as they are? They are persons of the greatest probity seduced into shameful errors and prejudices, and made bad men even by that noblest of principles, "the love of try." I cannot here forbear mentioning a Spanish proverb, "If there were neither knaves in the world, all people would be ind."

* Viz. by Jesus Christ, See Luke vi. 27—32, &c.

own part, I could heartily wish that all men would enter into an association, for the defence of one another against the endeavours of men they ought to look upon as their common enemies, whatsoever side they may belong to. I see such an honest body of neutral forces, I never see the worst of men in great figures because they are useful to a party; nor the best guarded, because they are above practising the methods which would be grateful to their faces should then single every criminal out of the crowd and hunt him down, however formidable he might appear: on the contrary, I see the shelter distressed innocence, and defend it never beset with contempt or ridicule, envy or flattery. In short, we should not any longer regard our fellow-subjects as whigs or tories, but take the man of merit out friend, and the man of enmity.—C.

6.] WEDNESDAY, JULY 25, 1711.

Rubascive fuat, nullo discrimine habebat VIRG. Æn. x. 168.
Whigs, Trojans, are the same to me.—DRYDEN.

In yesterday's paper I proposed, that the end of all parties should enter into a kind of association for the defence of one another, and the defence of their common enemies. As it is desired that a neutral body should act with a regard to truth and equity, and divest themselves of all partial heats and prepossessions that cleave to all kinds, I have prepared for them the form of an association, which may express itself in the most plain and simple manner: whose names are hereunto subscribed do declare, that we do in our consciences believe and two make four; and that we shall advise any man whatsoever to be our enemy who tries to persuade us to the contrary. We are ready to maintain with the hazard of all our dear and dear to us, that six is less than ten all times and in all places; and that ten be more three years hence than it is at present. We do also firmly declare, that it is our reason as long as we live to call black black, and white white. And we shall upon all occasions oppose persons that upon any day of the year call black white, or white black, with the utility of our lives and fortunes."

There such a combination of honest men, without any regard to places would endeavour to subvert all such furious zealots as would sacrifice the public good to the passion and interest of the other; as also such infamous hypocrites for promoting their own advantage under the name of the public good; with all the profligate retainers to each side, that have nothing to do with them but an implicit submission to their will. We should soon see that furious party-spirit, which may in time expose us to the contempt of all the nations about us. I am of this society that would thus carefully employ himself in making room for merit, by driving down the worthless and depraved part of the nation from those conspicuous stations of life to which they have been sometimes advanced, and all this without any regard to the merit of the person, be no small benefactor to the public.

I remember to have seen the account of a very active man, who he calls the ichneumon, the business of his life to breed upon which he is always in search of the more remarkable, he feeds upon the eggs he finds his account in the incessant labours of this insect. Says the historian, would the Egyptians are so pernicious creatures, that they should be destroyed.

If we look into the lives of the ancients, we shall find the disinterested animal; as the example of the wild Tarshish destroying a man of talents and accomplishments, and cease the same talents, and him for, enter of course.

As in the whole train of endeavours, as much as that pernicious spirit of rage with the same view the more desirous of doing particular, because I observe reigns more in the country here contracts a kind of madness, to which men of wholly strangers. It is the turn of the bow and the arrow that the heads of parties rather an outward show of a perpetual intercourse are dispersed in these much as mingle together. Mour fills the country with the Whig jockeys and mention the innumerable persons it produces at a quarter.

I do not know whether my former papers that I have verley and Sir Andrew's principles—the first of which and the other to the moderate in each party is so moderate in each party farther than to an age often diverts the rest of the country that the knight is a much more country than in town, which ear, is absolutely necessary interest. In all our houses, we did not so much as if by chance the country place, one of Sir Roger's master full of speed, master of the house of the last election. This often and bad cheer; for we the inn as the innkeeper's lord's principles were of the staleness of his party the more inconvenient was, the worse generally the fellow knowing very friends would take up lodging. For these upon the road I dreaded one that Sir Roger had.

Since my stay at S

new party hu-
at a neigh-
r that is the meet once a n of a better
a ordinary;
ding he was m up. But ne who had liament, for on the bowlrespondence

I must not Wimble was ories that he
of a certain
him, as one
the country
pered in the d of his dis-
d Sir Roger a fanatic.

uch a spirit
s it destroys
s in a man-ut as it per-reaches, and dices to our times afraid
in these our ewail, as in calamities of 26, 1711.

Sat. 1. 1.

the coming
ee, and hear ch he does an audible
e strokes of ings of that the knight
lity of Spec-
o please him
his request.

ost a whole is now high
eir revenge.
the fair sex
r petticoats,
you left us,
oncave, and t, Sir, since
of the eye of no compass.
the modesty
r of a sick
nto another,
of being en-
their heads
have lost in ntrary to all
tions at the erstructure.
pregnate by
on a more

proper invention. But as we do not hear any particular use in this petticoat, or that it contains any thing more than what was supposed to be in those of scantier make, we are wonderfully at a loss about it.

"The women give out, in defence of these wide bottoms, that they are airy, and very proper for the season; but this I look upon to be only a pretence, and a piece of art, for it is well known we have not had a more moderate summer these many years, so that it is certain the heat they complain of cannot be in the weather. Besides, I would fain ask these tender-constituted ladies, why they should require more cooling than their mothers before them?"

"I find several speculative persons are of opinion that our sex has of late years been very saucy, and that the hoop-petticoat is made use of to keep us at a distance. It is most certain that a woman's honour cannot be better intrenched than after this manner in circle within circle, amidst such a variety of outworks and lines of circumvallation. A female who is thus invested in whalebone, is sufficiently secured against the approaches of an ill-bred fellow, who might as well think of Sir George Etherege's way of making 'Love in a Tub,'* as in the midst of so many hoops.

"Among these various conjectures there are men of superstitious tempers, who look upon the hooppetticoat as a kind of prodigy. Some will have it that it portends the downfall of the French king, and observe that the farthingal appeared in England a little before the ruin of the Spanish monarchy. Others are of opinion that it foretels battle and bloodshed, and believe it of the same prognostication as the tail of a blazing star. For my part, I am ap-to think it is a sign that multitudes are coming into the world rather than going out of it.

"The first time I saw a lady dressed in one of these petticoats, I could not forbear blaming her in my own thoughts for walking abroad when she was 'so near her time,' but soon recovered myself out of my error, when I found all the modish part of the sex 'as far gone' as herself. It is generally thought some crafty women have thus betrayed their companions into hoops, that they might make them ac-cessary to their own concealments, and by that means escape the censure of the world; as war-generals have sometimes dressed two or three dozen of their friends in their own habit, that they might not draw upon themselves any particular attack from the enemy. The strutting petticoat smooths all distinctions, levels the mother with the daughter, and sets maids and matrons, wives and widows, upon the same bottom. In the meanwhile, I cannot but be troubled to see so many well-shaped innocent virgins bloated up, and waddling up and down like big-bellied women.

"Should this fashion get among the ordinary people, our public ways would be so crowded, that we should want street-room. Several congregations of the best fashion find themselves already very much straitened; and if the mode increase, I wish it may not drive many ordinary women into meeting and conventicles. Should our sex at the same time take it into their heads to wear trunk breeches (& who knows what their indignation at this fustian treatment may drive them to?) a man and his wife would fill a whole pew.

* See his play so called, act iv. scene 6, where Dufoy, a Frenchman, is thrust into a tub without a bottom, which he carries about the stage on his shoulders, his head coming through a hole at the top.

† Viz in 1558.

"You know, Sir, it is recorded of Alexander the Great, that in his Indian expedition he buried several suits of armour, which by his directions were made much too big for any of his soldiers, in order to give posterity an extraordinary idea of him, and make them believe he had commanded an army of giants. I am persuaded that if one of the present petticoats happens to be hung up in any repository of curiosities, it would lead into the same error the generations that lie some removes from us; unless we can believe our posterity will think so disrespectfully of their great-grandmothers, that they made themselves monstrous to appear amiable.

"When I survey this new-fashioned rotunda in all its parts, I cannot but think of the old philosopher, who after having entered into an Egyptian temple, and looked about for the idol of the place, at length discovered a little black monkey inscribed in the midst of it, upon which he could not forbear crying out, to the great scandal of the worshippers, 'What a magnificent place is here for such a ridiculous inhabitant!'

"Though you have taken a resolution, in one of your papers, to avoid descending to particularities of dress, I believe you will not think it below you, on so extraordinary an occasion, to unhoop the fair sex, and cure this unfashionable tympany that is got among them. I am apt to think the petticoat will shrink of its own accord at your first coming to town; at least a touch of your pen will make it contract itself like the sensitive plant, and by that means oblige several who are either terrified or astonished at this portentous novelty, and among the rest,

C. "Your humble servant," &c.

No. 128.] THURSDAY, JULY 27, 1711.

Concordia discors.—LUCAN l. 98.

Harmonious discord.

WOMEN in their nature are much more gay and jocular than men; whether it be that their blood is more refined, their fibres more delicate, and their animal spirits more light and volatile; or whether, as some have imagined, there may not be a kind of sex in the very soul, I shall not pretend to determine. As vivacity is the gift of women, gravity is that of men. They should each of them therefore keep a watch upon the particular bias which nature has fixed in their minds, that it may not draw too much, and lead them out of the paths of reason. This will certainly happen, if the one in every word and action affects the character of being rigid and severe, and the other of being brisk and airy. Men should beware of being captivated by a kind of savage philosophy, women by a thoughtless gallantry. Where these precautions are not observed, the man often degenerates into a cynic, the woman into a coquette; the man grows sullen and morose, the woman impertinent and fantastical.

By what I have said, we may conclude, men and women were made as counterparts to one another, that the pains and anxieties of the husband might be relieved by the sprightliness and good-humour of the wife. When these are rightly tempered, care and cheerfulness go hand in hand; and the family, like a ship that is duly trimmed, wants neither sail nor ballast.

Natural historians observe (for, whilst I am in the country, I must fetch my allusions from thence) that only the male birds have voices; that their songs begin a little before breeding-time, and end a little after; the male gender, though wiser, amuses a whole time.

This continues till a brood is hatched, the feathered married couple, the female man and the male, the main given all ment to the her compa- cation to the educa- ever is ne- duties we both part- have been different bestowed.

But when we were made, the conduct rather to resembles that is natural moderate complaint fore the man and talk may vent Noise and cannot wi- ordinary v- love diver- the lover a- not know mankind,

Our t- And c-

This is as it frequ- thoughts, they chan- sipate their vate their

The sa- after mar- imaginatio- honest, tr- their thou- laughs, sin-

As this the hearts- lovers and- rates with- their child- selves in- captivatin- in her son- means con- in a worth-

The yo- this sort o- ried to Ma- and best, common g- had taken- dus accord-

he became at ever was signaling prizes, and taste of true
and statues,
like a Her-

by the cha-tleman and Sir Roger.
hankering
band a mo-
name of it.
e husband
ar the noise
edious sum-
hady woods
ers how any f plays and at essenced en are edu-
r parents.
unds, while ers and ro-
it comes to
as a clown,
er than she

and Aspas a!
mpered and other. The ne husband,
versations
miable were ch esteemed
are bleuded whole family
necency, and

S. 1711.

, Sat. v. 71.
curst, RYDEN.

for drawing
ing that the s, and gives will make a trous in the often repre-
bit, or some wish, for the
was such a ase of by all e town, and
ns as should ations. For who takes a orised as one ictures, and nabits in the keep to one
the fashion, naged at pre-
mode, they it, the mode
h, as a clock
ce in twelve
advise them,

as a gentleman did his friend who was hunting about the whole town after a rambling fellow.—If you follow him you will never find him, but if you place yourself at the corner of any one street, I will engage it will not be long before you see him.

I have already touched upon this subject in a speculation which shews how cruelly the country are led astray in following the town; and equipped in a ridiculous habit, when they fancy themselves in the height of the mode. Since that speculation I have received a letter (which I there hinted at) from a gentleman who is now on the western circuit.

“MR. SPECTATOR,

“Being a lawyer of the Middle-Temple, a Cornishman by birth, I generally ride the western circuit* for my health; and as I am not interrupted with clients, have leisure to make many observations that escape the notice of my fellow-travellers.

“One of the most fashionable women I met with in all the circuit was my landlady at Staines, where I chanced to be on a holiday. Her comode was not half a foot high, and her petticoat within some yards of a modish circumference. In the same place I observed a young fellow with a tolerable periwig, had it not been covered with a hat that was shaped in the Ramilie-cock. As I proceeded in my journey, I observed the petticoat grew scantier and scantier, and about threescore miles from London was so very unfashionable, that a woman might walk in it without any manner of inconvenience.

“Not far from Salisbury I took notice of a justice of peace's lady, who was at least ten years behind hand in her dress, but at the same time as fine as hands could make her. She was flounced and fur belowed from head to foot; every ribbon was wrinkled, and every part of her garments in curl so that she looked like one of those animals which in the country we call a Friezland hen.

“Not many miles beyond this place I was informed that one of the last year's little muffs had by some means or other straggled into those parts, and that all the women of fashion were cutting their old muffs in two, or retrenching them, according to the little model which was got among them. I cannot believe the report they have there, that it was sent down franked by a parliament-man in a little packet but probably by next winter this fashion will be at the height in the country, when it is quite out at London.

“The greatest beau at our next country session was dressed in a most monstrous flaxen periwig, that was made in King William's reign. The wearer of it goes, it seems, in his own hair when he is at home and lets his wig lie in a buckle for a whole half-year that he may put it on upon occasion to meet the judges in it.

“I must not here omit an adventure which happened to us in a country church upon the frontier of Cornwall. As we were in the midst of the service, a lady who is the chief woman of the place and had passed the winter at London with her husband, entered the congregation in a little head-dress and a hooped petticoat. The people, who were wonderfully wroth at such a sight, all of them rose up. Some stared at the prodigious bottom, and some at the little top of this strange dress. In the meantime the lady of the manor filled the area of the church, and walked up to her pew with an unspeakable satisfaction, amidst the whispers, conjectures and astonishments of the whole congregation.

* Counsellors generally go on the circuits through the counties in which they are born and bred.

"Upon our way from hence we saw a young fellow riding towards us full gallop, with a bob wig and a black silken bag tied to it. He stopped short at the coach, to ask us how far the judges were behind us. His stay was so very short, that we had only time to observe his new silk waistcoat, which was unbuttoned in several places, to let us see that he had a clean shirt on, which was ruffled down to his middle.

"From this place, during our progress through the most western parts of the kingdom, we fancied ourselves in King Charles the Second's reign, the people having made very little variations in their dress since that time. The smartest of the country 'squires appears still in the Monmouth-cock, and when they go a wooing (whether they have any post in the militia or not) they generally put on a red coat. We were, indeed, very much surprised, at the place we lay at last night, to meet with a gentleman that had accoutred himself in a night-cap wig, a coat with long pockets and slit sleeves, and a pair of shoes with high scollop tops; but we soon found by his conversation that he was a person who laughed at the ignorance and rusticity of the country people, and was resolved to live and die in the mode.

"Sir, if you think this account of my travels may be of any advantage to the public, I will next year trouble you with such occurrences as I shall meet with in other parts of England. For I am informed there are greater curiosities in the northern circuit than in the western; and that a fashion makes its progress much slower into Cumberland than into Cornwall. I have heard in particular, that the Steenkirk* arrived but two months ago at Newcastle, and that there are several commodores in those parts which are worth taking a journey thither to see."

C.

No. 130.] MONDAY, JULY 30, 1711.

Semperque recentes Convectare Juvat prædas, et vivere rapto.
VINO. ÆN. vii. 748.

A plundering race, still eager to invade,
On spoil they live, and make of theft a trade.

As I was yesterday riding out in the fields with my friend Sir Roger, we saw at a little distance from us a troop of gipsies. Upon the first discovery of them, my friend was in some doubt whether he should not exert the justice of the peace upon such a band of lawless vagrants; but not having his clerk with him, who is a necessary counsellor with him on these occasions, and fearing that his poultry might fare the worse for it, he let the thought drop—but at the same time gave me a particular account of the mischiefs they do in the country, in stealing people's goods and spoiling their servants. "If a stray piece of linen hangs upon a hedge," says Sir Roger, "they are sure to have it; if the hog loses his way in the fields, it is ten to one but he becomes their prey: our geese cannot live in peace for them; if a man prosecutes them with severity, his hen-roost is sure to pay for it. They generally straggle into these parts about this time of the year; and set the heads of our servant-maids so agog for husbands, that we do not expect to have any business done as it should be whilst they are in the country. I have an honest dairy-maid who crosses their bands with a piece of silver every summer, and never fails being promised for her part enough to be sure to lose his fortune in the patch hour once things they fully upon You see among the eyes."

Sir Roger's attention to tirely new should tell pleased with communic the crew, gently, to corner, the other part late. My and expos him, they scanned when one burnt than in his line "Go, go, same time was not d farther in constant, a My old fri gipsy told be so long than he th was an idl master," s makes a pr simpler abo gibberish darkness to it. To her that he again on h As we w he knew s gipsies no and for ha than ordin meeting a no conjuro pocket was at which t I might remarks on the counte vernments But instea nature, I, with a stor printed in years ago, which carr was putting canal desi the boat re enough to chant bein

* The Steenkirk was a kind of military cravat of black silk; probably first worn at the battle of Steenkirk, fought August 2, 1672.

ds him, paid
be taken on rd, he found
r languages,
that he had
by a gipsy,
ng of those Europe. It
rt seems to cret kind of years before.
n, gave him
which that o afflicted at son, that she ther all par-
es and marks
e child when be the son of accountably
as very well and likely to
on the other son return to with such a derstanding,
rinted story
reports, our inary rudi-
afterwards
s a gentle-
the vicious sed to in the is said, that courts upon to himself
that he has
minister in
-C.

, 1711.

Eel. x. 63.

try sports to
, and divert
neighbour.
ro or three frontiers of h of a bare
own fields,
ersion, when
s means the e and mul-eable where e it does not or confusion
untry gen-
own home.
month's ex-
eat field of my fortune
al subjects,
sure to my-
forced to use
spring any-st I am fol-
am crossed
a variety of il the scent
My greatest difficulty in the country is to find sport, and in town to choose it. In the mean time, as I have given a whole month's rest to the cities of London and Westminster, I promise myself abundance of new game upon my return thither.

It is indeed high time for me to leave the country, since I find the whole neighbourhood begin to grow very inquisitive after my name and character; my love of solitude, taciturnity, and particular way of life, having raised a great curiosity in all these parts.

The notions which have been framed of me are various: some look upon me as very proud, some as very modest, and some as very melancholy. Will Wimble, as my friend the butler tells me, observing me very much alone, and extremely silent when I am in company, is afraid I have killed a man. The country people seem to suspect me for a conjurer; and some of them, hearing of the visit which I made to Moll White, will needs have it that Sir Roger has brought down a cunning man with him, to cure the old woman, and free the country from her charms. So that the character which I go under in part of the neighbourhood, is what they call here a White Witch.

A justice of peace, who lives about five miles off, and is not of Sir Roger's party, has, it seems, said twice or thrice at his table, that he wishes Sir Roger does not harbour a Jesuit in his house, and that he thinks the gentlemen of the country would do very well to make me give some account of myself.

On the other side, some of Sir Roger's friends are afraid the old knight is imposed upon by a designing fellow; and as they have heard that he converses very promiscuously when he is in town, do not know but he has brought down with him some discarded whig, that is sullen, and says nothing because he is out of place.

Such is the variety of opinions which are here entertained of me, so that I pass among some for a disaffected person, and among others for a popish priest; among some for a wizard, and among others for a murderer; and all this for no other reason that I can imagine, but because I do not hoot, and halloo, and make a noise. It is true, my friend Sir Roger tells them,—"That it is my way," and that I am only a philosopher;—but this will not satisfy them. They think there is more in me than he discovers, and that I do not hold my tongue for nothing.

For these and other reasons I shall set out for London to-morrow, having found by experience that the country is not a place for a person of my temper, who does not love jollity, and what they call good neighbourhood. A man that is out of humour when an unexpected guest breaks in upon him, and does not care for sacrificing an afternoon to every chance comer—that will be the master of his own time, and the pursuer of his own inclinations,—makes but a very unsociable figure in this kind of life. I shall therefore retire into the town, if I may make use of that phrase, and get into the crowd again as fast as I can, in order to be alone. I can there raise what speculations I please upon others without being observed myself, and at the same time enjoy all the advantages of company with all the privileges of solitude. In the mean while, to finish the month, and conclude these my rural speculations, I shall here insert a letter from my friend Will Honeycomb, who has not lived a month for these forty years out of the smoke of London, and rallies me after his way upon my country life.

"DEAR SPEC.

"I suppose this letter will find thee picking of daisies, or smelling to a lock of hay, or passing away thy time in some innocent country diversion of the like nature. I have however orders from the club to summon thee up to town, being all of us cursedly afraid thou wilt not be able to relish our company, after thy conversations with Moll White and Will Wimble. Pr'ythee do not send us up any more stories of a cock and a bull, nor frighten the town with spirits and witches. Thy speculations begin to smell confoundedly of woods and meadows. If thou dost not come up quickly, we shall conclude that thou art in love with one of Sir Roger's dairy-maids. Service to the knight. Sir Andrew is grown the cock of the club since he left us, and if he does not return quickly will make every mother's son of us commonwealth's-men.

"Dear Spec.,

"Thine eternally,

"WILL HONEYCOMB."

C.

No. 132.] WEDNESDAY, AUGUST 1, 1711.

Qui, sat tempus quid postulet non videt, aut plura loquitur, aut se ostendit, aut eorum quibuscum est rationem non habet, in ineptus esse dicitur.—FELIX.

That man may be called impertinent, who considers not the circumstances of time, or engrosses the conversation, or makes himself the subject of his discourse, or pays no regard to the company he is in.

HAVING notified to my good friend Sir Roger that I should set out for London the next day, his horses were ready at the appointed hour in the evening; and, attended by one of his grooms, I arrived at the county-town at twilight, in order to be ready for the stage-coach the day following. As soon as we arrived at the inn, the servant who waited upon me inquired of the chamberlain in my hearing what company he had for the coach? The fellow answered, "Mrs. Betty Arable, the great fortune, and the widow her mother; a recruiting officer (who took a place because they were to go); young 'Squire Quickset, her cousin (that her mother wished her to be married to); Ephraim the Quaker, her guardian; and a gentleman that had studied himself dumb from Sir Roger de Coverley's." I observed by what he said of myself, that according to his office he dealt much in intelligence; and doubted not but there was some foundation for his reports of the rest of the company, as well as for the whimsical account he gave of me. The next morning at day-break we were all called; and I, who know my own natural shyness, and endeavour to be as little liable to be disputed with as possible, dressed immediately, that I might make no one wait. The first preparation for our setting out was, that the captain's half-pike was placed near the coachman, and a drum behind the coach. In the mean time the drummer, the captain's equipage, was very loud, "that none of the captain's things should be placed so as to be spoiled;" upon which his cloak-bag was fixed in the seat of the coach; and the captain himself, according to a frequent, though invidious behaviour of military men, ordered his man to look sharp, that none but one of the ladies should have the place he had taken fronting the coach-box.

We were in some little time fixed in our seats, and sat with that dislike which people not too good-natured usually conceive of each other at first sight. The coach jumbled us insensibly into some sort of familiarity: and we had not moved above two miles, when the widow asked the captain what success he had in his recruiting? The officer, with a frankness he believed yet had but very little desertion, there fare in the sea a word," content plain is my ch sound, and im give me to her, am a soldier by a vain laugh all the rest of it but to fall fa "Come," said a wedding at the sant companion man; and," ge he concluded, you, understand widow, shall ge who happened

"Friend, I take me the author virtuous child have the giving Thy mirth, fr person of a lig it soundeth bec thy fulness, bu this day. Fri in partnership city; we cann mother must follies; we ca wilt, we must understanding thy courageous peace.—Thou ter to us, who flee at our fri said nothing; taineth? If hearing of this an outrage ag get from thee obliged to hear public vehicle high road."

Here Ephraim happy and un convicted and "Faith, friend little impertinent Come, thou ar be very orderl was going to pardon."

The captain company was ruffle, that Ep in being agree assumed their the company. commodation, looked to all d haviour of our taking place, coming from t were ordinary entertain by t sidered the c small good-for spent in imper

BRITISH ESSAYISTS.

No 137.] TUESDAY, AUGUST 7, 1711.

At hæc etiam servis semper libera fuerunt. Amertum, pauperem, dolentem, suo potius quam alterius arbitrio. Tell. Ep.

Even slaves were always at liberty to fear, rejoice, grieve, at their own rather than another's pleasure.

It is no small concern to me; that I find so many complaints from that part of mankind whose portion it is to live in servitude, that those whom they depend upon will not allow them to be even as happy as their condition will admit of. There are, as the unhappy correspondents inform me, masters who offend at a cheerful countenance, and think the servant is broke loose from them, if he does not preserve the utmost awe in their presence. There is one who says, if he looks satisfied his master at him, "What makes him so pert this morning?" a little sour, "Hark ye, sirrah, are not you paid your wages?" The poor creatures live in the most extreme misery together; the master knows nothing to preserve respect, nor the servant how to give it. It seems this person is of so sullen a nature that he knows but little satisfaction in the midst of a plentiful fortune, and secretly frets to see any appearance of content in one that lives upon the hundredth part of his income, while he is unhappy in the possession of the whole. Uneasy persons, who cannot possess their own minds, vent their spleen upon all who depend upon them; which, I think, is expressed in a lively manner in the following letters:—

"Sir,

August 2, 1711.

"I have read your Spectator of the third of the last month, and wish I had the happiness of being preferred to serve so good a master as Sir Roger. The character of my master is the very reverse of that good and gentle knight's. All his directions are given, and his mind revealed by way of contraries: as when any thing is to be remembered, he has a peculiar cast of face he cries, 'Be sure to forget now.' If I am to make haste back, 'Do not come these two hours; be sure to call by the way upon some of your companions.' Then another excellent way of his is, if he sets me any thing to do, which knows must necessarily take up half a day, he calls ten times in a quarter of an hour to know whether I have done yet. This is his manner; and the same perverseness runs through all his actions, according as the circumstances vary. Besides all this, he is suspicious, that he submits himself to the drudgery of a spy. He is as unhappy himself as he makes his servants; he is constantly watching us, and we did no more in pleasure and liberty than as a gaol and a prisoner. He lays traps for faults; and as soon as he makes a discovery, but falls into such language, as I am more ashamed of for coming from him, than for being directed to me. This, Sir, is a short sketch of a master I have served upwards of nine years; and though I have never wronged him, I confess my despair of pleasing him has very much abated my endeavour to do it. If you will give me leave to steal a sentence out of my master's Character, I shall tell you my case in a word, 'being worse than I deserved, I cared less to deserve what I had done.'

"I am, Sir, your humble servant,

"RALPH VALET."

"DEAR MR. SPECTER,

"I am the next thing to a lady's woman; and am under both my lady and her woman. I am so used by them both, that I should be very glad to see this in the Specter. My lady herself is of no mind tion and West-

efficient number
ves; and since beg of you to t together, and
ay be no occas-
s. If you think ne,' for liar is at a member of received by the explain a little
ans be ranked,
rdinary people,
postors and in-rein, you are to on is only a per-cannot be con-
know a man of wrong side of e, according to ose vein is upon ecasion, and he cular that hap-
company, where who was afterthese circum-
e world, he will ents an account enetration, the
ing so humble
would admire.
here is nothing ravest aspect—eat! Another whom we would arts: as people n any thing) to
way. He tells them, and can herely take up
no manner of does it because you, and enter-

math done very is prodigiously
e can say is for more, who is a re in the world a great beauty comforts him-If money can gh I mortgage

r that; All for

erchant, honest an for loss and rying all round ntelligence, he that we intend ch hands. But omplain, while lie, and there er, soldier, or in the whole
th myself once
one truth, to

rvant," &c.

for that reason her woman is of twenty oment. My lady is one that never do with herself; she pulls on and thing she wears twenty times before upon it for that day. I stand at one so, and reach things to her woman. asks for a thing, I hear, and have half on the woman meets me in the middle to receive it, and at that instant she so will not have it. Then I go back, so comes up to her, and by this time that and two or three things more in the woman and I run to each other; I delivering the things to her, when my what's none of all these things, and we t. creatures in the world, and she the man living; for she shall not be drest.

Thus we stand, not knowing what to good lady, with all the patience in the s as plain as she can speak, that she per because we have no manner of un- and begins again to dress, and see if out, of ourselves, what we are to do. dressed she goes to dinner, and after and every thing there, she calls for her commands it in again, and then she will all, and then will go, too, and orders Now, good Mr. Specter, I desire you behalf of all who serve froward ladies, your paper, that nothing can be done ring time for it, and that one cannot be with what one was sent for, if one is before one can go a step for what they if you please, let them know that all as like as all servants.

"I am your loving friend,

"PATIENCE GIDDY."

great calamities; but I met the other re fields, towards Chelsea, a pleasanter ither of the above represented. A fat sing on in his open waistcoat; a boy of a livery, carrying after him his cloak, st, wig, and sword. The poor lad was with the weight, and could not keep aster, who turned back every half furd- ndered what made the lazy young dog something very unaccountable, that t. put themselves in the condition of the re them, when they consider the com- pive. But there is nothing more com- see a fellow (who if he were reduced to t be hired by any man living) lament xabled with the most worthless dogs in perhaps, be running too far out of com- rge, that he who is not master of him- wn passions, cannot be a proper master Equanimity in a man's own words and easily diffuse itself through his whole philio has the happiest household of any, and that proceeds from the humane s to them in their private persons, as poet that they are his servants. If there ion, wherein they may in themselves be be unfit to attend to their master's con- son of any attention to their own, he is place himself in their condition. I rry becoming in him, when at dinner, he made an apology for want of more He said, "One of my footmen is gone g of his sister, and the other I do not expect to wait, because he days ago."—T.

No. 138.] WEDNESDA

Utitur in re non dubia testibus

He uses unnecessary proofs in

ONE meets now and then extremely learned and know cases. Tully tells us of an pages to prove that general great enterprises which he tritious, if they had not had it seems, that a minister a commander abroad, could de men were his instruments a occasion he produces the ex Pericles, Cyrus, and Alex denies to have been capable did, except they had been f pleasant enough to see such opponents, and triumph with

The author above ment placed for ever in a very ridic every day in conversation a kind of renown, for troubling converse with the like certain I have always thought to de ration in this kind are you who are most religiously c truth in every particular tion, whether it concerns the gentleman whom I had the with the other day, upon se pleased to take, said, he re repartee made by a very wit time upon the like occasion he, upon entering into the time of Oates's plot, that and I were at the Bear in it was at the Cross-keys; there, for he was very great made the answer. But I somewhere thereabouts, for neighbourhood every evening that, the thing is the same;

He was going on to set jest when I left the room, w of head, which can play awa nothing to the purpose, still tinences, and yet proceed question but he informed who had more patience the rentage, as well as the co family who made the repar voked him to it.

It is no small misfortune value for their time, when very circumstantial, and pens to shew itself in a m them to attend his proofs th like. But this is augmented gets into authority, as it o known it more than once One of this sort taking it, admirer of Dr. Tillotson a failed of proving out of th which no man living woul his own single authority. come to the point in hand that excellent divine" I w th sermon of the folio words, and then con-

them."

needed not, one would as to alter his design
" to that of " briefly that he would not even ty, but added also the method, and told us,
r. Beveridge, page 4th endeavour to make it ords which I have now we shall consider—"

by the parish, who did cellent preacher; but was so humble that he n parts.
tlemen, who argue for are to be ranked a sort attempt to prove insiglabouring to raise argu-
you will give up to versy. One of these aid he saw Mr. Suche of the clock towards beg your pardon for th to have any dispute
e liberty to tell you it St. James's." When
far gone in learning, at snow is white, and can say that there is in nature; in a word, wledge they have into ubts; into a capacity always unanswerable.

this impertinent and aid, " one of these fel-e other holds the pail."

ENT.

-box, according to the tions, in opposition to e taught with the best Charles Lillie's, per-ort's buildings, in the
for the benefit of the exchange for two hours aturdays, at a toy-shop There will be like-the snuff-box, or rules er, a friend, or a miss of familiarity or dis-the careless, the scorupinch, and the gestures es not question but in body of regular snuffke head against all the een lately disciplined,

AUGUST 9, 1711.

um propagatur; ficta omnia nt, nec simulatum potest reads; all false pretences, an any counterfeit last long-attend human life, the

at. According as this is cultivated in princes, it produces the great-or the greatest evil. Where sovereigns have impressions received from education only, it an ambitious rather than a noble mind: wh the natural bent of the prince's inclination, it him to the pursuit of things truly glorious. greatest men now in Europe (according to th mon acceptance of the word great) are Lew of France, and Peter Emperor of Russia.

certain that all fame does not arise from th tice of virtue, it is, methinks, no unpleasing ment to examine the glory of these potentia distinguish that which is empty, perishing, volous, from what is solid, lasting, and impos-

Lewis of France had his infancy attended b and worldly men, who made extent of terri-most glorious instance of power, and mist spreading of fame for the acquisition of The young monarch's heart was by such ex-tion easily deluded into a fondness for val-and upon these unjust principles to form o with suitable projects of invasion, rapine, and all the guilts that attend war when it is At the same time this tyranny was laid, scie arts were encouraged in the most generous as if men of higher faculties were to be b permit the massacre of the rest of the world.
superstructure which the court of France bu their first designs, which were in themselves was suitable to its false foundation. The ost of riches, the vanity of equipage, shame of and ignorance of modesty, were the commo life; the generous love of one woman was into gallantry for all the sex, and friendships men turned into commerces of interest, o professions. " While these were the rules perjuries in the prince, and a general corru manners in the subject, were the snares in France has entangled all her neighbours." such false colours have the eyes of Lewis b chanted, from the debauchery of his early the superstition of his present old age. I is, that he has the patience to have statues er his prowess, his valour, his fortitude, and inness and luxury of a court to be applauded nanimity and enterprise in military achievers

Peter Alexovitz of Russia, when he came of manhood, though he found himself empe vast and numerous people, master of an end ritory, absolute commander of the lives and of his subjects, in the midst of this unbounde and greatness, turned his thoughts upon him people with sorrow. Sordid ignorance and manner of life, this generous prince beheld a temned, from the light of his own genu judgment suggested this to him, and his prompted him to amend it. In order to this not send to the nation from whence the res world has borrowed its politeness, but himsel diadem to learn the true way to glory, and and application to useful arts, wherein to emlaborious, the simple, the honest part of his Mechanic employments and operations we justly the first objects of his favour and obse With this glorious intention he travelled into nations in an obscure manner, above receiv honours where he sojourned, but prying in was of more consequence, their arts of peac war. By this means has this great prince foundation of a great and lasting fame, by labour, personal knowledge, personal val would be injury to any of antiquity to nam

Who but himself ever left a throne to sit in it with more grace? Who ever thought an in absolute power, till he had learned consider this wonderful person, it is per- know where to begin his encomium. in a metaphorical or philosophic sense command themselves, but this emperor is ly under his own command. How gene- ow good was his entering his own name as an in the army he raised, that none in it ect to outrun the steps with which he him- ed! By such measures this godlike prince conquer, learned to use his conquests. ble has he appeared in battle, how gentle

Shall then the base arts of the French- old polite, and the honest labours of the barbarous? No; barbarity is the ignorance our, or placing anything instead of it. prince is ignoble and barbarous, the good renowned and glorious.

men may impose upon themselves what by their corrupt imaginations, truth will its station: and as glory is nothing else dow of virtue, it will certainly disappear irtue of virtue. But how carefully ought ions of it to be preserved, and how in- ould we be to encourage any impulses! The Westminster school-boy that said ay he could not sleep or play for the colours, ought to be free from receiving a blow is consider what is truly glorious according or I have to-day quoted in the front of section of glory, says Tully, consists in particulars: "That the people love us; ave confidence in us; that being affected ain admiration towards us, they think we our." This was spoken of greatness in nwealth. But if one were to form a con- lory under our constitution, one must add e mentioned felicities a certain necessary e, and disrelish of all the rest, without the our. He should, methinks, have riches, our, command, glory; but riches, power, mmand, and glory, should have no charms, mpanied with the affection of his prince. e, methinks, be popular because a favourite, ourite because popular. Were it not to character too imaginary, I would give him y over some foreign territory, and make s that an empty addition without the kind his own prince. One may merely have a man thus composed and circumstan- if he were so made for power without an e of giving jealousy, he would be also oughout possibility of receiving disgrace. lity and this importance must make his ortal.

thoughts are apt to draw me beyond the th of this paper; but if I could suppose odies could outlive the common fate of ings, I would say these sketches and faint glory were drawn in August, 1711, when e of Marlborough, made that memorable erein he took the French lines without -T.

urs taken at Blenheim, in 1704, were fixed up in hall, after having been carried in procession lity. e seems to require "without a capacity," but all id as here.

No. 140.] FRIDAY

—Animum curis sus

This way and that the

WHEN I acquaint my other letters not yet acki own what I have a mit have no small charge up some consequence in this employ the present hour the order as follows:—

"MR. SPECTATOR, "I have lost so much upon the receipt hereof, diately and give me your of you whether a pretend As well as I can, I will de he sees me he is always ouchsafes to visit me but is always in haste to be g hear he says he is might comes nor sends, because, with a sigh, he does not power I have over him, a him to live without me.

he writes once in six week complains of the torment of tortures, languishings, a cant of an impatient love lukewarm one. You know he does, and to move at counting a great clock. rich, and my mother says he will love me long, if he peal to you whether he lo humble servant,

"All these fellows who saucy and cold; pray, Sir

"MR. SPECTATOR, "I have been delighted the whole course of your tial account you lately ga you would take some oth further the corrupt taste I am chiefly apt to attrib few popular authors, wh has given a sanction to the the imitators of Milton seleny of that sort of wri or antique words, or some vicious, though pardona The admirers of what w upon it as the particular Ovid, and others, owe the endeavour to imitate the What is just, proper, and be the question with the quaint antithesis may be word may be made to loo be the consequence of though such authors appe who make themselves fi dressed, or graceful: yet beauties in them, which I to proceed from luxuriant of good sense. In one w ter of being too witty; h

* So Philips in his Cyder "echat, sovran," after Milton

BRITISH ESSAYISTS.

l, you would,

ent reader,

"R. D."

skoned pretty;
trouble you to
ousin of mine,
ause he under-e spelt with a

le servant,

SAUNTER."

kind Querist, not care to be
ir, again, your

several of your e often so nice ned there is no
to do with our

RTHENOPE."

he Park, I met
'k,' says one of
of wine, for I upon reflecting pen in conver-
e bottle to rep and awakens
y thing than to n others which Sir, declare in ome companion
one to others.
ood humour be-
their friends.
upon this sub-
d, as to argue
hat can swallow
ble servant."

on your paper
You are very se who are not hing so gently
do not think it
e in that diver-
you say some-of the female

ll other respects
very pinks of ombre-table is siness, are im-riests wasps in

mp, and win
ance to take it,
e pleased, dear
etter grace, and

HEL BASTO."

of your papers,
myself the ho-
egard you have
and improvement of our sex will, I hope, in your own opinion sufficiently excuse me from making any apology for the impertinence of this letter. The great desire I have to embellish my mind with some of those graces which you say are so becoming, and which you assert reading helps us to, has made me uneasy and I am put in a capacity of attaining them. This Sir, I shall never think myself in, until you shall be pleased to recommend some author or authors to my perusal.

"I thought indeed, when I first cast my eye on Leonora's letter, that I should have had no occasion for requesting it of you; but to my very great concern, I found on the perusal of that Spectator, was entirely disappointed, and am as much at a loss how to make use of my time for that end as ever.
Pray, Sir, oblige me at least with one scene, as you were pleased to entertain Leonora with your prologue. I write to you not only my own sentiment but also those of several others of my acquaintance who are as little pleased with the ordinary manner of spending one's time as myself: and if a fervent desire after knowledge, and a great sense of our present ignorance, may be thought a good presage as earnest of improvement, you may look upon your time you shall bestow in answering this request as thrown away to no purpose. And I cannot but add that, unless you have a particular and more than ordinary regard for Leonora, I have a better title to your favour than she: since I do not content myself with a tea-table reading of your papers, but it is my entertainment very often when alone in my closet.
To shew I am capable of improvement, and not flattery, I acknowledge I do not like some of your papers; but even there I am readier to call in question my own shallow understanding than Mr. Spectator's profound judgment.

"I am, Sir, your already (and in hopes of being more your) obliged servant,

"PARTHENIA."

This last letter is written with so urgent and important an air, that I cannot but think it incumbent upon me to comply with her commands, which shall do very suddenly.—T.

No. 141.] SATURDAY, AUGUST 11, 1711.

—Migravit ab aure voluptas Omnia.—HOR. l Ep. ii. 187.

Taste, that eternal wanderer, that flies From head to ears, and now from ears to eyes.—POPE.

In the present emptiness of the town, I have several applications from the lower part of the players to admit suffering to pass for acting. They in response to the obliging terms desire me to let a fall on the ground or a stumble, or a good slap on the back, be reckoned a jest. These gambols I shall tolerate for a season because I hope the evil cannot continue longer than until the people of condition and taste return to town. The method, some time ago, was to en-tain that part of the audience who have no faculty above that of eye-sight with rope-dancers and tumblers; which was a way discreet enough, because it prevented confusion and distinguished such as could show all the postures which the body is capable of from those who were to represent all the passions which the mind is subject to. But though this was prudently settled, corporeal and intellectual action ought to be kept at a still wider distance than to appear on the same stage at all; for which reason I must propose some methods for the improvement garden, by dismissing all bodily actors to their.

of greater moment, where men appear in the consequence and importance of the thing rather than their out. And though a pleader or a speaker is hoarse or awkward, the weight of his commands respect and attention; but in the speaking, if the performer is not exactly and graceful, he is utterly ridiculous. In mere there is little else expected but the of the ears and eyes, the least diminution of that pleasure is the highest offence. In barely to perform the part is not commendable to be the least out is contemptible. To these difficulties and delicacies, I am informed, if I was out of town, the actors have flown, and played such pranks, and run such that none but the servants of the fire-office, and masons, could have been able to perform.

The author of the following letter, it has been of the audience at one of these entertainments, and has accordingly complained to me.

but I think he has been to the utmost degree against what is exceptionable in the play, without dwelling so much as he might on the author's most excellent talent of drawing the pleasant pictures he has drawn of the world have been more kindly mentioned, at the time that he banishes his witches, who are too good to be attacked with so much warmth.

MR. SPECTATOR,

In a report that Moll White had followed me, and was to act a part in the Lancashire Witches, I went last week to see that play. It was my lot to sit next to a country justice of the peace (as he said) of Sir Roger's, who desired to show her to us in one of the dances. I was so much struck by the witchcraft enough in the entertainment to incline me to believe him; Ben Jonson† is so famous: young Bullock† narrowly saved his life: the audience was astonished; and an old friend of mine, a person of worth, whom I have bowed to in the pit, at two yards distance, said, "I do not know me."

You were what the country people reported of the white witch—I could have wished you had been able to have exercised that rabble of broomstick which we were haunted for above three years. I could have allowed them to set Clod in the air, and have scared the sportsmen, plagued the land and employed honest Teague with his holy water.

This was the proper use of them in comedy, if the author had stopped here; but I cannot connect the relation the sacrifice of the black lamb, the ceremonies of their worship to the devil,† to the business of mirth and humour.

The gentleman who writ this play, and has so many characters in it very justly, appears to me to be misled in his witchcraft by an unwary folio inimitable Shakspeare. The incantations which he has a solemnity admirably adapted to the occasion of that tragedy, and fill the mind with a horror; besides that the witches are a story itself, as we find it very particularly in Hector Boetius, from whom he seems to have taken it. This therefore is a proper machine for business is dark, horrid, and bloody; but

ing to Shadwell's comedy of the Lancashire Witches, which has been lately acted several times, and was advertised for the night in which this Spectator is dated. The names of two actors then upon the stage. The incidents in the play of the Lancashire Witches. From—Nos. 21 & 22.

it is extremely foreign to the Subjects of this kind, and agreeable, can at no time be passing through an imagination; for which I allow even Beaumont to be tating him.

But Shakspeare's
Within that circle

"I should not, however, these remarks, if there were this comedy, which was the witches: I mean to which I should have over that those jests can raise they are painful to right modesty.

"We must attribute that age: but indeed by sacrifices the best part of and, as one would think to the orange-wench.

"I must not conclude the moral with which the young ladies having given witting those who had a and marrying without the injured parties, who up all with this remark.

Design
There is a fate which

"We are to suppose merit, but if they had been have served as well. By the same principle, but has which shows she is not a sort of humorous philosophy of her guilt, and says,

That if weak women
Their stars are made

"This no doubt is a fine the audience with very. "These things fall partly pursued already, animadversion, for the entertainment as that of the that all who write for genius, by the ambitious best understanding; and nothing of the human their diversion at the privileged place, where have no right to disturb "August 8, 1711."

No. 142.] MONDAY

Irrupta tenet copula—
Whom love's unbroke

The following being a worthy passion, I am admonition to myself, and own happiness, a place.

"MR. SPECTATOR,
"I am now in the situation and read you with appro do not strike at the root which is the false notion

* The concluding

BRITISH ESSAYISTS

but I who bred up in a happy, see Sir, when I
vices of the fantastical
The tapessimpli-
effects than Bacchus and the gentleman
apture, but it
of honour, comb. This you an idea to you seve-
o, when my ter so many nt, OMACHE."

st 7, 1671.

ad wishes for y force, you very good an-thoughts ever every acci-
d to send up
you; I say, er, is what I ch, and calls
You are now to flow with my gushing
, and yearns
thou, oh my my attention
d my friends
at from your for your tri-
make happy ould consider change in dis-
receive the ar the former ive in chains
inflicts them,
getting the

servant."

in his favour,
it this in the

er 3, 1671.

ned upon the
of its return,
of joy to me, n its cheerful ast night. If l with all the
your person
charmer, talk earts; I con-
ot a thought
h confidence me in. May ward your in-our prudent ontinuance of unusual language to ladies; but you have a mind elevated above the giddy notions of a sex ensnared by flattery, and misled by a false and short adoration into a solid and long contempt. Beauty, my fairest creature, palls in the possession, but I love also your mind: your soul is as dear to me as my own; and if the advantages of a liberal education, some knowledge, and as much contempt of the world, joined with the endeavours towards a life of strict virtue and religion, can qualify me to raise new ideas in a breast so well disposed as yours is, our days will pass away with joy; and old age, instead of introducing melancholy prospects of decay, give us hope of eternal youth in a better life. I have but few minutes from the duty of my employment to write in, and without time to read over what I have writ; therefore beseech you to pardon the first hints of my mind, which I have expressed in so little order.

"I am, dearest creature,

"Your most obedient, most devoted servant."

"The two next were written after the day for our marriage was fixed:—

"MADAM,

September 25th, 1671.

"It is the hardest thing in the world to be in love, and yet attend business. As for me, all that speak to me find me out, and I must lock myself up, or other people will do it for me. A gentleman asked me this morning, 'What news from Holland?' and I answered, 'She is exquisitely handsome.' Another desired to know when I had been last at Windsor; I replied, 'She designs to go with me.' Pr'ythee, allow me at least to kiss your hand before the appointed day, that my mind may be in some composure. Methinks I could write a volume to you, but all the language on earth would fail in saying how much, and with what disinterested passion,

"I am ever yours."

"DEAR CREATURE,

September 30, 1671,
seven in the morning.

"Next to the influence of heaven, I am to thank you that I see the returning day with pleasure. It pass my evenings in so sweet a conversation, as I have the esteem of a woman of your merit, has it a particularity of happiness no more to be expressed than returned. But I am, my lovely creature contented to be on the obliged side, and to employ all my days in new endeavours to convince you of all the world of the sense I have of your condescension in choosing,

"Madam, your most faithful, most obedient humble servant."

"He was, when he writ the following letter, an agreeable and pleasant a man as any in England:—

"MADAM,

October 20, 1671.

"I beg pardon that my paper is not finer, but am forced to write from a coffee-house where I am attending about business. There is a dirty crowd of busy faces all around me talking of money, while all my ambition, all my wealth, is love: love, which animates my heart, sweetens my humour, enlarges my soul, and affects every action of my life. It is to my lovely charmer I owe that many noble ideas are continually affixed to my words and actions: it is the natural effect of that generous passion to create in the admirers some similitude of the object admired; thus, my dear, am I every day to improve from so sweet a companion. Look up, my fair one * Richard Steele.

ven which made thee such, and join with more its influence on our tender innocent beseech the author of love to bless the ordained, and mingle with our happiness of our transient condition, and a resigis will, which only can regulate our minds endeavour to please him and each other.
 I am, for ever, your faithful servant."* not trouble you with more letters at this if you saw the poor withered hand which these minutes, I am sure you would smile hat there is one who is so gallant as to still as so welcome a present, after forty session of the woman whom he writes to.

DAM,

June 23, 1711.

tily beg your pardon for my omission to rday. It was no failure of my tender you; but having been very much per-my thoughts on the subject of my last, termine to suspend speaking of it until self. But, my lovely creature, know it is power of age, or misfortune, or any other hich hangs over human life, to take from asing esteem I have for you, or the mee bright figure you appeared in, when you hand and heart to,
 lam, your most grateful husband, and obedient servant."*†

.] TUESDAY, AUGUST 14, 1711.

rivero, sed valere, vital.—MARTIAL, EPIG. LXX. 6. only life, when blest with health.

unreasonable thing some men expect of instance. They are ever complaining that of order, or displeased, or they know d are so far from letting that be a reason to their own homes, that they make it sent for coming into company. What has do with accounts of a man's being indis-is physician? If a man laments in come the rest are in humour enough to enjoy he should not take it ill if a servant is resent him with a porringer of caudle or t, by way of admonition that he go home at part of life which we ordinarily un-the word conversation, is an indulgence ble part of our make; and should incline our proportion of good-will or good-hug the friends we meet with, and not to n with relations which must of necessity to a real or feigned affliction. Cares, diseases, uneasinesses, and dislikes of our y no means to be obtruded upon our we would consider how little of this vi-motion and rest, which we call life, is atisfaction, we should be more tender of than to bring them little sorrows which ng to them. There is no real life but ; therefore valetudinarians should be re they enter into company, not to say a nselves until the meeting breaks up. It retended that we should be always sitplets of flowers round our heads, or be h roses in order to make our entertain-able to us; but if (as it is usually observed) they who resolve so; it will be much more pleased, if they are admi-plaining they are sad. V keep up the cheerfulness let them sink below an in-pleased. The way to this exercise, our minds at wherein neither are in vig any part of our portion the satisfaction of some suit of some laudable desig of life, of human life. I pointments enough, and firmities enough, without side of our account by Poor Cottilus, among so cal distemper and a narro to complain. That equal man may have, that, like vanity, and affectation, an be broken, because it has To be anxious for nothing as necessary, if it is not th way to what men aim at b temper will preserve healt tranquillity in the mind.

 a hurry, with the same sees a man drunk. Had what he ought to have bee a one have met with such other had valued his miste have loved her, he had no her virtue had had a part had been his cure; she false and amiable at the se

Since we cannot promise let us endeavour at such best support in the decay at that composure of soul to such a neglect of every nerality of mankind is en acute pains can give him those too he will tell his secret which gives him pre thoroughly persuaded of vours so sincerely to secure looks upon pain but as a q home, where he shall be be his present apartment. In views which others are a will tell you that he has for he think of himself as such of his birth he entered into the short article of death ruption of life; since that duration as his ordinary one uniform and consistent sions and moderate cares, v turity. Health to him is another man, and sickness indisposition is to others.

I must confess, if one d this manner, none but idio any tolerable patience. T a delicate frame, and you hour she rises, a certain we about her. I know more t nice to be quite alive. They frightful people they meet; another so disagreeable, tha to breathe the same air with * Richard Steele.

in this No. 142, are all genuine, written origiand actually sent, with but little variation, to afterward Lady Steele. See Steele's Letters, seq. cr. 8vo. 1789, 2 vols.

BRITISH ESSAYISTS.

le servant.
ple, and here
y; pray deproficients
."

en who pass bliged by the mercenary ng us an old
The fellow
us, therefore l-bred. His atches kisses
ks, tears our s out of our d a thousand
re of you is,
f he does not e all agreed,
ry, to affront
In the name
o, and am as

l-wisher."

male readers
even to our has reduced
able circum-
quilted one
ether uncon-
dition Mr.
ar. But we tice, by imikirt of your amference as h whalebone,
d sustain a
ch side; and st proportion
r figure, but e to the form
ere Gothic, therefore if
be less than
servant."

17, 1711.

am fruit.—TULL. inspiration.

er minds are hen we read
by men of e entertain-arts of Cice-
ave there so
dly be more of poetical
This ancient len into my impressions resent quite modern is that Theory of e lately been finity; they
the thoughts
ove those of the former, in proportion to his advantages of scripture and revelation. If I had a mind to it, I could not at present talk of any thing else; therefore I shall translate a passage in the one, and transcribe a paragraph out of the other, for the speculation of this day. Cicero tells us,* that Plato reports Socrates, upon receiving his sentence, to have spoken to his judges in the following manner:

"I have great hopes, O my judges, that it is infinitely to my advantage that I am sent to death; for it must of necessity be, that one of these two things must be the consequence. Death must take away all these senses, or convey me to another life. If all sense is to be taken away, and death is no more than that profound sleep without dreams, in which we are sometimes buried, oh, heavens! how desirable it is to die! How many days do we know in life preferable to such a state? But if it be true that death is but a passage to places which they who live, before us do now inhabit, how much still happier is it to go from those who call themselves judges to appear before those that really are such; before Minos, Rhadamanthus, Æacus, and Triptolemus, and to meet men who have lived with justice and truth! Is this, do you think, no happy journey?
Do you think it nothing to speak with Orpheus, Musæus, Homer, and Hesiod? I would, indeed, suffer many deaths to enjoy these things. With what particular delight should I talk to Palamedes, Ajax, and others, who like me have suffered by the iniquity of their judges. I should examine the wisdom of that great prince who carried such mighty forces against Troy; and argue with Ulysses and Sisyphus upon difficult points, as I have in conversation here, without being in danger of being condemned. But let not those among you who have pronounced me an innocent man be afraid of death. No harm can arrive at a good man, whether dead or living; his affairs are always under the direction of the gods; nor will I believe the fate which is allotted to me myself this day to have arrived by chance; nor have I ought to say either against my judges or accusers, but that they thought they did me an injury.— But I detain you too long; it is time that I retire to death, and you to your affairs of life; which of us has the better is known to the gods, but to no mortal man."

The divine Socrates is here represented in a figure worthy his great wisdom and philosophy, worthy the greatest mere man that ever breathed. But the modern discourse is written upon a subject no less than the dissolution of nature itself. Oh how glorious is the old age of that great man, who has spent his time in such contemplations as has made this being, what only it should be, an education for heaven! He has, according to the lights of reason and revelation which seemed to him clearest, traced the steps of Omnipotence. He has, with a celestial ambition, as far as it is consistent with humility and devotion, examined the ways of Providence, from the creation to the dissolution of the visible world.
How pleasing must have been the speculation, to observe Nature and Providence move together, the physical and moral world march the same pace: to observe paradise and eternal spring the seat of innocence, troubled seasons and angry skies the portion of wickedness and vice! When this admirable author has reviewed all that is past, or is to come, which relates to the habitable world, and run through the whole fate of it, how could a guardian angel, that had attended it through all its courses or changes, speak more emphatically at the end of his charge, than does our author when he makes, as it were, a funeral oration over this globe, looking to the point where it once stood?

* Tusculan Question. lib. 1.

"Let us only, if you please, to take leave of this subject, reflect upon this occasion on the vanity and transient glory of this habitable world. How, by the force of one element breaking loose upon the rest, all the varieties of nature, all the works of art, all the labours of men are reduced to nothing. All that we admired and adored before, as great and magnificent, is obliterated or vanished; and another form and face of things, plain, simple, and every where the same, overspreads the whole earth. Where are now the great empires of the world, and their great imperial cities? their pillars, trophies, and monuments of glory? shew me where they stood, read the inscription, tell me the victor's name. What remains, what impressions, what difference, or distinction, do you see in this mass of fire? Rome itself, eternal Rome, the great city, the empress of the world, whose domination and superstition, ancient and modern, make a great part of the history of this earth, what is become of her now? She laid her foundations deep, and her palaces were strong and sumptuous. 'She glorified herself and lived deliciously, and said in her heart, I sit a queen, and shall see no sorrow.' But her hour is come, she is wiped away from the face of the earth, and buried in everlasting oblivion. But it is not cities only, and works of men's hands; but the everlasting hills, the mountains and rocks of the earth, are melted as wax before the sun, and 'their place is no where found.' Here stood the Alps, the load of the earth that covered many countries, and reached their arms from the ocean to the Black Sea; this huge mass of stone is softened and dissolved as a tender cloud into rain. Here stood the African mountains, and Atlas with his top above the clouds; there was frozen Caucasus, and Taurus, and Inaus, and the mountains of Asia; and yonder, towards the north, stood the Rhiphaean hills, clothed in ice and snow. All these are vanished, dropt away as the snow upon their heads. 'Great and marvellous are thy works, just and true are thy ways, thou King of saints! hallelujah.' "s

T.

No. 147.] SATURDAY, AUGUST 18 1711.

Pronunciatio est vocis, et vulnus est gestus moderatio cum venustate.—TELL.

Good delivery is a graceful management of the voice, countenance, and gesture.

MR. SPECTATOR,

"THE well reading of the Common-prayer is of so great importance, and so much neglected, that I take the liberty to offer to your consideration some particulars on that subject. And what more worthy your observation than this? A thing so public, and of so high consequence. It is indeed wonderful, that the frequent exercise of it should not make the performers of that duty more expert in it. This inability, as I conceive, proceeds from the little care that is taken of their reading while boys, and at school, where, when they have got into Latin, they are looked upon as above English, the reading of which is wholly neglected, or at least read to very little purpose, without any due observations made to them of the proper accent and manner of reading; by this means will not easily know of to read of great ability, ample being not as well as instructed.

"You must frequent of for above the day was seven degree, the

When, being heard the servant and so fervent to be inattent not wander as I then consider might, and reflected on I found I had comparison to charged it. I vent wishes as was read with tion with such givings with those affection before. To complained of reader, upon the clergy of tions, should those that are spoiling their clearness, loud affect a rakish and lolling behaviour, and that read so learn to speak of persons, confined to no six words with subsequent of part of a sentence latter part with one sort of a very different of my admiration very; and a tions, but read did not understood of the how to place cent to each cording to t certainly a ve a prayer and a set of reader tie man-like f language as they and absolve often pretty unpardonable little taste as

"This endeavour of the false notion

* Or Garlick was Mr. Philip whose excellent remembered by * Barnet's Theory of the Earth, 1684, fol. book III. chap 12 p 110, 111.

of this word. one Andrew minister in exercise and of talking in said he was gation, and t's time, it and signifies usual tones, like the un- pe a proper accent, are So that our byterians as ch as I have it is with gher part of skill, that d muttering. properly, that ant particle, proprieties ve see they e service of rs that ever at affecting, t wants, and ip, disposed confusion; s have, were and apposite e concluded with such an to prayer? anaged, in fificant words ace; in our eciated, by er to have he Common as any thing a who err in many plea- recite good on to think, s, in them- their own re- with what in one who g? If you le servant."

20, 1711.

una.
Ep. ii. 212.
ain.

e enormities ublished an ed, that new onversation, who writes informs me a voluntary ore musical and has not ed up to the glass in the middle of the room, and practised minute steps to his own humming. The incorrigible creature has gone still farther, and in the open coffee-house, with one hand extended as leading a lady in it, he has danced both French and country-dances, and admonished his supposed partner by smiles and nods to hold up her head and fall back, according to the respective facings and evolutions of the dance. Before this gentleman began this his exercise, he was pleased to clear his throat by coughing and spitting a full half hour; and as soon as, he struck up, he appealed to an attorney's clerk in the room, whether he hit as he ought, "Since you from death have saved me?" and then asked the young fellow (pointing to a chancery-bill under his arm), whether that was an opera score he carried or not?—without staying for an answer, he fell into the exercise above mentioned; and practised his airs to the full house who were turned upon him, without the least shame or repentance for his former transgressions.

I am to the last degree at a loss what to do with this young fellow, except I declare him an outlar, and pronounce it penal for any one to speak to him in the said house which he frequents, and direct that he be obliged to drink his tea and coffee without sugar, and not receive from any person whatsoever any thing above mere necessaries.

As we in England are a sober people, and generally inclined rather to a certain bashfulness of behaviour in public, it is amazing whence some fellows come whom one meets with in this town; they do not at all seem to be the growth of our island; the pert, the talkative, all such as have no sense of the observation of others, are certainly of foreign extraction. As for my own part, I am as much surprised when I see a talkative Englishman, as I should be to see the Indian pine growing on one of our quickset hedges. Where these creatures get sun enough, to make them such lively animals and dull men, is above my philosophy.

There are another kind of impertinents which a man is perplexed with in mixed company, and these are your loud speakers. These treat mankind as if we were all deaf; they do not express but declare themselves. Many of these are guilty of this outrage out of vanity, because they think all they say is well; or they have their own persons in such veneration, that they believe nothing which concerns them can be insignificant to any body else. For these people's sake, I have often lamented that we cannot close our ears with as much ease as we can our eyes. It is very uneasy that we must necessarily be under persecution. Next to these bawlers, is a troublesome creature who comes with the air of your friend and your intimate, and that is your whisperer. There is one of them at a coffee-house which I myself frequent, who observing me to be a man pretty well made for secrets, gets by me, and with a whisper tells me things which all the town knows. It is no very hard matter to guess at the source of this impertinence, which is nothing else but a method or mechanic art of being wise. You never see any frequent in it, whom you can suppose to have any thing in the world to do. These persons are worse than bawlers, as much as a secret enemy is more dangerous than a declared one. I wish that my coffee-house friend would take this for an intimation, that I have not heard a word he has told me for these several years; whereas he now thinks, me the most trusty repository of his secrets. The whisperers have a pleasant way of ending the close conversation with saying aloud, "Do not you think so?" Then whis-

in, and then aloud, "But you know that per-hen whisper again. The thing would be ough, if they whispered to keep the folly of ey say among friends; but, alas, they do it ve the importance of their thoughts. I am ould name you more than one person whom living ever heard talk upon any subject in or ever saw in his whole life with a book in d, that, I know not how, can whisper some-ke knowledge of what has and does pass in ld; which you would think he learned from miliar spirit that did not think him worthy ve the whole story. But in truth whisperers ly in half accounts of what they entertain h. A great help to their discourse is, "That n says, and people begin to talk very freely, y had it from persons too considerable to be what they will tell you when things are

My friend has winked upon me any day came to town last, and has communicated to secret, that he designed in a very short time a secret; but I shall know what he means, assures me, in less than a fortnight's time.
 I must not omit the dearer part of mankind, the ladies, to take up a whole paper upon ces which concern the men only; but shall propose, that we change fools for an experially. A certain set of ladies complain they gently perplexed with a visitant, who affects iber than they are; which character he hopes ve by an obstinate gravity, and great guard discovering his opinion upon any occasion ver. A painful silence has hitherto gained farther advantage, than that as he might, if behaved himself with freedom, been excepted but as to this and that particular, he now in the whole. To relieve these ladies, my ends and correspondents, I shall exchange cing outlaw for their dumb visitant, and he silent gentleman all the haunts of the in order to which, I have sent them by the ost the following letters for their conduct in w conversations:—

MR,
 ive, you may be sure, heard of your irreguwithout regard to my observations upon you; I not treat you with so much rigour as you If you will give yourself the trouble to the place mentioned in the postscript* to ter at seven this evening, you will be con-into a spacious room well-lighted, where there ies and music. You will see a young lady g next the window to the street; you may out, for she loves you as well as she does i, though she never saw you before. She ought in her life, any more than yourself.
 I not be surprised when you accost her, nor ed when you leave her. Hasten from a ere you are laughed at, to one where you admired. You are of no consequence, there-where you will be welcome for being so.

"Your humble servant."

MR,
 ladies whom you visit, think a wise man impertinent creature living, therefore you e offended that they are displeased with you. ll you take pains to appear wise, where you t be the more esteemed for being really so?
 us; forget the gigglers; let your inclinaalong with you whether you speak or are silent; and let all such sisterhood, go their o you in that company of the sex.

"For women b Stoop to the fo
 Affect the haug
 The gay, the f

T.

No. 149.] TUESDAY

Cui in manu sit que
 Quem sapere, quem Quem contra amari,

Who has it in her p Or wise, or sick, or The object of her a

THE following letter up the present specula

"MR. SPECTATOR

"I am the young w
 who has left me enti
 which he agreed to as in our years. In these ordinary to have a cro abridged in my own couple of candidates of them disagreeable
 the common way of more than deserves my tune more than deser sider the first, I own avoid being delighted great; but then he s of courage from the he looks as if he was on me; and the readi me jealous I am onl same things he has sai When I consider the o with so much modesty of himself, as betrays, and a belief at the sam be the only gainer by ceptionable husband c since that is impossib your opinion. It is dispose of

"Your

"MADAM,

"You do me great me on this important
 talk to you with the te tude for your giving m do not seem to make a these gentlemen as to tion lies upon their If the one is less resp the other more obsequi are in that point move consideration of fortun in each other's circum
 of their inclination.
 ing this point, I will
 and the other Florio.
 Strephon's estate wou now, Florio is certainl

* No postscript in the Spect, in f.

would be as your own men are
be a reason
dear child,
their circum-
ted, that he poor, is the
is haughty

to consider
will please,
e you make arning, they
and Florio
on account
mercenary ing to Strely; you are ther oblige,

ipid, a vex-
s, when two selves meet een thought
ers from an oth parties.
no more re-
ents in pur-
her fortune,
se make up
up the lum-
nce towards those above
nt, and use-
f kindness,
legant satis-
ae.

junction of t, put toge-
ds, in which
ry think the
hem riches,
ople live in ad too great
ain observa-
behaviour;
erson and atory, when

ersons meet her without circumstances
ill love in er we may the other is you have a r humour of magination,
o with state,
a pleasure,
w or pomp.
your lovers ll bear with your way to n you value
udge which ing you for

ense of the e disdain at ou cry out,

What an unexceptionable husband could I make out of both!" It would, therefore, methinks, be a good way to determine yourself. Take him in whom what you like is not transferable to another; for if you choose otherwise, there is no hopes your husband will ever have what you liked in his rival; but intrinsic qualities in one man may very probably purchase every thing that is adventitious in another. In plainer terms; he whom you take for his personal perfections will sooner arrive at the gifts of fortune, than he whom you take for the sake of his fortune attain to personal perfections. If Strephon is not as accomplished and agreeable as Florio, marriage to you will never make him so; but marriage to you may make Florio as rich as Strephon. Therefore to make a sure purchase, employ fortune upon certainties, but do not sacrifice certainties to fortune.

"I am, your most obedient, T. humble servant."

No. 150.] WEDNESDAY, AUGUST 22, 1711.

Nil habet infelix paupertas durius in se Quam quod ridiculos homines facit.

Juv. Sat. iii. 152.

Want is the scorn of every wealthy fool,
And wit in rage is turn'd to ridicule.—DARDEX.

As I was walking in my chamber the morning before I went last into the country, I heard the haw-ers with great vehemence crying about a paper, entitled, The Ninety-nine Plagues of an Empty Purse. I had indeed some time before observed, that the orators of Grub-street had dealt very much in plagues. They have already published in the same month, The Plagues of Matrimony, The Plagues of a Single life, The Nineteen Plagues of a Chambermaid, The Plagues of a Coachman, The Plagues of a Footman, and The Plague of Plagues. The success these several plagues met with, probably gave occasion to the above-mentioned poem on an empty purse. However that be, the same noise so frequently repeated under my window, drew me insensibly to think on some of those inconveniences and mortifications which usually attend on poverty, and, in short, gave birth to the present speculation; for after my fancy had run over the most obvious and common calamities which men of mean fortunes are liable to, it descended to those little insults and contempts which, though they may seem to dwindle into nothing when a man offers to describe them, are perhaps in themselves more cutting and insupportable than the former. Juvenal with a great deal of humour and reason tells us, that nothing bore harder upon a poor man in his time, than the continual ridicule which his habit and dress afforded to the beaux of Rome:

Quid, quod materiam præbet causasque jecorum Omnibus hic idem; si fada et scissa lacerna, Si toga sordidula est, et rupta calceus alter Pelle patet, vel si consuto vulnere crassum Atque recens linum ostendit non una cicatrix.

Juv. Sat. iii. 147.

Add that the rich have still a gibe in store,
And will be monstrous witty on the poor;
For the torn surtout and the tatter'd vest,
The wretch and all his wardrobe are a jest:
The greasy gown sully'd with often turning,
Gives a good hint to say the man's in mourning;
Or if the shoe be ript, or patch is put,
He's wounded, see the plaster on his foot.—DARDEX.

It is on this occasion that he afterwards adds the reflection which I have chosen for my motto.

Want is the scorn of every wealthy fool,
And wit in rage is turn'd to ridicule.—DARDEX.

senary be in compliance to those narrow is can have no notion of the same persons different accomplishments; or that it is sacrifice which some men are contented to calumny, by allowing it to fasten on one sair character, while they are endeavouring sh another.

never unaccountable this foolish custom is,
did it could plead a long prescription; and gave too much occasion for the vulgar still remaining among us of a heathen ser.

seen the speed of a Terra flux, spoken Charles the Second's reign; in which he two very eminent men, who were perhaps est scholars of their age; and after having d the entire friendship between them, com-st, "they had but one mind, one purse, ber, and one hat." The men of business infected with a sort of singularity little in this. I have heard my father say, that rimmed hat, short hair, and unfolded hand-were in his time absolutely necessary to "notable man;" and that he had known ree, who aspired to the character of "very wear shoe-strings with great success.

honour of our present age, it must be that some of our greatest geniuses for wit ses have almost entirely broken the neck of ardities.

after having dispatched the most imports of the commonwealth, has appeared at bly, where all the ladies have declared him sest man in the company; and in Atti-ugh every way one of the greatest geniuses has produced, one sees nothing particular as or carriage to denote his pretensions to learning: so that at present a man may to cock up his hat, and wear a fashionable out being taken for a rake or a fool.

edium between a fop and a sloven is what sense would endeavour to keep; yet I re-dr. Osborn advises his son to appear in his or brown sugar; which that after several oblig rascal, he asked him a pany, "why he must be that fop there?" point gentleman who was de table. The boy of the deal of pertness, "that customers, and that the had given him many shoes." By this time found his honour conce

the eyes of the whole had thrown aside a pa was coming towards us, what haste we could to g quarrel, but were all o he approached nearer pe respect. To whom the sirrah, I will pay off y more, but will take effe your prodigality shall cals to insult your father.

Though I by no mea
dence of the servants or I cannot but think the measure justly served I mean in appearing in quality and estate.—X.

No. 151.] THURSDAY

Maximas virtutes Jacere o ante.—TULL. de Fin.

Where pleasure prevails, o their power.

I know no one char greater shock, at the s good ridiculous image to of a man of wit and ple description of a man o with a mixture of scorn great gravity as a law and simple

and pleasure;
ible wicked-
ly the additional. Will at we do not e coxcombs,
cribes as the
relation to

rsuit of life, sters as these such bland-ce of reason
lace a genent prurency

rpose, disap-
on to it palls
ves the sense
a disrelish of te seasons of an one would ke him when ch, or disap-nan without ose being is e is an utter e evening of art or quickound sleep or e any longer e without his
with the re-
ch a one the What has he ly of her for est honour?
e man whom ast willingly

addicts him-
for any good y of the pre-
in people of sence of all concerned life
e your secret
find that he
to the crav-
s the perfect gratifications
re as she ap-
ecommenda-
eful motion;
his presence
me, and con-
youth inglo-

timations in im was given
ue to himself
ood women."
is heart, and y of past in-
! No, there a vice makes of two old
arrantable
hat she once at he was the stead of ap-

plauses; but, on the other side, consider the old age of those who have passed their days in labour, industry, and virtue; their decays make them but appear the more venerable, and the imperfections of their bodies are beheld as a misfortune to human society that their make is so little durable.

But to return more directly to my man of wit and pleasure. In all orders of men, wherever this is the chief character, the person who wears it is a negligent friend, father, and husband, and entails poverty on his unhappy descendants. Mortgages, diseases, and settlements, are the legacies a man of wit and pleasure leaves to his family. All the poor rogues that make such lamentable speeches after every session at Tyburn, were, in their way, men of wit and pleasure before they fell into the adventures which brought them thither.

Irresolution and procrastination in all a man's affairs, are the natural effects of being addicted to pleasure. Dishonour to the gentleman, and bankruptcy to the trader, are the portion of either whose chief purpose of life is delight. The chief cause that this pursuit has been in all ages received with so much quarter from the soberer part of mankind, has been, that some men of great talents have sacrificed themselves to it. The shining qualities of such people have given a beauty to whatever they were engaged in, and a mixture of wit has recommended madness. For let any man who knows what it is to have passed much time in a series of jollity, mirth, wit, or humorous entertainments, look back at what he was all that while a-doing, and he will find that he has been at one instant sharp to some man he is sorry to have offended, impertinent to some one it was cruelty to treat with such freedom, ungracefully noisy at such a time, unskillfully open at such a time, unmercifully calumnious at such a time; and, from the whole course of his applauded satisfactions, unable in the end to recollect any circumstance which can add to the enjoyment of his own mind alone, or which he would put his character upon with other men. Thus it is with those who are best made for becoming pleasures; but how monstrous is it in the generality of mankind who pretend this way, without genius or inclination towards it! The scene, then, is wild to an extravagance: this is, as if fools should mimic madmen. Pleasure of this kind is the intemperate meals and loud jollities of the common rate of country gentlemen, whose practice and way of enjoyment is to put an end, as fast as they can, to that little particle of reason they have when they are sober. These men of wit and pleasure dispatch their senses as fast as possible, by drinking until they cannot taste, smoking until they cannot see, and roaring until they cannot hear.—T.

No. 152.] FRIDAY, AUGUST 24, 1711.

Like leaves on trees the race of man is found.—Pope's Hou

THERE is no sort of people whose conversation is so pleasant as that of military men, who derive their courage and magnanimity from thought and reflection. The many adventures which attend their way of life makes their conversation so full of incidents, and gives them so frank an air in speaking of what they have been witnesses of, that no company can be more amiable than that of men of sense who are soldiers. There is a certain irregular way in their narrations or discourse, which has something more warm and pleasing than we meet with among men who are used to adjust and methodize their thoughts.

I was this evening walking in the fields with my friend Captain Sentry, and I could not, from the many relations which I drew him into of what passed when he was in the service, forbear expressing my wonder, that the "fear of death," which we, the rest of mankind, arm ourselves against with so much contemplation, reason, and philosophy, should appear so little in camps, that common men march into open breaches, meet opposite battalions, not only without reluctance, but with alacrity. My friend answered what I said in the following manner: "What you wonder at may very naturally be the subject of admiration to all who are not conversant in camps; but when a man has spent some time in that way of life, he observes a certain mechanic courage which the ordinary race of men become masters of from acting always in a crowd. They see indeed many drop, but then they see many more alive; they observe themselves escape very narrowly, and they do not know why they should not again. Besides which general way of loose thinking, they usually spend the other part of their time in pleasures upon which their minds are so entirely bent, that short labours or dangers are but a cheap purchase of jollity, triumph, victory, fresh quarters, new scenes, and uncommon adventures. Such are the thoughts of the executive part of an army, and indeed of the gross of mankind in general; but none of these men of mechanical courage have ever made any great figure in the profession of arms. Those who are formed for command, are such as have reasoned themselves, out of a consideration of greater good than length of days, into such a negligence of their being, as to make it their first position, that it is one day to be resigned;—and since it is, in the prosecution of worthy actions and service of mankind, they can put it to habitual hazard. The events of our designs, say they, as it relates to others, is uncertain; but as it relates to ourselves it must be prosperous, while we are in the pursuit of our duty, and within the terms upon which Providence has ensured our happiness, whether we die or live. All that nature has prescribed must be good; and as death is near to us, it is absurdity to fear it. Fear loses its purpose when we are sure it cannot preserve us, and we should draw resolution to meet it from the impossibility to escape it. Without a resignation to the necessity of dying, there can be no capacity in man to attempt any thing that is glorious; but when they have once attained to that perfection, the pleasures of a life spent in martial adventures are as great as any of which the human mind is capable. The force of reason gives a certain beauty mixed with conscience of well-doing and thirst of glory to all which before was terrible and ghastly to the imagination. Add to this, that the fellowship of danger, the common good of mankind, the general cause, and the manifest virtue you may observe in so many men who made no figure until that day, are so many incentives to destroy the little consideration of their own persons. Such are the heroic part of soldiers, who are qualified for leaders. As to the rest whom I before spoke of, I know not how it is, but they arrive at a certain habit of being void of thought, insomuch that on occasion of the most imminent danger they are still in the same indifference. Nay, I remember an instance of a gay Frenchman,* who was led on in battle by a superior officer (whose conduct it was his custom to speak of always with a beginning of sensible was not was, 'I wish I blundering con-

"I remember same squadrons together; they a word, all the tend the same to each other evening to make gentlemen believe ferry-boat, as it was now in the with others by the boat. A an unruly horse rein of his he forced into the The friend on is drowned, tr 'Your friend replied; 'Ay, thet from such me, at that opinion of the affection and equality rooted them; they are supplied by an out delicacy, well as he who To such the of inhabitants silent sorrow objects; their cations of the of compassion, shame; their hope of meeting people who make the fine gentle one as I have danger to which friends and company and gentlemen they are of behold him. their ranks, to him at their of the files was for himself and manner should offended. Such and feels their Just in distributing himself below clothes in lac rapacious agents own pay. Go fortune, and i

No. 153.] S

Habet natura senectus autem per fatigationem fugit

Life, as well as nature; and its age, the fatigue of our appetites are

Of all the

* The Frenchman here alluded to was the Chevalier de Florilles, a lieutenant-general under the Prince of Conde, at the battle of Seneff, in 1674.

BRITISH ESSAYISTS.

one more un-
 ral education,
 ger. I have upon sight of a past action,
 cannot now re-
 nameful when n of a foolish
 th again only
 which we once (has it) as ab-
 ngth of youth,
 wish for the shes are both direct in all
 justice, law,
 man has been
 be old, there nderstanding be-unhappy want arrogance or despondence
 whose passion and an old one ebauched, are but the cock-
 the toes of his he saucy pride
 r present con-
 derision are n one give ad-
 ession of sens-
 ld man in the hem? When a their deport-
 their appetites,
 f a despicable
 h in the midst
 When an old ons which are nation to that ence to recall.
 atisfied merely
 f all measures
 e we have any
 e lowest worm.
 to consider a eings, besides
 order of Progs, and being reation. But as lost by the ch he had in ere then, but e disturbance er day in disupon some ad-ried out, "Oh That is true,"
 e go about our then." One atisfaction to he heat of the a fever, as it is it are no other stemper; and that season of
 for the loss of very pastures,
 ertained in the easures of our

being—the conscience of a good fame, the contemplation of another life, the respect and commerce of honest men, our capacities for such enjoyments are enlarged by years. While health endures, the latter part of life, in the eye of reason, is certainly the more eligible. The memory of a well-spent youth gives a peaceable, unmixed, and elegant pleasure to the mind; and to such who are so unfortunate as not to be able to look back on youth with satisfaction, they may give themselves no little consolation that they are under no temptation to repeat their follies, and that they at present despise them. It was prettily said, "He that would be long an old man must begin early to be one;" it is too late to resign a thing after a man is robbed of it; therefore it is necessary that before the arrival of age we bid adieu to the pursuits of youth, otherwise sensual habit will live in our imaginations, when our limbs cannot be subservient to them. The poor fellow who lost his arm last siege, will tell you, he feels the finger that are buried in Flanders ache every cold morning at Chelsea.

The fond humour of appearing in the gay and fashionable world, and being applauded for trivial excellences, is what makes youth have age in contempt, and makes age resign with so ill a grace the qualifications of youth; but this in both sexes is in-verting all things, and turning the natural course of our minds, which should build their approbation and dislikes upon what nature and reason dictate into chimaera and confusion.

Age in a virtuous person, of either sex, carries it as an authority which makes it preferable to all the pleasures of youth. If to be saluted, attended, and consulted with deference, are instances of pleasure they are such as never fail a virtuous old age. In the enumeration of the imperfections and advantages of the younger and later years of man, the are so near in their condition, that, methinks, it should be incredible we see so little commerce and kindness between them. If we consider youth and age with Tully, regarding the affinity to death, youth has many more chances to be near it than age: what youth can say more than an old man, "he shall live until night?" Youth catches distempers more easily, its sickness is more violent, and its recovery more doubtful. The youth indeed hopes for many more days, so cannot the old man. The youth hopes are ill-grounded; for what is more foolish than to place any confidence upon an uncertainty? But the old man has not room so much as to hope he is still happier than the youth; he has already enjoyed what the other does but hope for. One wishes to live long, the other has lived long. But alas! is there any thing in human life, the duration of which can be called long? There is nothing which must end, to be valued for its continuance.
 If hours, days, months, and years pass away, it is no matter what hour, what day, what month, or what year we die. The applause of a good actor is due to him at whatever scene of the play he makes his exit.
 It is thus in the life of a man of sense; a short life is sufficient to manifest himself a man of honour and virtue; when he ceases to be such he has lived too long; and while he is such, it is of no consequence to him how long he shall be so, provided it is so to his life's end.—T.

No. 154.] MONDAY, AUGUST 27, 1711.

Nemo repente fuit turpissimus— Jov. Sat. li. 82.

No man e'er reach'd the heights of vice at first.—TAYL.

"MR. SPECTATOR,

"You are frequent in the mention of matters which concern the feminine world, and take upon you to be very severe against men upon all those occasions: but all this while I am afraid you have been very little conversant with women, or you would know the generality of them are not so angry as you imagine at the general vices among us. I am apt to believe (begging your pardon) that you are still what I myself was once, a queer modest fellow; and therefore, for your information, shall give you a short account of myself, and the reasons why I was forced to wench, drink, play, and do every thing which are necessary to the character of a man of wit and pleasure, to be well with the ladies.

"You are to know, then, that I was bred a gentleman, and had the finishing part of my education under a man of great probity, wit, and learning, in one of our universities. I will not deny but this made my behaviour and mien bear in it a figure of thought rather than action; and a man of a quite contrary character who never thought in his life, rallied me one day upon it, and said, 'he believed I was still a virgin.' There was a young lady of virtue present, and I was not displeased to favour the insinuation; but it had a quite contrary effect from what I expected. I was ever after treated with great coldness both by that lady and all the rest of my acquaintance. In a very little time I never came into a room but I could hear a whisper, 'Here comes the maid.' A girl of humour would on some occasion say, 'Why, how do you know more than any of us?' An expression of that kind was generally followed by a loud laugh. In a word, for no other fault in the world than that they really thought me as innocent as themselves, I became of no consequence among them, and was received always upon the foot of a jest. This made so strong an impression upon me, that I resolved to be as agreeable as the best of the men who laughed at me; but I observed it was nonsense for me to be impudent at first among those who knew me. My character for modesty was so notorious wherever I had hitherto appeared, that I resolved to shew my new face in new quarters of the world. My first step I chose with judgment; for I went to Astrop,* and came down among a crowd of academics, at one dash, the impudentest fellow they had ever seen in their lives. Flushed with this success, I made love, and was happy. Upon this conquest I thought it would be unlike a gentleman to stay long with my mistress, and crossed the country to Bury.† I could give you a very good account of myself at that place also. At these two ended my first summer of gallantry.—The winter following, you would wonder at it, but I relapsed into modesty upon coming among people of figure in London, yet not so much but that the ladies who had formerly laughed at me, said, 'Bless us, how wonderfully that gentleman is improved!' Some familiarities about the play-houses towards the end of the ensuing winter, made me conceive new hopes of adventures. And instead of returning the next summer to Astrop or Bury, I thought myself qualified to go to Epsom, and followed a young man of my place in the country. I tried my point, to Tunbridge, and made my appeal the way of talking. I had a vast acquaintance proved to the contrary at that time, and soon found a modest man was as a precise young man. It was 'ordinaire' to have good company, and I could speak of it next to the greatest of the world with a blow off. I was angry lady still in her countenance, a wicked fellow, swears, receives, not know he is often see men throw at once commend them long experience abandoned bel tensions to women given to people off the remainder. In the above- I always kept at large; and pretty rake among the wretched melancholy hours of my fortune gave me the opportunity of marrying a fellow.

"When I was twenty-seven, and became the seventh of my family, I was wasting very much of my company of a disposal. I was gallantry gentlemen, watch jealous husbands, young thing who knew the world. Desdemona, a strange, it was saw the improvement a very little of me. There is beauty, that have been in entered into it.

"What I said to you, farther with them some less. It is that I am natural way, to bring this and poverty time tell the they take too little things. proper audacity and graceful virtue and * Astrop-wells, in Oxfordshire—into which Doctor Radcliffe put a road."

† Bury-fair. A place of fashionable resort.

among the

at you are a o great with ntenn these but believe nce to human ards opening
pon all your nds, or bro-
le servant,
ONEYCOMB."

28, 1711.

451. t slight,
MMON.

of an inde-
the conver-
the effect of ppens in tra-
sitting near the like. I his sort, re-
part of the
any trade or man, urgent
unhappy cir-
unreasonable
e, to talk on xcomb who e or two of f those whom ol some time

ry upon that
, who are the
in another
aint my cus-ones) that I cannot help
re pleased to shall say the
At the same
staring just and gestures

In this pas-
st my eyes,
elf in. But them say in nd subtlety,
e, for all she le gentlemen
is possible a public-house.
affront is the
ed to suffer it,
you, Sir, the se from the n me, from tries which I ord, it is too
to acquaint
the bar, and it to you for e how empty
ge of an im-

udent countenance and gesture, will appear, they may come to some sense of themselves, and the insults they are guilty of towards me.

"I am, Sir, your most humble servant,

"THE IDOL."

This representation is so just, that it is hard to speak of it without an indignation which perhaps would appear too elevated to such as can be guilty of this inhuman treatment, where they see they affront a modest, plain, and ingenuous behaviour. This correspondent is not the only sufferer in this kind, for I have long letters both from the Royal and New Exchange on the same subject. They tell me that a young fop cannot buy a pair of gloves, but he is at the same time straining at some ingenious ribaldry to say to the young woman who helps them on. It is no small addition to the calamity that the rogues buy as hard as the plainest and modestest customers they have; besides which, they loiter upon their counters half an hour longer than they need, to drive away other customers, who are to share their impertinences with the milliner, or go to another shop. Letters from 'Change-alley are full of the same evil; and the girls tell me, except I can chase some eminent merchants from their shops they shall in a short time fail. It is very unaccountable, that men can have so little deference to all mankind who pass by them, as to bear being seen toying by twos and threes at a time, with no other purpose but to appear gay enough to keep up a light conversation or common-place jests, to the injury of her whose credit is certainly hurt by it, though their own may be strong enough to bear it. When we come to have exact accounts of these conversations, it is not to be doubted but that their discourses will raise the usual style of buying and selling. Instead of the plain downright lying, and asking and bidding so unequally to what they will really give and take, we may hope to have from these fine folks an exchange of compliments. There must certainly be a great deal of pleasant difference between the commerce of lovers, and that of all other dealers, who are in a kind, adversaries. A sealed bond, or a bank-note, would be a pretty gallantry to convey unseen into the hands of one whom a director is charmed with; otherwise the city-loiterers are still more unreasonable than those at the other end of the town. At the New-Exchange they are eloquent for want of cash, but in the city they ought with cash to supply their want of eloquence.

If one might be serious on this prevailing folly, one might observe that it is a melancholy thing, when the world is mercenary even to the buying and selling our very persons; that young women, though they have never so great attractions from nature, are never the nearer being happily disposed of in marriage; I say, it is very hard under this necessity, it shall not be possible for them to go into a way of trade for their maintenance, but their very excellences and personal perfections shall be a disadvantage to them, and subject them to be treated as if they stood there to sell their persons to prostitution. There cannot be a more melancholy circumstance to one who has made any observation in the world, than one of those erring creatures exposed to bankruptcy. When that happens, none of those toying fools will do any more than any other man they meet, to preserve her from infamy, insult, and distemper. A woman is naturally more helpless than the other sex; and a man of honour and sense should have this in his view in all manner of commerce with her. Were this well weighed, inconsideration; ribaldry, and nonsense, would not be more natural to entertain women with, than men; and it would be as much impertinence to go into a shop of one of these young women without buying, as into that of any other trader. I shall end this speculation with a letter I have received from a pretty milliner in the city.

"MR. SPECTATOR,

"I have read your account of beauties, and was a little surprised to find no character of myself in it. I do assure you I have little else to do but to give audience, as I am such. Here are merchants of no small consideration, who call in as certainly as they go to 'Change, to say something of my roguishness. And here is one who makes me once or twice a week tumble over all my goods, and then owns it as only gallantry to see me act with these pretty wits: then lays out three-pence in a little riband for his wristbands, and thinks he is man of great vicinity. There is an ugly thing not far off me, whose shop is frequented only by people of business, that all day long as busy as possible. Must I that am beautiful be treated with for nothing but my beauty? I am pleased to assign rates to my kind glances, or take all pay who come to see me, or I shall be undone by my admirers for want of customers. Albanda, Eudasia, and all the rest, would be used just as we are, if they were in our condition; therefore may consider the distress of us the lower order of beauties, and I shall be

T. "Your obliged humble servant."

No. 156.] WEDNESDAY, AUGUST 29, 1711.

Sed tu simul obligasti Perfidum votis caput, entescis Pulchrior multo.—Hos. 2 Od. viii. 5.

But thou,
When once thou hast broke some tender vow,
All perjur'd, dost more charming grow!

I do not think any thing could make a pleasanter entertainment, than the history of the reigning favourites among the women from time to time about the town. In such an account we ought to have a faithful confession of each lady for what she liked such and such a man, and he ought to tell us by what particular action or dress he believed he should be most successful. As for my part, I have always made as easy a judgment when a man dresses for the ladies, as when he is equipped for hunting or coursing:—the woman's man is a person in his air and behaviour quite different from the rest of our species; his garb is more loose and negligent, his manner more soft and indolent;—that is to say, in both these there is an apparent endeavour to appear unobserved and careless. In catching birds the fowling men have a method of imitating their voices to bring them to the snare; and your women's men are always a similitude of the creature they hope to trap in their own conversation. A woman's man is very knowing in all that passes from one family to another, has pretty little officiousnesses, is not at all what is good for a cold, and it is not amiss if he has a bottle of spirits in his pocket in case of any sudden indisposition.

Curiosity having been my prevailing passion, and indeed the sole entertainment of my life, I have sometimes made it my business to examine the course of intrigues as well as the manners and accomplishments of such as have been most successful at way. In all my observation, I never knew a man of good understanding, who by some singularity of way of life, and behaviour, was successful among the other sex.

people so fortunate, but let any one look for the man of the telling impertinence, unlike the rest of an insipid assiduous figure he made, and must have the women, to please you are to know among the light the dominion of comb says it was suspicious that he (that is, some rival) A little spite is not ordinary to snap at; other should have fares well among for no other reason skill to keep the other. Did they in her heart, each next moment; because it is the fast brings them into other. What adds the pleasant thief constant creature and humour, and sides all which, tongue if you should

To make a woman of sense, or a fool, it is much better to have a capacity of judging all the women's of these are volunteers of pay or preference lead out from a party on a public day, part of that heaven of the fair. But those who are known these are the choice. We have several among us when the lows are accompanied ordinary occurrences that sort of good morality, and consequently dissolute.

It is wonderful how a woman can carry a regard to a profession, scarce one of all gallantries ever has a common sense of sobriety a continual round of themselves their own conduct to others. It is a fame for falsehood and the coxcomb others, is received as a vice, to be a vice.

If you see a loud upon no occasion, round him, and yet lay at negligence, you may has ruined many a fair presses himself wholly strutting. An elevated surable step, and a sly looks of him. Now and with all these accomplishments of them is enough to a gentleman with such per- turning, there should be once in town, that we daughters. It happens an has read all the mis- comedies, and has the as by heart. "Oh if it could be as true as he much, the women will a: a little gallantry to indulge one's self in, let e's fan, say something en call one so many his learning has at his some excuse for frailty, against a weak woman," any a lady one might those who makes it no to day in the sin of are got into a way of overlooking the most the most trivial excel- from expecting to be judicious silly animal, her features and her e object of desire; and on, from reading frivo- volous company, each tion, and arrive at the river and the Perjured

AUGUST 30, 1711.

temperat astrum.
is in unum
Hoc. 2 Ep. ii. 187.

pow'r.
natal hour:
thin us still.
trains our will.—POPE.

to express by any word guage, that which is n. The natural dispo- science, profession, or nsulted in the care of for their own conduct s any scheme of life. for a man to judge of

That may look great tle to another; and I towards myself so far, for my talents and ac- ot, methinks, so very udgment of the abili- those who are in their book directs me on dawning of greatness ed in his youth to con- ic games, answered he would, if he had kings to run against him. ( who was one of the conspirators against Cæsar as great a proof of his temper, when in his hood he struck a play-fellow, the son of Sæpius saying his father was master of the Roman Scipio is reported to have answered, when flatterers at supper were asking him why Romans should do for a general after his "Take Marius." Marius was then a very it had given no instances of his valour; but visible to Scipio, from the manners of, that he had a soul for the attempt and exec great undertakings. I must confess I ha often with much sorrow, bewailed the misfor the children of Great Britain, when I consi ignorance and undiscerning of the gener schoolmasters. The boasted liberty we tal but a mean reward for the long servitude, th heart-aches and terrors, to which our child exposed in going through a grammar-school. of these stupid tyrants exercise their cruel out any manner of distinction of the capar children, or the intention of parents in their There are many excellent tempers which are to be nourished and cultivated with all possi gence and care, that were never designed b quainted with Aristotle, Tully, or Virgil; as are as many who have capacities for unders every word those great persons have writ, were not born to have any relish of their w For want of this common and obvious discer those who have the care of youth, we have s hundred unaccountable creatures every age w up into great scholars, that are for ever near understanding, and will never arrive at it. are the scandal of letters, and these are ge the men who are to teach others. The s shame and honour is enough to keep the w self in order without corporal punishment, more to train the minds of uncorrupted an cent children. It happens, I doubt not, mor once in a year, that a lad is chastised for a head, when it is good apprehension that mak incapable of knowing what his teacher mea brisk imagination very often may suggest an which a lad could not have fallen into, if been as heavy in conjecturing as his master plaining. But there is no mercy even tow wrong interpretation of his meaning; the ful of the scholar's body are to rectify the mist his mind.

I am confident that no boy, who will not be to letters without blows, will ever be brought thing with them. A great or good mind m cessarily be the worse for such indignities; is a sad change, to lose of its virtue for the in ment of its knowledge. No one who has through what they call a great school, but n member to have seen children of excellent s genuous natures (as has afterward appeared i manhood): I say no man has passed throu way of education but must have seen an ing creature, expiring with shame—with pale loe seething sorrow, and silent tears, throw up its eyes, and kneel on its tender knees to an ing blockhead to be forgiven the false quantity of in making a Latin verse. The child is pu and the next day he commits a like crime, a third with the same consequence. I would f any reasonable man, whether this lad, in t plicity of his native innocence, full of shan capable of any impression from that grace ter for any purpose in this life, than after of virtue is extinguished in him, though to write twenty verses in an evening? says, after his exalted way of talking, immortal gods never learnt any virtue, ey are endued with all that is good; so some men who have so natural a pro- what they should follow, that they learn is soon as they hear it." Plants and ve- re cultivated into the production of finer they would yield without that care; and not entertain hopes of producing a ten- ous spirit into acts of virtue, without the hods as are used to cut timber, or give new piece of stone.

olly to this dreadful practice, that we may certain hardihood and ferocity which some gh liberally educated, carry about them ur behaviour. To be bred like a gentle- punished like a malefactor, must, as we produce that illiberal sauciness which we mes in men of letters.

artan boy who suffered the fox (which he and hid under his coat) to eat into his dare say had not half the wit or petulance learn at great schools among us: but the sense of honour, or rather fear of shame, demonstrated in that action, was worth all ing in the world without it.

rethinks, a very melancholy consideration, the negligence can spoil us, but great in- necessary to improve us; the most excel- res are soon depreciated, but evil tempers before they are exalted into good habits. his by punishments, is the same thing as man to cure him of a distemper; when he suffer punishment in that one circumstance, ight below the existence of a rational crea- is in the state of a brute that moves only monition of stripes. But since this custom ing by the lash is suffered by the gentry of itain, I would prevail only that honest ls may be dismissed from slavery sooner y are at present, and not whipped on to tenth or fifteenth year, whether they ex- progress from them or not. Let the child's be forthwith examined, and he sent to some way of life, without respect to his birth, e designed him for nothing higher: let him e he has innocently suffered, and is debased ereliction of mind for being what it is no e, a plain man. I would not here be sup- have said, that our learned men of either have been whipped at school, are not still ble and liberal minds; but I am sure they ve been much more so than they are, had er suffered that infamy.

ough there is so little care, as I have ob- ken, or observation made of the natural men, it is no small comfort to me, as a r, that there is any right value set upon the les of other animals; as appears by the fol- dvertisement handed about the county of and subscribed by Enos Thomas, a person ave not the honour to know, but suppose to ndly learned in horse-flesh:—

esnut horse called Cæsar, bred by James quire, at Sedbury, near Richmond, in the f York; his grandam was his old royal d got by Blunderbuss, which was got by Turk, and he got by Mr. Courant's Ara- ch got Mr. Minshul's Jew's-Trump. Mr.

Cæsar sold him to a nob old, when he had but one guineas. A guinea a les the man.

T.

No. 158.] FRIDAY

—Nos hæc novimus e

We know these things to

OUT of a firm regard to letters, let them make for

"MR. SPECTATOR,

"I have observed that your rhapsodies (as you call them) are very industrious in your superiors, who have made their rule of writing and sixty, and had the first men of taste and genius of Charles the Second. I presume, as good understanding now can pretend to. As you seem with the utmost the very fundamentals to ourselves. It is monstrous wit, and yet deny that anything else but peevishness the best rule of life, or else but health and disease but to put a lady into could wish followed of Tully, and your discourse very bane of mirth and not value thyself on the rate, and the dignity of word for it, a setting-down man in England. Had one would think you do in town, you should have passion and appetite; yet every pretty mouth in the tiches had been the max to walk by: but, alas, from entertaining people make them like themselves fore they read you? Had to describe Corinna charged to find something in her Zoilus excuse himself for make every man in good reflections, you had done please; but indeed, Sir, for disapproving us. I have to you, but I shall sum. In short, Sir, you do not

"I am, Sir, your

"MR. SPECTATOR,

"The other day we were at table, and according to custom had the Spectator read, per wherein you are pleased to show that character which we gave up all the kindness except those who, you say, I was upon the occasion pany to write to you and part with the men we have * Spect. in folio. Altered was left out.

No. 159.] SATURDAY, SEPTEMBER 1, 1711

—Omnen, quæ nunc obducta tuenti Mortales hebetat visus tibi, et humida circum Caligat, nubem eripiam— VIKO. Æn. ii. 604.

The cloud, which, intercepting the clear light, Hangs o'er thy eyes, and blinds thy mortal sight, I will remove —

WHEN I was at Grand Cairo, I picked up several oriental manuscripts, which I have still by me. Among others I met with one entitled, The Vision of Mirza, which I have read over with great pleasure. I intend to give it to the public when I have no other entertainment for them; and shall begin with the first vision, which I have translated word for word as follows:

"On the fifth day of the moon, which according to the custom of my forefathers I always keep holy after having washed myself, and offered up my morning devotions, I ascended the high hills of Bagdad in order to pass the rest of the day in meditation and prayer. As I was here airing myself on the tops of the mountains, I fell into a profound contemplation on the vanity of human life; and passing from one thought to another, 'Surely,' said I, 'man is but a shadow, and life a dream.' While I was thus musing, I cast my eyes towards the summit of a rock that was not far from me, where I discovered one in the habit of a shepherd, with a little musical instrument in his hand. As I looked upon him he applied it to his lips, and began to play upon it. The sound of it was exceeding sweet, and wrought into a variety of tunes that were inexpressibly melodious, and altogether different from any thing I had ever heard. They put me in mind of those heavenly airs that are played to the departed souls of good men upon their first arrival in Paradise, to wear out the impressions of the last agonies, and qualify them for the pleasures of that happy place. My heart melted away in secret raptures.

"I had been often told that the rock before me was the haunt of genius; and that several had been entertained with music who had passed by it, but never heard that the musician had before made himself visible. When he had raised my thoughts by those transporting airs which he played, to taste the pleasures of his conversation, as I looked upon him like one astonished, he beckoned to me, and by the waving of his hand directed me to approach the place where he sat. I drew near with that reverence which is due to a superior nature; and as my heart was entirely subdued by the captivating strain I had heard, I fell down at his feet and wept. The genius smiled upon me with a look of compassion and affability that familiarized him to my imagination, and at once dispelled all the fears and apprehensions with which I approached him. He lifted me from the ground, and taking me by the hand 'Mirza,' said he, 'I have heard thee in thy solitary quies; follow me.'

"He then led me to the highest pinnacle of the rock, and placing me on the top of it—'Cast thine eyes eastward,' said he, 'and tell me what thou seest.'—'I see,' said I, 'a huge valley, and a prodigious tide of water rolling through it.'—'Thou valley that thou seest,' said he, 'is the Vale of Misery, and the tide of water that thou seest is part of the great tide of eternity.'—'What is the reason,' said I, 'that the tide I see rises out of a thin mist at one end, and again loses itself in a thin mist at the other?'—'What thou seest,' said he, 'is that portion of eternity which is called time, measured out by the sun, and reaching from the beginning

give us their imagine but sense better
 obtained with,
 us very in-
 ll. We are
 ame into the ankind; and the men of ttle of their
 at in it; and it, to which al among us,
 company and
 etter grace:
 ething orna-
 en, which is n only. Give you no great
 ore into our
 of a certain
 igh you talk
 ent,
 e reader."

ex may, per-us when they e you, Sir, to ch you have
 ust touched.
 t upon good
 hat time and n all our ac-
 behaviour at everend man
 ething par-
 y manner of
 of gigglers taken notice
 an occasion
 armon. You behind a fan,
 another seat,
 if she would were many stly, but this
 a. There was at found out
 gers, for she ory over and
 and not laugh pectator, that and on these he place as a lsewhere?"

h a very fine
 us whom you u must know
 r to her, and ough I was nd taking up

nd.
 ere a pedant;
 eca and quote
 e servant."

lady's girdle.

BRITISH ESSAYISTS.

I have heard genius. There is, that has not genius; and as scarce a man is or other for

consider what is some thoughts

draw the admi-
d stand up as mere strength
distance of art

were the de-vonder of possibly wild and uses, that is
and polishing
by which they versation, re-
polite authors.
in the arts and in them, and

ses that were
of art, are to
in particular
of the world.
Virgil was not at we find se-
time than any t we allow a ancients, we
y much failed,
much above,
erns. In their re was a likemselves about Solomon re-tower of Lescus; as the altitude of the

It would be ture; Homer
ssed with the t has his sides llage without then tossing
h resentment,
is. This para large field of gh at an inde-
these sorts of rsia, conform-amidst a great himself "the delight." In the ancients,
climates, who ions, we are to
at the French has been found regions of the mends for our ons nicety and countryman,
ce of this first

observing that class, who was tiosity to vast conceptions of things and noble sallies of imagin-tion. At the same time, can any thing be more ridiculous than for men of a sober and moderat fancy to imitate this poet's way of writing, in those monstrous compositions which go among us under the name of Pindarics? When I see people copying works, which, as Horace has represented them are singular in their kind, and inimitable; when see men following irregularities by rule, and by the little tricks of art straining after the most unbounde flights of nature, I cannot but apply to them the passage in Terence:

—Incerta hæc si tu postules Ratione certa facere, nihilo plus agas.
Quam si des operam, ut cum ratione insanias.

Eux. act. 1. sc. 1.

You may as well pretend to be mad and in your senses at the same time, as to think of reducing these uncertain things to any certainty by reason.

In short, a modern Pindaric writer, compared with Pindar, is like a sister among the Camisars* compared with Virgil's Sibyl: there is the distortion, grimace, and outward figure, but nothing of that divine impulse which raises the mind above itself, and makes the sounds more than human.

There is another kind of great geniuses which I shall place in a second class, not as I think them inferior to the first, but only for distinction's sake, as they are of a different kind. The second class of great geniuses are those that have formed themselves by rules, and submitted the greatness of their natural talents to the corrections and restraints of art.
Such among the Greeks were Plato and Aristotle; among the Romans, Virgil and Tully; among the English, Milton and Sir Francis Bacon.

The genius in both these classes of authors may be equally great, but shows itself after a different manner. In the first, it is like a rich soil in a happy climate, that produces a whole wilderness of noble plants rising in a thousand beautiful landscapes without any certain order or regularity. In the other it is the same rich soil under the same happy climate, that has been laid out in walks and parterres, and cut into shape and beauty by the skill of the gardener.

The great danger in the latter kind of geniuses is, lest they cramp their own abilities too much by imitation, and form themselves altogether upon models, without giving the full play to their own natural parts. An imitation of the best authors is not to compare with a good original; and I believe we may observe that very few writers make an extraordinary figure in the world, who have not something in their way of thinking or expressing themselves that is peculiar to them, and entirely their own.

It is odd, to consider what great geniuses at sometimes thrown away upon trifles.

"I once saw a shepherd," says a famous Italian author, "who used to divert himself in his solitude with tossing up eggs and catching them again without breaking them: in which he had arrived to a great degree of perfection, that he would keep it four at a time for several minutes together playit

* More commonly known by the name of the French Prophets, a set of enthusiasts originally of the Cevennes in France who came into England about the year 1707, and had at first considerable number of votaries. A fuller account of their and progress of this strange sect may be gained from the pamphlets; one in French, entitled, "Le Theatre sacré Cevennes, ou Recit de diverses Merveilles nouvelles operees dans cette Partie de la Province de Languedoc. Le 1707, 12mo." The other in English, viz. "A Brand pluckt from the Burning; exemplified in the unparalleled case Samuel Keimer. &c. London, 1718, 12mo."

and falling into his hands by turns. I says the author, "I never saw a greater man in this man's face; for by his wonder-ful strength and application, he had contracted a swiftness and gravity of a privy-counsellor; and could not but reflect with myself, that the duty and attention, had they been rightly might have made him a greater mathematician than Archimedes."

TUESDAY, SEPTEMBER 4, 1711.

*is agit festos, fususque per herbam, ubi in medio et socii cratera coronant, nos, lenæ, vocat; pectorisque magistra jaculi certamina ponit in ulmo, aque agresti nudat prædura palæstra.
iam veteres vitam coluere Sabini, amamus et frater. Sic fortis Etruria crevit, et rerum facta est pulcherrima Roma.*
VIRG. Georg. li. 527.

'tis a rustic pomp, on hollydays,
And pow'rs a just oblation pays;
The green his careless limbs displays:
Earth is in the midst: the herdsmen, round A useful fire, provoke his health in goblets crown'd.
On Bacchus, and propounds the prize,
On his fellow-groom at butts defies,
And his bow, and levels with his eyes:
Yet for wrestling, smears his limbs with oil,
And catches with a trip his foe to foil:
As the life the frugal Sabines led;
As and his brother king were bred:
Whom the austere Etrurian virtue rose:
A rude life our homely fathers chose:
We from such a race deriv'd her birth,
And of empire, and the conquer'd earth.—DRAKE.

And that my late going into the country has the number of my correspondents, one of us me the following letter:

SIR,
If you are pleased to retire from us so the city, I hope you will not think the country altogether unworthy of your for the future. I had the honor of seeing your face at Sir Roger de Coverley's, and since thought your person and writings extraordinary. Had you stayed there a few days, you would have seen a country wake, which I know in most parts of England is the custom of the dedication of our churches. I was at one of these assemblies which was held in a neighbouring parish; where I found their green with a promiscuous multitude of all ages and sexes, who esteem one another more or less according to the rank of the year, according as they have themselves at this time. The whole was in their holiday clothes, and divided into several parties, all of them endeavouring to excel in those exercises wherein they expect to gain the approbation of the lookers-on. And a ring of cudgel players, who were breaking other's heads in order to make some impression on their mistresses' hearts. I observed a lusty fellow, who had the misfortune of a broken heart, what considerably added to the anguish and pain, was his overhearing an old man who had said, 'That he questioned now whether he should marry him these three years.' I was diverted from a farther observation of these sports by a foot-ball match, which was on the green: where Tom Short behaved so well, that most people seemed to agree, that it was possible that he should remain a bachelor next wake. Having played many a match myself, I could have looked on him as a great man, had I not observed a countenance on an eminence at some distance, making so many odd gestures, and so much of a distorted her whole body, as made me very desirous to see him. Upon my coming up to him, I was overlooking a young man, my sweetheart, a person of stature, with a huge brawny fellow, who was shaking the little man, and showing a secret sympathy of heart in the person of the man, say, like Celia in Shakspeare's play, could have wished her a strong fellow by the leg. He treats the whole company with ale; and proposes a bet to him who gives most for a spirit of emulation in the some of them have rendered at this exercise! and I wish my fellow's heels fly up, by so smartly that I could see that the old wrestlers sell some one was grown for two or three of his opposers as it were a reserve, which is always hung up in one of the most conspicuous places, and looked upon by the world much more to their honor. There was a fellow who had all the ceremonies, and an air of importance in his language, inquiring who he was, answered, 'That he did nothing, for that he and his many hats, that his partner was a dasher's shop.' However, they all was the reason, 'lord of the ring' for about among them.

"The young maids who were at these exercises, were the diversion; and upon my inquiring of my own parish what he had given much attention, he told me of Betty Welch, whom I knew to 'pitch a bar.'

"In short, I found that the women they were in the whole company strived to excel to each other, by making all in a perfect state of any fatigues of bodily labour.

"Your judgment upon gallantry, as it is at present in the country, will very much interest me.

If I would here put on a new suit, I might inform my readers of some new exercises or games were formed in the commonwealths of Greece, and afterwards borrowed by the Romans, composed of running, wrestling, and boxing, though the only thing but a crown of cypress being in fashion in those times, which obliges a man having such an estate, to stors excelled upon, and we at the inconvenience I once met the author contrit of emulation among our t be directed, all our hand-prizes set up lent in their these political e to pass the eatest benefit these country ple together, ewing them. A country back, has geon mistress; nimble-footed time that she e the natural ies. I must od by which ndeavours to othing seems spring, or a d may assure een many a xchange her and several d with a teng love made meetings, as e intent for s we are in- with whose per.

limitation of t established eat, who, in e orders that ies made up es round the om of wakes ice Puritans at of popery: ew so popu- Chief Baron ession of all ning of this ed the order BER 5, 1711.

et.
Poet. v. 126.

akes a man e eyes of the it regards ases, though hanging his by those he by those he

In these great articles of life, therefore, a man's conviction ought to be very strong, and if possible so well timed, that worldly advantages may seem to have no share in it, or mankind will be ill-natured enough to think he does not change sides out of principle, but either out of levity of temper, or prospects of interest. Converts and renegadoes of all kinds should take particular care to let the world see they act upon honourable motives; or, whatever approbations they may receive from themselves, and applauses from those they converse with, they may be very well assured that they are the scorn of all good men, and the public marks of infamy and derision.

Irresolution on the schemes of life which offer themselves to our choice, and inconstancy in pursuing them, are the greatest and most universal causes of all our disquiet and unhappiness. When ambition pulls one way, interest another, inclination a third, and perhaps reason contrary to all, a man is likely to pass his time but ill who has so many different parties to please. When the mind hovers among such a variety of allurements, one had better settle on a way of life that is not the very best we might have chosen, than grow old without determining our choice, and go out of the world as the greatest part of mankind do, before we have resolved how to live in it. There is but one method of setting ourselves at rest in this particular, and that is by adhering steadfastly to one great end as the chief and ultimate aim of all our pursuits. If we are firmly resolved to live up to the dictates of reason, without any regard to wealth, reputation, or the like considerations, any more than as they fall in with our principal design, we may go through life with steadiness and pleasure; but if we act by several broken views, and will not only be virtuous, but wealthy, popular, and every thing that has a value set upon it by the world, we shall live and die in misery and repentance.

One would take more than ordinary care to guard one's self against this particular imperfection, because it is that which our nature very strongly inclines us to; for if we examine ourselves thoroughly, we shall find that we are the most changeable beings in the universe. In respect of our understanding, we often embrace and reject the very same opinions; whereas beings above and beneath us have probably no opinions at all, or, at least, no wavering and uncertainties in those they have. Our superiors are guided by intuition, and our inferiors by instinct. In respect of our wills, we fall into crimes and recover out of them, are amiable or odious in the eyes of our great Judge, and pass our whole life in offending and asking pardon. On the contrary, the beings underneath us are not capable of sinning, nor those above us of repenting. The one is out of the possibilities of duty, and the other fixed in an eternal course of sin, or an eternal course of virtue.

There is scarce a state of life, or stage in it, which does not produce changes and revolutions in the mind of man. Our schemes of thought in infancy are lost in those of youth; these too take a different turn in manhood, until old age often leads us back into our former infancy. A new title or an unexpected success throws us out of ourselves, and in a manner destroys our identity. A cloudy day, or a little sunshine, have as great an influence on many constitutions, as the most real blessing or misfortunes. A dream varies our being, and changes our condition while it lasts; and every passion, not health and sickness, and the greater al-body and mind, makes us appear almost atures. If a man is so distinguished r beings by this infirmity, what can we ch as make themselves remarkable for it g their own species? It is a very trifling o be one of the most variable beings of rable kind, especially if we consider that he great standard of perfection has in him of change, but "is the same yesterday, d for ever."

instability of temper and inconsistency of himself is the greatest weakness of human nature. It makes the person who is remarkable for any particular manner, more ridiculous than his infirmity whatsoever, as it sets him in a variety of foolish lights, and distinguishes himself by an opposition of party-coloured humours. The most humorous character in Horace is a man who is distinguished by his unevenness of temper, and irregularity of conduct :

Sardus habebat effugas hoc: Caesar, qui cogere posset, et per amicitiam patriæ, atque suam, non an proficeret: si collibuisse, ab ovo id facili citaret, lo Bacche, modo summa sedo hæc, resonat que chordis quatuor ima, iule homini fuit illi: sæpe velut qui et fugiens locum: persæpe velut qui i sacra ferret: habebat sæpe ducentos, ecern servos: modo reges atque tetrachas, imagis loquens: modo sit mihi mensa tripes, et i salis puri, et toga, que defendere frigis, in crassa, quæst. Deces cenæ dedisses arco, paucis contentis, quique diebus t in loculia. Noctes vigilabat ad ipsum diem totum stertebat. Nil fuit unquam ar sibi ————— Hor. I Sat. iii

Hon. I Sat. iii.

of translating this passage in Horace, I retain my English reader with the descriptive-parallel character, that is wonderfully well by Mr. Dryden, and raised upon the same first rank of these did Zimri stand :

so various, that he seemed to be 1, but all mankind's epitome.
 opinions, always in the wrong;
 very thing by starts and nothing long:
 the course of one revolving moon, peasant, fiddler, statesman, and buffoon:
 fit for women, painting, rhyming, drinking, ten thousand freaks that died in thinking.
 sadman who could every hour employ, something new to wish, or to enjoy.<sup>18</sup>

THURSDAY, SEPTEMBER 6, 1711.

—Si quid ego adjuero, curamve levasso nunc te coquit, et versat sub pectore fixa, id erit pretii?—ENV. apud TULLIUM.

will you thank me if I bring you rest, ease the torture of your troubled breast?

res after happiness, and rules for attaining so necessary and useful to mankind as the consolation, and supporting one's self under

The utmost we can hope for in this sentiment; if we aim at any thing higher, meet with nothing but grief and disappointment. A man should direct all his studies and exertions to making himself easy now, and happy

th of it is, if all the happiness that is disough the whole race of mankind in this e drawn together, and put into the possesryden's "Absalom and Achitophel." Perhaps it is mention, that this character was meant for George e of Buckingham, author of the Rehearsal.

sion of any single man, happy being. Though, miseries of the whole species, they would make

I am engaged in this letter, which, though subs

I have reason to believe i

"MR. SPECTATOR.

"I am one of your disciples, and I will live up to your rules, which are the only ones that can save the world."

to pity my condition. I very few words. About man, whom, I am sure, y proved, made his address thing to recommend him friends, who all of them a

For my own part, I resign the direction of those who better than myself but still whom, in my heart, I prize being determined, if I could nobody else. About three letter from him, acquaint of an uncle he had a cor which he said was welcome account, but as he hoped culties that lay in the way

You may well suppose, received this letter, which others filled with those ex-which I verily believed nor knew better how to man I am speaking of.

able to tell it, and by

ceived a letter from an happy gentleman, acqu just settled his affairs.

journey, he fell sick of a possible to express to you this occasion. I can only votions, and to the reading consolation; and as I always light in those frequent which you give the public piece of charity in you to this conjuncture. If, after you find yourself in a hu-ridicule, than to comfort throw it into the fire, and if you are touched with greater than I know how very much support and afflicted

A disappointment in lo than any other; the pas subdues the heart, that it or bearing up against the befal it. The mind mee in her whole strength.

in her whole strength; she herself, and sustains the which is natural to her; foundation sapped, and in

In afflictions men ger

tions out of books of mo great use to fortify and st the impressions of sorrow who does not approve of

BRITISH ESSAYISTS.

the mind of an give more r Seneca, as
o conquer it.
a some tem-
authors of a nces of, cala-
an nature in very heavy,

society of as when we find erit. If our orted by the ves and our sickness, or es, when we families put sons, and the
are out of re sink under

ider, that at
for the loss is in several shipwreck;
ers of a death-
he tortures of readful calavanish at the n greater and

eration of my he now looks ot really such not but our
on their lives
had of them
sider as misery often ap-
gs.
rds devotion,

very remark-
shall relate at only because ary, but be-o all that can power of re-guish which
The story was with him in a r as well as I r I have prerawn from a evotion, they y from those established in

ER 7, 1711.

idit, Orphen?
e.
mas.
v. Georg. 494.
hee,
ght,

DAYDKN

ardinary wit
father, who,

having arrived at great riches by his own industry, took delight in nothing but his money. Theodosius * was the younger son of a decayed family, of great parts and learning improved by a genteel and virtuous education. When he was in the twentieth year of his age he became acquainted with Constantia, who had not then passed her fifteenth. As he lived but a few miles distant from her father's house, he had frequent opportunities of seeing her; and by the advantages of a good person and pleasing conversation, made such an impression on her heart as it was impossible for time to efface. He was himself no less smitten with Constantia. A long acquaintance made them still discover new beauties in each other, and by degrees raised in them that mutual passion which had an influence on their following lives. It unfortunately happened, that in the midst of this intercourse of love and friendship between Theodosius and Constantia, there broke out an irreparable quarrel between their parents, the one valuing himself too much upon his birth, and the other upon his possessions. The father of Constantia was so incensed at the father of Theodosius, that he contracted an unreasonable aversion towards his son, insomuch that he forbade him his house, and charged his daughter, upon her duty, never to see him more. In the mean time, to break off all communication between the two lovers, whom he knew entertained secret hopes of some favourable opportunity that should bring them together, he found out a young gentleman of good fortune and an agreeable person, whom he pitched upon as a husband for his daughter. He soon concerted this affair so well, that he told Constantia it was his design to marry her to such a gentleman, and that her wedding should be celebrated on such a day. Constantia, who was overawed with the authority of her father, and unable to object any thing against so advantageous a match, received the proposal with a profound silence, which her father commended in her, as the most decent manner of a virgin's giving her consent to an overture of that kind. The noise of this intended marriage soon reached Theodosius, who, after a long tumult of passions, which naturally rise in a lover's heart on such an occasion, writ the following letter to Constantia:

"The thought of my Constantia, which for some years has been my only happiness, is now become a greater torment to me than I am able to bear. Must I then live to see you another's? The streams, the fields, and meadows, where we have so often talked together, grow painful to me; life itself is become a burden. May you long be happy in the world, but forget that there was ever such a man in it as

"THEODOSIUS."

This letter was conveyed to Constantia that very evening, who fainted at the reading of it; and the next morning she was much more alarmed by two or three messengers, that came to her father's house, one after another, to inquire if they had heard any thing of Theodosius, who it seems had left his chamber about midnight, and could nowhere be found. The deep melancholy which had hung upon his mind some time before, made them apprehend the worst that could befall him. Constantia, who knew that nothing but the report of her marriage could have driven him to such extremities, was not to be comforted. She now accushimself for having so tamely given an ear to the proposal of a husband, and looked upon the new over as the murderer of Theodosius. In short, she vowed to suffer the utmost effects of her father's displeasure, rather than comply with a marriage which appeared to her so full of guilt and horror. The father seeing himself entirely rid of Theodosius, and likely to keep a considerable portion in his family, was not very much concerned at the obstinate refusal of his daughter; and did not find it very difficult to excuse himself upon that account to his intended son-in-law, who had all along regarded this alliance rather as a marriage of convenience than of love. Constantia had now no relief but in her devotions and exercises of religion, to which her afflictions had so entirely subjected her mind, that after some years had abated the violence of her sorrows, and settled her thoughts in a kind of tranquillity, she resolved to pass the remainder of her days in a convent. Her father was not displeased with a resolution which would save money in his family, and readily complied with his daughter's intentions. Accordingly, in the twenty-fifth year of her age, while her beauty was yet in all its height and bloom, he carried her to a neighbouring city, in order to look out a sisterhood of nuns among whom to place his daughter. There was in this place a father of a convent who was very much renowned for his piety and exemplary life; and as it is usual in the Romish church for those who are under any great affliction, or trouble of mind, to apply themselves to the most eminent confessors for pardon and consolation, our beautiful votary took the opportunity of confessing herself to this celebrated father.

* The Theodosius and Constantia of Dr. Langhorne, a collection of letters, in 2 vols. 12mo., takes its rise from this paper.

We must now return to Theodosius, who, the very morning that the above-mentioned inquiries had been made after him, arrived at a religious house in the city where now Constantia resided; and desiring that secrecy and concealment of the fathers of the convent, which is very usual upon any extraordinary occasion, he made himself one of the order, with a private vow never to inquire after Constantia; whom he looked upon as given away to his rival upon the day on which, according to common fame, their marriage was to have been solemnized. Having in his youth made a good progress in learning, that he might dedicate himself more entirely to religion, he entered into holy orders, and in a few years became renowned for his sanctity of life, and those pious sentiments which he inspired into all who conversed with him. It was this holy man to whom Constantia had determined to apply herself in confession, though neither she nor any other, besides the prior of the convent, knew any thing of his name or family. The gay, the amiable Theodosius had now taken upon him the name of Father Francis, and was so far concealed in a long beard, a shaven head, and a religious habit, that it was impossible to discover the man of the world in the venerable conventual.

As he was one morning shut up in his confessional, Constantia, kneeling by him, opened the state of her soul to him; and after having given him the history of a life full of innocence, she burst out into tears, and entered upon that part of her story in which he himself had so great a share. "My behaviour," says she, "has, I fear, been the death of a man who had no other fault but that of loving me too much. Heaven only knows how dear he was to me whilst he lived, and how bitter the remembrance of him has been to me since his death."

She here paused, and her face was streaming with tears. The father, moved with the sight, and by the only command of his duty, and sobbings, followed his daughter, and poured out her sorrows, not forbear weeping at the agonies of his daughter, Constantia, who then, by his compassion, confessed of her guilt, and acquainted him with the state she was going to, and atonement for her sins, could make to her father, who by his own example, burst into tears, and name to which she was now upon receiving fidelity from others, since given her. Amidst the interstices of her penitent overwork, to bid her from her that her sister was not so good, should not suffer. After weeping, give her the absolution at the same time, that he might comfort she had taken, for her behaviour the next morning, Theodosius, having finished his reflections, and reflections, the best manner, the course of her life, out of her mind, sions which had with a promise, continue his address upon her the holy orders," said he, "I see you, but you have a place frequent instructions, letters. Go on, have undertaken peace and satisfaction in the power of God."

Constantia's course of Father Francis entered upon the of her reception with the abbe.

The abbe, of all that had Father Francis, her the following.

"As the first which you may engaged in, I whose death still alive; and the fessed yourself so much lamer one another with pointment that Providence has though not acc self of one

ather BANCIS."

agreed with fecting on and above all,
ng her con-
every partijoy, "It is in being: I
"

er afterward
he resided;
us, in order
sentiments Constantia
er, a violent
swept away Theodosius.
on in a very
at time was that she lay generally pre-
the abbess,
er over, told
ore her, and in his last
th pleasure.
k any thing
us. My vow
t I ask is, I n after, and

a short La-
g purpose: s and Sister lives, and in D.

ER 8, 1711.

enter.
Poet. v. 48.

constitution
s is to watch
erce, certain
dents of our foreign coin
cular to pro-
g current in stamp are al-
has so adul-
that it would nd fathers to ng, were he paper. Our pagating the t they are so
their power.
r action, and
e to express.
o tell us what us over ac-
n of phrases,
ed enemies.
n secretaries,
to tell their story for them in plain English, and to let us know in our mother tongue what it is our brave countrymen are about. The French would indeed be in the right to publish the news of the present war in the English phrases, and make their campaigns unintelligible. Their people might flatter themselves that things are not so bad as they really are, were they thus palliated with foreign terms, and throw into shades and obscurity; but the English cannot be too clear in their narrative of those actions which have raised their country to a higher pitch of glory than it ever yet arrived at, and which will be still the more admired the better they are explained.

For my part, by that time a siege is carried on two or three days, I am altogether lost and bewildered in it, and meet with so many inexplicable difficulties, that I scarce know which side has the better of it, until I am informed by the Tower guns that the place is surrendered. I do indeed make some allowances for this part of the war: fortifications have been foreign inventions, and upon that account abound in foreign terms. But when we have won battles which may be described in our own language, why are our papers filled with so many unintelligible exploits, and the French obliged to lend us a part of their tongue before we can know how they are conquered? They must be made accessory to their own disgrace, as the Britons were formerly so artificially wrought in the curtain of the Roman theatre, that they seemed to draw it up in order to give the spectators an opportunity of seeing their own defeat celebrated upon the stage: for so Mr. Dryden has translated that verse in Virgil:

Purpurea intexti tollunt aulæ Britannæ.—GEORGE. III. 25.
Which interwoven Britons seem to raise,
And shew the triumph that their shame displays.

The histories of all our former wars are transmitted to us in our vernacular idiom, to use the phrase of a great modern critic.* I do not find in any of our chronicles, that Edward the Third ever 'reconnoitred' the enemy, though he often discovered the posture of the French, and as often vanquished them in battle. The Black Prince passed many a river without the help of 'pontoons,' and filled a ditch with fagots as successfully as the generals of our times do it with 'fascines.' Our commanders lose half their praise, and our people half their joy, by means of those hard words and dark expressions in which our newspapers do so much abound. I have seen many a prudent citizen, after having read every article, inquire of his next neighbour what news the mail had brought.

I remember in that remarkable year, when our country was delivered from the greatest fears and apprehensions, and raised to the greatest height of gladness it had ever felt since it was a nation,—I mean the year of Blenheim,—I had the copy of a letter sent me out of the country, which was written from a young gentleman in the army to his father, a man of good estate and plain sense. As the letter was very modishly checkered with this modern military eloquence, I shall present my reader with a copy of it.

"SIR,

"Upon the junction of the French and Bavarian armies, they took post behind a great morass, which they thought impracticable. Our general the next day sent a party of horse to 'reconnoitre' them from a little 'hauteur,' at about a quarter of an hour's distance from the army, who returned again to the

* Dr. Richard Bentley.

unobserved, through several 'defiles,' in one of which they met with a party of French that had been 'marauding,' and made them all prisoners at discretion. The day after a drum arrived at our camp, with a message which he would communicate to none but the general; he was followed by a trumpet, who they say behaved himself very saucily, with a message from the Duke of Bavaria. The next morning our army, being divided into two corps, made a movement towards the enemy. You will hear in the public prints how we treated them, with the other circumstances of that glorious day. I add the good fortune to be in that regiment that crushed the 'gens d'armes.' Several French battalions, which some say were a 'corps de reserve,' made a show of resistance; but it only proved a gasconade, for upon our preparing to fill up a little 'fosse,' in order to attack them, they beat the chamade, and sent us a 'carte blanche.' Their commandant, with a great many other general officers, and troops without number, are made prisoners of war, and will, I believe, give you a visit in England, the 'cartel' not being yet settled. Not questioning but these particulars will be very welcome to you, I congratulate you upon them, and am your most dutiful son," &c.

The father of the young gentleman, upon the perusal of the letter, found it contained great news, but could not guess what it was. He immediately communicated it to the curate of the parish, who, upon the reading of it, being vexed to see any thing he could not understand, fell into a kind of passion, and told him, that his son had sent him a letter that was neither fish, flesh, nor good red-herring. "I wish," says he, "the captain may be 'compos mentis': he talks of a saucy trumpet, and a drum that carries messages; then who is this 'carte blanche?' He must either banter us, or he is out of his senses." The father, who always looked upon the curate as a learned man, began to fret inwardly at his son's rage, and producing a letter which he had written to him about three posts before, "You see here," says he, "when he writes for money he knows how to speak intelligibly enough; there is no man in England can express himself clearer, when he wants new furniture for his horse." In short, the old man was so puzzled upon the point, that it might have fared ill with his son, had he not seen all the prints about three days after filled with the same terms of art, and that Charles only writ like other men.—L.

No. 166.] MONDAY, SEPTEMBER 10, 1711.

Quod nec Jovis ira, nec ignis, Nec poterit ferrum, nec edax abolere vetustas.

OVID. MET. XV. 871.

Which nor dreads the rage Of tempests, fire, or war, or wasting age.—WELSH.

ARISTOTLE tells us, that the world is a copy or transcript of those ideas which are in the mind of the first Being, and that those ideas which are in the mind of man are a transcript of the world. To this we may add, that words are the transcript of those ideas which are in the mind of man, and that writing or printing is the transcript of words.

As the Supreme Being has expressed, and as it were, printed his ideas in the creation, men express their ideas in books, which by this great invention of these latter ages may last as long as the sun and moon, and perish only in the general wreck of nature. Thus Cowley in his poem on the Resurrection, mentioning these admirable

Now all
And all
And Vig

There is no other way which arise and transmitting the other method of and preserving the son, when his body of matter, and spirits. Books, leaves to mankind generation to generation of those who are

All other arts but a short time sands of years, fewer than edifices Raphael, will he and Apelles are tuiaries, architects lost. The several materials. Nature to support the id

The circumstance above all the multiply their of their works, shall be as valuable. This gives a greater of eternity, but those other advantages an artist finds great fame. What a or a Homer, as their works, like to be confined to a party of a single

If writings age to age through careful should as to print that minds of men great talents, immorality, and wit and humour of society, and leave books behind die in distemper their own species their posterity.

Confucius or a sent into the world sink it into the

I have seen so us that vicious as the influence posterity: "for else but a clean said to be done operate, and cor say they, "sin continues to sin, so Though the Roman indeed very ridiculous the soul after passes in this world receive much more ing, than satisfy his surviving ad

speculation,
an atheis-
dangerously
a neigh-
eat contri-
heart than his writ-
ly to con-
on farther most ago-
of learn-
was not so nd that he ncerely re-
e evil ten-and the one whose when his finding no
that he did
with which to be very doing any d his argu-
end any ill
est satisfied
his death,
to which he did not bed acquaintading it, or ver inquire
o much the
to the heart answering the (with a pee-
where they whether they one in his e author did and sincere nce, after a oning but he s grew des-
ed, and has
with the same oul, with the

In all but this, a man of sober life, Fond of his friend, and civil to his wife;
Not quite a madman, though a pasty fell,
And much too wise to walk into a well.
Him the damn'd doctor and his friends immur'd;
They bled, they cupp'd, they purg'd, in short they cur'd, Whereat the gentleman began to stare—
"My friends!" he cry'd: "poor take you for your care!
That from a patriot of distinguish'd note, Have bled and purg'd me to a simple vote."—POPE.

The unhappy force of an imagination unguided by the check of reason and judgment, was the subject of a former speculation. My reader may remember that he has seen in one of my papers a complaint of an unfortunate gentleman, who was unable to contain himself (when any ordinary matter was laid before him) from adding a few circumstances to enliven plain narrative. That correspondent was a person of too warm a complexion to be satisfied with things merely as they stood in nature, and therefore formed incidents which should have happened to have pleased him in the story. The same ungoverned fancy which pushed that correspondent on, in spite of himself, to relate public and notorious falsehoods, makes the author of the following letter do the same in private; one is a prating, the other a silent liar.

There is little pursued in the errors of either of these worthies, but mere present amusement: but the folly of him who lets his fancy place him in distant scenes untroubled and uninterrupted, is very much preferable to that of him who is ever forcing a belief, and defending his untruths with new inventions. But I shall hasten to let this liar in soliloquy, who calls himself a castle-builder, describe himself with the same unreservedness as formerly appeared in my correspondent above mentioned. If a man were to be serious on this subject, he might give very grave admonitions to those who are following any thing in this life, on which they think to place their hearts, and tell them they are really castle-builders. Fame, glory, wealth, honour, have in the prospect pleasing illusions; but they who come to possess any of them will find they are ingredients towards happiness, to be regarded only in the second place: and that when they are valued in the first degree they are as disappointing as any of the phantoms in the following letter:—

"MR. SPECTATOR, September 6, 1711.

"I am a fellow of a very odd frame of mind, as you will find by the sequel; and think myself fool enough to deserve a place in your paper. I am unhappily far gone in building, and am one of that species of men who are properly denominated castle-builders, who scorn to be beholden to the earth for a foundation, or dig in the bowels of it for materials; but erect their structures in the most unstable of elements, the air; fancy alone laying the line, marking the extent, and shaping the model. It would be difficult to enumerate what august palaces and stately porticos have grown under my forming imagination, or what verdant meadows and shady groves have started into being by the powerful force of a warm fancy. A castle-builder is even just what he pleases, and as such I have grasped imaginary sceptres, and delivered uncontrollable edicts, from a throne to which conquered nations yielded obedience. I have made I know not how many inroads into France, and ravaged the very heart of that kingdom; I have dined in the Louvre, and drank champagne at Versailles; and I would have you take notice, I am not only able to vanquish a people already 'cowed' and accustomed to flight.

ER 11, 1711.

2 Ep. ii. 128.

light, perhaps, be examiner, to have reasons, proba-

I could, Almanzor-like,* drive the British general from the field, were I less a Protestant, or ever been affronted by the confederates. There is art or profession, whose most celebrated master I have not eclipsed. Wherever I have afforded salutary presence, fevers have ceased to burn, agues to shake the human fabric. When an patient fit has been upon me, an apt gesture and per cadence have animated each sentence, and angry crowds have found their passions worked up to rage, or soothed into a calm. I am short, and very well made; yet upon sight of a fine woman, I have stretched into proper stature, and killed with a good air and mien. These are the gay automata that dance before my waking eyes, and impose my day-dreams. I should be the most contented happy man alive, were the chimerical happiness which springs from the paintings of fancy so fleeting and transitory. But alas! it is with grief of mind I tell you, the least breath of wind has ten demolished my magnificent edifices, swept away my groves, and left no more trace of them than if they had never been. My exchequer has sunk and vanished by a rap on my door; the salvation of a friend has cost me a whole continent; and in the same moment I have been pulled by the sleeve, my crown has fallen from my head. The consequence of these reveries is inconceivably great, seeing the loss of imaginary possessions makes oppressions of real woe. Besides, bad economy is visible and apparent in builders of invisible mansions. My tenants' advertisements of ruins and lapidations often cast a damp on my spirits, even the instant when the sun, in all his splendour, bids my eastern palaces. Add to this, the pensive rudery in building, and constant grasping aerial owls, distracts and shatters the mind, and the old builder of Babels is often cursed with an incoherent diversity and confusion of thoughts. I do not know to whom I can more properly apply myself for relief from this fantastical evil, than to yourself; hence I earnestly implore to accommodate me with method how to settle my head and cool my brain-pan. A dissertation on castle-building may not only be serviceable to myself, but all architects, who display their skill in the thin element. Such a favour would oblige me to make my next soliloquy not contain the praises of my dear self, but of the Spectator, who shall, by complying with this, make me

T.

"His obliged humble servant,
"VITRUVIUS."

No. 168.] WEDNESDAY, SEPT. 12, 1711.

— Pectus præceptis format amicis.—Hos. 2 Ep. l. 128.
Forms the soft bosom with the gentlest art.—POPE.

It would be arrogance to neglect the application of my correspondents so far, as not sometimes to insert their animadversions upon my paper; that of this day shall be therefore wholly composed of the hints which they have sent me.

"MR. SPECTATOR,

"I send you this to congratulate your late choice of a subject, for treating on which you deserve public thanks; I mean that on those licensed tyrants the schoolmasters. If you can disarm them of their rods, you will certainly have your old age rewarded by all the young gentlemen of great Britain who are now between seven and seventeen years.

*Alluding to a furious character in Dryden's Conquest of Granada.

You may boast of a
lian and you as
'Si cui est (says)
tione non corrigat
quæque municipia
of so disingenuous rected by reproach will be hardened
And afterward, 'homines isto cæde to say how shame
power of correction

"I was bred in
of which the mass
descended from appeared from his leave you to judge Welshman ingrate
So very dreadful although it is a heavy hand, yet
of him, so strong mind. It is a sign
who still continues

"And yet I business of the so difficulty; and I
yet such was the month, or oftener
satisfied the law.

"Many a white mother had passed
thousand times,
covered with blood
ing a yard and a an o for an A, or great faults! Ma been there broke and were never b attempt to under and it is a noble the list against e pity but we had viour and metho into a condition o
the parents of th
possibly see lea
dren delighting abhor for coming
What would be s the care of such i have no more pe
had not genius fo

"I am, with
"Your

"MR. SPECTATOR,

"I am a boy,
for this last year
of divinity, who under his care.†
derness to me an happy in learning
leave off our divers at hours of play w
possible for any o
than we do him.

† Dr. Charles Rod and afterward master

† This was Dr. Nic
sion of the Psalms,
sermons

BRITISH ESSAYISTS.

ishment in y of us. My
g this letter.
now ready to t taken any ou please to taking it for tored to his

T. S."

of imperti-
proceed and n happens in ne thither to-
of an equal hemselves as about them.
ers who lay
e every body
et of laughs
own corner,
they have no
ou frequently he play, the tings, where attention of
and to fix it
rved that the e set happens
who have got hem.
om people of ess it be from a new play,
time in sets
y, and with a ity sitting on

ncy of public
t reasonable ay at least a
er women of rmed, that a ple of under-meanest atow that a fine
wears it dis-
footman.
le servant."

Sept. 1, 1711.

body calls a course with a
a spaniel or ing, and have se to refresh
you set up for dogs you will
pots of ale to n a day, and all the sports-
of coursing is

EDGEWORTH."

w of those times.
ed at the lower
dresses, nymphs,
at water, and fire
evening between

No. 169.] THURSDAY, SEPTEMBER 13, 17...

Sic vita erat: facile omnes perferre ac pati:
Cum quibus erat cuncte una, his sese dedere, Eorum obsequi studiis: adversus nemini: Nunquam præponens se aliis; Ita facilitæ Sine invidia invenias laudem

TER. AND. act. i. sc. 1.

His manner of life was this: to bear with every body's ha-mours; to comply with the inclinations and pursuits of those he conversed with; to contradict nobody; never to assume a superiority over others. This is the ready way to gain applause without exciting envy.

MAN is subject to innumerable pains and sorrows by the very condition of humanity, and yet, as if nature had not sown evils enough in life, we are continually adding grief to grief, and aggravating the common calamity by our cruel treatment of one another. Every man's natural weight of afflictions is still made more heavy by the envy, malice, treachery, or injustice of his neighbour. At the same time that the storm beats upon the whole species, we are falling foul upon one another.

Half the misery of human life might be extinguished, would men alleviate the general curse they lie under, by mutual offices of compassion, benevolence, and humanity. There is nothing, therefore, which we ought more to encourage in ourselves and others, than that disposition of mind which in our language goes under the title of good-nature, and which I shall choose for the subject of this day's speculation.

Good-nature is more agreeable in conversation than wit, and gives a certain air to the countenance, which is more amiable than beauty. It shows virtue in the fairest light, takes off in some measure from the deformity of vice, and makes even folly and impertinence supportable.

There is no society or conversation to be kept up in the world without good-nature, or something which must bear its appearance, and supply its place. For this reason mankind have been forced to invent a kind of artificial humanity, which is what we express by the word good-breeding. For if we examine thoroughly the idea of what we call so, we shall find it to be nothing else but an imitation and mimicry of good-nature, or, in other terms, affability, complaisance, and easiness of temper reduced into an art.

These exterior shows and appearances of humanity render a man wonderfully popular and beloved, when they are founded upon a real good-nature; but without it, are like hypocrisy in religion, or a bare form of holiness, which, when it is discovered, makes a man more detestable than professed impiety.

Good-nature is generally born with us; health, prosperity, and kind treatment from the world are great cherishers of it where they find it; but nothing is capable of forcing it up, where it does not grow of itself. It is one of the blessings of a happy constitution, which education may improve, but not produce.

Xenophon, in the life of his imaginary prince, whom he describes as a pattern for real ones, is always celebrating the philanthropy or good-nature of his hero, which he tells us he brought into the world with him, and gives many remarkable instances of it in his childhood, as well as in all the several parts of his life.* Nay, on his death-bed, he describes him as being pleased, that while his soul returned to him who made it, his body should incorporate with the great mother of all things, and by that means * Xenoph. De Cyri Instit. lib. viii. cap. vii. ec. 2. edit. J. A.

Ern. 8vo. tom. i. p. 560.

essential to all mankind. For which reason sons a positive order not to enshrine it silver, but to lay it in the earth as soon was gone out of it.

ance of such an overflowing of humanity, abundant love to mankind, could not have o the imagination of a writer, who had filled with great ideas, and a general beto mankind.

celebrated passage of Sallust, where Cato are placed in such beautiful, but ghts,* Caesar's character is chiefly made nature, as it showed itself in all its forms s friends or his enemies, his servants or s, the guilty or the distressed. As for acter, it is rather awful than amiable.
ms most agreeable to the nature of God, to that of man. A being who has no ardon in himself, may reward every man to his works; but he whose very best ac-be seen with grains of allowance, cannot dd, moderate, and forgiving. For this engall the monstrous characters in human ere is none so odious, nor indeed so exqui-sitive, as that of a rigid severe temper in
a man.

art of good-nature, however, which con-pardon and overlooking of faults, is vised only in doing ourselves justice, and the ordinary commerce and occurrences r in the public administrations of justice, one may be cruelty to others.

rown almost into a maxim, that gooden are not always men of the most wit.
vation, in my opinion, has no foundation.
The greatest wits I have conversed with, eminent for their humanity. I take, this remark to have been occasioned by
e. First, because ill-nature among ordi-ners passes for wit. A spiteful saying many little passions in those who hear generally meets with a good reception.
rises upon it, and the man who utters it pon as a shrewd satirist. This may be why a great many pleasant companions surprisingly dull, when they have endeavmerely merry in print; the public being more ivate clubs or assemblies, in distinguish-en what is wit, and what is ill-nature.

reason why the good-natured man may bring his wit in question, is, perhaps, bes apt to be moved with compassion for rtunes or infirmities, which another would ridicule, and by that means gain the ref a wit. The ill-natured man, though but arts, gives himself a larger field to expales those failings in human nature ther would cast a veil over, laughs at vices ther either excuses or conceals, gives utterations which the other stifles, falls indifferfriends or enemies, exposes the person who him; and, in short, sticks at nothing that ish his character as a wit. It is no wonder, that he succeeds in it better than the man ty,† as a person who makes use of indiids is more likely to grow rich than the
—L.

bell. Catil. es liv. 2. diff. sic loquitur. Quis enim vitiis vitis was to be subjected to this scrutiny, it unscripted within a very narrow compass. The from which it sprung was the indignation that wart.

FOR—Nos. 25 & 26.

No. 170.] FRIDAY.

In amore hæc omnia insunt Suspiciones, inimicitia, inc Bellum, pax rursum—

In love are all these ills:— Wrongs, reconcilements, w

UPON looking over the respondents, I find several ing of jealous husbands, testing their own innocenvice on this occasion.
subject into my consid-lingly, because I find the who, in his Advice to a wife how to behave here temperate, a choleric, a husband, has not spoken band.

"Jealousy is that pain the apprehension that he the person whom he ent-our inward passions are make themselves visible, lous man to be thorough-His thoughts hang at be-and uncertainty; and are any satisfaction on the his inquiries are most suc-nothing. His pleasure ments, and his life is so that destroys his happine-

An ardent love is alwhis passion; for the same the jealous man's desire loved so beautiful a figure him believe she kindles t and appears as amiable jealousy thus arises from is of so delicate a nature with any thing less than Not the warmest express and most tender hypoc satisfaction where we an affection is real, and the the jealous man wishes the person he loves. He sure of her senses, the en and is angry at every th delight in, besides himsel-Phædra's request to h ing her for three days, a natural:

Cum milite isto præsens, Dies noctesque me ames:
Me somnia: me expectes Me speres: me te oblectes Meus fac sis postremo an-

Be with yon soldier presen All night and day love me Dream, ponder still "on" Delight in me: be all in a Give your whole heart, f

The jealous man's di-nature, that it converts nourishment. A cool b rack, and is interpreted or indifference; a fond and looks too much like If the person he loves must be employed on a thing that looks young, or gay, turns their thoughts upon their wives.

A second sort of men, who are most liable to the passion, are those of cunning, wary, and distrustful tempers. It is a fault very justly found in histories composed by politicians, that they leave nothing to chance or humour, but are still for deriving every action from some plot or contrivance, for drawing up a perpetual scheme of causes and events, and preserving a constant correspondence between the camp and the council-table. And thus it happens in the affairs of love with men of too refined thought. They put a construction on a look, and find out a design in a smile; they give new sense and significations to words and actions; and are ever tormenting themselves with fancies of their own raising. They generally act in a disguise themselves, and therefore mistake all outward show and appearances for hypocrisy in others; so that believe no men see less of the truth and reality of things, than these great refiners upon incidents who are so wonderfully subtle and overwise in their conceptions.

Now what these men fancy they know of women by reflection, your lewd and vicious men believe they have learned by experience. They have seen the poor husband so misled by tricks and artifices and in the midst of his inquiries so lost and bewildered in a crooked intrigue, that they still suspect an under-plot in every female action; and especially where they see any resemblance in the behaviour of two persons, are apt to fancy it proceeds from the same design in both. These men therefore bear hard upon the suspected party, pursue her close through all her turnings and windings and are too well acquainted with the chase, to be flung off by any false steps, or doubles. Besides their acquaintance and conversation has lain wholly among the vicious part of womankind, and therefore it is no wonder they censure all alike, and look upon the whole sex as a species of impostors. But if, notwithstanding their private experience, they can get over these prejudices, and entertain a favourable opinion of some women; yet their own loose desires will stir up new suspicions from another side, and make them believe all men subject to the same inclinations with themselves.

Whether these or other motives are most predominant, we learn from the modern histories of America, as well as from our own experience in this part of the world, that jealousy is no northern passion, but rages most in those nations that lie nearest the influence of the sun. It is a misfortune for a woman to be born between the tropics; for there lie the hottest regions of jealousy, which as you come northward cools all along with the climate, till you scarce meet with any thing like it in the polar circle. Our own nation is very temperately situated in this respect; and if we meet with some few disorders with the violence of this passion, they are not the proper growth of our country, but are many degrees nearer the sun in their constitutions than in their climate.

After this frightful account of jealousy, and the persons who are most subject to it, it will be but fair to show by what means the passion may be best allayed, and those who are possessed with it set at ease. Other faults, indeed, are not under the wife's jurisdiction, and should, if possible, escape her observation; but jealousy calls upon her particularly for its cure, and deserves all her art and application in the attempt. Besides, she has

there is no t gives him
rnishes him
t if we con-
ould rather hatred, than n meet with a suspected

ion is, that ection which or these two straint on the erson, and at urable opi-
motives to

ousy; for it n of conse-
spect guilty id of. It is ill and up-
friend that
r sufferings,
their secret
oman often ot otherwise
imagination
grows fami-
shame and Nor is it a in a man's ng to forfeit
ason for his
f the crime,

Such proected the wise
e not jealous
her not an s which this e that none

n, when the taken from aks out fu-
of suspicion

The beau-
most in the id him with was once in perfections,
off from his more.

hat jealousy
ous disposi-nds who are

o themselves
as, old age, ese men are
ble part of onfidence to so distrust-
ess towards d looks like
y suspicious
d are stung
e. A hand-
and every thing that looks young, or gay, turns their thoughts upon their wives.

A second sort of men, who are most liable to the passion, are those of cunning, wary, and distrustful tempers. It is a fault very justly found in histories composed by politicians, that they leave nothing to chance or humour, but are still for deriving every action from some plot or contrivance, for drawing up a perpetual scheme of causes and events, and preserving a constant correspondence between the camp and the council-table. And thus it happens in the affairs of love with men of too refined thought. They put a construction on a look, and find out a design in a smile; they give new sense and significations to words and actions; and are ever tormenting themselves with fancies of their own raising. They generally act in a disguise themselves, and therefore mistake all outward show and appearances for hypocrisy in others; so that believe no men see less of the truth and reality of things, than these great refiners upon incidents who are so wonderfully subtle and overwise in their conceptions.

Now what these men fancy they know of women by reflection, your lewd and vicious men believe they have learned by experience. They have seen the poor husband so misled by tricks and artifices and in the midst of his inquiries so lost and bewildered in a crooked intrigue, that they still suspect an under-plot in every female action; and especially where they see any resemblance in the behaviour of two persons, are apt to fancy it proceeds from the same design in both. These men therefore bear hard upon the suspected party, pursue her close through all her turnings and windings and are too well acquainted with the chase, to be flung off by any false steps, or doubles. Besides their acquaintance and conversation has lain wholly among the vicious part of womankind, and therefore it is no wonder they censure all alike, and look upon the whole sex as a species of impostors. But if, notwithstanding their private experience, they can get over these prejudices, and entertain a favourable opinion of some women; yet their own loose desires will stir up new suspicions from another side, and make them believe all men subject to the same inclinations with themselves.

Whether these or other motives are most predominant, we learn from the modern histories of America, as well as from our own experience in this part of the world, that jealousy is no northern passion, but rages most in those nations that lie nearest the influence of the sun. It is a misfortune for a woman to be born between the tropics; for there lie the hottest regions of jealousy, which as you come northward cools all along with the climate, till you scarce meet with any thing like it in the polar circle. Our own nation is very temperately situated in this respect; and if we meet with some few disorders with the violence of this passion, they are not the proper growth of our country, but are many degrees nearer the sun in their constitutions than in their climate.

After this frightful account of jealousy, and the persons who are most subject to it, it will be but fair to show by what means the passion may be best allayed, and those who are possessed with it set at ease. Other faults, indeed, are not under the wife's jurisdiction, and should, if possible, escape her observation; but jealousy calls upon her particularly for its cure, and deserves all her art and application in the attempt. Besides, she has

is for her encouragement, that her endeavours will always please, and that she will still find the affection of her husband rising towards her in proportion as his doubts and suspicions vanish; for, as we have seen all along, there is so great a mixture of love and jealousy as is well worth the separating. In this shall be the subject of another paper.—L.

1711.] SATURDAY, SEPTEMBER 15, 1711.

Credula res amor est———Ovid, Met. vii. 826.

Love is a credulous passion.

HAVING in my yesterday's paper discovered the nature of jealousy, and pointed out the persons who are most subject to it, I must here apply myself to fair correspondents, who desire to live well with calous husbands, and to ease his mind of its unjust suspicions.

The first rule I shall propose to be observed is, that you never seem to dislike in another what the jealous man is himself guilty of, or to admire anything in which he himself does not excel. A jealous man is very quick in his applications; he knows how to find a double edge in an invective, and to turn a satire on himself out of a panegyric on another. He does not trouble himself to consider the man, but to direct the character; and is secretly pleased or confounded, as he finds more or less of himself in it. The commendation of any thing in other stirs up his jealousy, as it shows you have value for others besides himself; but the commendation of that, which he himself wants, inflames him more, as it shows that in some respects you prefer him before him. Jealousy is admirably described in his view by Horace in his ode to Lydia:

Quum tu, Lydia, Telephi Cervicem roseam, et cerea Telephi Laudas brachia, vix meum Fervens difficillime tumet jecur: Tunc nec mens mihi, nec color Certa sede manet; humor et in genas Furtim labitur, arguens Quam lentis peditus macerer ignibus.—1 Od. xlii. l.
When Telephus his youthful charms, His rosy neck and winding arms,
With endless rapture you recite;
And in the pleasing name delight;
My heart inflamed by jealous heats, With numberless resentments beats;
From my pale cheek the colour flies,
And all the man within me dies:
By turns my hidden grief appears In rising sighs and falling tears, That shew too well the warm desires,
The silent, slow, consuming fires, Which on my inmost vitals prey,
And melt my very soul away.

The jealous man is not indeed angry if you dislike another; but if you find those faults which are to be found in his own character, you discover not your dislike of another but of himself. In this he is so desirous of engrossing all your love, that he is grieved at the want of any charm, which he believes has power to raise it; and if he finds your censures on others that he is not so agreeable in your opinion as he might be, he naturally concludes you could love him better if he had other qualifications, and that by consequence your affection does not rise so high as he thinks it ought. If therefore his temper be grave or sullen, you must be too much pleased with a jest, or transported in any thing that is gay and diverting. If his wit be none of the best, you must be a professed mistress of prudence, or any other quality he is master of, or at least vain enough to think he is.

In the next paper I shall open in you the signs, and discover the indifference. A man's aversion to wink and see to the bottom beyond it in his fondness expect to be your finds himself kept is more in it than great concern, to your sincerity once finds a false he quickly suspicion immediately off with it into se has proved very misery.

If both these let him see you for the ill opinion quietudes he him are many who take the jealousy of the an aching heart which are able to

Ardeat ipsa licet

Though equal
A lover's torment

But these often affected coldness and fondness of a lover their turn with all due to so insolent it is very probable the usual effects of the jealous husband the wrong he does those fears and is happy. At least he will keep his private, either because he will or because he will may produce in diverting it to another.

There is still a you can once get practised by women. This is to change man, and to turn take some occasion to follow the example of counterfeit jealousy of pleasure, if he experimentally how passion, and will satisfaction of a revenge his own tortures, difficult, and at the it ought never to have skill enough cence to render it.

I shall conclude Herod and Maria Josephus;* which to whatever can be Mariamne had * Antiquities of the Jews, chap. 7. sect. 1. 2, &c.

BRITISH ESSAYISTS.

and Herod all to raise in a midst of this brother to years after. sent to Mark Herod into as there laid summons to therefore, be- stody of his put her to to himself. Mariamne's his art and passion for and incred- certain in- te orders he wed, accord- could neither pus instance at out, for a he still had lly taken up e could not n, and there- ation, rather than a lover. dismissed by n flames for g he was not heard of his h her in his discourse he and it no easy last he ap- ce, that from ars and em- rly at their s whole soul ve and con- anguishings ders he left of such an was immedi- n, and con- amiliar with ch a secret. d very diffi- Mariamne. journey into the care of he had be- efel himself. on Sohemus on, that she n Herod had when he flew nd love, she ars, and all n. This re- that he had had not he the greater is, when he him: Mari- hom he en- all possible she declined ndness with her, and her brother. This behaviour so incensed Herod, that he very hardly refrained from striking her; when in the heat of their quarrel there came in a witness, suborned by some of Mariamne's enemies, who accused her to the king of a design to poison him. Herod was now prepared to hear any thing in her prejudice, and immediately ordered her servant to be stretched upon the rack; who in the extremity of his torture confessed, that his mistress's aversion to the king arose from something Sohemus had told her; but as for any design of poisoning, he utterly disowned the least knowledge of it. This confession quickly proved fatal to Sohemus, who now lay under the same suspicions and sentence that Joseph had before him, on the like occasion. Nor would Herod rest here; but accused her with great vehemence of a design upon his life, and, by his authority with the judges, had her publicly condemned and executed. Herod soon after her death grew melancholy and dejected, retiring from the public administration of affairs into a solitary forest, and there abandoning himself to all the black considerations, which naturally arise from a passion made up of love, remorse, pity, and despair. He used to rave for his Mariamne, and to call upon her in his distracted fits: and in all probability would soon have followed her, had not his thoughts been seasonably called off from so sad an object by public storms, which at that time very nearly threatened him.—L.

No. 172.] MONDAY, SEPTEMBER 17, 1711.

Non solum scientia, quæ est remota à justitia, calliditas potius quam sapientia est appellanda; verum etiam animus paratus ad periculum, si sua cupiditate, non utilitate communi, impellitur, audacia potius nomen habent, quam fortitudo. PLATO apud TUL.

As knowledge, without justice, ought to be called cunning, rather than wisdom; so a mind prepared to meet danger, if excited by its own eagerness, and not the public good, deserves the name of audacity, rather than that of fortitude.

THERE can be no greater injury to human society than that good talents among men should be held honourable to those who are endowed with them without any regard how they are applied. The gifts of nature and accomplishments of art are valuable but as they are exerted in the interests of virtue, or governed by the rules of honour. We ought to abstract our minds from the observation of an excellence in those we converse with, till we have taken some notice, or received some good information of the disposition of their minds; otherwise the beauty of their persons, or the charms of their wit, may make us fond of those whom our reason and judgment will tell us we ought to abhor.

When we suffer ourselves to be thus carried away by mere beauty or mere wit, Omniamante, with all her vice, will bear away as much of our good will as the most innocent virgin, or discreetest matron; and there cannot be a more abject slavery in this world, than to dote upon what we think we ought to condemn. Yet this must be our condition in all the parts of life, if we suffer ourselves to approve any thing but what tends to the promotion of what is good and honourable. If we would take true pains with ourselves to consider all things by the light of reason and justice, though a man were in the height of youth and amorous inclinations, he would look upon a coquette with the same contempt, or indifference, as he would upon a coxcomb. The wanton carriage in a woman would disappoint her of the admiration which she aims at; and the vain dress or discourse of a man would destroy the sa of his shape, or goodness of his undressing. I say the goodness of his undressing, for it is no less common to see men of immense cockcombs, than beautiful women of immodest. When this happens in either, if we are naturally inclined to give to the duties they have from nature should abate. But however just it is to measure of men by the application of their talents, by the eminence of those qualities abstract from their use: I say, however just such a judging is, in all ages as well as this, the has prevailed upon the generality of man. How many lewd devices have been promoted from one age to another, which had perished as they were made, if painters and sculptors were esteemed as much for the purpose as the nature of their designs? Modest and well-governed imaginations have by this means lost the reputation of ten thousand charming portraiture, of images of innate truth, generous zeal, courage, and tender humanity; instead of which furies, and monsters are recommended by us to a shameful eternity.

Just application of laudable talents is to the general opinion of men, not only in cases as are here mentioned, but also in matters which concern ordinary life. If a lawyer were esteemed only as he uses his parts in conducting justice, and were immediately despicable if he appeared in a cause which he could not win, was an unjust one, how honourable would his act be? And how honourable is it in our country, who follow the profession no other than as labouring to protect the injured, to the oppressor, to imprison the careless and do right to the painful artificer? But this excellent character are overlooked by the number; who affect covering a weak client's title, diverting the course of an action, or finding a skilful refuge to palliate a fault: yet it is still called eloquence in the latter thus unjustly employed: but resolution is according to reason quite as laudable as knowledge and wisdom exercised in the defence of an ill cause.

The intention steadfastly considered as the object of approbation, all falsehood would soon be countenance; and an address in imposing language, would be as contemptible in one life as another. A couple of courtiers making professions of esteem, would make the same breach of promise, as two knights of the sword of perjury. But conversation is low in point of morality, that—as they say again, “let the buyer look to it”—so in point of honour, he is the man in danger who is most apt to be deceived. He is the more likely to suffer in the end, who begins with the obligation of being ready to enter into it.

Those men only are truly great, who place ambition rather in acquiring to themselves the success of worthy enterprises, than in the prosperity which attends them. These exalted souls would rather be secretly the authors of events more serviceable to mankind, than, without chance, to have the public fame of it. Where an eminent merit is robbed by artifice or flattery, it does but increase by such endeavours. The impotent pains which are taken to conceal, or diffuse it among a crowd to the injury of a single person, will naturally produce the contrary effect; the flattery will only set up all that attempt to distinguish.

There is but one thing that is a session of true glory, which is to be won of it with patience, and which is to be acquired. When we are persuaded that he ought not to pursue any thing but what is in the power of self to diminish his value. We can neglect the applause of the world, and be himself independent of all other views, and an arduous task; but it is the high spirit, that it is the high nature can arrive. Truths are dear to the mind of the philosopher, to the exquisite delight to say well, than to hear the words of you glorious, except in them in your own reflection, and uniform may be admired and followers, hence by souls like itself endure all the seasons of the year, and fall off in autumn; and with the returning spring.

No. 173.] TUESDAY

—Remove fera monstra Saxifraga vultus, quæcunq;

Hence with those monstrous That Gorgon's look and

In a late paper I mentioned a very ingenious author for the craft prizes to be contested for, and the influence of the improvement of our service since that been very much improved, and the advertisement, while the 11th instant, and again of the 15th:—

“On the 9th of October, 1781, upon Colsehill-heath, in six guineas value, three or gelding, that hath run 54; the winning horse ten stone weight, if four or under to carry or be and to be entered Friday, Colsehill, before six in of less value to be run a gold ring to be grinn

The first of these divided by the 101. race-horses, but the two last in which concerned, seem to me unaccountable. Why asses at Colsehill, or horse count in Warwickshire, of England, I cannot cover all the Olympic game in them like an animal. However it be, asses are now kept in every morning upon the country fellows within an hour or two in the order to qualify themselves. The prize which is proposed

BRITISH ESSAYISTS.

common people many very and spoil most a Warwick- as Roman by his tail. of deformity, that was for- should carry of the com-

utch painter of faces, in remarkable which I lately ches from a ve-mentioned use with the of Namur, hat occasion, tice of peace tor that en- chman, who ng a man na- eatures, pro- laced upon a ooking upon on each side th at a grin, a foreigner ay; but upon r only of the

as a malecon- in the whole elled in the ll, that he is en miscarry; no stood near is face was a affected per- looked upon e ordered the s quitting the was set aside several other selves, which I must not in the further cky in a pair to such a hi- it appeared ole company ed grin, and n, had it not , that he had e before, and very time of es of grinning as not to be efore ordered on a cobbler, d several new grins of his own invention, having been used to and faces for many years together over his last. At the very first grin he cast every human feature out of his countenance, at the second he became the face of a spout, at the third a baboon, at the fourth the head of a bass viol, and at the fifth a pair of nut-crackers. The whole assembly wondered at his accomplishments, and bestowed the ring on him unanimously; but, what he esteemed more than all the rest, a country wench, whom he had wooed in vain for above five years before, was so charmed with his grins, and the applauses which he received on all sides, that she married him the week following, and to this day wears the prize upon her finger, the cobbler having made use of it as his wedding ring.

This paper might perhaps seem very impertinent, if it grew serious in the conclusion. It would nevertheless leave to the consideration of those who are the patrons of this monstrous trial of skill, whether or no they are not guilty, in some measure, of an affront to their species, in treating after this manner the "human face divine," and turning that part of us, which has so great an image impressed upon it, into the image of a monkey; whether the raising such silly competitions among the ignorant, proposing prizes for such useless accomplishments, filling the common people's heads with such senseless ambitions, and inspiring them with such absurd ideas of superiority and pre-eminence, has not in it something immoral, as well as ridiculous.—L.

No. 174.] WEDNESDAY, SEPT. 19, 1711.

Hæc meminî et victum frustra contendere Thyrsin.

VIRG. Ecl. vii. 60.

The whole debate in memory I retain,
When Thyrsis argued warmly, but in vain.—P

THERE is scarce any thing more common than animosities between parties that cannot subsist but by their agreement: this was well represented in the sedition of the members of the human body in the old Roman fable.* It is often the case of lesser confederate states against a superior power, which are hardly held together though their unanimity is necessary for their common safety; and this is always the case of the landed and trading interests of Great Britain: the trader is fed by the product of the land, and the landed man cannot be clothed but by the skill of the trader; and yet those interests are ever jarring.

We had last winter an instance of this at our club, in Sir Roger de Coverley and Sir Andrew Freeport, between whom there is generally a constant, though friendly, opposition of opinions. It happened that one of the company, in an historical discourse, was observing that Carthaginian ~~this~~ was a proverbial phrase to intimate breach of leagues. Sir Roger said it could hardly be ~~delu~~ wise: that the Carthaginians were the greatest traders in the world; and as gain is the chief aim of such a people, they never pursue any other; ~~th~~ means to it are never regarded: they will, if it ~~com~~ easily, get money honestly; but if not, they will ~~my~~ scruple to attain it by fraud, or cozenage: and ~~is~~ deed, what is the whole business of the trader's account, but to overreach him who trusts to his memory? But were that not so, what can there ~~grat~~ and noble be expected from him whose attention is for ever fixed upon balancing his books, and ~~watc~~ ing over his expenses? And at best, let ~~frugali~~ and parsimony be the virtues of the merchant, how much is his punctual dealing below a gentleman's liberality to the poor, or hospitality among his neighbours!

* Livii Hist. Dec. I. lib. ii. cap. ii.

Captain Sentry observed Sir Andrew very diligent in hearing Sir Roger, and had a mind to turn the discourse, by taking notice—in general, from the highest to the lowest parts of human society, there was a secret, though unjust way, among men, of indulging the seeds of ill-nature and envy, by comparing their own state of life to that of another, and judging the approach of their neighbour to their own happiness; and, on the other side, he, who is less at his ease, repines at the other, who he thinks is unjustly the advantage over him. Thus the civil and military lists look upon each other with much ill-nature; the soldier repines at the courtier's power, and the courtier rallies the soldier's honour; or, to come to lower instances, the private men in the horse and foot of an army, the carmen and coachmen in the city streets, mutually look upon each other with ill-will, when they are in competition for quarters, or the way in their respective motions.

"It is very well, good captain," interrupted Sir Andrew: "you may attempt to turn the discourse if you think fit; but I must however have a word or two with Sir Roger, who, I see, thinks he has paid me off, and been very severe upon the merchant. I shall not," continued he, "at this time remind Sir Roger of the great and noble monuments of charity and public spirit, which have been erected by merchants since the reformation, but at present content myself with what he allows us, parsimony and frugality. If it were consistent with the quality of so ancient a baronet as Sir Roger, to keep an account, or measure things by the most infallible way, that of numbers, he would prefer our parsimony to his hospitality. If to drink so many hogsheads is to be hospitable, we do not contend for the fame of that virtue: but it would be worth while to consider whether so many artificers at work ten days together by my appointment, or so many peasants made merry on Sir Roger's charge, are the men more obliged? I believe the families of the artificers will thank me more than the household of the peasants shall Sir Roger. Sir Roger gives to his men, but I place mine above the necessity or obligation of my bounty. I am in very little pain for the Roman proverb upon the Carthaginian traders; the Romans were their professed enemies; I am only sorry no Carthaginian histories have come to our hands; we might have been taught perhaps by them some proverbs against the Roman generosity, in fighting for, and bestowing, other people's goods. But since Sir Roger has taken occasion, from an old proverb, to be out of humour with merchants, it should be no offence to offer one not quite so old in their defence. When a man happens to break in Holland, they say of him, that 'he has not kept true accounts.' This phrase, perhaps, among us would appear a soft or humorous way of speaking, but with that exact nation it bears the highest reproach. For a man to be mistaken in the calculation of his expense, in his ability to answer future demands, or to be impudently sanguine in putting his credit to too great adventure, are all instances of as much infamy, as with gay nations to be failing in courage, or common honesty.

"Numbers are so much the measure of every thing that is valuable, that it is not possible to demonstrate the success of any action; or the prudence of any undertaking, answer to what little that is true who is ever poor his accounts." abroad, I can't but think, the profits ought also to be making it, either of other people that my return expense and hazard without the skill to trade to Turkey demand of our their silks, in that are given to have a clear knowledge that I may preserve the charge freight and assure the queen, and besides all the myself. Now What has the little in the good down no man's corn; his labourer; he communicates the comparison of his returns, he fulfills to greater number even the noble foreign market for making a profit it is certain that done by him numbers.

"This is the conduct of the steward shall be no more than help of number action, or the instance, the returns must be and the fox's doubt Sir Roger turns; and charges of the would certainly would never be to the kennel like a blast, or been the consequence truly have been his family had merchant had estate to purchase of the Coverley maid of honour that the merchant is the misfortune out of the seat such new mistakes accounts than the estate a good industry, than

ER 20, 1711.

n. Am. v. 625.

ard.—TATE.

ers with two y correspond-es of females
e, and is as

mpetent for-
to spend five
y among my to divert me
es of coaches
n a very nar-
it is my miss are directly
are to know,
ighbourhood
s at her win-
er sash, and es to attract
n the neigh-
x persons at serving the t first locked empt, could n hour, and eat tranquil-
find that in stolen upon
ner no more.
ght think it
number of
with me so,
at her win-
er forbear oberself to the e to plague
n this figure
real child:
pin-cushion
ement three had almost in her shift
had no way I submitted
y room, and ot the better
uing to hear
across the over me. I a visit, and irs after the

in the day,
rs; and the
at though I her imper-
d. would that I think
t I am con-
most quar-
creatures.
abuse, as a
take notice
rs," &c.
er, that my er which he hardly seems to dream of, and is too far gone in it to receive advice. However, I shall annuadvert in due time on the abuse which he mentions, having myself observed a nest of Jezebels near the Temple, who make it their diversion to draw up the eyes of young Templars, that at the same time they may see them stumble in an unlucky gutter which runs under the window.

"MR. SPECTATOR,

"I have lately read the conclusion of your forty-seventh speculation upon butts with great pleasure, and have ever since been thoroughly persuaded that one of those gentlemen is extremely necessary to enliven conversation. I had an entertainment last week upon the water for a lady to whom I make my addresses, with several of our friends of both sexes. To divert the company in general, and to show my mistress in particular my genius for railery, I took one of the most celebrated butts in town along with me. It is with the utmost shame and confusion that I must acquaint you with the sequel of my adventure. As soon as we were got into the boat, I played a sentence or two at my butt, which I thought very smart, when my ill genius, who I verily believe inspired him purely for my destruction, suggested to him such a reply, as got all the laughter on his side. I was dashed at so unexpected a turn; which the butt perceiving, resolved not to let me recover myself, and pursuing his victory, rallied and tossed me in a most unmerciful and barbarous manner until we came to Chelsea. I had some small success while we were eating cheese-cakes; but coming home, he renewed his attacks with his former good fortune, and equal diversion to the whole company. In short, Sir, I must ingenuously own that I never was so handled in all my life; and to complete my misfortune, I am since told that the butt, flushed with his late victory, has made a visit or two to the dear object of my wishes, so that I am at once in danger of losing all my pretensions to wit, and my mistress into the bargain. This, Sir, is a true account of my present troubles, which you are the more obliged to assist me in, as you were yourself in a great measure the cause of them, by recommending to us an instrument, and not instructing us at the same time how to play upon it.

"I have been thinking whether it might not be highly convenient, that all butts should wear an inscription affixed to some part of their bodies, showing on which side they are to be come at, and that if any of them are persons of unequal tempers, there should be some method taken to inform the world at what time it is safe to attack them, and when you had best let them alone. But, submitting these matters to your more serious consideration,

"I am, Sir, yours," &c.

I have, indeed, seen and heard of several young gentlemen under the same misfortune with my present correspondent. The best rule I can lay down for them to avoid the like calamities for the future is thoroughly to consider, not only whether their companions are weak, but whether themselves are wits.

The following letter comes to me from Exeter and being credibly informed that what it contains is matter of fact, I shall give it my readers, as it was sent to me:

"MR. SPECTATOR, Exeter, Sept. 7.

"You were pleased in a late speculation to take notice of the inconvenience we lie under in this country, in not being able to keep pace with the speech to the greatest fi sink away again, and al not love them enough ; t us so heartily, that they should be able to love t which makes them take good-natured man, who hen-pecked, shall fall in with his dear life, and a wholly put on; and yet to tell the dear good cre

"This sort of good man is not so plentiful in the populous and wealthy cities as in the country. He is a hen-pecked man. The wife is the head of the household. He is a man through his kindnesses and gentleness. He has a planation with the tendency to comfort her when she is not angry with him, when she is not angry with him when he knows she does not love him. He is uneasy for a whole month. Hard-hearted men the spirit of the woman takes to come to stand out.

"There are indeed some hen-pecked, and in my opinion the best subjects the reason I take it to be your contempt.

"I do not know what stood in the representation but I shall take leave to self, and my own spouse am reckoned no fool, has tried whether I will take has been to my advantage such a slave in Turkey has a good share of wit pretty agreeable woman

my affection to her given in vain but that of jealousy, I take, as the heart, to be the reason though it be never so much there is still left something amiable. She will assume grandeur, and have not had respect an instance in company
pretty anger she is in, used like a child. In used like a child. In which has the superiority. She is eternally forming which I very indolently pretty.' To this she says you think I have as much to say to her, 'Indeed there is no patience; she is about her, stamp, and

'Fye, my dear,' say I, sense fall into such an argument that never says she, 'you make me with the silly way you pretty idiot.' Well, whether in good humour I convince her of my good and then I am to give ready money, and, for dislike all she dislikes, approves. I am so exact that I seldom see any of all companies till I see not deny but you appear in many of your understand human life pretty well; but very many things which you cannot pos-a true notion of, in a single life, these are respect the married state; otherwise I cannot for your having overlooked a very good people, which are commonly called in scorni-peaked.' You are to understand that I f those innocent mortals who suffer derision at word, for being governed by the best of it would be worth your consideration to o the nature of affection itself, and tell us, to your philosophy, why it is that our ill do as they will with us, shall be froward, ill-assuming, sometimes whine, at others rail, in away, then come to life, have the use of

100

says she is her hand-
laugh; but men in the es, because alk politics
er for her
me to ask
stitution,
f Harring-
strange med-
ed in mine.
ays before
of the room,
et, varying anner that lay the fool pects I like
ows grave.
aken, and I
men; but hen-pecked
from you in rmed, very pe you will
d Socrates,
e Xantippe.
e world in ful in their ies, but in most obse-
of all men.
thoroughly,
matrimony,
om of kind
ers who cane their ap-
not marry,
happy with-urchase on ent to your instances of ubborn, who aves to their u in the last and valiant
nd that the fection, owe
ed by ambi-
I have ten but my wife
o custom, betely.

HENROOST."

22, 1711.

L. XV. 140.

TATE.

ated of goodtion; I shall the first may
ble to others,
essed of it.
this account,
or a good di-
a the cousti-

tution, which Mr. Dryden somewhere calls a "milkiness of blood," is an admirable groundwork for the other. In order, therefore, to try our good-nature, whether it arises from the body or the mind, whether it be founded in the animal or rational part of our nature; in a word, whether it be such as is entitled to any other reward, besides that secret satisfaction and contentment of mind which is essential to it, and the kind reception it procures us in the world, we must examine it by the following rules:

First, whether it acts with steadiness and uniformity in sickness and in health, in prosperity and in adversity; if otherwise, it is to be looked upon as nothing else but an irradiation of the mind from some new supply of spirits, or a more kindly circulation of the blood. Sir Francis Bacon mentions a cunning solicitor, who would never ask a favour of a great man before dinner; but took care to prefer his petition at a time when the party petitioned had his mind free from care, and his appetites in good humour. Such a transient temporary good-nature as this, is not that philanthropy, that love of mankind, which deserves the title of a moral virtue.

The next way of a man's bringing his good-nature to the test, is, to consider whether it operates according to the rules of reason and duty: for if, notwithstanding its general benevolence to mankind, it makes no distinction between its objects, if it exerts itself promiscuously towards the deserving and the undeserving, if it relieves alike the idle and the indigent, if it gives itself up to the first petitioner and lights upon any one rather by accident than choice, it may pass for an amiable instinct, but must not assume the name of a moral virtue.

The third trial of good-nature will be the examining ourselves, whether or no we are able to exert it to our own disadvantage, and employ it on proper objects, notwithstanding any little pain, want, or inconvenience which may arise to ourselves from it. In a word, whether we are willing to risk any part of our fortune, our reputation, or health, or ease, for the benefit of mankind. Among all these expressions of good-nature, I shall single out that which goes under the general name of charity, as it consists in relieving the indigent; that being a trial of this kind which offers itself to us almost at all times, and in every place.

I should propose it as a rule, to every one who is provided with any competency of fortune more than sufficient for the necessities of life, to lay aside a certain portion of his income for the use of the poor.
This I would look upon as an offering to Him who has a right to the whole, for the use of those whom in the passage hereafter mentioned, he has described as his own representatives upon earth. At the same time we should manage our charity with such prudence and caution, that we may not hurt our own friends or relations, whilst we are doing good to those who are strangers to us.

This may possibly be explained better by an example than by a rule.

Eugenius is a man of a universal good-nature and generous beyond the extent of his fortune, but withal so prudent in the economy of his affairs that what goes out in charity is made up by good management. Eugenius has what the world calls 200*l.* a year; but never values himself above a pinscore, as not thinking he has a right to the tenth part, which he always appropriates to charitable uses. To this sum he frequently makes other voluntary additions, insomuch that in a good year, if such he accounts those in which he has been abto make greater bounties than ordinary, he has given above twice that sum to the sickly and indigent. Eugenius prescribes to himself many particular days of fasting and abstinence, in order to increase his private bank of charity, and sets aside what would be the current expenses of those times for the use of the poor. He often goes afoot where his business calls him; and at the end of his walk has given a shilling, which in his ordinary methods of expense would have gone for coach-hire, to the first necessitous person that has fallen in his way. I have known him, when he has been going to a play or an opera, divert the money, which was designed for that purpose, upon an object of charity whom he has met with in the street; and afterward pass his evening in a coffee-house, or at a friend's fire-side, with much greater satisfaction to himself, than he could have received from the most exquisite entertainments of the theatre. By these means, he is generous without impoverishing himself, and enjoys his estate by making it the property of others.

There are few men so cramped in their private affairs, who may not be charitable after this manner, without any disadvantage to themselves, or prejudice to their families. It is but sometimes sacrificing a diversion or convenience to the poor, and turning the usual course of our expenses into a better channel. This is, I think, not only the most prudent and convenient, but the most meritorious piece of charity, which we can put in practice. By this method, we in some measure share the necessities of the poor at the same time that we relieve them, and make ourselves not only their patrons, but their fellow-sufferers.

Sir Thomas Brown, in the last part of his Religio Medici, in which he describes his charity in several heroic instances, and with a noble heat of sentiment, mentions that verse in the Proverbs of Solomon, "He that giveth to the poor, lendeth to the Lord:"* There is more rhetoric in that one sentence, says he, than in a library of sermons; and, indeed, if those sentences were understood by the reader, with the same emphasis as they are delivered by the author, we needed not those volumes of instructions, but might be honest by an epitome.†

This passage of Scripture is, indeed, wonderfully persuasive; but I think the same thought is carried much farther in the New Testament, where our Saviour tells us, in a most pathetic manner that he shall hereafter regard the clothing of the naked, the feeding of the hungry, and the visiting of the imprisoned, as offices done to himself, and reward them accordingly.‡ Pursuant to those passages in Holy Scripture, I have somewhere met with the epitaph of a charitable man, which has very much pleased me. I cannot recollect the words, but the sense of it is to this purpose: What I spent I lost; what I possessed is left to others; what I gave away remains with me.§

Since I am thus insensibly engaged in sacred writ, I cannot forbear making an extract of several * Prov. xix. 17.

† Brown's Rel. Medici, part II. sect. 13. f. 1659. p. 29.

‡ Matt. xxv. 31. et seqq.

§ The epitaph alluded to is (or was) in St. George's Church at Doncaster in Yorkshire, and runs in old English thus:—

How now, who is here? That I spent, that I had;
I Robin of Doncastere, That I gave, that I have;
And Margaret my feare, That I left, that I lost.

A. D. 1579.

Quoth Robertus Byrks, who in this world did reign threescore years and seven, and yet lived not one.

passages which light in the Bible that holy man his prosperity, composition, is good-natured other author.

"Oh that days when G shined upon walked through yet with me; when I washe poured me out

"When the and when the Because I del fatherless, and blessing of him me, and I cau I was eyes to I was a father knew not I se that was in the the poor? Le that God may spise the cause servant when shall I do whe siteth, what sh made me in the fashion us in the poor from the the widow to alone, and th

If I have seen any poor with blessed me, a fleece of my s against the fa gate; then le blade, and mi

I have rejoice me, or lifted (neither have a curse to his the street; bu If my land cry wise therefore thereof without thereof to lose of wheat, and

No. 178.] M

Comis in t

Civil to hi

I CANNOT d

"Mr. S

"I am but

15th instant,

of jealousy;

speak of that not to mention

woman. You

greatest pene

woman is the raised; but p

merciful as to * Job xxxix.

possible you
the world;
ever out of pleasantest
the greatest one but his
in all other to deliver
thout possi-
but his own
gentleman,
ge, because n I see him
accour, and yet he that e, never re-
off an in-there as if the anguish
his home as rns as if he is, that from ne does not in, us to his y enough to wife; and I sent to him,
much, that im, I throw
ild he is so it with my run to my-p the utter-g the gush
on my eyes.
tell you, but Hitherto I
of my mind,
the distract-
cruel I am the ensuing on my anger
e; it would am, and how ate with the ust unhand-
persons are in the best only, That if I appear
ake this into usbands and owards each
tant subject
ch descends cted. Give
e servant,
CELINDA."
received the dful passion
t she seems
I had to re-
behaviour,
nts to those would be is made of ly men get ere they are deserves a distinct speculation, and I shall observe for a day or two the behaviour of two or three happy pairs I am acquainted with, before I pretend to make a system of conjugal morality. I design in the first place to go a few miles out of town, and there I know where to meet one who practises all the parts of a fine gentleman in the duty of a husband. When he was a bachelor much business made him particularly negligent in his habit; but now there is no young lover living so exact in the care of his person. One who asked why he was so long washing his mouth, and so delicate in the choice and wearing of his linen, was answered: "Because there is a woman of merit obliged to receive me kindly, and I think it incumbent upon me to make her inclination go along with her duty."

If a man would give himself leave to think, he would not be so unreasonable as to expect debauchery and innocence could live in commerce together: or hope that flesh and blood is capable of so strict an alliance, as that a fine woman must go on to improve herself till she is as good and impassive as an angel, only to preserve fidelity to a brute and a satyr. The lady who desires me for her sake to end one of my papers with the following letter, I am persuaded thinks such a perseverance very impracticable:

"HUSBAND,

"Stay more at home. I know where you visited at seven of the clock on Thursday evening. The colonel, whom you charged me to see no more, is in town.

T.

"MARTHA HOUSEWIFE."

No. 179.] TUESDAY, SEPTEMBER 25, 1711.

Centurie seniorum agitant expertia frugis: Celsi prætereunt austera poemata rhanæ, Omne tulit punctum qui miscuit utile dulci, Lectorem delectando, pariterque monendo.

HOR. ART. POET. v. 341.

Old age is only fond of moral truth, Lectures too grave disgust aspiring youth;
But he who blends instruction with delight, Wins every reader, nor in vain shall write.—P

I MAY cast my readers under two general divisions, the mercurial and the saturnine. The first are the gay part of my disciples, who require speculations of wit and humour; the others are those of a more solemn and sober turn, who find no pleasure but in papers of morality and sound sense. The former call every thing that is serious, stupid; the latter look upon every thing as impertinent that is ludicrous. Were I always grave, one half of my readers would fall off from me; were I always merry, I should lose the other. I make it, therefore, my endeavour to find out entertainments for both kinds, and by that means, perhaps, consult the good of both, more than I should do, did I always write to the particular taste of either. As they neither of them know what I proceed upon, the sprightly reader, who takes up my paper in order to be diverted, very often finds himself engaged unawares in a serious and profitable course of thinking; as, on the contrary, the thoughtful man who perhaps may hope to find something solid, and full of deep reflection, is very often insensibly betrayed into a fit of mirth. In a word, the reader sits down to my entertainment without knowing his bill of fare, and has therefore at least the pleasure of hoping there may be a dish to his palate.

I must confess, were I left to myself, I would rather aim at instructing than diverting; but if we useful to the world, we must take it as we Authors of professed severity discourage a part of mankind from having any thing in their writings. A man must have virtue before he will enter upon the reading of a or an Epictetus. The very title of a moral has something in it austere and shocking to less and inconsiderate his reason several unthinking persons fall in who would give no attention to lectures de- with a religious seriousness or a philosophic

They are insnared into sentiments of wis- d virtue when they do not think of it; and it means they arrive only at such a degree of ration as may dispose them to listen to more and elaborate discourses, I shall not think culations useless. I might likewise observe, gloominess in which sometimes the minds est men are involved, very often stands in such little incitements to mirth and laughter, up to disperse melancholy, and put our fa- in good humour. To which some will add, British climate, more than any other, makes inments of this nature in a manner necessary. hat I have here said does not recommend, it least excuse, the variety of my speculations. I not willingly laugh but in order to instruct, sometimes fail in this point, when my mirth to be instructive, it shall never cease to be nt. A scrupulous conduct in this particular rhaps, more merit in it than the generality ders imagine; did they know how many ts occur in a point of humour, which a dis- author in modesty suppresses; how many of raillery present themselves, which could to please the ordinary taste of mankind, but led in their birth by reason of some remote cy which they carry in them to corrupt the of those who read them: did they know how places of ill-nature are industriously avoided of doing injury to the reputation of another, could be apt to think kindly of those writers deavour to make themselves diverting, with- ing immoral. One may apply to these authors ssage in Waller:

ets lose half the praise they would have got, ere it but known what they discreetly blot.

thing is more easy than to be a wit, with all ove-mentioned liberties, it requires some ge- ad invention to appear such without them.

at I have here said is not only in regard to blic, but with an eye to my particular corres- st, who has sent me the following letter, I have castrated in some places upon these erations:

Sir,

aving lately seen your discourse upon a match nging, I cannot forbear giving you an account histing match, which, with many others, I was ined with about three years since at the Bath. ize was a guinea, to be conferred upon the Whistler, that is, on him who could whistle it, and go through his time without laughing, ch at the same time he was provoked by the postures of a merry-andrew, who was to stand he stage and play his tricks in the eye of the mer. There were three competitors for the t. The first was a ploughman of a very pro- aspect; his features were steady, and his is composed in so inflexible stupidity, that is first appearance every one gave the guinea for lost. The pickled- to shake him; for upon this unlucky wag dan of distortions and gr could not forbear sm means spoiled his whi

"The next that mo citizen of the Bath, a inferior people of that and his broad band. with much gravity, a mind to be more seric tune of the Children is part of it with good s wit at his elbow, wh grave and attentive fo upon the left shoulder, with so bewitching a g his fibres into a kind out into an open laugh lists was a footman, w andrew and all his art an Italian sonata, with he bore away the prize some hundreds of per were present at this humbly conceive, wh the grinners, the whi not only as their art but as it improves cou and teaches ordinary nances, if they see an ters; besides that it particularly adapted t rider to whistle to his his water pass.

"After having dis points of grinning a oblige the world with as I have seen it prac other Christmas gam worthy gentleman, wh at that time of the ye cheese, and begin ab company is disposed widest, and at the sa duce the most yawns home the cheese. If ought, I question not the kingdom a yawn it will never make a

No. 180.]—WEDN

—Delirant reges, p
The monarch's folly

THE following let good sense, that I though it relates to have very little ho XIV. of France.

"MR SPECTAT

"Amidst the var have treated, I coul way to expose the thought would natu king, who has been g conqueror of our ag as, and der victories.

picture, I to the peace
umphs, and ven then I n had been people.

have gained
ot rendered
s, or greater upon these leration.

jects. From a manager
quired were e, and were he had cons-
and con-
of the inha-

houses in a just com-
ld not then
an will con-
al wars, the t ever since ow much of ore security
n to imagine
t and there-
that prince
d part of the even though
contented to transfer their

venient si-
city for fur-
great num-
maintained aining two-other con-
cannot have s, men, wo-
uction shall
conqueror,

against his he had ac-
et in the ac-
has seldom laces, than been left in computation
paign, with-an be must the begin-
times, until years; and his armies,
ave lost less able-bodied
subjects he seems to

of mankind
n may have y contribute
ollows then,
et, as many t were but charity to believe, they have not done all the service they were capable of doing in their generation. In so long a course of years great part of them must have died, and all the rest must go off at last, without leaving any representatives behind.

By this account he must have lost not only 800,000 subjects, but double that number, and all the increase that was reasonably to be expected from it.

"It is said in the last war there was a famine in his kingdom, which swept away two millions of his people. This is hardly credible. If the loss was only one-fifth part of that sum, it was very great.
But it is no wonder there should be famine, where so much of the people's substance is taken away for the king's use, that they have not sufficient left to provide against accidents; where so many of the men are taken from the plough to serve the king in his wars, and a great part of the tillage is left to the weaker hands of so many women and children.
Whatever was the loss, it must undoubtedly be placed to the account of his ambition.

"And so must also the destruction or banishment of 3 or 400,000 of his reformed subjects; he could have no other reasons for valuing those lives so very cheap but only to recommend himself to the bigotry of the Spanish nation.

"How should there be industry in a country where all property is precarious? What subject will sow his land, that his prince may reap the whole harvest? Parsimony and frugality must be strangers to such a people; for will any man save to-day, what he has reason to fear will be taken from him to-morrow? And where is the encouragement for marrying? Will any man think of raising children without any assurance of clothing for their backs, or so much as food for their bellies?
And thus, by his fatal ambition, he must have lessened the number of his subjects, not only by slaughter and destruction, but, by preventing their very birtas, he has done as much as was possible towards destroying posterity itself.

"Is this then the great, the invincible Louis?
This the immortal man, the tout puissant, or the almighty, as his flatterers have called him? Is this the man that is so celebrated for his conquests?
For every subject he has acquired, has he not lost three that were his inheritance? Are not his troops fewer, and those neither so well fed, or clothed, or paid, as they were formerly, though he has now so much greater cause to exert himself?
And what can be the reason of all this, but that his revenue is a great deal less, his subjects are either poorer, or not so many to be plundered by constant taxes for his use?

"It is well for him he had found out a way to steal a kingdom; * if he had gone on conquering as he did before, his ruin had been long since finished. This brings to my mind a saying of King Pyrrhus, after he had a second time beat the Romans in a pitched battle, and was complimented by his generals: 'Yes,' says he, 'such another victory, and I am quite undone.' And since I have mentioned Pyrrhus, I will end with a very good though known story of this ambitious madman.
When he had shewn the utmost fondness for his expedition against the Romans, Cincus, his chief minister, asked him what he proposed to himself by this war? 'Why,' says Pyrrhus, 'to conquer the

* The kingdom of Spain, seized by Louis XIV. in 1701, for his grandson, as left him by the will of Charles II. which the enemies of France looked upon as forged, or made when Charles was "non compos."

Romans, and reduce all Italy to my obedience.' 'What then?' says Cineas. 'To pass over into Sicily,' says Pyrrhus, 'and then all the Sicilians must be our subjects.' 'And what does your majesty intend next?' 'Why truly,' says the king, 'to conquer Carthage, and make myself master of all Africa.' 'And what, Sir,' says the minister, 'is to be the end of all your expeditions?' 'Why then,' says the king, 'for the rest of our lives we will sit down to good wine.' 'How, Sir,' replied Cineas, 'to better than we have now before us? Have we not already as much as we can drink?'

"Riot and excess are not the becoming characters of princes; but if Pyrrhus and Louis had debauched like Vitellius, they had been less harmful to their people."

"Your humble servant,

T.

"PHILARITHMUS."

No. 181.] THURSDAY, SEPTEMBER 27, 1711.

His lacrymis vitam damus, et miserescimus ultro.

Virg. Æn. ii. 145.

Mov'd by these tears, we pity and protect.

I AM more pleased with a letter that is filled with touches of nature than of wit. The following one is of this kind:

"SIR,

"Among all the distresses which happen in families, I do not remember that you have touched upon the marriage of children without the consent of their parents. I am one of these unfortunate persons. I was about fifteen when I took the liberty to choose for myself; and have ever since languished under the displeasure of an inexorable father, who, though he sees me happy in the best of husbands, and blessed with very fine children, can never be prevailed upon to forgive me. He was so kind to me before this unhappy accident, that indeed it makes my breach of duty in some measure inexcusable; and at the same time creates in me such a tenderness towards him, that I love him above all things, and would die to be reconciled to him. I have thrown myself at his feet, and besought him with tears to pardon me; but he always pushes me away, and spurns me from him. I have written several letters to him, but he will neither open nor receive them. About two years ago I sent my little boy to him, dressed in new apparel; but the child returned to me crying, because he said his grandfather would not see him, and had ordered him to be put out of his house. My mother is won over to my side, but dares not mention me to my father, for fear of provoking him. About a month ago he lay sick upon his bed, and in great danger of his life; I was pierced to the heart at the news, and could not forbear going to inquire after his health. My mother took this opportunity of speaking in my behalf: she told him, with abundance of tears, that I was come to see him, that I could not speak to her for weeping, and that I should certainly break my heart if he refused at that time to give me his blessing, and be reconciled to me. He was so far from relenting towards me, that he bid her speak no more of me, unless she had a mind to disturb him in his last moments; for, Sir, you must know that he has the reputation of an honest and religious man, which makes my misfortune so much the greater. God be thanked he has since recovered: but his severe usage has given me such a blow that I shall soon sink under it, unless I may be reading of

Of all his cusable as An obstina
ous upon a
The love, t
to arise in that by wh
The suppre lency and g
towards a have not su
passion tow protection,
that suppli
I have illu papers, and species of mal creatio
This inst
circumscrib dictates of ourselves a
only inclin
but that we thing which vation. De manity, and pity, than a
The mat passion or instinct, an his mind ev
as in him l strikes out principles t
Among
brought ag
I shall only
tion of our our very p treated by fore before point;" the being what ture and it
the child v
never so hi
to the sup
tion of a fa ness as he l
To this I
as many pr
mentioned ceeding by my paper v
recorded in among the v Eginhard
became ex
that post.
of his mas Imma, the
with his pe love with beauties of more than their flame
of the fatal

rather than as so much into the ntly at the something
He was night; but break of great snow
very much
feet in the king, who
the morn-
a with his
on the mat-
m through happened ep, was at when upon his daugh-arrying his he had no
the utmost
or was excident;
il a proper
rt knowing
g a secret,
order to it
pleased to tent at his vices. The to his peti-
it, and ap-
him know
the most nting them
their advice
them gave be too senoured his mperor det's punish-the shame
ught it the
of the fact,
accordingly
ted by the re any pre-
rewarded,
iven him in
er quality;
ngly.

28, 1711.
Sat vi. 180

my obseraritable inof that sort
He will, I
tters of cor-
as follow:

the many ou have not icularly the
ing very fit the practice Sir, that I myself am a woman who have been one of the unhappy that have fallen into this misfortune, and that by the insinuation of a very worthless fellow, who served others in the same manner, both before my ruin and since that time. I had, as soon as the rascal left me, so much indignation and resolution as not to go upon the town, as the phrase is, but took to work for my living in an obscure place, out of the knowledge of all with whom I was before acquainted.

"It is the ordinary practice and business of life with a set of idle fellows about this town to write letters, send messages, and form appointments with little raw unthinking girls, and leave them after possession of them, without any mercy, to shame, infamy, poverty, and disease. Were you to read the nauseous impertinences which are written on these occasions, and to see the silly creatures sighing over them, it could not but be matter of mirth as well as pity. A little 'prentice girl of mine has been for some time applied to by an Irish fellow, who dresses very fine, and struts in a lace coat, and is the admiration of seamstresses, who are under age in town. Ever since I had some knowledge of the matter, I have debarred my 'prentice from pen, ink, and paper. But the other day he bespoke some cravats of me: I went out of the shop, and left his mistress to put them up in a band-box in order to be sent to him when his man called. When I came into the shop again, I took occasion to send her away, and found in the bottom of the box written these words, 'Why would you ruin a harmless creature that loves you?' then in the lid, 'There is no resisting Strephon.' I searched a little further, and found in the rim of the box, 'At eleven o'clock at night come in a hackney-coach at the end of our street.' This was enough to alarm me; I sent away the things, and took my measures accordingly. An hour or two before the appointed time, I examined my young lady, and found her trunk stuffed with impertinent letters and an old scroll of parchment in Latin, which her lover had sent her as a settlement of fifty pounds a year. Among other things, there was also the best lace I had in my shop to make him a present for cravats. I was very glad of this last circumstance, because I could very conscientiously swear against him that he had enticed my servant away, and was her accomplice in robbing me: I procured a warrant against him accordingly. Everything was now prepared, and the tender hour of love approaching, I who had acted for myself in my youth the same senseless part, knew how to manage accordingly; therefore, after having locked up my maid, and not being so much unlike her in height and shape, as in a huddled way not to pass for her, I delivered the bundle designed to be carried off, to her lover's man, who came with the signal to receive them. Thus I followed after to the coach, where when I saw his master take them in, I cried out, thieves! thieves! and the constable with his attendants seized my expecting lover. I kept myself unobserved until I saw the crowd sufficiently increased, and then appeared to declare the goods to be mine; and had the satisfaction to see my man of mode put into the round-house, with the stolen wares by him, to be produced in evidence against him the next morning. This matter is cotoriously known to be fact; and I have been cotented to save my 'prentice, and take a year's rest of this mortified lover, not to appear further in the matter. This was some penance; but, Sir, is this though for a villany of much more pernicious consequence than the trifles for which he was to have been indicted? Should not you, and all men of any parts or honour, put things upon so right a foot, that such a rascal should not laugh at the imputation of what he was really guilty, and dread being accused of that for which he was arrested.

"In a word, Sir, it is in the power of you, and such as I hope you are, to make it as infamous to such a poor creature of her honour as her clothes. I leave this to your consideration, only take leave (which I cannot do without sighing) to remark to you that if this had been the sense of mankind thirty years ago, I should have avoided a life spent in poverty and shame.

"I am, Sir, your most humble servant,
"ALICE THREADNEEDLE."

"MR. SPECTATOR, Round House, Sept. 9.

"I am a man of pleasure about town, but by the stupidity of a dull rogue of a justice of peace, and an insolent constable, upon the oath of an old hardidan, am imprisoned here for theft, when I designed only fornication. The midnight magistrate as he conveyed me along had you in his mouth, and said his would make a pure story for the Spectator. I hope, Sir, you won't pretend to wit, and take the part of dull rogues of business. The world is so altered of late years, that there was not a man who would knock down a watchman in my behalf, but I was carried off with as much triumph as if I had been a pickpocket. At this rate there is an end of all the wit and humour in the world. The time was, when all the honest whoremasters in the neighbourhood would have rose against the cuckolds in my rescue. If fornication is to be scandalous, half the fine things that have been writ by most of the wits of the last age may be burned by the common hangman. Harkee, Mr. Spec., do not be queer: after having done some things pretty well, don't begin to write at that rate that no gentleman can read thee. Be true to love, and burn your Seneca. You do not expect me to write my name from hence, but I am,

T. "Your unknown humble servant," &c.

No. 183.] SATURDAY, SEPTEMBER 29, 1711.

Sometimes fair truth in fiction we disguise; Sometimes present her naked to men's eyes.—POPE'S HOM.

FABLES were the first pieces of wit that made their appearance in the world, and have been still highly valued not only in times of the greatest simplicity, but among the most polite ages of mankind. Jotham's fable of the trees* is the oldest that is extant, and as beautiful as any which have been made since that time. Nathan's fable of the poor man and his lamb† is likewise more ancient than any that is extant, besides the above mentioned, and had so good an effect, as to convey instruction to the ear of a king, without offending it, and to bring a man after God's own heart to a right sense of his guilt and his duty. We find Æsop in the most distant ages of Greece; and if we look into the very beginnings of the commonwealth of Rome,‡ we see a mutiny among the common people appeased by a fable of the belly and the limbs, which was indeed very proper to gain the attention of an incensed rabble, at a time when perhaps they would have torn to pieces any man who had preached the same doctrine to them in an open way. They took their birth never flourish in its greatest beauty, shall put my reason to wit and critic in the most correct mention La Fontaine come more into times.

The fables I together upon bring their own species might hath so required there is another virtues, vices, like nature. So it, that the Iliad of this nature; and heroes are the mind in a they tell us, the presents anger, ture; that upon perior in a full name for reason that occasion; him upon the h upon as the sea the poem. As that Horace co fables, by the n veral parts of applied themselves of fables. Spe series of them admirable work authors of anti phon, and man likewise their further observe made any cons of Hercules t which was inve Socrates, and He used to tra fable, which p the market tow soon as he had

After this sh such materials gest to me, be of this kind, of the present the occasion of

In the accou versation and he was to die,

When Socr (as was usual demned perso in the midst o legs over the o he began to ru iron; and wh with which he preaching dea take every oc useful subject sensation whi his leg, that by the fetter.

* Judges ix. 8—15.

† 2 Sam. xii. 1—4.

‡ Liv. Hist. lib. ii. sect. 32, &c. Florus, lib. i. c. 23.

BRITISH ESSAYISTS.

er constantly added, that if to represent way of writing together after sible for the ing followed ht it proper unching out ce with the larged upon ne beautiful t done it, I the spirit of om the be- to each other em lived' in oungest de- e, who was the child of ds. These, in heaven. s Pain, who hild of Vice, 'The habita-en these two ch was inha- ither so vir- e other, but of these two g that the too virtuous happy; that e good and above-men- daughter of a of Misery, nature which g promised they could are mankind met in their agreed upon ossession of part of that

But upon ividual they them had a t they had ere was no in him, nor n some evil. upon search, e might lay in the most t least two- endless dis- old come to here was a d at length e find plea- ells; and ther, or are o a heart, he if Pleasure off.

e was very ot seem to answer the intention of Jupiter in sending them among mankind. To remedy, therefore, this inconvenience, it was stipulated between them by article, and confirmed by the consent of each family, that notwithstanding they here possessed the species indifferently; upon the death of every single person, if he was found to have in him a certain proportion of evil, he should be dispatched into the infernal regions by a passport from Pain, there to dwell with Misery, Vice, and the Furies. Or, on the contrary, if he had in him a certain proportion of good, he should be dispatched into heaven by a passport from Pleasure, there to dwell with Happiness, Virtue, and the Gods."

No. 184.] MONDAY, OCTOBER 1, 1711.

—Opere in longo fas est obrepere somnum.

Hon. Ars. Poet. v. 350.

—Who labours long may be allowed sleep.

WHEN a man has discovered a new vein of humour, it often carries him much further than he expected from it. My correspondents take the hint I give them, and pursue it into speculations which I never thought of at my first starting it. This has been the fate of my paper on the match of grinning, which has already produced a second paper on parallel subjects, and brought me the following letter by the last post. I shall not premise anything to it further, than that it is built on matter of fact, and is as follows:

"SIR,

"You have already obliged the world with a discourse upon grinning, and have since proceeded to whistling, from whence you at length came to yawning; from this I think you may make a very natural transition to sleeping. I therefore recommend to you for the subject of a paper the following advertisement, which about two months ago was given into every body's hands, and may be seen, with some additions, in the Daily Courant of August the 9th.:

"Nicholas Hart, who slept last year in St. Bartholomew's Hospital, intends to sleep this year at the Cock and Bottle in Little-Britain."

"Having since inquired into the matter of fact, I find that the above-mentioned Nicholas Hart is every year seized with a periodical fit of sleeping, which begins upon the fifth of August, and ends on the eleventh of the same month: That

On the first of that month he grew dull;

On the second, appeared drowsy;

On the third, fell a yawning;

On the fourth, began to nod;

On the fifth, dropped asleep;

On the sixth, was heard to snore;

On the seventh, turned himself in his bed;

On the eighth, recovered his former posture;

On the ninth, fell a stretching;

On the tenth, about midnight, awaked;

On the eleventh in the morning, called for a little small beer.

"This account I have extracted out of the journal of this sleeping worthy, as it has been faithfully kept by a gentleman of Lincoln's-inn, who has undertaken to be his historiographer. I have sent it to you, not only as it represents the actions of Nicholas Hart, but as it seems a very natural picture of the life of many an honest English gentleman, whose whole history very often consists of yawning, nodding, stretching, turning, sleeping, drinking like extraordinary particulars. I do not, Sir, that if you pleased, you could put an argument not unlike the above mentioned, of men of figure; that Mr. John Such-a-one, an, or Thomas Such-a-one, esquire, who the country last summer, intends to sleep this winter. The worst of it is, that the part of our species is chiefly made up of most gentlemen, who live quietly among their neighbours, without ever disturbing the public. They are drones without stings. I could wish, that several turbulent, restless, ambitious, would for a while change places with good men, and enter themselves into Nicholas's fraternity. Could one but lay asleep a few days which I could name, from the first of every next to the first of May ensuing,* I not but it would very much redound to the particular persons, as well as to the benefit of the public.

To return to Nicholas Hart: I believe, Sir, think it a very extraordinary circumstance in to gain his livelihood by sleeping, and should procure a man sustenance as well try; yet so it is, that Nicholas got last year to support himself for a twelvemonth. I am informed that he has this year had a very comfortable nap. The poets value themselves very much sleeping on Parnassus, but I never heard of a great by it. On the contrary, our friend gets more by sleeping than he could by any other way, and may be more properly said, than ever was, to have had golden dreams. Juvenal mentions a drowsy husband who raised an yawn, but then he is represented to put what the common people call a dog's snore, or if his sleep was real, his wife was awake, at her business. Your pen, which loves to ram upon all subjects, may raise something, upon this circumstance also, and point out a set of men, who, instead of growing rich by honest industry, recommend themselves to the notice of the great, by making themselves companions in the participations of luxury and dissipation.

To further acquaint you, Sir, that one of the eminent pens in Grub-street is now employed in the dream of this miraculous sleep, which I hear will be of a more than ordinary length, as it must contain all the particulars supposed to have passed in his imagination during so long a sleep. He is said to have gone through three days and three nights of it, and have comprised in them the most remarkable of the four first empires of the world. If sleep free from party-strokes, his work may be great; but this I much doubt, having been in company one of his friends and confidants, that he has seen some things of Nimrod with too great

"I am ever, Sir," &c.

35.] TUESDAY, OCTOBER 2, 1711.

antem animis ecclesiasticis ire?—Vico. Æn. l. 15.
wells such fury in celestial breasts?

There is nothing in which men more deceive themselves than in what the world calls zeal. There are many passions which hide themselves under the name of many mischiefs arising from it, that some

The time in which the parliament usually sits.

have gone so far as to consider the benefit of mankind in the catalogue of virtues, once laudable and prudent, and now criminal and erroneous. We consider that it opens all religions, however of another, and in all the in particular.

We are told by some that the first murder was occasioned by a controversy; and if we had from the days of Cain, we see it filled with so much bloodshed, as would make how he suffers himself in principle when it only concerns and speculation.

I would have every man heart thoroughly, and, that what he calls a zeal, pride, interest, or ill-will, from another in opinion, his own judgment, and tends to be the wiser perception to the proud man to what he calls his zeal. Very often, we may observe some of the most zealous often great friendships, immoral men, provided in the same scheme of cause the vicious believe the virtuous man, and be the worthier person, cannot come up to his simplified in that trite phrase in almost every system on other occasion:

—Video meliora Deteriora sequor—
I see the right, and I Condemn the wrong.

On the contrary, it is common and genuine, we should be a sinner than a heretic in cases which may excuse a Judge, but none which

Interest is likewise a man on persecution upon this reason we find not the true worship by first find their present account the word interest to a man generally given it, as safety and welfare, as a man is glad to gain numbers to strengthen his Every proselyte is like establishment of his faith that his principles carry are the more likely to be conformable to the real his own. And that this man very often into an appear from the common who maintains and so much heat as those who of a passion for God's

Ill-nature is another Many a good man may malice in his heart, who

BRITISH ESSAYISTS.

Porinna, that with her with warded motion
towards resent all she bliged to inaying artifi-
om unknown
lows in love Thus, as her inclina-
her person.
it has been
youth up-uch towards women of a series of
of the pre-
account of
have ever called Kitty.
upon myself)
eping was in fbeing wild,
rds and ac-
d jilt of her charm in it es seemed as
n. The air
g girl, and
of fondness,
periwig, try
ms a-kimbo,
e wall, take ne other use accountable
into pass
her full of e keeping of
she was too
attentive to did I divert in the com-
upon as neigh at myself xpense upon etty insensi-
dain against rance soever
d after that e who lived ur. To this r turn of befrequent as the theatres,
hich the pros in constant ime (having ers began to nd easy ad-
n to observe
to follow the
my ill stars,
ssively.
mselves into ndeavour to o all around with someit is impos-
ployed only sture. If it were not too coarse a simile, I should say, Hyæna, in the figure she affects to appear in, is a spider in the midst of a cobweb, that is sure to destroy every fly that approaches it. The net Hyæna throws is so fine, that you are taken in it before you can observe any part of her work. I attempted her for a long and weary season, but I found her passion went no further than to be admired; and she is of that unreasonable temper, as not to value the inconstancy of her lovers, provided she can boast she once had their addresses.

"Biblis was the second I aimed at, and her vanity lay in purchasing the adorers of others, and not in rejoicing in their love itself. Biblis is no man's mistress, but every woman's rival. As soon as I found this, I fell in love with Chloe, who is my present pleasure and torment. I have writ to her, danced with her, and fought for her, and have been her man in the sight and expectation of the whole town these three years, and thought myself near the end of my wishes; when the other day she called me into her closet, and told me, with a very grave face, that she was a woman of honour, and scorned to deceive a man who loved her with so much sincerity as she saw I did, and therefore she must inform me that she was by nature the most inconstant creature breathing, and begged of me not to marry her; if I insisted upon it, I should; but that she was lately fallen in love with another. What to do or say I know not, but desire you to inform me, and you will infinitely oblige,

"Sir, your humble servant,

C.

"CHARLES YELLOW."

ADVERTISEMENT.

Mr. Sly, haberdasher of hats, at the corner of Devereux-court, in the Strand, gives notice, that he has prepared very neat hats, rubbers, and brushes, for the use of young tradesmen in the last year of apprenticeship, at reasonable rates.—T.

No. 188.] FRIDAY, OCTOBER 5, 1711.

Letus sum laudari a te laudato viro.—TULL.

It gives me pleasure to be praised by you, whom all men praise.

He is a very unhappy man who acts his heart upon being admired by the multitude, or affects a general and undistinguishing applause among men. What pious men call the testimony of a good conscience, should be the measure of our ambition in this kind; that is to say, a man of spirit should condemn the praise of the ignorant, and like being applauded for nothing but what he knows in his own heart he deserves. Besides which, the character of the person who commends you is to be considered before you set a value upon his esteem. The praise of an ignorant man is only good-will, and you should receive his kindness as he is a good neighbour in society, and not as a good judge of your actions in point of fame and reputation. The satirist said very well of popular praise and acclamations, "Give the tinkers and cobblers their presents again, and learn to live of yourself." * It is an argument of a loose and ungoverned mind to be affected with the promiscuous approbation of the generality of mankind and a man of virtue should be too delicate for a coarse an appetite of fame. Men of honour should endeavour only to please the worthy, and the man of merit should desire to be tried only by his peers. I thought it a noble sentiment which I heard yet

* Tollat sua munera cerdo:

Tecum habita. — PRÆF. SAT. IV. 31.

tered in conversation: "I know," said a man, "a way to be greater than any man; worth in him, I can rejoice in his superiority; and that satisfaction is a greater actual in me, than any in him which can possibly be to me." This thought could proceed but amidst an ardent and generous spirit; and the approval of such minds is what may be esteemed true for with the common race of men there is something commendable but what they themselves are to be partakers of, and arrive at; but the truly glorious is, when the mind is set rather to things laudable, than to purchase reputation. There is that sincerity as the foundation of a name, the kind opinion of virtuous men will be sought, but a necessary consequence. The Romans, though a plain people, and no pretence to politeness, had a certain delicacy in their glory, and sacrificed to the Muses when entered upon any great enterprise. They have the commemoration of their actions bestowed by the purest and most untainted medals. The din which attends victories and triumphs, is by far less eligible than the recollection of great men by honest and wise men. It is a frivolous pleasure to be the admiration of gaping crowds; but to have the approval of a good man in the cool reflections of his is a gratification worthy a heroic spirit. The noise of the crowd makes the head giddy, but the station of a reasonable man makes the heart

it makes the love of popular or general praise so ridiculous, is, that it is usually given for instances which are foreign to the persons addressed.

Thus they are the ordinary attendants on riches, which may be taken out of one hands, and put into another's. The application, and not the possession, makes those things honourable. The vulgar and men agree in admiring men for having what they would rather be possessed of; the wise applaud him whom he thinks most virtuous, not of the world him who is most wealthy.

As a man is in this way of thinking, I do not think that can occur to one more monstrous, than persons of ingenuity address their services and performances to men no way addicted to liberal arts. In these cases, the praise on one hand, and the promise on the other, are equally the objects of ridicule. Dedications to ignorant men are as common as any of the speeches of Bulfinch in the country.

Such an address one is apt to translate into words; and when the different parties are fairly considered, the panegyric generally does no more than if the author should say to the addressee; "My very good lord, you and I can never be intimate friends for the future."

A rich man may as well ask to borrow of the poor, or a man of virtue or merit hope for addition to his character from any but such as himself. He who recommends another engages so much of his own opinion as he gives to that person commended; that has nothing laudable in himself is not of much use to be such a surety. The wise Phocion was sensible how dangerous it was to be touched with the multitude approved, that upon a general approbation made when he was making an oration, he said to an intelligent friend who stood near him and asked in a surprised manner, "What slip made?"

I shall conclude this letter, which has fallen into my hands from a gentleman who commended. The author is a lover. When all possible, I shall return them on the subject of so handsomely of him a letter.

"MADAM,

"I should be sensible to forbear making you any late mention of me with I think, your fate to you formerly inspired love, so do you now. As desire had the least before professed towards in the glory to which innocence, knowledge, and discretion, are the consequences, has said this of me. I arrived at the highest commendation of the most

No. 189.] SATURDAY

— Patrice pietas
An image of paternal love

THE following letter, which I have just received from a seller, upon a subject since, I shall publish in the letter that was enclosed.

"MR. BUCKLEY

"Mr. Spectator has the cruelty of parents induced (at the request of admirers) to enclose to me the original from a standing the latter gentleman. It would be wonderful if Mr. Spectator would not come of his speculation (Buckley)

"SIRRAH,

"You are a saucy and mad, and I cannot comply or no; that of course of your insolence and the next day to inconsistencies, such as I have proved. To be brief, face; and, sirrah, if no disgrace to me for and if you starve in something underhand in something more of your head the first time are a stubborn beast giving you money? judgment, and give you to (I regret to say) you

"P.S. It's prudent sight; for to reproach right, on the outside a great knock on the

Was there ever a derness! It was used to make their slaves pose them to their ch

BRITISH ESSAYISTS.

which makes al: I have er with the deter others
s a mind to nted in the may meet at ever ap-
the part of

blindly on letter above alls him a st line, and rove but an ing" at his
the outside overcomes reason to be or mad," as we may at ery well in t, and give But whether g his head,"
ill," ought,
the whole,
match, and
th a son, as

—Ecl. viii. 48.

WARTON.

Greek pro-

which I have dent, upon
e foregoing
of it seems ould seem nce of chil-
writer of it
attentively,
h. Pardon laughter re-
behalf; and minent wit,
n to forgive
his consent,
r instances,
r there was

es between rally prejudgments on think it is man nature,
nger motive
receiving of a good will,
e conferring
any person more to the benefactor
ppens, that ousand un-
erfully contrived (as I have formerly observed) for the support of every living species: but at the same time that it shows the wisdom of the Creator, it discovers the imperfection and degeneracy of the creature.

The obedience of children to their parents is the basis of all government, and set forth as the measure of that obedience which we owe to those whom Providence hath placed over us.

It is father Le Compte, if I am not mistaken, who tells us how want of duty in this particular is punished among the Chinese, insomuch that if a son should be known to kill, or so much as to strike his father, not only the criminal, but his whole family would be rooted out, nay, the inhabitants of the place where he lived would be put to the sword, nay, the place itself would be razed to the ground, and its foundations sown with salt. For, say they,
there must have been an utter depravation of manners in that clan or society of people who could have bred up among them so horrid an offender. To this I shall add a passage out of the first book of Herodotus. That historian, in his account of the Persian customs and religion, tells us, it is their opinion that no man ever killed his father, or that it is possible such a crime should be in nature; but that if any thing like it should ever happen, they conclude that the reputed son must have been illegitimate, supposititious, or begotten in adultery. Their opinion in this particular shows sufficiently what a notion they must have had of undutifulness in general.

L.

No. 190.] MONDAY, OCTOBER 8, 1711.

Servitus crescit nova——— Hor., 2 Od. viii. 18.
A slavery to former times unknown.

SINCE I made some reflections upon the general negligence used in the case of regard towards women, or, in other words, since I talked of wenching, I have had epistles upon that subject, which I shall, for the present entertainment, insert as they lie before me.

"MR. SPECTATOR,

"As your speculations are not confined to any part of human life, but concern the wicked as well as the good, I must desire your favourable acceptance of what I, a poor strolling girl about town, have to say to you. I was told by a Roman Catholic gentleman who picked me up last week, and who, I hope is absolved for what passed between us; I say, I was told by such a person, who endeavoured to convert me to his own religion, that in countries where popery prevails, besides the advantage of licensed stews, there are large endowments given for the Incurabili, I think he called them, such as are past all remedy, and are allowed such maintenance and support as to keep them without further care until they expire. This manner of treating poor sinners has, methinks, great humanity in it; and as you are a person who pretend to carry your reflections, upon all subjects whatever that occur to you, with candour, and act above the sense of what misinterpretation you may meet with, I beg the favour of you to lay before all the world the unhappy condition of us poor vagrants, who are really in a way of labour instead of idleness. There are crowds of us whose manner of livelihood has long ceased to be pleasing to us: and who would willingly lead a new life, if the rigour of the virtuous did not for ever expel us from coming into the world again. As it now happens, to the eternal of the male sex, falsehood among you is not ful, but credulity in women is infamous.

Let me leave, Sir, to give you my history, to know that I am a daughter of a man of reputation, tenant to a man of quality. The great house took it in his head to cast a de eye upon me, and succeeded. I do not to say he promised me marriage: I was silly enough to be taken by so foolish but he ran away with me up to this town, duced me to a grave matron, with whom for a day or two with great gravity, and a little pleased with the change of my con-from that of a country life to the finest y, as I believed, in the whole world. My servant made me understand that I should be kept in the plentiful condition I then ; when after a very great fondness towards me day took his leave of me for four or five in the evening of the same day my good came to me, and observing me very pengan to comfort me, and with a smile told st see the world. When I was deaf to all d say to divert me, she began to tell me ery frank air that I must be treated as I nd not take these squeamish humours upon my friend had left me to the town; and, as case is, she expected I would see company, t be treated like what I had brought my-

This put me into a fit of crying; and I tely, in a true sense of my condition, threw n the floor, deploring my fate, calling upon was good and sacred to succour me. While all this agony, I observed a decrepit old me into the room, and looking with a sense re in his face at all my vehemence and trans-a pause of my distresses I heard him say ameless old woman who stood by me, 'She dy a new face, or else she acts it rarely.' t the gentlewoman, who was making her of me, in all the turns of my person, the f my passion, and the suitable changes osture, took occasion to commend my y shape, my eyes, my limbs. All this unpanied with such speeches as you may rd horse-courers make in the sale of nags, y are warranted for their soundness. You nd by this time that I was left in a brothel, sed to the next bidder who could purchase patroness. This is so much the work of pleasure in the possession of us wenches proportion to the degrees we go beyond is of innocence; and no man is gratified, nothing left for him to debauch. Well, first man, when I came upon the town, was ry Foible, who was extremely lavish to money, and took such a fancy to me that have carried me off, if my patroness would in any reasonable terms for me; but as he is covetousness was his strongest passion, I was soon left exposed to be the common all the rakes and debauchees in town. I ll whether you will do me justice or no, whether you print this or not; other-now live with Sal*, I could give you a account of who and who is together in You perhaps won't believe it; but I one who pretends to be a very good Pro-ho lies with a Roman Catholic: but more after, as you please me. There do come se the greatest politicians of the age; and abandoned courtesan and procuress of those times.

Sal is more shrewd than can believe that such houses out of idle peooften talk of Augustus with the wives of se-but stratagem.

"It is a thousand p-virtuous as I fear you, or two, you would soon
the town are not such may imagine: you ha-was a courtesan who dis-If you print this I'll mean time,

"Sir, your m-

"MR. SPECTATOR

"I am an idle young my livelihood, but that as I cannot stir out.
fellow, who allows me but one shoe and one no upper petticoat. Al-I desire you would takand keep me yourself.

"MR. SPECTATOR

"I am to complain
coxcombs, who visit th-the town, only, as they must confess to you, thhave an effect to cure t-noisy, and drunken fel-vice in themselves, as humorous, and at the sa-shall, Sir, hereafter fro-names of these wretchehouses merely as Spectwit to use us ill: pray we are of such treatmenguilty of it towards us this, and pity the oppreto it, the innocent."

No. 191.] TUESDAY

—Deluding visi-

SOME ludicrous school if an ass were placed b-which affected his sense tempted him in the v-would be possible for generally determine th-tage of the ass, who t-midst of plenty, as not will to determine him other. The bundle of his sight and smell in keep him in perpetuamagnets, which travel-
one of them in the roof, Mahomet's burying-pla-means, say they, pull th-such an equal attraction between both of them.
in such nice circumstansooner than violate his of hay, I shall not pre-take notice of the condusame perplexity. Wheture his money in a lotteequally alluring, and as its fellows. They all o-tensions to good luck, st-

BRITISH ESSAYISTS.

can be given
other before fore caprice
and forms to where real
now a well-
to risk his because it is ted with a
the number
old of a cer-
all enemy to
are the most one on the er, because,
Several
any other,
great prize.
own age in number which phers; and at succeeded on no other
the great lot,
not be im-

he pastimes which is of so itself in the en it wants times acted life of the nothing else.
e-tellers, or,
ra de bonne
y quarter of their advan-
ster of fortu-
is pretended

ments in the surprised to

billings over ven for the 2, by Nath.
Cheapside."
t matter of
Mr. Cliff's

on canvassed ectures made
No. 132. I
se numbers,
square and all ways, but t three days
ter from an
Mr. Nath.
cipal, in this

ised I would ent price for

to the house of order to make posed to tack it and at length tacking; but a overruled, and

endar

the ticket No. 132 in the lottery now drawing; which is a secret I have communicated to some friends, who rally me incessantly upon that account. You must know I have but one ticket, for which reason, and a certain dream I have lately had more than once, I resolved it should be the number I most approved. I am so positive that I have pitched upon the great lot, that I could almost lay all I am worth upon it. My visions are so frequent and strong upon this occasion, that I have not only possessed the lot, but disposed of the money which in all probability it will sell for. This morning in particular, I set up an equipage which I look upon to be the gayest in the town; the liveries are very rich, but not gaudy. I should be very glad to see a speculation or two upon lottery subjects, in which you would oblige all people concerned, and in particular,

"Your most humble Servant,

"GEORGE GOSLING.

"P. S. Dear Spec, if I get the 12,000 pounds, I'll make thee a handsome present."

After having wished my correspondent good luck, and thanked him for his intended kindness, I shall for this time dismiss the subject of the lottery, and only observe, that the greatest part of mankind are in some degree guilty of my friend Gosling's extravagance. We are apt to rely upon future prospects, and become really expensive while we are only rich in possibility. We live up to our expectations, not to our possessions, and make a figure proportionable to what we may be, not what we are. We outrun our present income, as not doubting to disburse ourselves out of the profits of some future place, project, or reversion that we have in view. It is through this temper of mind, which is so common among us, that we see tradesmen break, who have met with no misfortunes in their business; and men of estates reduced to poverty, who have never suffered from losses or repairs, tenants, taxes, or lawsuits. In short, it is this foolish sanguine temper, this depending upon contingent futurities, that occasions romantic generosity, chimerical grandeur, senseless ostentation, and generally ends in beggary and ruin. The man who will live above his present circumstances is in great danger of living in a little time much beneath them; or, as the Italian proverb runs, "The man who lives by hope, will die by hunger."

It should be an indispensable rule in life, to contract our desires to our present condition, and whatever may be our expectations, to live within the compass of what we actually possess. It will be time enough to enjoy an estate when it comes into our hands; but if we anticipate our good fortune, we shall lose the pleasure of it when it arrives and may possibly never possess what we have foolishly counted upon.—L.

No. 192.] WEDNESDAY, OCT. 10. 1711.

—Uno ore omnes omnia Bona dicere, et laudare fortunas meas, Qui gnatum habere tali ingenio præditum TER. Andr. act. 5. l. 1.

—All the world
With one accord said all good things, and praised My happy fortune, who possess a son So good, so liberally disposed.—COLMAN.

I stood the other day, and beheld a father sitting in the middle of a room with a large family of children about him: and methought I could see his countenance different motions of desire he turned his eye towards the one or the other. The man is a person moderate in his desires for their preferment and welfare; and as an easy fortune he is not solicitous to make one. His eldest son is a child of a very easy disposition, and as much as the father loves him, I dare say he will never be a knave to his fortune. I do not know any man who can relish of life than the person I am going of, or keeps a better guard against the loss of what he has, or the hopes of gain. It is usual, in the case of children, for the parent to name out of a flock all the great officers of the kingdom. It is something so very surprising in the parts of a man's own, that there is nothing too good to be expected from his endowments. I know a woman who has but three sons, and there is nothing she expects with more certainty, that she shall see one of them a bishop, the judge, and the third a court-physician. The father is, that any thing which can happen to any child, is expected by every man for his own. A friend, whom I am going to speak of, does not suffer himself with such vain expectations, but fixes his eye more upon the virtue and disposition of his children than their advancement or wealth. His habits are what will certainly improve a fortune and reputation; but, on the other hand, the influence of fortune will not as probably produce affections of the mind.

* Disburse seems to stand here for reimburse.

It is very natural for a man of a kind disposition to promise himself with the promises his imagination represents to him of the future condition of his children, to represent to himself the figure they shall be in the world after he has left it. When his expectations of this kind are agreeable, his fondness for them is it were a longer date to his own life; and his favour of a worthy man in his son, is a pleasure scarce inferior to the hopes of the continuance of his own life. That man is happy who can be contented with his son, that he will escape the follies and vices of which he himself was guilty, and sue and improve every thing that was valuable to him. The continuance of his virtue is more to be regarded than that of his life; but the most lamentable of all reflections, to think that the heir of a man's fortune, is such a one as a stranger to his friends, alienated from the interests, and a promoter of every thing that he himself disapproved. An estate in possession of such a successor to a good man, is worse than waste; and the family, of which he is the head, in a more deplorable condition than that of extinct.

I visit the agreeable seat of my honoured friend Ruricola, and walk from room to room remembering many pleasing occurrences, and the expressions of many just sentiments I have heard him utter. I see the booby his heir in pain, while he transfers the honours of his house to the friend of his enemy, the heaviness it gives one is not to be denied. Want of genius is not to be imputed to a man, but want of humanity is a man's own fault. The son of Ruricola (whose life was one series of worthy actions, and gentleman-like manners) is the companion of drunken clowns, and has no sense of praise but in the flattery he receives from his own servants; his pleasures are dissipated and inordinate, his language base and filthy, his behaviour rough and absurd. Is this creature counted the successor of a man of virtue, wit, and breeding? And this melancholy prospect of my old friend, I can assure you, is not far off, where he has a daughter of his body and mind, beauty and modesty person, who supplies the loss of his son, without his name, without his fortune, without his family, without his both. Such an offspring friend perpetuates his name, and the appearance of his father, Ruricola, but it is Ruricola's daughter.

I know not to what end which this young man is brought to a certain severity and used towards him, and I am sure a dislike to those who are not made amiable to him.

We may promise ourselves that a friend will appear in the world where the father lives, and his brother, and the sons. I did it for no other reason than that of their acquaintance with eminent traders, their mutual usefulness to each other is useful to them as to themselves; and their kind offices, are done for their fortune, so that they are not those who had not the turns from them all.

It is the most beautiful sight that can be beheld to see a man who has an entire unreserved confidence in the kindness and affection of his children, and a pressible satisfaction to see a sublime pleasure which is a sublime pleasure which is a sublime pleasure. It is as sacred as love, and as joyful as love. The mind does not only delight in it, but be extreme without it, it would otherwise be contented with a thing has its force spoke by a kind father who has its weight when it is known not how to express it a "transplanted self" and sufferings which are only as they concern him another. A man's virtue is due to him, when he is in the grave, it will be had in action was done by such considerations sweeten the soliloquy delights him. "No man can tell my father, and be my enemy, unmerciful, or unjust. A man who shall say to his father; and be my enemy ever."

It is not in the power of the most virtuous names or great families that they can very much exalt themselves, probity, valour, and

* By the Cornelli, the S. family of the Eyles's, met Francis Eyles, Esq. the father of the India Company, and afterwards a member of the House of Commons. His eldest son, George I. His eldest son, Sir Joseph Eyles, knight.

BRITISH ESSAYISTS

of descend-
blessings of shall end this young man lost a worthy

ertinent than
I will not your grief,
that excellent
ht in you as nd-twenty in-possession of a ll honour his estate; and employing in urchased with
om. This is ave of your others upon ur father by his friends by
T.

ER 11, 1711.

uperbis
dam.
Georg. il. 461.
ls proud
owd.
WARRIOR, &c.

d the strange
ll the streets
asant amuse-
ent pursuits,
t it is that so tion. Of all would give a diversion for ood courtiers,
of great men-
of being ser-
nity in being d passes. In y, go abroad
hope or pur-
court favour,
smile of his,
and fortunes.
er the natural
ind so far as ceiving such ut maintains hat most men Thus both the on themselves
way. But as good subjects
seats in the
the centre of ghty longing
the power of se, and others
er with great
the changes
e appearance methinks be set for prefer-

between the

mighty and their slaves, very justly represented, might do so much good, as to incline the great to regard business rather than ostentation; and make the little know the use of their time too well to spend it in vain applications and addresses. The famous doctor in Moorfields, who gained so much reputation for his horary predictions, is said to have had in his parlour different ropes to little bells which hung in the room above stairs, where the doctor thought fit to be oraculous. If a girl had been deceived by her lover, one bell was pulled; and if a peasant had lost a cow, the servant rung another. This method was kept in respect to all other passions and concerns, and the skilful waiter below sifted the inquirer, and gave the doctor notice accordingly. The levée of a great man is laid after the same manner, and twenty whispers, false alarms, and private intimations, pass backward and forward from the porter, the valet, and the patron himself, before the gaping crew, who are to pay their court, are gathered together. When the scene is ready, the doors fly open and discover his lordship.

There are several ways of making this first appearance. You may be either half-dressed, and washing yourself, which is indeed the most stately; but this way of opening is peculiar to military men, in whom there is something graceful in exposing themselves naked: but the politicians, or civil officers, have usually affected to be more reserved, and preserve a certain chastity of deportment. Whether it be hieroglyphical or not, this difference in the military and civil list, I will not say; but have ever understood the fact to be, that the close minister is buttoned up, and the brave officer open-breasted on these occasions.

However that is, I humbly conceive the business of a levée is to receive the acknowledgments of a multitude, that a man is wise, bounteous, valiant, and powerful. When the first shot of eyes is made, it is wonderful to observe how much submission the patron's modesty can bear, and how much servitude the client's spirit can descend to. In the vast multiplicity of business, and the crowd about him, my lord's parts are usually so great, that, to the astonishment of the whole assembly, he has something to say to every man there, and that so suitable to his capacity as any man may judge that it is not without talents men can arrive at great employments. I have known a great man ask a flag-officer, which way was the wind; a commander of horse the present price of oats: and a stock-jobber, at what discount such a fund was, with as much ease as if he had been bred to each of those several ways of life. Now this is extremely obliging; for at the same time that the patron informs himself of matters, he gives the person of whom he inquires an opportunity to exert himself. What adds to the pomp of those interviews is, that it is performed with the greatest silence and order imaginable. The patron is usually in the midst of the room, and some humble person gives him a whisper, which his lordship answers aloud, "It is well. Yes, I am of your opinion. Pray inform yourself further, you may be sure of my part in it." This happy man is dismissed, and my lord can turn himself to a business of a quite different nature, and off-hand give as good an answer as any great man is obliged to. For the chief point is to keep in generals; and there be any thing offered that is particular, to be in haste.

But we are now in the height of the affair, and my lord's creatures have all had their whispers round keep up the farce of the thing, and the dumb-show is become more general. He casts his eye that corner, and there to Mr. Such-a-one; to the other, "And when did you come to town?" And perhaps just before he nods to another; and enters with him, "But, Sir, I am glad to see you, now I sink of it." Each of those are happy for the next four-and-twenty hours; and those who bow in sink undistinguished, and by dozens at a time, sink they have very good prospects if they may hope to arrive at such notices half a year hence.

The satirist says, there is seldom common sense in a high fortune; and one would think, to behold a levée, that the great were not only infatuated with their station, but also that they believed all below were seized too; else how is it possible they could sink of imposing upon themselves and others in such a degree, as to set up a levée for anything but direct farce? But such is the weakness of our nature, that when men are a little exalted in their condition, they immediately conceive they have additional senses, and their capacities enlarged not only above other men, but above human comprehension itself. Thus it is ordinary to see a great man attend one listening, bow to one at a distance, and call to a third at the same instant. A girl in new ribands is not more taken with herself, nor does she betray more apparent coquetties, than even a wise man in such a circumstance of courtship. I do not know anything that I ever thought so very distant as the affectation which is recorded of Cæsar; to wit, that he would dictate to three several writers at the same time. This was an ambition below the greatness and candour of his mind. He indeed (if any man had pretensions to greater faculties than any other mortal) was the person; but such a way of acting is childish, and inconsistent with the manner of our being. It appears from the very nature of things, that there cannot be anything effectually dispatched in the distraction of a public levée; but the whole seems to be a conspiracy of a set of servile slaves, to give up their own liberty to take away their patron's understanding.

T.

No. 194.] FRIDAY, OCTOBER 12, 1711.

—Difficili tunc tuncetur Jecur.—Hos. 1 Od. xiii. 4.

With jealous pangs my bosom swells.

THE present paper shall consist of two letters which observe upon faults that are easily cured both in love and friendship. In the latter, as far as it merely regards conversation, the person who neglects visiting an agreeable friend is punished in the very transgression; for a good companion is not found in every room we go into. But the case of love is of a more delicate nature, and the anxiety is inexpressible, if every little instance of kindness is not reciprocal. There are things in this sort of commerce which there are not words to express, and a man may not possibly know how to represent what may yet tear his heart into ten thousand tortures. To be grave to a man's mirth, inattentive to his discourse, or to interrupt either with something that argues a disinclination to be entertained by him, has in it something so disagreeable, that the utmost steps which may be made in further enmity cannot give greater torment. The gay Corinna, who sets up for an indifference and becoming heedlessness, gives her husband mere indolence, is to look as gay wife. It is no more grief, if it be he is convinced that she pines to death by deference to him. The author of the injury that is yet the source of

"MR. SPECTATOR

"I have read you and desire your say is not common. I am not in the satisfied she loves easiness as being. I know not whether than in that case heart, without the your observation who will not come of their innocence negligent of what upon their conduct when at the same viour, or regard them, would make such women desire they neglect to a usual practice of are thought guided most ordinary than the air with her the air of a secret thing of no consequence memory made her to dally with my of this behaviour and beseeched her to live with her most morose and It is no easy matter but it is miserable might be easily favoured. She received two in this letter me. If we attend to our future have our joint as much as I can do (thing), Sir,

"MR. SPECTATOR

"Give me leave to character not yet that of a man of odd variety who tises towards his friendship with The rogue I know my fondness for are by turns the imaginable. So parable; at other time, yet neither meet next by I seen me, is in evening; and it, I have known

* Rarus enim ferme sensus communis in illa Partibus.—Juv. viii. 73.

then there is seldom cares
with whom er how he

more fully.
I have taken
ing; for you
of the year,
friendship,

In March
her; in May tliest fellow s much upon
ble, but very changeable,
th me, and have good
you will lend ch will be a

Servant."

13, 1711.

whole,
te bowl!

ights Tales of an ill habit
remedies to a physician
e took a hol-
veral drugs;
officially that a mall, and ad that part
them several
e ball itself.
is patient, to g with these time as he
s, the virtue
gh the wood
an's constitu-
position which wardly had n allegory is ificial bodily is the most my hundred
structure and olutely neces-
shall in this ervative of ew the same measure, sup-exercise are eaking of is r advantages
t it may be any season,
en into which terruption to
of time. If temperance
vessels, tem-
ns them; if umours, and temperance
her to exert

herself in all her force and vigour; if exercise dissipates a growing distemper, temperance starves it.

Physic for the most part is nothing else but the substitute of exercise or temperance. Medicines are indeed absolutely necessary in acute distempers, that cannot wait the slow operations of these two great instruments of health; but did men live in an habitual course of exercise and temperance, there could be but little occasion for them. Accordingly we find that those parts of the world are the most healthy, where they subsist by the chase; and that men lived longest when their lives were employed in hunting, and when they had little food besides what they caught. Blistering, cupping, bleeding, are seldom of use but to the idle and intemperate; as all those inward applications which are so much in practice among us, are for the most part nothing else but expedients to make luxury consistent with health. The apothecary is perpetually employed in countermining the cook and the vintner. It is said of Diogenes, that meeting a young man who was going to a feast, he took him up in the street and carried him to his own friends, as one who was running into imminent danger, had not he prevented him.* What would that philosopher have said, had he been present at the gluttony of a modern meal?
would not he have thought the master of a family mad, and have begged his servants to tie down his hands, had he seen him devour a fowl, fish, and flesh; swallow oil and vinegar, wines and spices; throw down salads of twenty different herbs, sauces of a hundred ingredients; confections and fruits of numberless sweets and flavours? What unnatural motions and counter-ferments must such a medley of intemperance produce in the body? For my part, when I behold a fashionable table set out in all its magnificence, I fancy that I see gouts and dropsies, fevers and lethargies, with other innumerable distempers, lying in ambuscade among the dishes.

Nature delights in the most plain and simple diet. Every animal, but man, keeps to one dish.
Herbs are the food of this species, fish of that, and flesh of a third. Man falls upon every thing that comes in his way; not the smallest fruit or excrescence of the earth; scarce a berry or a mushroom, can escape him.

It is impossible to lay down any determinate rule for temperance, because what is luxury in one may be temperance in another; but there are few that have lived any time in the world, who are not judges of their own constitutions, so far as to know what kinds and what proportions of food do best agree with them. Were I to consider my readers as my patients, and to prescribe such a kind of temperance as is accommodated to all persons, as such as is particularly suitable to our climate and way of living, I would copy the following rules of very eminent physician. "Make your whole repu-out of one dish. If you indulge in a second, avoid drinking any thing strong until you have finish'd your meal; at the same time abstain from all sauces or at least such as are not the most plain and simple." A man could not be well guilty of glutony, if he stuck to these few obvious and easy rules. In the first case there would be no variety of tastes to solicit his palate, and occasion excess nor in the second, any artificial provocatives to relieve satiety, and create a false appetite. Were to prescribe a rule for drinking, it should be form'd upon a saying quoted by Sir William Temple * Diög. Laert. Vitæ Philosoph. lib. vi. cap. 2. n. 6.

first glass for myself, the second for my the third for good-humour, and the fourth enemies." But because it is impossible who lives in the world to diet himself always philosophical a manner, I think every man save his days of abstinence according as his tion will permit. These are great reliefs to as they qualify her for struggling with hunthirst whenever any distemper or duty of y put her upon such difficulties; and at the me give her an opportunity of extricating from her oppressions, and recovering the tones and springs of her distended vessels. that, abstinence well-timed often kills a is in embryo, and destroys the first seeds of exposition. It is observed by two or three an-others,* that Socrates, notwithstanding he Athens during that great plague which has o much noise through all ages, and has been ted at different times by such eminent hands; notwithstanding that he lived in the times of rouring pestilence, he never caught the least a, which those writers unanimously ascribe uninterrupted temperance which he always ed.

here I cannot but mention an observation I have often made, upon reading the lives of losophers, and comparing them with any se-lings or great men of the same number. If sider these ancient sages, a great part of philosophy consisted in a temperate and abis course of life, one would think the life of sopher and the life of a man were of two difdates. For we find that the generality of rise men were nearer a hundred than sixty f age, at the time of their respective deaths. most remarkable instance of the efficacy of ance towards the procuring of long life, is e meet with in a little book published by Cornaro the Venetian; which I the rather men-cause it is of undoubted credit, as the late an ambassador, who was of the same family, more than once in conversation, when he in England. Cornaro, who was the author ittle treatise I am mentioning, was of an institution, until about forty, when by obstiperating in an exact course of temperance, vered a perfect state of health; insomuch four score he published his book, which has translated into English under the title of Sure ertain Methods of Attaining a Long and y Life. He lived to give a third or fourth of it; and after having passed his hundredth ied without pain or agony, and like one who esp. The treatise I mention has been taken f by several eminent authors, and is written h a spirit of cheerfulness, religion, and good s are the natural concomitants of temper-d sobriety. The mixture of the old man in her a recommendation than a discredit to it. ng designed this paper as the sequel to that ercise, I have not here considered temper-it, is a moral virtue, which I shall make the
of a future speculation, but only as it is the f health.—L.

rees Laertius in Vit. Socratis.—Elian in Var. Hist.
ap. 25; &c

No. 196.] MOND

Est Ulubris, animus

True happiness is to But still is found in

"MR. SPECTATO

"THERE is a part
served in most of the
is, that they are always teaching others, to be be arrived at in this mend to you to talk of predecessors have don to be happy, instruct thoughts of him who practicable things, sh pain, rather than pr quietude is to be avoid be attained. The gre gularity of spirit, whic and below mirth. C supported if a man is prudent man should a naturally arise out of seldom be laid for it;
mirth to be pleased, a flag without the use let your precept be, 'I lute and ungoverned, itself by loud laughter be wholly inactive.

"There are a cou
quaintance who meet
and by their mutual have been men of bus enjoy a greater tranq worked himself into b dolence of body and more, is very frequen quiry after happiness,
which a man who li
meals, friendly conve gives himself no trou finement are talking o

"What I would by commend to you, Mr.
speak of the way of pursue, to fill up the tion. It is a lamentab or, as you call it, phi only for the learned;
philosopher to know agreeably. It would to place in a handsom nities among men, wh with each other so gra give but an impotent them. You may find which will render the
as entertaining as you nature has an endless the representation of tural gratifications, in tions which are gen
writings of the witty,
society.

"The vicissitudes o part of mankind, mak
that sort of relish wh comfort; and should b a spectator, as well as destructive. In our thoughts most; and y, and tem- pty as much mtemplation.

servant,

"T. B."

y, Oct. 12.

did so much

ding that I

it with the

om a world,

om a hurry

ft suddenly,

before me,

best of any

he delighted

bation; and

me out of

ace in your

me to lay

nd. I was

stant, and led between

affected his

my present

n extremely

who at this thing when

wn to you, etous. My

Tom very

en I please;

wn mind, I

ill's estate,

eu to Tom's

one in the more in her

the blithest

evil, and di-

is the joy

o very rich

retty dresses

But then it

his circum-

the whole, I

of love and the matter, I

r than fond;

he contrary,

ant,

ELESS."

16, 1711.

ut non

is plus,

ppi.

op. xviii. 15.

ord

sk t

ins;

es.—Pitt.

I way of life

or imper-

will require

his niceness to avoid. The several weaknesses to which youth, old age, and manhood are exposed, have long since been set down by many both of the poets and philosophers; but I do not remember to have met with any author who has treated of those ill habits men are subject to, not so much by reason of their different ages and tempers, as the particular professions or business in which they were educated and brought up.

I am the more surprised to find this subject so little touched on, since what I am here speaking of is so apparent, as not to escape the most vulgar observation. The business men are chiefly conversant in does not only give a certain cast or turn to their minds, but is very often apparent in their outward behaviour, and some of the most indifferent actions of their lives. It is this air diffusing itself over the whole man, which helps us to find out a person at his first appearance; so that the most careless observer fancies he can scarce be mistaken in the carriage of a seaman, or the gait of a tailor.

The liberal arts, though they may possibly have less effect on our external mien and behaviour, make so deep an impression on the mind, as is very apt to bend it wholly one way.

The mathematician will take little else than demonstration in the most common discourse, and the schoolman is as great a friend to definition and syllogisms. The physician and divine are often heard to dictate in private companies with the same authority which they exercise over their patients and disciples: while the lawyer is putting cases, and raising matter for disputation, out of every thing that occurs.

I may possibly some time or other animadvert more at large on the particular fault each profession is most infected with; but shall at present wholly apply myself to the cure of what I last mentioned, namely, that spirit of strife and contention in the conversations of gentlemen of the long robe.

This is the more ordinary, because these gentlemen, regarding argument as their own proper province, and very often making ready money of it, think it unsafe to yield before company. They are showing in common talk how zealously they could defend a cause in court, and therefore frequently forget to keep their temper, which is absolutely requisite to render conversation pleasant and instructive.

Captain Sentry pushes this matter so far, that I have heard him say, "he has known but few pleaders that were tolerable company."

The captain, who is a man of good sense, but dry conversation, was last night giving me an account of a discourse, in which he had lately been engaged with a young wrangler in the law. "I was giving my opinion," says the captain, "without apprehending any debate that might arise from it, of a general's behaviour in a battle that was fought some years before either the templar or myself were born. The young lawyer immediately took me up, and by reasoning above a quarter of an hour upon a subject which I saw he understood nothing of, endeavoured to show me that my opinions were ill-grounded. Upon which," says the captain, "to avoid any farther contests, I told him, that truly I had not considered those several arguments which he had brought against me, and that there might be a good deal in them." "Ay, but," says my antagonist, who would not let me escape so, "there are several things to be urged in favour of your opinion which you have omitted;" and thereupon began to shine on the other side of the question. "Upon this," says the captain, "I came over to my first sentiments, and entirely acquiesced in his reasons for my so doing. Upon which the templar again recovered his former posture, and confuted both himself and me a third time. In short," says my friend, "I found he was resolved to keep me at sword's length, and never let me close with him; so that I had nothing left but to hold my tongue, and give my antagonist free leave to smile at his victory, who I found, like Hudibras, could still change sides, and still confute."*

For my own part, I have ever regarded our inns of court as nurseries of statesmen and lawgivers, which makes me often frequent that part of the town with great pleasure.

Upon my calling in lately at one of the most noted Temple coffee-houses, I found the whole room, which was full of young students, divided into several parties, each of which was deeply engaged in some controversy. The management of the late ministry was attacked and defended with great vigour; and several preliminaries to the peace were proposed by some, and rejected by others; the demolishing of Dunkirk was so eagerly insisted on, and so warmly controverted, as had like to have produced a challenge. In short, I observed that the desire of victory, whetted with the little prejudices of party and interest, generally carried the argument to such a height, as made the disputants insensibly conceive an aversion towards each other, and part with the highest dissatisfaction on both sides.

The managing an argument handsomely being so nice a point, and what I have seen so very few excel in, I shall here set down a few rules on that head, which, among other things, I gave in writing to a young kinsman of mine, who had made so great a proficiency in the law, that he began to plead in company, upon every subject that was started.

Having the entire manuscript by me, I may, perhaps, from time to time, publish such parts of it as I shall think requisite for the instruction of the British youth. What regards my present purpose is as follows:

Avoid disputes as much as possible. In order to appear easy and well-bred in conversation, you may assure yourself that it requires more wit, as well as more good humour, to improve than to contradict the notions of another; but if you are at any time obliged to enter on an argument, give your reasons with the utmost coolness and modesty, two things which scarce ever fail of making an impression on the hearers. Besides, if you are neither dogmatical, nor show either by your actions or words that you are full of yourself, all will the more heartily rejoice at your victory. Nay, should you be pinched in your argument, you may make your retreat with a very good grace. You were never positive, and are now glad to be better informed. This has made some approve the Socratical way of reasoning, where, while you scarce affirm any thing, you can hardly be caught in an absurdity; and though possibly you are endeavouring to bring over another to your opinion, which is firmly fixed, you seem only to desire information from him.

In order to keep that temper which is so difficult, and yet so necessary to preserve, you may please to consider, that nothing can be more unjust or ridiculous, than to be angry with another because he is not of your opinion; means by which you are very different, and think alike; and be angry with him to keep yourself yourself fairly, had you all the your adversary contend for the lay down this as not make a move a greater advantage a passion.

When an argument reasons does a violence made.

It is yet more cause he does reasons, or gives for reputation, he is certainly rather than at what you do, favours, who understanding.

You may play among your equity only preys upon find it not very your ease, to play with a fool or a

Lastly, if you argument, which able check to you after truth, it will you find it. I mention which I have procures a man the whole company moderator, with in a dispute. partial, furnish things to the he sometimes make of the contend

I shall close tion. When push it too far and your adversary you are too gen

No. 198.] W

Cervin* lupor
Sectamur
Fallere e

We, like "w
And when Rush on,

THERE is a tinguish by the mander is a kind upon fire, and bring hurt. A sex in those sh a stranger at rited as to obs

* All the edited
tered it to cervin
this paper.

BRITISH ESSAYISTS.

mits a male him a whole two or three scandalized at the severity from such in- therefore a n admirer of reat stickler rt, the sala- mplicity and ed in a kind people mean o their worst. t ordeal, or he pretty in- oughshares, em. salamander, f life, that I such females d find them- re not of the uestly advise duct in their possible what d opportuni- thousands of d from inno- d how many ies, protest- reproaches, ld shun like e that might of guilt and e of the male he language

: ust him; ee. subject, but lately heard d which may o great fami-

tile, being a e, and of a d about the vedlock. In cast his eye g to recom- ucation, her t poverty by d that whole made his ad- ved together en at length y for him to les, where a oved him too had not been nluckily fell who carried them slaves. omfort to be ow dearly after their

been employed

liberty, demanded a most exorbitant price for their ransom. The Castilian, though he would rather have died in slavery himself, than have paid such a sum as he found would go near to ruin him, was moved with compassion for his wife, that he sent repeated orders to his friend in Spain (who happened to be his next relation), to sell his estate and transmit the money to him. His friend hoping that the terms of his ransom might be made more reasonable, and unwilling to sell an estate which himself had some prospect of inheriting, formed many delays, that three whole years passed away without any thing being done for the setting them at liberty.

There happened to live a French renegade in the same place where the Castilian and his wife were kept prisoners. As this fellow had in him all the vivacity of his nation, he often entertained the captives with accounts of his own adventures; to which he sometimes added a song or a dance, or some other piece of mirth, to divert them during their confinement. His acquaintance with the manner of the Algerines enabled him likewise to do them several good offices. The Castilian, as he was one day in conversation with this renegade, discovered to him the negligence and treachery of his correspondent in Castile, and at the same time asked his advice how he should behave himself in that exigency: he further told the renegade, that he found it would be impossible for him to raise the money, unless he might go over to dispose of his estate. The renegade, after having represented to him that his Algerine master would never consent to his release upon such a pretence, at length contrived a method for the Castilian to make his escape in the habit of a seaman. The Castilian succeeded in his attempt; and having sold his estate, being afraid lest the money should miscarry by the way, and determined to perish with it rather than lose one who was much dearer to him than his life, he returned himself in a little vessel that was going to Algiers. It is impossible to describe the joy he felt upon this occasion, when he considered that he should soon see the wife whom he so much loved, and endear himself more to her, by this uncommon piece of generosity.

The renegade, during the husband's absence, so insinuated himself into the good graces of his young wife, and so turned her head with stories of gallantry, that she quickly thought him the finest gentleman she had ever conversed with. To be brief, her mind was quite alienated from the honest Castilian, whom she was taught to look upon as a formal old fellow, unworthy the possession of so charming a creature. She had been instructed by the renegade how to manage herself upon his arrival; so that she received him with an appearance of the utmost love and gratitude, and at length persuaded him to trust their common friend the renegade with the money he had brought over for their ransom; as not questioning but he would beat down the terms and negotiate the affair more to their advantage than they themselves could do. The good man admired her prudence, and followed her advice. I wish I could conceal the sequel of this story; but since I cannot, I shall dispatch it in as few words as possible. The Castilian having slept longer than ordinary the next morning, upon his awaking found his wife had left him. He immediately arose and inquired after her, but was told that she was seen with the renegade about break of day. In a word, her lover having got all things for their departure, they soon made their out of the territories of Algiers, carried away by, and left the Castilian in captivity; who through the cruel treatment of the incensed his master, and partly through the unkind of his unfaithful wife, died some few months L.

9.] THURSDAY, OCTOBER 18, 1711.

—Scribere jussit amor.—Ovid. Ep. iv. 10.

Love bade me write.

following letters are written with such an sincerity that I cannot deny the inserting

FR. SPECTATOR,

ough you are every where in your writings a women, I do not remember that you have considered the mercenary practice of men choice of wives. If you will please to en-our thoughts upon that subject, you would receive the miserable condition many of us who not only from the laws of custom and are restrained from making any advances our wishes, but are also, from the circum-f fortune, out of all hopes of being addressed ose whom we love. Under all these disad-s I am obliged to apply myself to you, and shall prevail on you to print in your very per the following letter, which is a declara- passion to one who has made some faint s to me for some time. I believe he ap-oves me, but the inequality of my fortune im think he cannot answer it to the world, resues his designs by way of marriage; and s, as he does not want discerning, he dis-me looking at him the other day unawares, a manner, as has raised his hopes of gain-on terms the men call easier. But my is very full on this occasion, and if you hat love and honour are, you will pardon I use no further arguments with you, but o my letter to him, whom I call Oroon- because if I do not succeed, it shall look ance; and if I am regarded, you shall re- pair of gloves at my wedding, sent to you e name of Statira."

"To OROONDATES.

FR,

ir very much perplexity in myself, and re- how to acquaint you with my own senti- and expostulate with you concerning yours, hosen this way; by which means I can be revealed to you, or, if you please, lie con- If I do not within a few days find the effect hope from this, the whole affair shall be oblivion. But, alas! what am I going to I am about to tell you that I love you? I have done so, I am to assure you, that the passion which ever entered a tender know I can banish you from my sight for en I am convinced that you have no incli- towards me but to my dishonour. But, r, why should you sacrifice the real and happiness of life to the opinion of a world, es upon no other foundation but professed d prejudice? You all can observe that abrated name in Mademoiselle Scudery's French (The Grand Cyrus, &c.

riches alone do not ma up every thing; else w with riches. Since th gion is left to us silly generally upon princip will talk to you without what may be most to the world. And I wi the case, supposing tha make me your mistress convince you that the l and will contribute mo

"We will suppose, you were now in expe evening wherein I was to what convenient cor fit, to consummate all tion has promised to who is in the bloom of of innocence. You y me, as I am sprightly, y fancy is sated, and fit itself false, where is charmed you? The fi will find that the pleas that of a destroyer. tastes; and where the there is nothing left w Reason resumes her cloyed: and I am with fusion to behold myse- tions to you, to be visit the future with two cor each other in the world) insist upon the shameful time in, nor run over fresh air, and free com be satisfied with, whose mination, but leave th have seen enough of th a mere idea.

"On the other hand generous as to make me yourself all the obedience gratitude can inspire ever gratifications you an agreeable person, wh easy temper, whatever friendship, you may ex- nerosity. What at p- promise yourself from distaste and satiety; b- ous love are the least/ raptures of innocent p- to the day; they rather pleasure of it. How ha where the highest plea lowest parts of its felicit

"Now am I to repea quest of taking me in- stands between me and daughter of a man who your fortune. But if y behaviour of her who- of your fortune, and that of her who enters obliged by that permis you choose? You, perh day abroad in the com of sense and fortune; s in that absence, and c proportioned to the app and regard to the fortune

commerce, because of a bar-
ill ever enter attend; may yourself, how the pleasure
on a grateful
me. In the
stant compa-
happiness of

rather in the
of the ordi-
or say, when ne; but shall
to make me
andoned mis-

19, 1711.

vi. 823.

es as hurtful
is cannot be to their wats,
re celebrated
were, to be and loss by
it would be ent to repay

er the letters from that of sent thoughts
ater use than d an Essay
h all his ac-
than at the
every subject were his in-taken in his impoverished

a sovereign
te; and con-
decrease in his subjects.
ould destroy
forbid there but if this needs lose a ast what is the burden ps, the inha-
part of the
and clothed, the customs
the imposts
do very pro-
venue of the option of the of the whole
a of the rent
try, so it is f taxes upon people must sible, to the

On the other hand, if it should please God to drop from heaven a new people, equal in number and riches to the city, I should be ready to thin their excises, customs, and house-rent would raise as great a revenue to the crown as would be lost in the former case. And as the consumption of this new body would be a new market for the fruits of the country, all the lands, especially those most adjacent, would rise in their yearly value, and pay greater yearly taxes to the public. The gain in this case would be as sensible as the former loss.

Whatsoever is assessed upon the general, is levied upon individuals. It were worth the while then to consider what is paid by, or by means of, the meanest subjects, in order to compute the value of every subject to the prince.

For my own part, I should believe that seven eighths of the people are without property in themselves, or the heads of their families, and forced to work for their daily bread; and that of this sort there are seven millions in the whole island of Great Britain; and yet one would imagine that seven eighths of the whole people should consume at least three-fourths of the whole fruits of the country. If this is the case, the subjects without property pay three-fourths of the rents, and consequently enable the landed men to pay three-fourths of their taxes. Now if so great a part of the land-tax were to be divided by seven millions, it would amount to more than three shillings to every head. And thus the poor are the cause, without which the rich could not pay this tax, even the poorest subject is, upon this account, worth three shillings yearly to the prince.

Again: one would imagine the consumption of seven-eighths of the whole people should pay two thirds of all the customs and excises. And if this sum too should be divided by seven millions, viz. the number of poor people, it would amount to more than seven shillings to every head: and therefore with this and the former sum, every poor subject, without property, except of his limbs or labour, is worth at least ten shillings yearly to the sovereign. So much then the queen loses with every one of her old, and gains with every one of her new subjects.

When I was got into this way of thinking, I presently grew conceited of the argument, and was just preparing to write a letter of advice to a member of parliament, for opening the freedom of our towns and trades, for taking away all manner of distinctions between the natives and foreigners, for repealing our laws of parish settlements, and removing every other obstacle to the increase of the people. But as soon as I had recollected with what inimitable eloquence my fellow-labourers had exaggerated the mischiefs of selling the birth-right of Britons for a shilling,* of spoiling the pure British blood with foreign mixtures, of introducing a confusion of languages and religions, and of letting strangers to eat the bread out of the mouths of our own people, I became so humble as to let my project fall to the ground, and leave my country to increase by the ordinary way of generation.

As I have always at heart the public good, so am ever contriving schemes to promote it; and think I may without vanity pretend to have contrived some as wise as any of the castle-builders.

* This is an ironical allusion to some of the popular arguments that had been urged in the year 1708, when a bill was brought in for the naturalization of foreign protestants; which on account of the odium raised against it, did not pass into a law.

owner given up my former project, but my present full of draining fens and marshes, out the sea, and joining new lands to my former, since it is thought impracticable to increase people to the land, I fell immediately to how much would be gained to the prince, and how much would be gained to the people.

The same omnipotent power which made the island should at this time raise out of the ocean, to Great Britain, an equal extent of land, with all the buildings, corn, cattle, and other conveniences and necessities of life, but no men, women, or children. I should hardly believe this would add to the riches of the people, or revenue of the prince, for since the present buildings are sufficient for the inhabitants, if any of them should forsake to inhabit the new part of the island, the increase of house-rent in this would be attended with a decrease of it in the other. Besides, we have a sufficiency of corn and cattle, that we need not import from our neighbours to take what they have from the former off our hands, and we will not import any of the latter to be imported upon us by our subjects; and for the remaining produce of the country, it is already equal to all our market. If all these things should be doubled to the buyers, the owners must be glad with half the present prices, the landlords with half their rents; and thus, by so great an enlargement of the country, the rents in the whole would decrease, nor the taxes to the public.

On the contrary, I should believe they would be much diminished; for as the land is only good for its fruits, and these are all perishable, the most part must either be used within the year, or perish without use, the owners will get rid of it at any rate, rather than they should waste their possession; so that it is probable the annual value of these perishable things, even of the first of them, beyond all possibility of use, will be one half of their value. It seems to be the reason that our neighbour merchants, who know all the spices, and know how great a quantity to the demand, destroy all that exceeds their natural use, then, to think that the annual produce of twice as much as can be used, must fill to an eighth part of their present prices; this extended island would not exceed one-eighth part of its present value, or pay more than one-eighth part of the present tax.

It is generally observed, that in countries of the plenty there is the poorest living; like the poor man's ass in one of my speculations, the poor man starves between two meals. The truth is, for which are the bulk of a nation, work but they may live; and if with two days' labour can get a wretched subsistence for a day, will hardly be brought to work the other day, but then with the wages of two days they will pay such prices for their provisions, nor does it seem to the government.

It is a paradox, therefore, in old Hesiod, that "half is more than the whole," is very applicable to the case; since nothing is more true in political economy, than that the same people with half a country is more valuable than with the whole. I think there was nothing absurd in Sir W. Temple, when he fancied that if all the highlands of Scotland, and the whole kingdom of Ireland were taken out of the ocean, so that the people were all saved out of the lowlands of Great Britain; though they were to be reimbursed the value of their estates by the sovereign, and the sovereign enriched by the very labour.

If the people only made ten children is a greater benefit than he who has added land and no people. It is a contract of land to his domestic subjects as before; we are not being able to bring in the field, and for their being clothed, nor paid as for Lewis must needs have been by his loss of subjects and lands.—T.

No. 201.] SATURDAY.

Religione esse oportet.

A man should be religious.

It is of the last importance of a child with devoted mind that has received. Though it may seem of the cares of the world, allurements of vice, it discovers itself again in moderation, age, or misfortune to himself. The fire may but cannot be entirely extinguished.

A state of temperance without devotion, is a cold of virtue; and is rather religion. Devotion operates upon the passions, and fills it with any that are to be met with science; and at the same time the soul more than sense.

It has been observed, more distinguished from than by reason, as seen in their actions something of reason, though they stand of their behaviour least affinity to devotion. The propensity of the mind to a natural tendency of the soul being for succour in gratitude to an invisible in us upon receiving expected good fortune, the passion with which the soul is fully transported in its perfections, and the nations under heaven adoration, plainly show worship must be the first founder of mankind to the natural light of from an instinct implanted in my own part, I look upon the current causes; but I assigned as the principle manifestly points to a first author of it.

I may take some other those particular forms which are taught us by observe into what error may sometimes lead us

BRITISH ESSAYISTS.

as the guide

staken devo-
superstition.
bject than a
gious enth-
h with pride
o human na-
rom any intense an ap-
en duties, it
ticular man-
son from it,
ould be apt
disorder the with caution
ly careful to and to guard
influence of

er the check
o enthusiasm.
ach inflamed
ined to think blown up by indulges this ving passion,
ary raptures
ancies herself
lse, it is no
e, and refuses
f religion, as superior guide.
in devotion,
devotion, but old heathen
"Religentem
an should be e the author passage, that us generally
ving of any

an obstinate
ipid courtier.
iness, super-
fall short of strong tinc-
nolic religion
ish and idle

indeed irre-
f an absurd
the world, it

On the con-
ver so ridicu-
the church,
op, perhaps,
orm in such
r fancied it public devo-
his head, and ther Vandal,
ess, which he uch and such ice has dege-

inconvenience forming, per-significant,

and which take possession in the same manner, and are never to be driven out after they have been once admitted. I have seen the Pope officiate at St. Peter's, where, for two hours together, he was busied in putting on or off his different accoutrements, according to the different parts he was to act in them.

Nothing is so glorious in the eyes of mankind, and ornamental to human nature, setting aside the infinite advantages which arise from it, as a strong, steady, masculine piety; but enthusiasm and superstition are the weaknesses of human reason, that expose us to the scorn and derision of infidels, and sink us even below the beasts that perish.

Idolatry may be looked upon as another error arising from mistaken devotion; but because reflections on that subject would be of no use to an English reader, I shall not enlarge upon it.—L.

No. 202.] MONDAY, OCTOBER 22, 1711.

Sape decem vitia instructor, odit et horret.

Hon. 1 Ep. xviii. 23.

Tho' ten times worse themselves, you'll frequent view Those who with keenest rage will censure you.—P.

THE other day, as I passed along the street, I saw a sturdy 'prentice-boy disputing with a hackney-coachman; and in an instant, upon some word of provocation, throw off his hat and periwig, clench his fist, and strike the fellow a slap on the face; at the same time calling him rascal, and telling him he was a gentleman's son. The young gentleman was, it seems, bound to a blacksmith; and the debate arose about payment for some work done about a coach, near which they fought. His master, during the combat, was full of his boy's praises; and as he called to him to play with his hand and foot, and throw in his head, he made all us who stood round him of his party, by declaring the boy had very good friends, and he could trust him with untold gold. As I am generally in the theory of mankind, I could not but make my reflections upon the sudden popularity which was raised about the lad; and perhaps with my friend Tacitus, fell into observations upon it, which were too great for the occasion; or ascribed this general favour to causes which had nothing to do towards it. But the young blacksmith's being a gentleman, was, methought, what created him good-will from his present equality with the mob about him. Add to this, that he was so much a gentleman, as not, at the same time that he called himself such, to use as rough methods for his defence as his antagonist. The advantage of his having good friends, as his master expressed it, was not lazily urged; but he showed himself superior to the coachman in the personal qualities of courage and activity, to confirm that of his being well allied before his birth was of any service to him.

If one might moralize from this silly story, a man would say, that whatever advantages of fortune, birth, or any other good, people possess above the rest of the world, they should show collateral eminences besides those distinctions; or those distinctions will avail only to keep up common decency and ceremonies, and not to preserve a real place of favour or esteem in the opinion and common sense of their fellow-creatures.

The folly of people's procedure, in imagining that nothing more is necessary than property and superior circumstances to support them in distinction, appears in no way so much as in the domestic part of life. It is ordinary to feed their humour natural excrescences, if I may so speak, and its whole being a wayward and uneasy contrivance, and want of the obvious reflection that all human life is a commerce. It is not only eager, and giving commands, that constitutes a family; but prudence, equal behaviour with readiness to protect and cherish them, entitles a man to that character in their eyes and sentiments. It is pleasant enough to see, that men expect from their dependants, for their sole motive of fear, all the good effects of liberal education, and affluent fortune, and their advantage, cannot produce in them-

A man will have his servant just, diligent, and chaste, for no other reason but the terror of his master's favour; when all the laws, divine and human, cannot keep him whom he serves honest, with relation to any one of those

But both in great and ordinary affairs, all ty, which is not founded on merit and virsupported only by artifice and stratagem.
I see flatterers are the agents in families of its, and those who govern themselves by any a reason. Make-bates, distant relations, smen, and indigent followers, are the fry support the economy of a humoursome rich le is eternally whispered with intelligence are true or false to him in matters of no nce, and he maintains twenty friends to him against the insinuations of one who perhaps cheat him of an old coat.
I do not enter into further speculation upon ect at present, but think the following ed petition are made up of proper senti-this occasion.

R. SPECTATOR.

a servant to an old lady who is governed calls her friend, who is so familiar a one, takes upon her to advise her without being it, and makes her uneasy with all about it, Sir, be pleased to give us some remarks tary counsellors; and let these people to give any body advice, is to say to that I am your betters.' Pray, Sir, as near as describe that eternal flirt and disturber of Mrs. Tapety, who is always visiting, and people in a way, as they call it. If you can stay at home one evening, you will be a benefactor of all the ladies' women in town, icularly to.

Your loving friend, SUSAN CIVIL."

R. SPECTATOR,

a footman, and live with one of these of whom is said to be one of the best men in the world, but that he is particularly pleased to inform them, that he is passionate, and takes no care to command his passions, does more injury to his friends and in one half hour, than whole years can do. This master of mine, who is the best man in common fame, disoblige somebody every day he lives; and strikes me for the next day, because he is out of humour at it. If gentlemen knew that they do all the mischief ever done in conversation, they would refrain. I who have been a Spectator of a gentleman's dinner for many years, have seen that indeed does ten times more mischief than ill-nature. But you will represent this better than “Your abused humble servant, of an hour on THOMAS SMOKY.

“То ти

"The humble petition Butler, Harry Cook, behalf of themselves to and dispersed in t
the great families v and Westminster ;

" Showeth,

"That in many of the titioners live and are of them are wholly una ness, and are very little or ill used by us your s

"That for want of such and by indulgence of the they continually keep chievous animals called

"That whenever a son of that house is from the

"That spies never give vice, but represent our words, wantonness and

"That in all families is a general jealousy and "That the masters all live in continual suspicion of those who are false a

"That such masters
spies, are no longer mo families; and that we great disdain obliged to

" Your petitioners the

that you would represent sons of condition; a duty bound, shall for

No. 203.1 TUESDAY

Phœbe pater, si das hu Nec falsa Clymene cul Pignora da, genitor—

Illustrious parent! if
The name of son, O re
My mother's truth con
By tender pledges of

THERE is a loose tribe yet taken notice of, that of this great city, in fortunate females as fallen abandoned profligates rather of the town, and ve consideration, father it up this means there are several little family in most and Westminster, and undone by a charge of

When a man once preying at large, and finds so much game in surprising to consider the times propagates. We who is scarce of age, the ius trium liberorum, or granted by the Roman fathers of three children rake, who was not quite himself the father of a decently determine to be. In short, the town is full

BRITISH ESSAYISTS.

as who like
way their es-
have raised
marriage.
whim of an mattering of nealogies of the shape of his own ille-
and :

na.
eorg. ii. 80.
p.

known
DRYDEN.

with his own
of it grew a Maple, the was adorned
of the first Cole, who William, Ri-
birth to an-m, Will, and only a single second, the ear her time vice into his e very plen-
nd : besides anches that rishing tree

min so very
with which
ess. A man fatigues in a us amour.—
make their arkness may ness. They as with half ess to be ad-
c. There is et (who was s full of hu-
but up thy
It will be hem so fast,
way through full of stra-

his infamous
them, after merican co-er majesty's inhabitants,
olant men."
death; but efficient, and e advantage

men may be ort them to whom they ndirect me-
en such an rtuous than ent they can make for their own crimes, and indeed the only method that is left for them to repair their past miscarriages.

I would likewise desire them to consider, whether they are not bound in common humanity, as well as by all the obligations of religion and nature, to make some provision for those whom they have not only given life to, but entailed upon them, though very unreasonably, a degree of shame and disgrace.
And here I cannot but take notice of those depraved notions which prevail among us, and which must have taken rise from our natural inclination to favour a vice to which we are so very prone, namely, that bastardy and cuckoldom should be looked upon as reproaches; and that the ignominy which is only due to lewdness and falsehood, should fall in so unreasonable a manner upon the persons who are innocent.

I have been insensibly drawn into this discourse by the following letter, which is drawn up with such a spirit of sincerity, that I question not but the writer of it has represented his case in a true and genuine light.

"Sir,

"I am one of those people who by the general opinion of the world are counted both infamous and unhappy.

"My father is a very eminent man in this kingdom, and one who bears considerable offices in it.
I am his son, but my misfortune is, that I dare not call him father, nor he without shame own me as his issue, I being illegitimate, and therefore deprived of that endearing tenderness and unparalleled satisfaction which a good man finds in the love and conversation of a parent. Neither have I the opportunities to render him the duties of a son, he having always carried himself at so vast a distance, and with such superiority towards me, that by long use I have contracted a timorousness when before him, which hinders me from declaring my own necessities, and giving him to understand the inconveniences I undergo.

"It is my misfortune to have been neither bred a scholar, a soldier, nor to any kind of business, which renders me entirely incapable of making provision for myself without his assistance; and this creates a continual uneasiness in my mind, fearing I shall in time want bread; my father, if I may so call him, giving me but very faint assurances of doing any thing for me.

"I have hitherto lived somewhat like a gentleman, and it would be very hard for me to labour for my living. I am in continual anxiety for my future fortune, and under a great unhappiness in losing the sweet conversation and friendly advice of my parents; so that I cannot look upon myself otherwise than as a monster, strangely sprung up in nature, which every one is ashamed to own.

"I am thought to be a man of some natural parts, and by the continual reading what you have offered the world, become an admirer thereof, which has drawn me to make this confession; at the same time, hoping, if any thing herein shall touch you with a sense of pity, you would then allow me the favour of your opinion thereupon; as also what part I, being unlawfully born, may claim of the man's affection who begot me, and how far in your opinion I am to be thought his son, or he acknowledged as my father. Your sentiments and advice herein will be a great consolation and satisfaction to,

C. "Sir, your admirer, &c. W. B."

WEDNESDAY, OCTOBER 24, 1711.

Int grata protervitas,
Et vitulus nimium lubricus aspicit.

HOA, l. Od. xix. 7.

Her face too dazzling for the sight Her winning coyness fires my soul, I feel a strange delight.

not at all displeased that I am become the of love, and that the distressed in that passion convey their complaints to each other by my

The following letters have lately come to me, and shall have their place with great easiness. As to the reader's entertainment, he may, perhaps, appear frivolous, but are to be considered as the highest conse-

I shall not trouble you with the prefaces, preambles, and apologies, made to me before each letter, when it was desired to be inserted: but in they tell me, that the persons to whom they addressed have intimations, by phrases and allusions, from whence they came.

“TO THE SOTHADES.

word, by which I address you, gives you, I understand Portuguese,* a lively image of the regard I have for you. The Spectator's late letter from Statira gave me the hint to use the same word of explaining myself to you. I am not at all at the design your late behaviour discovered in your addresses to me; but I impute it to the degeneracy of the age, rather than your particular. As I aim at nothing more than being known, I am willing to be a stranger to your name, figure, or any figure which your wife might make in the world, provided my commerce with you is not to be a guilty one. I resign gay pleasures of visits, equipage, plays, balls, as, for that one satisfaction of having you mine. I am willing you shall industriously find the only cause of triumph which I can know of. I wish only to have it my duty, as well as my inclination, to study your happiness. If this be the effect this letter seems to aim at, you are to understand that I had a mind to be rid of you, the readiest way to pall you with an offer you would never desist pursuing while you were in my power. Be a true man; be my slave if you doubt me, and neglect me when you think of me. I defy you to find out what is your presumption with me: but I know, while I live, this suspense.

“I am your admirer “BELINDA.”

ADAM,

a strange state of mind a man is in, when he considers the imperfections of the woman he loves turn into excellences and advantages. I do assure you, I am much afraid of venturing upon you. I know you in spite of my reason, and think it an insupportable task to owe one's happiness to nothing but chance. I can see you ogle all the young Portuguese word Saudades (here inaccurately written Saudades, the most refined, most tender, and ardent solicitude, something absent, accompanied with a solicitude of regard, which cannot be expressed by one word in our language. “Saudade,” say the dictionaries, Finitimo sentimento del bien ausente, com desejo. Hence the word Saudades comprehends every kind of absent love, and Matas Saudades is the highest wish and complaint that can be paid to another. So if a person is object of melancholy, and is asked, “What ails him?” if he answers, “Tenho Saudades; it is understood to mean, “I am the most refined torment for the absence of my love; I am absent from my country,” &c.

fellows who look at you after new conquests public place; and yet your looks and gesture you in the very act of hearts of others. My that of the lover in the studied your faults so familiar to me, and I own. Look to it, Ma-you think this gay beamiable when a huslover. Things are so proceed; and I hope will be becoming in me but not in you to be the matrimonial life is ceptionable in the ot-little hints, you will aseasiness of,

“Madam, you

“SIR,

“When I sat at the end of the room by myself looking at you. Since which I am sure you shall by inadvertency, what it is too soon to confirm shall not subscribe my

“SIR,

“There were other geno necessity you were pant creature's fan last touch a stick of mine

“TO COLONEL R.

“Before this can reach the fondest lover, those more concern to me.
you, to obey the dictate left me, has increased quainted by my physiolonger. At this time the ardent love I have yond my strength, and most painful thing in the I must part with you, you, that I have no guil-pented folly that retard last hours in reflection lived in together, and have an end. This is far from criminal, that piety in being so unwillstate which is the inwhich we have lived acknow no more of the ne-happy one to the good, why may we not please viate the difficulty of regining that we shall be below, and may possibly steps of those with whom when mortal? Why ma-usual work, and, though ant in all the conducts of * The person to whom this was first published.

BRITISH ESSAYISTS.

not figure to an employ-
ures to which umber to thy over thy be-with thee a pain, where weak, a fear-boughts with But, indeed,
weakness, of
ll into, when ll, upon your ll not dwell
nerous heart
e the person lation. My o in a prayer gain. Fare-

R 25, 1711.

Poet. v. 25.

MON.

acter that is ent its doing it up as a nly make an belongs, but cts, that they
the allusion,
s and quick-
oyed in dis-
in order to nning upon
publish the some secrets

ons which I se which are
c. You have le fears and
lth papers;
h; our love
our notions ination for passion for ur manhood ur abuse of ty-seventh;
nty-eighth;
d and fifty-
our tyranny
nd seventy-your forty-the Demur-ler, in your ewisetaken
us the ex-
particular.
your fiftieth
our ninety-
second; our s; our hoop-
ty-seventh;
ch you have
ers, and in s and down
st own that the compliments you pay our sex are innumerable and that those very faults which you represent in us, are neither black in themselves, nor, as you own universal among us. But, Sir, it is plain that these your discourses are calculated for none but the fashionable part of womankind, and for the use of those who are rather indiscreet than vicious. But Sir, there is a sort of prostitutes in the lower part of our sex, who are a scandal to us, and very well deserve to fall under your censure. I know it would debase your paper too much to enter into the behaviour of these female libertines: but, as your remarks on some part of it would be a doing of justice to several women of virtue and honour, whose reputations suffer by it, I hope you will not think it improper to give the public some accounts of this nature. You must know, Sir, I am provoked to write you this letter, by the behaviour of an infamous woman, who, having passed her youth in a most shameful state of prostitution, is now one of those who gain their livelihood by seducing others that are younger than themselves, and by establishing a criminal commerce between the two sexes. Among several of her artifices to get money, she frequently persuades a vain young fellow, that such woman of quality, or such a celebrated toast, entertains a secret passion for him, and wants nothing but an opportunity of revealing it. Nay, she has gone so far as to write letters in the name of a woman of figure, to borrow money of one of these foolish Roderigos,* which she has afterward appropriated to her own use. In the mean time, the person who has lent the money, has thought a lady under obligations to him, who scarce knew his name; and wondered at her ingratitude when he has been with her, that she has not owned the favour, though at the same time he was too much a man of honour to put her in mind of it.

"When this abandoned baggage meets with a man who has vanity enough to give credit to relations of this nature, she turns him to very good account by repeating praises that were never uttered, and delivering messages that were never sent. As the house of this shameless creature is frequented by several foreigners, I have heard of another artifice, out of which she often raises money. The foreigner sighs after some British beauty, whom he only knows by fame; upon which she promises, if he can be secret, to procure him a meeting. The stranger, ravished at his good fortune, gives her a present, and in a little time is introduced to some imaginary title: for you must know that this cunning purveyor has her representatives upon this occasion, of some of the finest ladies in the kingdom. By this means, as I am informed, it is usual enough to meet with a German count in foreign countries, that shall make his boast of favours he has received from women of the highest ranks, and the most unblemished characters. Now, Sir, what safety is there for a woman's reputation, when a lady may be thus prostituted as it were by proxy, and be reputed an unchaste woman; as the Hero in the ninth book of Dryden's Virgil is looked upon as a coward, because the phantom which appeared in his likeness ran away from Turnus? You may depend upon what I relate to you to be matter of fact, and the practice of more than one of these female panders. If you print this letter, I may give you some further accounts of this vicious race of women.

"Your humble servant, BELVIDERA."

* Alluding to the character so named in Shakespeare's Othello add two other letters on different subjects to my paper.

THE SPECTATOR,

a country clergyman, and hope you will give your assistance in ridiculing some little insensibilities which cannot so properly be exposed from it.

A widow lady, who straggled this summer from the country into my parish for the benefit of the air, as she appears every Sunday at church with fashionable extravagances, to the great ascent of my congregation.

What gives us the most offence is her manner of singing the Psalms. She introduces fifty Italian airs into the hundredth and whilst we begin, 'All people' in the old tune of our forefathers, she in a quite different divisions on the vowels, and adorns them with the graces of Nicolini: if she meets 'ce' or 'aye,' which are frequent in the Hopkins and Sternhold, we are certain to quaver them half a minute after us, to the light airs of the opera.

It is very far from being an enemy to church and state to fear this abuse of it may make my congregation ridiculous, who already look on the singing as an entertainment, and not part of their duty: besides I am apprehensive that the insubordination spread; for 'Squire Squeekum, who by the way seems (if I may use the expression) to be no more an Italian singer, was last Sunday practising the same airs.

Now the lady's principles, and that she will tolerate, which (as she fancies) allows of insubordination in this particular; but I beg you to inform her that singing the Psalms in a different tune to the rest of the congregation is a sort of insubordination tolerated by that act.

I am, Sir, your very humble Servant,
" R. S."

THE SPECTATOR,

your paper upon temperance, you prescribe a rule for drinking out of Sir William Temple, following words: 'The first glass for myself, the second for my friends, the third for good humours, the fourth for mine enemies.' Now, Sir, I know, that I have read this your Spectator-club whereof I am a member; when our president told us there was certainly an error in the text, that the word glass should be bottle; and has ordered me to inform you of this mistake, to desire you to publish the following error in the paper of Saturday, Octob. 13, col. 1, for 'glass,' read 'bottle.'

" Yours,

" ROBIN GOODFELLOW."

FRIDAY, OCTOBER 26, 1711.

anto quisque sibi plura negaverit.

Mis plura feret. Hos. 3 Od. xvi. 21.

They that do much themselves deny, Receive more blessings from the sky.—CHURCH.

It is a call upon mankind to value and estimate what they set a moderate price upon their own self-denial is frequently attended with blessings, which in the end abundantly make up such losses as the modest seem to suffer from the ordinary occurrences of life. The curious determination in our favour or to our disadvantage is made upon our first appearance, even before they know any thing of us from the intimations of our countenance. A man, they say, wears his countenance; and so to his, who looks at him, though that way of raising his beheld in public is very common to those, who by their words upon themselves, as the strict scrutiny of the account lessen every day his character, as a frugal either of them live to find losses, the other by him to make up. It to keep your desires, you the regard you observe and never, if it were in much as he possibly might reputation. My walks in the mercantile part of the world naturally from those who say then, he that in his or an habitual arrogance credit for the least art of goodness, or valour, though if he is called upon, will upon him, and consider them of all the esteem that This brings a commission and he that might have a prosperous way, by air is no longer proprietor of but his pretensions fare torn instead of being dignified.

There is no one living in the applause of an agreeable and possibly pretend that they are ably unforced and deliver all his sentiments were able to conceal the which he betrays in even they who converse with ties they could do to him could say to him, would expects; and therefore, in esteem they have for his only upon that they observe.

If you go among the world trip into a room with the her charms, Mirtilla with motion, Chloe with such Corinna with such a force with such a demand of of her entrance; you find stand themselves and at their absence, to tell you impose themselves upon carry in their behaviour more than they should what would otherwise be.

I remember the last time wonderfully taken with making the murderer of the moderation of the price to take away. He says of faculties so meekly; thence, that all divine join to avenge his death abstinent use of dominion power to do to advance and forbears, is so much portion in prosperity. Advantages he prudential as so far the ours and gloom fate with have no such But if there effect which men to-desirable for faces our own y of it, than on; and that inquietudes is moderate and not re-appointment; The air, the ect, are in- he enjoys in mption from orld are be- fits and new with care, s not to him amed for, or s there is in can meet in sation. He l, but every perous man, pes he is as his fortune the unhappy eloquence, with these world he is own among consummate ration, is in him if they panions are ured. There at meals, or thing extra- t. Want of are the com- life so easy, re wit, more an is neces- pleasure and

R 27, 1711.

ue
sunt mota
at, x. l.

ue ?
ice, 31-4-1711
at voice ?
Johnson, &c.
down some d shall here
most refined presented in Alcibiades
sion to Juve-

nal's tenth satire, and to the second satire of Persius; as the last of these authors has almost transcribed the preceding dialogue, entitled Alcibiades the First, in his fourth satire.

The speakers in this dialogue upon prayer, are Socrates and Alcibiades; and the substance of it (when drawn together out of the intricacies and digressions) as follows:

Socrates meeting his pupil Alcibiades, as he was going to his devotions, and observing his eyes to be fixed upon the earth with great seriousness and attention, tells him, that he had reason to be thoughtful on that occasion, since it was possible for a man to bring down evils upon himself by his own prayers; and that those things which the gods send him in answer to his petitions, might turn to his destruction. This, says he, may not only happen when a man prays for what he knows is mischievous in its own nature, as Oedipus implored the gods to sow dissension between his sons; but when he prays for what he believes would be for his good, and against what he believes would be to his detriment. This the philosopher shows must necessarily happen among us, since most men are blinded with ignorance, prejudice, or passion, which hinder them from seeing such things as are really beneficial to them. For an instance, he asks Alcibiades, whether he would not be thoroughly pleased and satisfied if that god, to whom he was going to address himself, should promise to make him the sovereign of the whole earth? Alcibiades answers, that he should, doubtless, look upon such a promise as the greatest favour that could be bestowed upon him. Socrates then asks him, if after receiving this great favour he would be contented to lose his life? Or if he would receive it, though he was sure he should make an ill use of it? To both which questions Alcibiades answers in the negative. Socrates then shows him, from the examples of others, how these might very probably be the effects of such a blessing. He then adds, that other reputed pieces of good fortune, as that of having a son, or procuring the highest post in a government, are subject to the like fatal consequences; which nevertheless, says he, men ardently desire, and would not fail to pray for, if they thought their prayers might be effectual for the obtaining of them.

Having established this great point, that all the most apparent blessings in this life are obnoxious to such dreadful consequences, and that no man knows what in its event would prove to him a blessing or a curse, he teaches Alcibiades after what manner he ought to pray.

In the first place, he recommends to him, as the model of his devotions, a short prayer which a Grecian poet composed for the use of his friends, in the following words: "O Jupiter, give us those things which are good for us, whether they are such things as we pray for, or such things as we do not pray for: and remove from us those things which are hurtful, though they are such things as we pray for."

In the second place, that his disciple may ask such things as are expedient for him, he shows him that it is absolutely necessary to apply himself to the study of true wisdom, and to the knowledge of that which is his chief good, and the most suitable to the excellence of his nature.

In the third and last place he informs him, that the best methods he could make use of to draw down blessings upon himself, and to render his prayers acceptable, would be to live in a constant practice of his duty towards the gods, and toward

...these particulars? To this, says the oracle made the following reply: "I am pleased with the prayers of the Lacedæmonian, with all the oblations of the Greeks." The prayer implied and encouraged virtue in the man who made it; the philosopher proceeds to show the most vicious man might be devout, so victims could make him, but that his offerings regarded by the gods as bribes, and his peti- blasphemies. He likewise quotes on this two verses out of Homer,* in which the ya, "that the scent of the Trojan sacrifices tied up to heaven by the winds; but that it is not acceptable to the gods, who were displeased with him and all his people."

The conclusion of this dialogue is very remarkable. Socrates having deterred Alcibiades from the sacrifice which he was going to offer, and set forth the above-mentioned difficulties of doing that duty as he ought, adds these words: "and therefore wait until such time as we know how we ought to behave ourselves towards the gods, and towards men." "But when will that be?" says Alcibiades, "and who is it that instructs us? for I would fain see this man, who is it?" "It is one," says Socrates, "who is one of you; but as Homer tells us, that Minerva removed the mist from Diomedes's eyes that he might plainly discover both gods and men,† so some mist that hangs upon your mind must be removed before you are able to discern what is good and what is evil." "Let him remove from my eyes," says Alcibiades, "the darkness and what pleases me, I am determined to refuse nothing to him, order me, whoever he is, so that I may become a better man by it." The remaining part of the dialogue is very obscure: there is something in it which would make us think Socrates hinted at himself, when he spoke of this divine teacher who was to instruct the world, did not he own that he himself in this respect as much at a loss, and in as great a state as the rest of mankind.

Learned men look upon this conclusion as a which Socrates has should apply ourselves to things as are best for us, large in the doctrines taught in several instances of curses, which appear in the world; and, on the contrary, as blessings, which to appear as curses. The philosopher subscribed to us, we only have our chief good, and hence, when we petition for the coming of his kingdom, we ask for temporal blessings; but on the other side, we pray against evil in general, to determine what is the first of Socrates, he recommends the ancient poet, we find, intended, but very much wherein we pray to the will may be done: what that form which our Socrates against the most painful deaths, "Nevertheless done.† This comprehends the humble, as well as the offered up from the gods, supposes the Supreme, is for our good, and that ourselves what is so.—L.

No. 208.] MONDAY

—Veniant

To be themselves.

I HAVE several letters who lament the depravity of the town is fallen into with spectacles. A lady in is such a levity in the more pleased

BRITISH ESSAYISTS.

an the light
the highest therefore a numerous as-ts, and such cern, excite
tragedy of who is conking; seems es an exclam-
which is na-
is received rry when a
an occasion
in their de-
ph as is ex-
the appetites
sly expres-
ole row into nce that de-
is received
nce. A cor-
has divided
accounts for able delight
," says he,
h, so she is agantly gay
h taken up
audience, and e cannot be they are her e men from n, there are These are h what the
at it. After pant set of derfully di-
ople around dience. But s the loss of ving in their ese are those ocent, or the
one of these cident; but tly observed sensibly sued, and loses
ncern, pity.
etting fall a nd worthiest

pretend to any sense,
of your ad-
you will set-then one an-
a trick of en they first a within the ortal quarrel
them to put which is geder them to good for no-
all their acquaintance. If you think to print this, pray put it into a better style as to the spelling part. The town is now filling every day; and it cannot be deferred, because people take advantage of one another by this means, and break off acquaintance, and are rude. Therefore pray put this in your paper as soon as you can possibly, to prevent any future miscarriages of this nature. I am, as I ever shall be, dear Spectator,

"Your most obedient humble Servant,"

"MARY MEANWELL."

"Pray settle what is to be a proper notification of a person's being in town, and how that differs according to people's quality."

"MR. SPECTATOR,

October 20.

"I have been out of town, so did not meet with your paper, dated September the 28th, wherein you, to my heart's desire, exposed that cursed vice of ensnaring poor young girls, and drawing them from their friends. I assure you without flattery it has saved a 'prentice of mine from ruin; and in token of gratitude, as well as for the benefit of my family, I have put it in a frame and glass, and hung it behind my counter. I shall take care to make my young ones read it every morning, to fortify them against such pernicious rascals. I know not whether what you writ was matter of fact, or your own invention; but this I will take my oath on, the first part is so exactly like what happened to my 'prentice, that had I read your paper then, I should have taken your method to have secured a villain. Go on and prosper.

"Your most obliged humble Servant."

"MR. SPECTATOR,

"Without raillery, I desire you to insert this word for word in your next, as you value a lover's prayers. You see it is a hue and cry after a stray heart (with the marks and blemishes under-written); which whoever shall bring to you, shall receive satisfaction. Let me beg of you not to fail, as you remember the passion you had for her to whom you lately ended a paper:

"Noble, generous, great and good,
But never to be understood; Fickle as the wind still changing.
After every female ranging.
Panting, trembling, sighing, dying, But addicted much to lying.
When the Syren songs repeat, Equal measures still it beats; Whoe'er shall wear it, it will smart her,
And whoe'er takes it, takes a tartar."

T.

No. 209.] TUESDAY, OCTOBER 30 1711.

Of earthly goods, the best is a good wife;
A bad, the bitterest curse of human life. SIMONIDES

THERE are no authors I am more pleased with than those who show human nature in a variety of views, and describe the several ages of the world in their different manners. A reader cannot be more rationally entertained, than by comparing the virtues and vices of his own times with those which prevailed in the times of his forefathers; and drawing a parallel in his mind between his own private character, and that of other persons, whether of his own age, or of the ages that went before him. The contemplation of mankind under these changed colours is apt to shame us out of any particular vice, or animate us to any particular virtue; to make us pleased or displeased with ourselves in the most proper points, to clear our minds of prejudice and prepossession, and to rectify that narrowness ever it may appear; as there are no other whose province it is to enter so directly into the lives of men, and set their miscarriages in so plain a light.

Lucian, a poet famous in his generation, is, I think, the author of the oldest satire that is now extant; some say, of the first that was ever written. He who flourished about four hundred years after the fall of Troy, shows, by his way of writing, the simplicity, or rather coarseness, of the age in which he lived. I have taken notice, in my hundred-and-fifty-third speculation, that the rule of observing the French call the Bien-séance in an allusion, was found out of latter years; and that the authors of the Contes provided there was a likeness in their similes, did not much trouble themselves about the propriety of the comparison. The satires or iambics of Lucian, with which I shall entertain my readers in this paper, are a remarkable instance of the simplicity formerly advanced. The subject of this satire is the woman. He describes the sex in their several species, which he derives to them from a fanciful notion raised upon the doctrine of pre-existence. He tells us that the gods formed the souls of women from the same seeds and principles which compose the souls of animals and elements; and that their different dispositions arise in them according as such seeds and principles predominate in their constitutions. I have translated the author faithfully, and if not word for word (which our language would not bear), at least so as to comprehend every one of his sentiments, without adding anything of my own. I have already apologized for the author's want of delicacy, and must further apologize, that the following satire affects only some lower part of the sex, and not those who have been refined by a polite education, which was not the case in the age of this poet.

At the beginning God made the souls of women out of different materials, and in a separate manner their bodies.

The souls of one kind of women were formed nothing but fury and

"The sixth species consists of those elements which compose a woman. These are naturally of the husband's exerting hard fare, and do ever are however far from pleasures, and seldom refuse

"The cat furnished with the claws of women, who are of a variable nature, and so ready that they fly in the face of the husband, and approaches them with the species of women are liars, cheats, and pilferings.

"The mare with a fluster broke to any servile the eighth species of women little regard for their beauty in time in dressing, but throw their hair into a confusion up with the fairest flow of this species is a vessel to look upon, but very unless it be a king or a prince to such a toy.

"The ninth species consists of the ape. These are servile, and have no nature, who have no mind, and endeavour to do nothing which appears sensible.

"The tenth and last species is the bee; and has a sting out of the bee; and has a one for his wife. She is unblameable. Her father by her good management and is beloved by him for her beautiful and virtuous herself among her sex for her graces. She never serves women, nor passes a moment in wanton discourses. Her defence and is the best

ing satires are reason I have or above men-judgment, and nature a proper
ebrated pieces,
n. What vice which censures ars to show by orutes are the wo? A satire corrigible, and
those who are,
ects of it.—L.

ER 31, 1711.

secularum quo-
ingeniis affissi-
acillime.
Tusc. Quæst.
in presage, as it
eepest root, and
and most exalted

the bestsprings
having gene-
es. Whoever of his nature,
has allotted
considers his in term of a ected into the
to bound his oughts to any ves that after rld, he is to sciousness for that so useful

of the soul's often. There to the human ing its own
nor a more abition raised
than to value

consider the
ons and ages,
ir birthright, velation. At inward upon secret sense
immortality.
a good pre-
appetite the extending its lished, as the eatures may,
another pro-
ar appetite to our progress
We are com-
speculation,
perpetually
e at certain
rest, which

"Now let us consider what happens to us when we arrive at these imaginary points of rest. Do we stop our motion and sit down satisfied in the settlement we have gained? or are we not removing? boundary, and marking out new points of rest, which we press forward with the like eagerness, and which cease to be such as fast as we attain them. Our case is like that of a traveller upon the Alps who should fancy that the top of the next hill would end his journey, because it terminates his prospect; but he no sooner arrives at it, than he sees new ground and other hills beyond it, and continues to travel on as before.

"This is so plainly every man's condition in life that there is no one who has observed any thing but may observe, that as fast as his time wears away his appetite to something future remains. There is therefore I would make of it is, that since Nature (as some love to express it) does nothing in vain, to speak properly, since the Author of our being has planted no wandering passion in it, no desire which has not its object, futurity is the proper object of the passion so constantly exercised about it; and this restlessness in the present, this activity, ourselves over to further stages of duration, this successive grasping at somewhat still to come, appears to me (whatever it may be to others) as a kind of instinct, or natural symptom, which the mind of man has of its own immortality.

"I take it at the same time for granted, that the immortality of the soul is sufficiently established by other arguments: and, if so, this appetite, which otherwise would be very unaccountable and absurd, seems very reasonable, and adds strength to its conclusion. But I am amazed when I consider there are creatures capable of thought, who, in spite of every argument, can form to themselves a false satisfaction in thinking otherwise. There is something so pitifully mean in the inverted ambition, that man who can hope for annihilation, and persuade himself to think that his whole fabric shall crumble into dust, and mix with the mass of brute and mate beings, that it equally deserves our admiration and pity. The mystery of such men's passion is not hard to be penetrated; and indeed amounts to nothing more than a sordid hope that they shall not be immortal, because they dare not be so.

"This brings me back to my first observation, and gives me occasion to say further, that as worth actions spring from worthy thoughts, so worthy thoughts are likewise the consequence of worth actions. But the wretch who has degraded himself below the character of immortality, is very willing to resign his pretensions to it, and to substitute in its room a dark negative happiness in the extinction of his being.

"The admirable Shakspeare has given us a strong image of the unsupported condition of such a passion in his last minutes, in the second part of King Henry the Sixth, where Cardinal Beaufort, who had been concerned in the murder of the good Duke of Gloucester, is represented on his death-bed. After some confused speeches, which show an imagination disturbed with guilt, just as he is expiring, King Henry, standing by him full of compassion, says:

Lord Cardinal! if thou thinkest on heaven's bliss, Hold up thy hand, make signal of thy hope!— He dies and makes no sign! —

"The despair which is here shown, without word or action on the part of a dying person, is beyond what can be painted by the most forcible expressions whatever.

all not pursue this thought further, but only as annihilation is not to be had with a it is the most abject thing in the world to

What are honour, fame, wealth, or power, compared with the generous expectation of a without end, and a happiness adequate to all trouble you no further; but with a certainty which these thoughts have given me, I upon some things people say of you (as they all men who distinguish themselves), which are not true, and wish you as good a man as an author.

at, Sir, your most obedient, humble Servant,

"T. D."

J THURSDAY, NOVEMBER 1, 1711.

meminerit nos jocari fabulis.—PHEDR. l. i. Prol.

be remembered that we sport in fabled stories.

very lately translated the fragment of an old which describes womankind under several rs, and supposes them to have drawn their manners and dispositions from those and elements out of which he tells us they apounded; I had some thoughts of giving their revenge, by laying together in another many vicious characters which prevail in the world, and showing the different ingredients go to the making up of such different and constitutions. Horace has a thought something akin to this, when, in order to himself to his mistress for an invective he had written against her, and to account unreasonable fury with which the heart of often transported, he tells us that, when he made his man of clay, in the kneading of heart, he seasoned it with some furious of the lion. But upon turning this plan over in my thoughts, I observed so many unble humours in man, that I did not know at animals to fetch them. Male souls are ed with so many characters, that the world variety of materials sufficient to furnish out different tempers and inclinations. The , with all its animals and elements, would large enough to supply their several extra-ed therefore of pursuing the thought of Sir, I shall observe, that as he has exposed the part of women from the doctrine of pre- , some of the ancient philosophers have in r satirized the vicious part of the human a general, from a notion of the soul's post- , if I may so call it; and that as Simon- ribes brutes entering into the composition , others have represented human souls as into brutes. This is commonly termed ine of transmigration, which supposes that suls, upon their leaving the body, become of such kinds of brutes as they most re- their manners; or, to give an account of Dryden has described it, in his translation agoras's speech in the fifteenth book of ere that philosopher dissuades his hearers ing flesh:

Thus all things are but alter'd, nothing dies,
And here and there th' unbodied spirit flies:
By time, or force, or sickness disposess'd,
And lodges where it lights, in bird or beast;
It hunts without till ready limbs it find:
And actuates those according to their kind:

ATCH.—Nov. 31 & 32.

From tenement to
The soul is still the Then let not piety
To please the taste
But suffer inmate
Lest from their seat
With rabid hunger
Or from a beast d

Plato, in the vision of I may possibly make culation, records some as that the soul of Or lancholy, and a woman the soul of Ajax, which into a lion; the soul rapacious and imper soul of Thersites, who into a monkey.

Mr. Congreve, in comedies, has touched great humour:

Thus Aristotle's soul
May now be damn'd
Or in this very hour
Is doing painful pen

I shall fill up this part of my last Tuesday's speculation, following correspondents observed, that the speculation only the lower part of

"P"

"MR. SPECTATOR

"Upon reading your several symptoms in the bee. My shop, or, if I call it, is in that great hall, the name of the New Hall employed in gathering gain from the finest flock of the ladies and the best swarm of children, to which I am able. But, as I am married to a drone, without bringing any thing. Now, Sir, as on the other side, I behave myself towards the bee; for which reason, upon laying up provisions, I frequently represent to him, and negligence may be the cause. I must beg that you will give me advice upon this occasion, to oblige

"SIR,

"I am joined in with those fillies who are desirous that hard name you have has a flowing mane, and Sir, she passes half her time in ruins me in ribands. I am a plain handicraft man, and her laziness and expense of me in your next paper of her so much drudgery, family, and curry her

BRITISH ESSAYISTS.

October 30.

mour of the subject.

ath,

HENPECK.

married to a

ber 31, 1711.

day last came

ed to call me

oet that you

ne women are

s encouraged

When I am

calm;' when

se, child, do

ce about an

safari man,

etween storm

self with any

in his house;

y thing, his

en I ask him

It is no mat-

doors.' In

reely to him,

ething that is

y, Mr. Spec-

er women, let

ade of, if you

us a parcel

s; but, Sir, I good passions

as never de-

TEMPEST."

R 2, 1711.

a. 2 Sat vii. 97.

chain,

but I think

ey enjoys, in ese in proper

his mistress.

n our family,

e; she would

hatter enough

ve are not so

give me leave

umstances as

know, then,

stitution from

tely recorded

who makes a

e of my easy

to. We had

ound in me a

ndolence that

ther than dis-

ation it soon

abroad, she

kiss me, and n down again

pleasant step to me, that I was all the world to her, and she thought she ought to be all the world to me. 'If,' said she, 'my dear loves me as much as I love him, he will never be tired of my company.' This declaration was followed by my being denied to all my acquaintance; and it very soon came to that pass, that to give an answer at the door, before my face, the servant would ask her whether I was within or not; and she would answer no, with great stoutness, and tell me I was a good dear. I will not enumerate more little circumstances, to give you a livelier sense of my condition; but tell you in general, that from such steps as these at first, I now live the life of a prisoner of state; my letters are opened, and I have not the use of pen, ink, and paper, but in her presence. I never go abroad, except she sometimes takes me with her in her coach to take the air, if it may be called so, when we drive, as we generally do, with the glasses up. I have overheard my servants lament my condition, but they dare not bring me messages without her knowledge, because they doubt my resolution to stand by them. In the midst of this insipid way of life, an old acquaintance of mine, Tom Meggot, who is a favourite with her, and allowed to visit me in her company because he sings prettily, has roused me to rebel, and conveyed his intelligence to me in the following manner: My wife is a great pretender to music, and very ignorant of it; but far gone in the Italian taste. Tom goes to Armstrong, the famous fine writer of music, and desires him to put this sentence of Tully in the style of an Italian air, and write it out for my spouse from him. An ille mihi Liber cui mulier imperat? Cui leges imponit, præscribit, jubet, vetat quod videtur? Qui nihil imperanti negare, nihil recusare audet? Poscit? dandum est. Vocat? veniendum. Ejicit? abeundum. Minuitur? extimiscendum. 'Does he live like a gentleman who is commanded by a woman? He to whom she gives law, grants and denies what she pleases? who can neither deny her any thing she asks, or refuse to do any thing she commands?'

"To be short, my wife was extremely pleased with it; said the Italian was the only language for music; and admired how wonderfully tender the sentiment was, and how pretty the accent is of the language; with the rest that is said by rote on the occasion. Mr. Meggot is sent for to sing this air which he performs with mighty applause; and my wife is in ecstasy, on the occasion, and glad to find by my being so much pleased, that I was at her come into the notion of the Italian: 'for,' said she 'it grows upon one when one once comes to know a little of the language; and pray, Mr. Meggot sing again those notes, Nihil Imperanti negare, nihil recusare.' You may believe I was not a little delighted with my friend Tom's expedient to alarm me, and in obedience to his summons I give all the story thus at large; and I am resolved, when it appears in the Spectator, to declare for myself. The manner of the insurrection I contrive by yet means, which shall be no other than that Tom Meggot, who is at our tea-table every morning, shall read it to us; and if my dear can take the hint, and use not one word, but let this be the beginning of a new life without further explanation, it is very well; if as soon as the Spectator is read out, I shall, without more ado, call for the coach, name the hour when she shall be at home, if I come at all: if I do not, she may go to dinner. If my spouse only swells and says nothing, Tom and I go out together, and all well, as I said before; but if she begins to comma ulate, you shall in my next to you receive account of her resistance and submission, for the dear thing must, to,

"Sir,

Your most obedient humble Servant,

"ANTHONY FREEMAN,

I hope I need not tell you that I desire to be in your very next."

] SATURDAY, NOVEMBER 3, 1711.

Memento sibi conscia recti.—VIRG. Æn. i. 608.

(Intention.

the great art and secret of Christianity, if I that phrase, to manage our actions to the advantage, and to direct them in such a manner, every thing we do may turn to account at the day, when every thing we have done will force us.

er to give this consideration its full weight, cast all our actions under the division of one in themselves either good, evil, or indifferent.

If we divide our intentions after the manner and consider them with regard to our end, we may discover that great art and secret in which I have here mentioned.

A good intention, joined to a good action, gives it power and efficacy; joined to an evil action, it attenuates its malignity, and in some cases wholly away; and joined to an indifferent action, it turns it to a virtue, and makes it meritorious. human actions can be so.

In the next place, to consider in the same manner the influence of an evil intention upon our actions.

An evil intention perverts the best of actions, makes them, in reality, what the fathers of the church kind of zeal have termed the virtues of the devil's world, so many shining sins.* It decreases the innocence of an indifferent action, and adds to it all possible blackness and horror, and gives it the emphatical language of sacred writ, "sin exceeding sinful."†

In the last place, we consider the nature of an action. In the first intention, we shall find that it destroys the goodness of a good action; abates, but never takes away the malignity of an evil action; and leaves an indifferent action in its natural state of indifference.

Therefore of unspeakable advantage to possess a good intention, is with an habitual good intention, and to direct our thoughts, words, and actions at some end, whether it be the glory of our Maker, the good of mankind, or the benefit of our own house, is a sort of thrift or good husbandry in moral actions. It does not throw away any single action, but makes every one go as far as it can. It multiplies the means of salvation, increases the number of virtues and diminishes that of our vices.

It is something very devout, though not so devout as Acosta's answer to Limborch, who objects to the multiplicity of ceremonies in the Jewish law, as washings, dresses, meats, purgations, &c. The reply which the Jew makes upon occasion, is, to the best of my remembrance, as "There are not duties enough," says he, "the essential parts of the law, for a zealous and obedient person. Time, place, and person are therefore you have an opportunity of putting a moral virtue into practice. He says he, "enlarged the law, made many things, which were indifferent, a part of our duty. On more occasions of showing his love, all the circumstances of his life, please him."

Monsieur St. Evremont relates the superstitions of the Jews, and compares them with the same kind of religion. He tends to consider the difference between the Jews and the Calvinists, as they disagree. He tells us that the Jews are motivated by love, and the Calvinists by their expressions of duty to the Supreme Being, the former is full to do every thing well, and the other to abstain from every thing which may possibly displease him.

But notwithstanding this, which both the Jew and the Calvinist excuse their respective religions, there is something in the kind, and destructive to the junction of superfluous duties, as were he means renders religion more difficult than it is in its own nature. The sins of omission which he is guilty of, and fixes the shadowy, unessential, and unweighty and more important.

This zealous and active person, in place in the great point of religion, if, instead of prescribing duties as duties, we apply the most indifferent actions to one continued act of obedience and amusements to please Him (who is all the circumstances of our life).

It is this excellent freedom of conscience (if I may be allowed) is recommended to us by the precept wherein he directs the glory of our Creator in our actions, "whether we do it or not."

A person, therefore, who has an habitual good intention, has been here speaking of, in every circumstance of life, with a view to please the great Almighty, and able to the dictates of reason in general, or to the dictates of Providence in particular, which Providence has given us a perpetual sense of the duty of himself as acting, in the obedience, under the obligation of that Being, who is privy to all his thoughts, who knows all his uprisings, who is about him, and spieth out all his words, and remembers that the eye of God is upon him, and in every action what is commanded of him, hereafter either reward or punishment. The character of those holy men, in the beautiful phrase of St. Paul, "walked with God."‡

Splendida peccata.

† Rom. vii. 13.

* 1 Cor. x. 31.

† Psalm c.

BRITISH ESSAYISTS.

of morality, commend the precepts that means, greater add therefore better course re unreason- to a Pagan ance of this of Socrates, great philoso- before the entertaining mortality of or no God ; but this I made it my a good hope ed by him." at man the here incul- pher always as, who was much tran- that he could int, and de- genious and in a much t on such a I can scarce pro nobis.'

R 5, 1711.

iii. 124.

RYDEN.

orld the un- of mankind, he dealings set of men assion than ents on great under their r friendship the homage s which are editors: and t, according charged.

I not be un- ss in them- ss into the

I speak of ve it not in assist their ere there is , and merit

y, I believe, of merit and out ninety- nt of ability however, I take up an- though he towards him, is as unjust in his dealings as he who takes up good of a tradesman without intention or ability to pa him. Of the few of the class which I think fit consider, there are not two in ten who succeed insomuch that I know a man of good sense who put his son to a blacksmith, though an offer was mad him of his being received as a page to a man o quality. There are not more cripples come out o the wars than there are from those great services; some through discontent lose their speech, some their memories, others their senses, or their lives; and I seldom see a man thoroughly discontented, but I conclude he has had the favour of some great man. I have known of such as have been for twenty years together within a month of a good employment, but never arrived at the happiness of being possessed of any thing.

There is nothing more ordinary, than that a man, who has got into a considerable station, shall immediately alter his manner of treating all his friends, and from that moment he is to deal with you as if he were your fate. You are no longer to be consulted, even in matters which concern yourself; but your patron is of a species above you, and a free communication with you is not to be expected. This, perhaps, may be your condition all the while he bears office; and when that is at an end, you are as intimate as ever you were, and he will take it very ill if you keep the distance he prescribed you towards him in his grandeur. One would think this should be a behaviour a man could fall into with the worst grace imaginable; but they who know the world have seen it more than once. I have often, with secret pity, heard the same man who has professed his abhorrence against all kind of passive behaviour, lose minutes, hours, days, and years, in a fruitless attendance on one who had no inclination to befriend him. It is very much to be regretted, that the great have one particular privilege above the rest of the world, of being slow in receiving impressions of kindness, and quick in taking offence. The elevation above the rest of mankind, except in very great minds, makes men so giddy, that they do not see after the same manner they did before. Thus they despise their old friends, and strive to extend their interests to new pretenders. By this* means it often happens, that when you come to know how you lost such an employment, you will find the man who got it never dreamed of it; but, forsooth, he was to be surprised into it, or perhaps solicited to receive it. Upon such occasions as these a man may perhaps grow out of humour. If you are so, all mankind will fall in with the patron, and you are a humourist and untractable if you are capable of being sour at a disappointment: but it is the same thing whether you do or do not resent ill-usage, you will be used after the same manner; as some good mothers will be sure to whip their children till they cry, and then whip them for crying.

There are but two ways of doing any thing with great people, and those are by making yourself either considerable or agreeable. The former is not to be attained but by finding a way to live without them, or concealing that you want them; the latter is only by falling into their taste and pleasures. This is, of all the employments in the world the most servile, except it happens to be of your own natural humour. For to be agreeable to another, especially if he be above you, is not to be pos

* These.

of such qualities and accomplishments as render you agreeable in yourself, but such as are agreeable in respect to him. An imitation of his faults, or a compliance, if not subservient to his vices, must be the measure of your

it comes to that, the unnatural state a man when his patron pleases, is ended; and his d complaisance are objected to him, though who rejects him for his vices was not only mer, but seducer. Thus the client (like a woman who has given up the innocence which er charming) has not only lost his time, but virtue which could render him capable of the injury which is done him.

ould be endless to recount the tricks of turn-off from themselves to persons who have er to serve you, the art of being sorry for an unaccountable accident in your behaviour, h a one (who, perhaps, has never heard of poses your advancement; and if you have ing more than ordinary in you, you are I with a whisper, that it is no wonder people low in doing for a man of your talents, and all this treatment, I must still add the test insolence of all, which I have once seen; to wit, that when a silly rogue has away one part in three of his life in unprofit- tendance, it is taken wonderfully ill that he ws, and is resolved to employ the rest for n we consider these things, and reflect upon y honest natures (which one, who makes ob- n of what passes, may have seen) that have fed by such sort of applications, it is too me- y a scene to dwell upon; therefore I shall nother opportunity to discourse of good and distinguish such as have done their those who have depended upon them, and able to act without their favour. Worthy are like Plato's Guardian Angels, who are doing good to their wards; but negligent are like Epicurus's gods, that lie lolling on uds, and, instead of blessings, pour down and tempests on the heads of those that are incense to them.*

15.] TUESDAY, NOVEMBER 6, 1711.

Ingenuas didicisse fideliter artes Emollit mores, nec sinit esse feros.

OVID, de Ponto, II. ix. 47.

Ingenuous arts, where they an entrance find, Softens the manners, and subdues the mind.

SIDER a human soul without education like in the quarry, which shows none of its in- eanties, until the skill of the polisher fetches colours, makes the surface shine, and dis- every ornamental cloud, spot, and vein that ough the body of it. Education, after the anner, when it works upon a noble mind, et to view every latent virtue and perfection, rithout such helps are never able to make pearance.

reader will give me leave to change the al- o soon upon him, I shall make use of the stance to illustrate the force of education,

Spectator has not justly represented here the gods of they were supposed to be indolent and uninterested ains of men, but not malignant or cruel beings.

which Aristotle has br of substantial forms, lies hid in a block of the statuary only clea- ter, and removes the stone, the sculptor on- to a block of marble, The philosopher, the the good, or the great concealed in a plebeian might have disinterred I am, therefore, much accounts of savage na- those virtues which a see courage exerting in obstinacy, wisdom in- ness and despair.

Men's passions open different kinds of ac- more or less rectified a one hears of negroes, masters, or upon chang- selves upon the next t in our American plan- miring their fidelity, t dreadful a manner? greatness of soul w wretches on many oc- rightly cultivated? A there be for the conte- part of our species? t upon the common foot- only set an insignifi- murders them; nay, t us lies, cut them off fr in another world as w that which we look u attaining it?

Since I am engaged bear mentioning a sto- and which is so well at of reason to suspect t a kind of wild tragedy ago at St. Christopher islands. The negroes- cerned in it, were all man, who is now in E

This gentleman, an woman, who was look- nary beauty by those- had at the same time- likewise negroes and comeliness of their pe- which they bore to or happened that both of male negro above met- very glad to have tak- band, provided they w- which should be the- passionately in love v- would think of givin- the same time were- neither of them would- his friend's consent- lovers were the discou- belonged, who could- strange complication- the hearts of the poo- expressions of the un- how impossible it was- happy.

After a long struggl

BRITISH ESSAYISTS.

No. 216.] WEDNESDAY, NOVEMBER 7, 1711

ok a walk to-ess along with ntations, they immediately
t far from the elty was cong person, ran
a. He there
the ground,
her, kissing
beating their
and despair
nily with the oming to the two negroes
given them-

of barbarity,
he minds of lated by vir-
h the action of guilt and
mind which had it been cation.

g to be born
n and know-
essed, there structed perhabitants of re speaking;
of a more li-
r by several to return to see it sometimes rough-
man figure;
distinctly in
we find the but seldom Phidias or touches and

ctions upon n make use
e knowledge
er our souls
e, which nag professed
these great
from day to ng of men's e, whatever
I am not a
which I re-tion of my nity of re-
em, and ex-
of them in d be a very publish the y would do ut my pub-
nt instance
.—C.

*Siquidem hercle possis, nil prius, neque fortius.
Verum si incipies, neque perficies naviter.
Atque, ubi pati non poteris, cum nemo expectet, Inflecta pace, ultro ad eam venies, indicans Te amare, et ferre non posse: actum est, illeceet, Peristi: eludet, ubi te victum senserit.*

TER. EOM. act. 1. sc. 1.

O brave! oh excellent! if you maintain it!
But if you try, and can't go through with spirit,
And finding you can't bear it, unaverted,
Your peace unmade, all of your own accord,
You come and swear you love, and can't endure it, Good night! all's over! ruin'd! and undone!
She'll jilt you, when she sees you in her power.

COLMAN.

"TO MR. SPECTATOR.

"SIR,

"THIS is to inform you, that Mr. Freeman had no sooner taken coach, but his lady was taken with a terrible fit of the vapours, which it is feared will make her miscarry, if not endanger her life; therefore, dear Sir, if you know of any receipt that is good against this fashionable reigning distemper, be pleased to communicate it for the good of the public, and you will oblige Yours,

"A. NOEWILL."

"MR. SPECTATOR,

"The uproar was so great as soon as I had read the Spectator concerning Mrs. Freeman, that after many revolutions in her temper, of raging, swooning, railing, fainting, pitying herself, and reviling her husband, upon an accidental coming in of a neighbouring lady (who says she has writ to you also), she had nothing left for it but to fall into a fit. I had the honour to read the paper to her, and have pretty good command of countenance and temper on such occasions; and soon found my historical name to be Tom Meggot in your writings, but concealed myself until I saw how it affected Mrs. Freeman. She looked frequently at her husband, as often at me; and she did not tremble as she filled tea, until she came to the circumstance of Armstrong's writing out a piece of Tully for an opera tune. Then she burst out, she was exposed, she was deceived, she was wronged and abused. The tea-cup was thrown into the fire; and without taking vengeance on her spouse, she said to me, that I was a pretending coxcomb, a meddler that knew not what it was to interpose in so nice an affair as between a man and his wife. To which Mr. Freeman: 'Madam, were I less fond of you than I am, I should not have taken this way of writing to the Spectator to inform a woman, whom God and nature has placed under my direction, with what I request of her; but since you are so indiscreet as not to take the hint which I gave you in that paper, I must tell you, Madam, in so many words, that you have for a long and tedious space of time acted a part unsuitable to the sense you ought to have of the subordination in which you are placed. And I must acquaint you, once for all, that the fellow without'—'Ha, Tom!'—(here the footman entered and answered, Madam) 'Sirrah, don't you know my voice? Look upon me when I speak to you.'—'I say, Madam, this fellow here is to know of me myself, whether I am at leisure to see company or not. I am from this hour master of this house; and my business in it, and every where else, is to behave myself in such a manner, as it shall be hereafter an honour to you to bear my name; and your pride that you are the delight, the darling, and ornament of a man of honour, useful and esteemed by his friends; and I no longer one that has buried merit in the world, in compliance to a froward which has grown upon an agreeable woman indulgence." Mr. Freeman ended this with earnestness in his aspect, and a downcast eye, showed he was extremely moved at the he saw her in; for she sat swelling with and her eyes firmly fixed on the fire; when he would lose all again, took upon me to her out of that amiable sorrow she was in, upon me; upon which I said very seasonably friend, that indeed Mr. Freeman was become amon talk of the town; and that nothing was a jest, as when it was said in company, Mr. an had promised to come to such a place.

which the good lady turned her softness into ght rage, and threw the scalding tea-kettle our humble servant, flew into the middle of me, and cried out she was the unfortunatest women. Others kept family dissatisfactions rs of privacy and retirement. No apology be made to her, no expedient to be found, no s manner of breaking what was amiss in her;
the world was to be acquainted with her without the least admonition. Mr. Freeman ug to make a softening speech, but I inter-"Look you, Madam, I have nothing to say matter, but you ought to consider you are st a chicken; this humour, which was well in a girl, is insufferable in one of your mo-character." With that she lost all patience, w directly at her husband's periwig. I got my arms, and defended my friend; he signs at the same time that it was too much; oning, nodding, and frowning over her t, that he was lost if he did not persist. In aner we flew round and round the room in ent, until the lady I spoke of above and entered; upon which she fell upon the breathless. I still kept up my friend: but a very silly air, bid them bring the coach oor, and we went off; I being forced to bid shman drive on. We were no sooner come edgings, but all his wife's relations came to after him; and Mrs. Freeman's mother ote, wherein she thought never to have seen ; and so forth.

a word, Sir, I am afraid we are upon a we have no talents for; and I can observe almy friend looks upon me rather as a man ows a weakness of him that he is ashamed of, s who has rescued him from slavery. Mr.
or, I am but a young fellow, and if Mr. a submits, I shall be looked upon as an iny, and never get a wife as long as I breathe. indeed sent word home he shall lie at ead to-night; but I believe fear of the first ter this rupture has too great a place in this on. Mrs. Freeman has a very pretty sister; I delivered him up, and artiled with her for her bringing him home. If he has not to stand it (you are a great casuist), is it ill thing to bring myself off as well as I can?
akes me doubt my man is, that I find he reasonable to expostulate at least with her?
tain Sentry will tell you, if you let your e disputed, you are no longer a commander. you could advise me how to get clear of this handsomely.

"Yours,

"TOM MEGGOT."

No. 217.] THURSDAY

—Tune for Et pariter toto re

Then unrestrain
Th' assembled G

I SHALL entertain letters from my corre-
is the description of inary I cannot deter-that the writer of it, a kind of nocturnal Whether this be so or to the amendment of represented in it, and enough in the world.

"MRS. SPECTATOR

"In some of your
to give the public a ve-clubs and nocturnal a-
of a society which has I mean a club of S-hackney-coach, and m-upper-chamber, which purpose; our landlors people, constantly con-club-night. We are we throw off all the
with which our sex are in public places. I pleasure we enjoy from morning, in being as your lives. As our pmediately filled with lappets, or head-dresse-and working-aprons.
first, that besides the
there is one which sta-our dead men, for so vtatters with which the we pack up together i-aforesaid coach. It is meet the next night where every one is to from this confused bun-ribands. I have hith-our diversion on ordin-quaint you further, the a prude, that is, we ge-in among us, and unra-month's prude was so bone and buckram, the
at her; but you would have seen how the sobshe was forced out of Sir, it is impossible to sport, unless you wou-us; and though it be our society to admit a much confidence in y-
that it was agreed by meeting, to give you Spectator.

"I am

"P. S. We shall den-

Though I thank Ki-
at present find in mys-
my person with her at I should regard my

BRITISH ESSAYISTS.

Bona Dea,
as much as
gentleman,
to endure
ay perhaps given me, ator; in the n words:

h a young
lts, which,
ess, I know
quaint her
, and good-
or has no agreed to fter our re-
ew herself
re a large weat. She ched; and
something
th a basket
ry greedily,
her more.
er I see her
s not want y; if not, I hich shock
will appear

urs," &c. ident whom he account

ranquillity,
n old maid:
n all that to contract
your rail-
n say with

spare your what is ridi-
least one

nt, Frost."

cannot help
character of
I have no characters.

vant,
"A. B."

9, 1711.

to.
p. xvii. 68.

where.
POOLEY.

way is, to dgate; and nsible men

were talking of the Spectator. One said, he had that morning drawn the great benefit ticket; another wished he had; but a third shook his head and said, It was a pity that the writer of that paper was such a sort of man, that it was no great matter whether he had it or no. He is, it seems, said the good man, the most extravagant creature in the world; has run through vast sums, and yet been in continual want: a man, for all he talks so well of economy, unfit for any of the offices of life by reason of his profuseness. It would be an unhappy thing to be his wife, his child, or his friend; and yet he talks as well of those duties of life as any one. Much reflection has brought me to so easy a contempt for every thing which is false, that this heavy accusation gave me no manner of uneasiness; but at the same time it threw me into deep thought upon the subject of fame in general; and I could not but pity such as were so weak, as to value what the common people say out of their own talkative temper to the advantage or diminution of those whom they mention, without being moved either by malice or good-will. It will be too long to expatiate upon the sense all mankind have of fame, and the inexpressible pleasure which there is in the approbation of worthy men, to all who are capable of worthy actions; but methinks one may divide the general word fame, into three different species, as it regards the different orders of mankind who have any thing to do with it. Fame therefore may be divided into glory, which respects the hero; reputation, which is preserved by every gentleman; and credit, which must be supported by every tradesman. These possessions in fame are dearer than life to those characters of men, or rather are the life of these characters. Glory, while the hero pursues great and noble enterprises, is impregnable; and all the assaults of his renown do but show their pain and impatience of its brightness, without throwing the least shade upon it. If the foundation of a high name be virtue and service, all that is offered against it is but rumour, which is too short-lived to stand up in competition with glory, which is everlasting.

Reputation, which is the portion of every man who would live with the elegant and knowing part of mankind, is as stable as glory, if it be as well founded; and the common cause of human society is thought concerned when we hear a man of good behaviour calumniated. Besides which, according to a prevailing custom among us, every man has his defence in his own arm; and reproach is soon checked, put out of countenance, and overtaken by disgrace.

The most unhappy of all men, and the most exposed to the malignity or wantonness of the common voice, is the trader. Credit is undone in whispers. The tradesman's wound is received from one who is more private and more cruel than the ruffian with the lantern and dagger. The manner of repeating a man's name,—As; "Mr. Cash; Oh! do you leave your money at his shop? Why, do you know Mr. Searoom? He is indeed a general merchant." I say, I have seen, from the iteration of a man's name hiding one thought of him, and explaining what you hide, by saying something to his advantage when you speak, a merchant hurt in his credit; and him who, every day he lived, literally added to the value of his native country, undone by one who was only a burden and a blemish to it. Since every body who knows the world is sensible of this great evil, how careful ought a man to be in language of a merchant? It may possibly be in the power of a very shallow creature to lay the ruin of the best family in the most opulent city; and the more so, the more highly he deserves of his country; that is to say, the further he places his wealth out of his hands, to draw home that of another climate.

In this case an ill word may change plenty into want, and by a rash sentence a free and generous fortune may in a few days be reduced to beggary. How little does a giddy prater imagine, that an idle phrase to the disfavour of a merchant, may be as pernicious in the consequence, as the forgery of a deed to bar an inheritance would be to a gentleman? and stands where it did before a gentleman was humiliated, and the state of a great action is just as it was before calumny was offered to diminish it, if there is time, place, and occasion expected to unravel all that is contrived against those characters; but the trader who is ready only for probable demands upon him, can have no armour against the quisitive, the malicious, and the envious, who are prepared to fill the cry to his dishonour. Fire and sword are slow engines of destruction, in comparison of the babbling in the case of the merchant.

For this reason, I thought it an inimitable piece of humanity of a gentleman of my acquaintance, who had great variety of affairs, and used to talk with warmth enough against gentlemen by whom he thought himself ill dealt with; that he would never let anything be urged against a merchant with whom he had any difference) except in a spirit of justice. He used to say, that to speak ill of a merchant was to begin his suit with judgment and execution. One cannot, I think, say more on this occasion, than to repeat, that the merit of the merchant is above that of all other subjects: for while he is untouched in his credit, his hand-writing is a more portable coin for the service of his fellow-citizens, and his word the gold of Ophir to the country wherein he resides.—T.

o. 219.] SATURDAY, NOVEMBER 10, 1711.

Vix ea nostra voco.—Ovid, Met. xiii. 141.

These I scarce call our own.

THERE are but few men who are not ambitious of distinguishing themselves in the nation or country where they live, and of growing considerable among those with whom they converse. There is kind of grandeur and respect, which the meanest of most insignificant part of mankind endeavour to procure in the little circle of their friends and acquaintance. The poorest mechanic, nay, the man who lives upon common alms, gets him his set of hairers, and delights in that superiority which he enjoys over those who are in some respects beneath him. This ambition, which is natural to the soul of man, might, methinks, receive a very happy turn; and, if it were rightly directed, contribute as much to a person's advantage, as it generally does to his uneasiness and disquiet.

I shall therefore put together some thoughts on this subject, which I have not met with in other writers; and shall set them down as they have occurred to me, without being at the pains to connect or methodize them.

All superiority and pre-eminence that one man can have over another, may be reduced to the notion of quality, which, considered at large, is either, that of fortune, body, or mind. The first is that which constitutes the most foreign; the least call our quality. In relation to health, strength, and more so, Quality, as it respects knowledge or wisdom, is essential to us, more than either of the

The quality of reason to value the body or mind, which makes the difference in the world.

As virtue is the source of honour and estimation of some commend men to possess. Holiness to kings; serenity of excellence or perfection in archbishops; honorable behaviour to is of the same in the clergy.

In the foundation of honour are the virtues of the persons in the descendant rather of grandeur of denomination than is frequently lost.

The death-bed is true light. A person under the apprehension; and is asked holiness does? to under the title lies under such as are the disgrace of such a time look than respect.

The truth of under no regular virtue is oppressed last day will receive every one a stable character. Randomness set right.

Methinks we advance ourselves to serve our post in virtue here, that state which is to

Men in Scripture journey upon earth, as well as the same kind of men as an inn, which with accommodation therefore very a rest before we can rather to take care to meet with, than conveniences at above another it.

Epictetus makes which is very to incline us to be Providence has as in a theatre, in a man is indeed say, he could act as a philosopher, is concerned in is. If it be an in Him who great disposer

osopher him- he lived and ment in this ement from e remember e new cast, in different , in propor- ther in vir- s of life the

in the little of Solomon, he like tem- pte among the possess- n and noble in the other will produce s. "Then boldness be- n, and made see it they nd shall be tion, so far they repent- t, shall say e had some roach. We is end to be among the saints!"† on of a life the shadows very finely a time, since n of things, ot up in the o enjoy the to surpass and by their r superiority neath them, e in meaner - may better st deference them happy has thought

R 12, 1711.
n. xii. 228.

or my love?
person; but even in my do but consider the ill-consequence of such a match; you are fifty-five, I twenty-one. You are a man of business, and mightily conversant in arithmetic and making calculations; be pleased therefore to consider what proportion your spirits bear to mine; and when you have made a just estimate of the necessary decay on one side, and the redundancy on the other, you will act accordingly. This perhaps is such language as you may not expect from a young lady; but my happiness is at stake, and I must talk plainly. I mortally hate you; and so, as you and my father agree, you may take me or leave me: but if you will be so good as never to see me more, you will for ever oblige,

"Sir, your most humble Servant,
"HENRIETTA."

"MR. SPECTATOR,

"There are so many artifices and modes of false wit, and such a variety of humour discovers itself among its votaries, that it would be impossible to exhaust so fertile a subject, if you would think fit to resume it. The following instances may, if you think fit, be added by way of appendix to your discourses on that subject.

"That feat of poetical activity mentioned by Horace, of an author who could compose two hundred verses while he stood upon one leg, has been imitated (as I have heard) by a modern writer; who, priding himself on the hurry of his invention, thought it no small addition to his fame to have each piece minuted with the exact number of hours or days it cost him in the composition. He could taste no praise until he had acquainted you in how short space of time he had deserved it; and was not so much led to an ostentation of his art, as of his dispatch:

—Accipe, si vis.
Accipe jam tabulas: detur nobis locus, hora, Custodes: videamus uter plus scribere possit.
Hos. 1 Sat. iv. 14.

Here's pen and ink, and time, and place: let's try Who can write most, and fastest, you or I.—CHARRA.

"This was the whole of his ambition; and therefore I cannot but think the flights of this rapid author very proper to be opposed to those laborious nothings which you have observed were the delight of the German wits, and in which they so happily got rid of such a tedious quantity of their time.

"I have known a gentleman of another turn of humour, who, despising the name of an author, never printed his works, but contracted his talent, and by the help of a very fine diamond which he wore on his little finger, was a considerable poet upon glass. He had a very good epigrammatic wit; and there was not a parlour or tavern window where he visited or dined for some years, which did not receive some sketches or memorials of it. It was his misfortune at last to lose his genius and his ring to a sharper at play, and he has not attempted to make a verse since.

"But of all contractions or expedients for wit, I admire that of an ingenious projector whose book I have seen. This virtuoso being a mathematician has, according to his taste, thrown the art of poetry into a short problem, and contrived tables, by which any one, without knowing a word of grammar or sense, may to his great comfort be able to compose or rather to erect, Latin verses.* His tables are kind of poetical logarithms, which being divided into several squares, and all inscribed with so many incoherent words, appear to the eye somewhat like a fortune-telling screen. What a joy must it be to the unlearned operator to find that these words being carefully collected and writ down in order according to the problem, start of themselves into hexameter and pentameter verses? A friend of mine, who is a student in astrology, meeting with this book, performed the operation, by the rules there set down; he showed his verses to the next of his acquaintance, who happened to understand Latin; and being informed they described a tempest of wind, very luckily prefixed them, together with a translation, to an almanac he was just then printing, and was supposed to have foretold the last great storm.*

* This is no fiction of the Spectator's, as might naturally be imagined. There was a projector of this kind named John Peter, who published a very thin pamphlet in 8vo entitled Artificial Verifying, a New Way to make Latin verses, Lond 1676.

"I think the only improvement beyond this would be that which the late Duke of Buckingham mentioned to a stupid pretender to poetry, as a project of a Dutch mechanic, viz. a mill to make verses. This being the most compendious method of all which have been yet proposed, may deserve the thoughts of our modern virtuosi who are employed in new discoveries for the public good; and it may be worth the while to consider, whether in an island where few are content without being thought wits, it will not be a common benefit, that wit as well as labour should be made cheap.

"I am, Sir, your humble Servant," &c.

"MR. SPECTATOR,

"I often dine at a gentleman's house where there are two young ladies in themselves very agreeable, but very cold in their behaviour, because they understand me for a person that is to 'break my mind,' as the phrase is, very suddenly to one of them. But I take this way to acquaint them that I am not in love with either of them, in hopes they will use me with that agreeable freedom and indifference which they do all the rest of the world, and not to drink to one another only, but sometimes cast a kind look, with their service to,

"Sir, your humble Servant."

"MR. SPECTATOR,

"I am a young gentleman, and take it for a piece of good-breeding to pull off my hat when I see any thing peculiarly charming in any woman, whether I know her or not. I take care that there is nothing ludicrous or arch in my manner, as if I were to betray a woman into a salutation by way of jest or humour; and yet except I am acquainted with her, I find she ever takes it for a rule, that she is to look upon this civility and homage I pay to her supposed merit, as an impertinence or forwardness which she is to observe and neglect. I wish, Sir, you would settle the business of salutation; and please to inform me how I shall resist the sudden impulse I have to be civil to what gives an idea of merit; or tell these creatures how to behave themselves in return to the esteem I have for them. My affairs are such that your decision will be a favour to me, if it be only to save the unnecessary expense of wearing out my hat so fast as I do at present.

"I am, Sir, yours,

"T. D.

POSTSCRIPT.

"There are some that do know me, and won't bow to me."

* Viz. November 20, 1703.

Used
Free
To

WHEN I
is my meth thors have
By this me upon it, or words, or so ject. This lation, whi
than the p a finer turn couching i
bers, make My read
one good li
his imagin
in his mem
author.

It was a
I find some Elizabeth,
to repeat it
mendation.
quisitive in generally p
some motto always give and is some writer is ev
vulgar min
good author

I must c
learned rea
as "a word friends, if t
to make pr
If they do they know
entertainm
never bette pliment, w
would like
stood the m bush."

I have he town, who another, an tion. One c
used to qu
to his illite selves so c
numbers to other findi Sunday, an
sion of it,
in his turn Fathers, he book of Qu
tions to it
his people.
senti, which the use of time thicke
routed his

* Aristotle
I aertius, lib.

BRITISH ESSAYISTS.

so prevalent
nk that my g them for ad of them;
the use of
that I hear ore than that selves in a my Greek

rtation upon ving already t place, diss, which are ave afforded us. I have ject. Some ers that are ers ascribe
pers marked Roger; that scribed in nds for the X, which is pers, is that they cannot at letter, ex-
neither of nd in these

lemen, who me by letter,
philosopher,
a cloak. A
him know
I cover it,"
not know."
rks for the e amulets or e fascination
son I would ter he sees a Y, an &c.

self to the
etters C, L, re in them
acquainted
philosophy of tys, that is at the numer X (and
, has in it
lled by the
; that one,
up the num-
ese are not
nto. A man udy before

nd, who was Elizabeth's
crets of this
f divinity's

o invented by o taught that number 365,
rent orders of ew letters that out.

527, 2d edit.

degree, he preached before the university of Cambridge, upon the first verse of the first chapter of the first book of Chronicles, "in which," says he
"you have the three following words;

'Adam, Sheth, Enosh.'

He divided this short text into many parts, and by discovering several mysteries in each word, made a most learned and elaborate discourse. The name of this profound preacher was Dr. Alabaster, to whom the reader may find a more particular account in Dr. Fuller's book of English Worthies.
This instance will, I hope, convince my readers that there may be a great deal of fine writing in the capital letters which bring up the rear of my paper, and give them some satisfaction in that particular.
But as for the full explication of these masters, I must refer them to time, which discovers all things.

C.

No. 222.] WEDNESDAY, NOVEMBER 14, 1711.

Cur alter fratrum cessare, et ludere, etungi.

Præferat Herodis palmæ pinguibus.

Hos. 2 Ep. II. 182.

Why, of two brothers, one his pleasure loves.

Prefers his sports to Herod's fragrant groves.—CAMEL.

"MR. SPECTATOR,

"THERE is one thing I have often looked for in your papers, and have as often wondered to find myself disappointed; the rather, because I think it a subject every way agreeable to your design, and by being left unattempted by others, it seems reserved as a proper employment for you; I mean a disquisition, from whence it proceeds, that men of the brightest parts, and most comprehensive genius, completely furnished with talents for any province in human affairs; such as by their wise lessons of economy to others, have made it evident that they have the justest notions of life, and of true sense in the conduct of it—; from what unhappy contra-dictious cause it proceeds, that persons thus finished by nature and by art, should so often fail in the management of that which they so well understand and want the address to make a right application of their own rules. This is certainly a prodigious inconsistency in behaviour, and makes much such figure in morals, as a monstrous birth in naturals with this difference only, which greatly aggravate the wonder, that it happens much more frequently and what a blemish does it cast upon wit and learning in the general account of the world! In how disadvantageous a light does it expose them to the busy class of mankind, that there should be so many instances of persons who have so conducted their lives in spite of these transcendent advantages as neither to be happy in themselves nor useful to their friends; when every body sees it was entire;
in their own power to be eminent in both these characters! For my part, I think there is no reflection more astonishing, than to consider one of these gentlemen spending a fair fortune, running in every body's debt without the least apprehension of a future reckoning, and at last leaving not one his own children, but possibly those of other people by his means, in starving circumstances; while fellow, whom one would scarce suspect to have human soul, shall perhaps raise a vast estate out of nothing, and be the founder of a family capable of being very considerable in their country, and doing many illustrious services to it. That this observation is just, experience has put beyond all dispute

But though the fact be so evident and glaring, yet the causes of it are still in the dark; which makes me persuade myself, that it would be no unacceptable piece of entertainment to the town, to inquire into the hidden sources of so unaccountable an evil.

"I am, Sir, your most humble Servant."

What this correspondent wonders at, has been matter of admiration ever since there was any such thing as human life. Horace reflects upon this inconsistency very agreeably in the character of Tigellius, whom he makes a mighty pretender to economy, and tells you, you might one day hear him speak the most philosophic things imaginable concerning being contented with a little, and his contempt of every thing but mere necessities; and in half a week after spend a thousand pounds. When he says this of him with relation to expense, he describes him as unequal to himself in every other circumstance of life. Indeed, if we consider lavish men carefully, we shall find it always proceeds from a certain incapacity of possessing themselves, and finding enjoyment in their own minds. Mr. Dryden has expressed this very excellently in the character of Zimri:

A man so various that he seem'd to be Not one, but all mankind's epitome.
Stiff in opinion, always in the wrong,
Was every thing by starts, and nothing long!
But in the course of one revolving moon,
Was chymist, fiddler, statesman, and buffoon.
Then all for women, painting, rhyming, drinking, Besides ten thousand freaks that died in thinking; Bless'd madman, who could every hour employ In something new to wish, or to enjoy!
In squandering wealth was his peculiar art, Nothing went unrewarded but desert.

This loose state of the soul hurries the extravagant from one pursuit to another; and the reason that his expenses are greater than another's, is, that his wants are also more numerous. But what makes so many go on in this way to their lives' end, is, that they certainly do not know how contemptible they are in the eyes of the rest of mankind, or, rather, that indeed they are not so contemptible as they deserve. Tully says, it is the greatest of wickedness to lessen your paternal estate. And if a man would thoroughly consider how much worse than banishment it must be to his child, to ride by the estate which should have been his, had it not been for his father's injustice to him, he would be smitten with the reflection more deeply than can be understood by any but one who is a father. Sure there can be nothing more afflicting, than to think it had been happier for his son to have been born of any other man living than himself.

It is not perhaps much thought of, but it is certainly a very important lesson, to learn how to enjoy ordinary life, and to be able to relish your being without the transport of some passion, or gratification of some appetite. For want of this capacity, the world is filled with whetters, tipplers, cutters, sippers, and all the numerous train of those who, for want of thinking, are forced to be ever exercising their feeling or tasting. It would be hard on this occasion to mention the harmless smokers of tobacco, and takers of snuff.

The slower part of mankind, whom my correspondent wonders should get estates, are the more immediately formed for that pursuit. They can expect distant things without impatience, because they are not carried out of their way either by violent passion, or keen appetite to any thing. To men addicted ion; to such entertainment

one who com
"No thanks
would have n
T.

No. 223.] T

O suavis an Antehac ful

O sweet soul
when your rem

WHEN I
multitudes of Greece and I
ocean, in wh swallowed up maged, some while some ha
but the numb

Apparent rari

One here and

Among th
none whose Sappho. The
which is per nary charac
those great works when t is left of the thoughts, wit
conceits, and modern lyric
seems to hav
She felt the p it in all its authors the pared to Cae nothing but f
that is given benefit of m
filled with su
that it migh
them a readi

An incomp
great calamit
perately in l Sicily, in pu self thither o
island, and o
made the H which I shall ineffectual f
prayed for Sappho so tr
sion, that al
price.

Tære wa Leucate, on dedicated to A despairing lo
afterward to precipice int taken up a
the Lover's had been in to so dreadfu often receive
sentiments

BRITISH ESSAYISTS.

we observed Sappho tried
of Sappho,
I shall sub-
at me by a inter-piece
The reader
which is so ode he has k (besides er) has se-
ch are not
d, that the
and senti-
all the ease of the ladies riting prac-
they may auty, with-

wonder, that these two finished pieces have never been attempted before by any of our own countrymen. But the truth of it is, the compositions of the ancients, which have not in them any of those unnatural witticisms that are the delight of ordinary readers, are extremely difficult to render into another tongue, so as the beauties of the original may not appear weak and faded in the translation.—C.

No. 224.] FRIDAY, NOVEMBER 16, 1711.

Fulgente trahit constrictos gloria curru Non minus ignotos generosa— Hos. 1 Sat. vi. 22 Chain'd to her shining car, Fame draws along With equal whirl the great and vulgar throng.

If we look abroad upon the great multitude of mankind, and endeavour to trace out the principles of action in every individual, it will, I think, seem highly probable, that ambition runs through the whole species, and that every man, in proportion to the vigour of his complexion, is more or less actuated by it. It is, indeed, no uncommon thing to meet with men, who by the natural bent of their inclinations, and without the discipline of philosophy, aspire not to the heights of power and grandeur; who never set their hearts upon a numerous train of clients and dependencies, nor other gay appendages of greatness; who are contented with a competency, and will not molest their tranquillity to gain an abundance. But it is not therefore to be concluded that such a man is not ambitious; his desires may have cut out another channel, and determined him to other pursuits; the motive, however, may be still the same; and in these cases likewise the man may be equally pushed on with the desire of distinction.

Though the pure consciousness of worthy actions, abstracted from the views of popular applause, be to a generous mind an ample reward, yet the desire of distinction was doubtless implanted in our natures as an additional incentive to exert ourselves in virtuous excellence.

This passion, indeed, like all others, is frequently perverted to evil and ignoble purposes: so that we may account for many of the excellences and follies of life upon the same innate principle, to wit, the desire of being remarkable: for this, as it has been differently cultivated by education, study, and converse, will bring forth suitable effects as it falls in with an ingenuous disposition, or a corrupt mind. It does accordingly express itself in acts of magnanimity or selfish cunning, as it meets with a good or a weak understanding. As it has been employed in embellishing the mind, or adorning the outside, it renders the man eminently praiseworthy or ridiculous. Ambition therefore is not to be confined only to one passion or pursuit; for as the same humours in constitutions, otherwise different, affect the body after different manners, so the same aspiring principle within us sometimes breaks forth upon one object, sometimes upon another.

It cannot be doubted, but that there is as great a desire of glory in a wring of wrestlers or cudgel-players, as in any other more refined competition for superiority. No man that could avoid it, would ever suffer his head to be broken but out of a principle of honour. This is the secret spring that pushes them forward; and the superiority which they gain above the undistinguished many, does more than repair those wounds they have received in the combat. It is Mr. Waller's opinion, that Julius Cæsar, had he not been master of the Roman

y, (in) ade,
ms,
ms;
burn,

nothing very de, wherein chariot upon
enote that it
intended to an eminent
his works, as
of it.
of this great
its kind, and with the fore-
with it in an-cannot but

empire, would, in all probability, have made an excellent wrestler :

Great Julius, on the mountains bred, A flock perhaps or herd had led ;
He that the world subdu'd, had been
But the best wrestler on the green.

That he subdued the world, was owing to the accidents of art and knowledge ; had he not met with those advantages, the same sparks of emulation would have kindled within him, and prompted him to distinguish himself in some enterprise of a lower nature. Since therefore no man's lot is so unalterably fixed in this life, but that a thousand accidents may either forward or disappoint his advancement, it is, methinks, a pleasant and inoffensive speculation, to consider a great man as divested of all the adventitious circumstances of fortune, and to bring him down in one's imagination to that low station of life, the nature of which bears some distant resemblance to that high one he is at present possessed of. Thus one may view him exercising in miniature those talents of nature, which being drawn out by education to their full length, enable him for the discharge of some important employment. On the other hand, one may raise uneducated merit to such a pitch of greatness, as may seem equal to the possible extent of his improved capacity.

Thus nature furnishes man with a general appetite of glory, education determines it to this or that particular object. The desire of distinction is not, I think, in any instance more observable than in the variety of outsides and new appearances, which the modish part of the world are obliged to provide, in order to make themselves remarkable ; for any thing glaring and particular, either in behaviour or apparel, is known to have this good effect, that it catches the eye, and will not suffer you to pass over the person so adorned without due notice and observation. It has likewise, upon this account, been frequently resented as a very great slight, to leave any gentleman out of a lampoon or satire, who has as much right to be there as his neighbour, because it supposes the person not eminent enough to be taken notice of. To this passionate fondness for distinction are owing various frolicsome and irregular practices, as sallying out into nocturnal exploits, breaking of windows, singing of catches, beating the watch, getting drunk twice a day, killing a great number of horses ; with many other enterprises of the like fiery nature ; for certainly many a man is more rakish and extravagant than he would willingly be, were there not others to look on and give their approbation.

One very common, and at the same time the most absurd ambition that ever showed itself in human nature, is that which comes upon a man with experience and old age, the season when it might be expected he should be wisest ; and therefore it cannot receive any of those lessening circumstances which do, in some measure, excuse the disorderly ferments of youthful blood ; I mean the passion for getting money, exclusive of the character of the provident father, the affectionate husband, or the generous friend. It may be remarked, for the comfort of honest poverty, that this desire reigns most in those who have but few good qualities to recommend them. This is a weed that will grow in a barren soil. Humanity, good-nature, and the advantages of a liberal education, are incompatible with avarice. It is strange to see how suddenly this abject passion kills all the noble sentiments and generous ambitions that adorn human nature ;

it renders the husband, a miser ; it is more to the absurd passion of affection of the passions, contrary to the reason it will not be decencies of himself poor, contradicting his they are the being refined passions. It of the secret dignity, all the unfelt when he succeeds near enough the daubing himself out away the real retirement.

It may be a man not to ever to quit again with a little moved fears, there in an unknown story, sessed himself turned upon spirits in the to remain aiming at a downwards, by some low off the top it to grow up grow, but w man indeed narrow view applause of solid content deserves to but he who mind is so of his count praise which and values seconded by mind ; who Providence would will means to a such a man it is a virtue deavour that to his will.

The man into the world ing great before to be untainted that so the not take an unworthy and philoso sions, as to

BRITISH ESSAYISTS.

pointed out er, it is no
storms and as, and not would be, it on to us in er mistaken
of our own

sider it no airs of this great vene-
sions, and
l men, and rder of the oom to play
animates to their effects
l ambition,

R 17, 1711.
v. Sat. x. 365.

men were ference be-of the fool.
ss extra-
which pass that the first for convercommunicating indifferently n, however,
tween inti-
wisest men indeed the
at thinking

d a precept
man should
, as might d with his became his
hurt him.
our beha-
reasonable,
part of it,
friend, sa-
, and would res of life, on with a d is turned calls him,*
st enough
end, rather so confided

words, but is like an d direct us

ties in the
as discre-
e to all the oper times
tage of the Without it, learning is pedantry, and wit impertinence; virtue itself looks like weakness: the best parts only qualify a man to be more sprightly in errors, and active to his own prejudice.

Nor does discretion only make a man the master of his own parts, but of other men's. The discreet man finds out the talents of those he converses with, and knows how to apply them to proper uses. Accordingly, if we look into particular communities and divisions of men, we may observe that it is the discreet man, not the witty, nor the learned, nor the brave, who guides the conversation, and gives measures to the society. A man with great talents, but void of discretion, is like Polyphemus in the fable, strong and blind, endued with an irresistible force, which for want of sight is of no use to him.

Though a man has all other perfections, and wants discretion, he will be of no great consequence in the world; but if he has this single talent in perfection, and but a common share of others, he may do what he pleases in his particular station of life.

At the same time that I think discretion the most useful talent a man can be master of, I look upon cunning to be the accomplishment of little, mean, ungenerous minds. Discretion points out the noblest ends to us, and pursues the most proper and laudable methods of attaining them. Cunning has only private selfish aims, and sticks at nothing which may make them succeed. Discretion has large and extended views, and like a well-formed eye, commands a whole horizon. Cunning is a kind of short-sightedness, that discovers the minutest objects which are near at hand, but is not able to discern things at a distance. Discretion, the more it is discovered, gives a greater authority to the person who possesses it. Cunning, when it is once detected, loses its force, and makes a man incapable of bringing about even those events which he might have done, had he passed only for a plain man. Discretion is the perfection of reason, and a guide to us in all the duties of life: cunning is a kind of instinct, that only looks out after our immediate interests and welfare. Discretion is only found in men of strong sense and good understandings: cunning is often to be met with in brutes themselves, and in persons who are but the fewest removes from them. In short, cunning is only the mimic of discretion, and may pass upon weak men, in the same manner as vivacity is often mistaken for wit, and gravity for wisdom.

The cast of mind which is natural to a discreet man, makes him look forward into futurity, and consider what will be his condition millions of ages hence, as well as what it is at present. He knows that the misery or happiness which are reserved for him in another world, lose nothing of their reality by being at so great distance from him. The objects do not appear little to him because they are remote. He considers that those pleasures and pains which lie hid in eternity, approach nearer to him every moment, and will be present with him in their full weight and measure, as much as those pains and pleasures which he feels at this very instant. For this reason he is careful to secure to himself that which is the proper happiness of his nature, and the ultimate design of his being. He carries his thoughts to the end of every action, and considers the most distant as well as the most immediate effects of it. He supersedes every little prospect of gain and advantage which offers itself here, if he does not find it consistent with his views of an hereafter. In a word, his hopes are full of immortality,

BRITISH ESSAYISTS.

ook this oc-
on, a work
to behold,
sentiments
compassion,
of a better.
can do our rit who ap-
which gene-
nity of this
t behaviour
do not lose stage in the paintings,
of the pic-
y great per-performances
ngle figures.
n the pieces
on on Wed-aving heard
ght of him
ealing, and ole painter)
me into the
I should lose in omitting

R 20, 1711.

o
e?
o hgh,
away,
gay.—THROCK-mention of h I find has of my cor-
his leap was
of Leucas.
Acarnania,
land, which
and washed
ded from the Ionian sea.
whence the Leucate. If
e island and he will find
as under the omontory of
St. Mauro.
uity, I must efixed to my hepherds ad-
the following
me! wretch I'll throw off rt of the sea
e fisherman.
life, I know
leave it with lace, which was not the some other ave had the e interpret-
bing further
since he re-
by adding,

that if he should escape with life he knows his mistress would be pleased with it: which is, according to our interpretation, that she would rejoice any way to get rid of a lover who was so troublesome to her.

After this short preface, I shall present my reader with some letters which I have received upon this subject. The first is sent me by a physician.

"MR. SPECTATOR,

"The lover's leap, which you mention in your 223rd paper, was generally, I believe, a very effectual cure for love, and not only for love, but for all other evils. In short, Sir, I am afraid it was such a leap as that which Hero took to get rid of her passion for Leander. A man is in no danger of breaking his heart, who breaks his neck to prevent it. I know very well the wonders which ancient authors relate concerning this leap; and in particular, that very many persons who tried it, escaped not only with their lives but their limbs. If by this means they got rid of their love, though it may in part be ascribed to the reasons you give for it; why may not we suppose that the cold bath, into which they plunged themselves, had also some share in their cure? A leap into the sea, or into any creek of salt waters, very often gives a new motion to the spirits, and a new turn to the blood; for which reason we prescribe it in distempers which no other medicine will reach. I could produce a quotation out of a very venerable author, in which the frenzy produced by love is compared to that which is produced by the biting of a mad dog. But as this comparison is a little too coarse for your paper, and might look as if it were cited to ridicule the author who has made use of it, I shall only hint at it; and desire you to consider whether, if the frenzy produced by these two different causes be of the same nature, it may not very properly be cured by the same means.

"I am, Sir,

"Your most humble Servant, and Well-wisher,
"ÆSCULAPIUS."

"MR. SPECTATOR,

"I am a young woman crossed in love. My storis very long and melancholy. To give you the heads of it:—A young gentleman, after having made his applications to me for three years together and filled my head with a thousand dreams of happiness, some few days since married another. Pray tell me in what part of the world your promontory lies, which you call The Lover's Leap, and whether one may go to it by land? But, alas! I am afraid it has lost its virtue, and that a woman of our time would find no more relief in taking such a leap than in singing a hymn to Venus. So that I must cry out with Dido in Dryden's Virgil:

Ah! cruel heav'n, that made no cure for love!"

"Your disconsolate Servant,

"ATHENALS."

"MISTER SPICATUR,

"My heart is so full of loves and passions for Mrs. Gwinifrid, and she is so pettish and overruled with cholers against me, that if I had the good happiness to have my dwelling (which is placed by a great grandfather upon the bottom of a hill) no farther distance but twenty mile from the Lover's Leap, I would indeed endeavour to break my neck upon it on purpose. Now, good Mister Spicatur of Crete Britain you must know it there is in Cassarvonshire a very pig mountain, the glory of Wales, which is named Penmainmaure, and you must also know, it is no great journey on foot from me; but the road is stony and bad for shoes. Now there is upon the forehead of this mountain a very high rock (like a parish steeple), that cometh a huge deal over the sea; so when I am in my melancholies, and I do throw myself from it, I do desire my very good friend to tell me in his Spicatur, if I shall be cure of my grievous lofes; for there is the sea clear as glass, and as green as a leek. Then likewise if I be drown and preak my neck, if Mrs. Gwinifrid will not lose me afterward. Pray be speedy in your answers, for I am in crete haste, and it is my tesires to do any busness without loss of time. I remain with cordial affections, your ever loving friend,

" DAVYD AP SHENKYN.

"P. S. My law-suits have brought me to London, but I have lost my causes; and so have made my resolutions to go down and leap before the frosts begin: for I am apt to take colds."

Ridicule, perhaps, is a better expedient against love than sober advice, and I am of opinion that Hudibras and Don Quixote may be as effectual to cure the extravagances of this passion, as any of the old philosophers. I shall therefore publish very speedily the translation of a little Greek manuscript, which is sent me by a learned friend. It appears to have been a piece of those records which were kept in the little temple of Apollo, that stood upon the promontory of Leucate. The reader will find it to be a summary account of several persons who tried the lover's leap, and of the success they found in it. As there seem to be in it some anachronisms, and deviations from the ancient orthography, I am not wholly satisfied myself that it is authentic, and not rather the production of one of those Grecian sophists, who have imposed upon the world several spurious works of this nature. I speak this by way of precaution, because I know there are several writers of uncommon erudition, who would not fail to expose my ignorance, if they caught me tripping in a matter of so great moment.—C.

No. 228.] WEDNESDAY, NOVEMBER 21, 1711.

Percunctatorem fugito, nam garrulus idem est.
HOR. 1 Ep. xviii. 69.

Th' inquisitive will blab; from such refrain:
Their leaky ears no secret can retain.—SHARP.

THERE is a creature who has all the organs of speech, a tolerably good capacity for conceiving what is said to it, together with a pretty proper behaviour in all the occurrences of common life; but naturally very vacant of thought in itself, and therefore forced to apply itself to foreign assistances. Of this make is that man who is very inquisitive. You may often observe, that though he speaks as good sense as any man upon any thing with which he is well acquainted, he cannot trust to the range of his own fancy to entertain himself upon that foundation, but goes on still to new inquiries. Thus, though you know he is fit for the most polite conversation, you shall see him very well contented to sit by a jockey, giving an account of the many revolutions in his horse's health, what potion he made him take, how that agreed with him, how afterward he came to his stomach and his exercise, or any the like impertinence; and be as well pleased as if you talked to him on the most important truths. This humour is far it may sub falls in with which is you

that there is
of different ply each oth
day to sit in man look w proach of on utterance sat leaning on h
nance, he b
to-day. I c but I slept cold or no, I shoes thick
coughed all t tom of wash
cold water,
entering that but I take no
Most of our e and our faces
cold as othe well to an Ed go naked; "

I observed general inquisitiveness could have been to another person next man who was just in cold water verbatim all is, the inquisitive they do not but merely to channels through is spoken at the behaviour, may be for they are supply them have said before account of a that can arrive are more part it, or I have room for the curiously, and was said by a

I have not than in a fat to have an ac
hours; if it b there cannot covers in sec steps. But t sant when th
wholly proper
in itself indif
well-dressed
this species i gree. I cou aunt;" then
mother's side
"His father
swer, "Not heels to his s
As the inq
from a vaca

BRITISH ESSAYISTS.

communicate
of inquiry
icative; but n, need put e contented
When there
—Thus the as “This s many spe-
the event,”
as mere ex-

nour accomowing what n the world
mind which ur and plea-
ed character mere Spec-
or self-intemagazine of ertain when one were to ality to the sentiments,
ould it not aginable to ng mankind
their secret
ir nightcaps

ous, the Ro-ions into so
ing, and so roceed. To ous servant,
him with a
voice; who,
be high, im-
ch, 'tis said,
alm.
y frequently
should have nce we find reserved his b, methinks,
ave revived
own credit. s are so fond take it well granting this have a very
wn defence.
d the noise
ate long va-
I have at e artist (who ompleted my ue to furnish instruments ses, or carry time I shall who I know this instru-
e letters, in
s, r, but that I u to accept or you with erviceable to you, since as you are silent yourself, you are most open to the insults of the noisy.

“I am, Sir, &c.

“W. B.”

“I had almost forgot to inform you, that as an improvement in this instrument, there will be a particular note, which I shall call a hush-note; and this is to be made use of against a long story, swearing, obscenity, and the like.” T

No. 229.] THURSDAY, NOVEMBER 22, 1711.

—Spirat adhuc amor,

Vivuntque commissa calores

Æolus fidibus puella.—HOR. 4 Od. ix. 4

Nor Sappho's amorous flames decay;

Her living songs preserve their charming art,

Her verse still breathes the passions of her heart.

FRANCH.

AMONG the many famous pieces of antiquity which are still to be seen at Rome, there is the trunk of a statue which has lost the arms, legs, and head; but discovers such an exquisite workmanship in what remains of it, that Michael Angelo declared he had learned his whole art from it. Indeed he studied it so attentively, that he made most of his statues, and even his pictures, in that gusto, to make use of the Italian phrase; for which reason this maimed statue is still called Michael Angelo's school.

A fragment of Sappho, which I design for the subject of this paper, is in as great reputation among the poets and critics, as the mutilated figure above mentioned is among the statuaries and painters. Several of our countrymen, and Mr. Dryden in particular, seem very often to have copied after it in their dramatic writings, and in their poems upon love.

Whatever might have been the occasion of this ode, the English reader will enter into the beauties of it, if he supposes it to have been written in the person of a lover sitting by his mistress. I shall set to view three different copies of this beautiful original; the first is a translation by Catullus, the second by Monsieur Boileau, and the last by a gentleman whose translation of the Hymn to Venus has been so deservedly admired.*

AD LESBIAM.

Ille mi par esse deo videtur,

Ille, si fas est, superare divos,

Qui sedens adversus identidem te Spectat, et audit.

Dulce ridentem: misero quod omnis

Eripit sensus mihi: nam simul te Lesbia, adspexi, nihil est super mi.

Quod loquer amena.

Lingua sed torpet: tenues sub aribus

Flamma dimanat: sonitu suapte

Tinniant aures: gemina teguntur lamina nocte.

My learned reader will know very well the reason why one of these verses is printed in Italic letters; and if he compares this translation with the original, will find that the three first stanzas are rendered almost word for word, and not only with the same elegance, but with the same short turn of expression which is so remarkable in the Greek, and * Ambrose Philips.

† It is wanting in the old copies, and has been supplied, conjecture as above. But in a curious edition of Catullus, published at Venice in 1738, said to be printed from an ancient newly discovered, this line is given thus:—“Vocis loquenda so peculiar to the Sapphic ode. I cannot imagine for what reason Madam Dacier has told us, that this ode of Sappho is preserved entire in Longinus, since it is manifest to any one who looks into that author's quotation of it, that there must at least have been another stanza, which is not transmitted to us.

The second translation of this fragment which I shall here cite, is that of Monsieur Boileau.

Heureux ! qui pres de toi, pour toi seule soupire :
Qui jouit du plaisir de t'entendre parler :
Qui te voit quelquefois doucement lui sourire :
Les dieux, dans son bonheur, peuvent-ils l'égaler ?

Je sens de veine en veine une subtile flamme Courir par tout mon corps, si-tôt que je le vois :
Et dans les doux transports, ou s'égare mon ame, Je ne saurois trouver de langue, ni de voix.

Un image confus se repand sur ma vue, Je n'entens plus, je tombe en de douces langueurs ;
Et pale, sans haleine, interdite, esperdue, Un frisson me saisit, je tremble, je me meurs.

The reader will see that this is rather an imitation than a translation. The circumstances do not lie so thick together and follow one another with that vehemence and emotion as in the original. In short, Monsieur Boileau has given us all the poetry, but not all the passion of this famous fragment. I shall, in the last place, present my reader with the English translation.

Blest as th' immortal gods is he,
The youth who fondly sits by thee, And hears and sees thee all the while Softly speak and sweetly smile.

'Twas this depriv'd my soul of rest, And raised such tumults in my breast ;
For while I gaz'd in transport lost, My breath was gone, my voice was lost :

My bosom glow'd ; the subtle flame Ran quick through all my vital frame ; O'er my dim eyes a darkness hung ;
My ears with hollow murmurs rung.

In dewy damps my limbs were chill'd ;
My blood with gentle horrors thrill'd ;
My feeble pulse forgot to play ;
I fainted, sunk, and dy'd away.

Instead of giving any character of this last translation, I shall desire my learned reader to look into the criticisms which Longinus has made upon the original. By that means he will know to which of the translations he ought to give the preference. I shall only add, that this translation is written in the very spirit of Sappho, and as near the Greek as the genius of our language will possibly suffer.

Longinus has observed, that this description of love in Sappho is an exact copy of nature, and that all the circumstances, which follow one another in such a hurry of sentiments, notwithstanding they appear repugnant to each other, are really such as happen in the frenzies of love.

I wonder that not one of the critics or editors, through whose hands this ode has passed, has taken occasion from it to mention a circumstance related by Phtarch. That author, in the famous story of Antiochus, who fell in love with Stratonice, his mother-in-law, and (not daring to discover his passion) pretended to be confined to his bed by sickness, tells us, that Erasistratus, the physician, found out the nature of his distemper by those symptoms of love which he had learnt from Sappho's writings. Stratonice was in the room of the love-sick prince, when these symptoms discovered themselves to his physician ; and it is probable that they were not very different from a lover sitting ; and that Antiochus is so weak of it, which has

No. 230.]

Homines ad
hominibus dand

Men resemble
good to their fel

HUMAN nature
very beautiful
lights in which inflamed pas
another to p
each other by base and nat dishonest me
society as if even ashamed
with our own behold them
generous reg
sionating ear other's want
tures of the gods to each
power, that ment we hav
being, has b
humanity.

arising in ou
ing of a gen disinterested
instance of which he rec some manne
pleasure to each party c
dred years i

"What

yours, I thin
for a friend
most consid him so, I do though that justice, grav
to me in bu
learning.

ing, are ver
do, than wh
a warmer at
and, though nobility, he
I think mys
and promo
means of ad neither exp
refuse it.
him that me
and I entre
thing of thi
only oblige
not covet it
knowledge

"Mr.

"The re

BRITISH ESSAYISTS.

have given a discounte-
very difficult,
about to un-
h, to instruct t dangerous
ad by them
fety to their noured with r I am not

gn is to reade, though
r the conve-
sc, dancing,
accomplish-
e as proper sant, as the boys are so
e imagined,
with none
dmitted, as among better
r their little versations to rought early lite English
ne tolerable
ves masters
r than those luctance as or to sing ed thus far ething more sh for fine
h to himself
m the best and point ive them a v of geogra-
might best tural to that k of genius,
ng thoughts
riters, could attempting ose exalted
a celebrated
rned world.
e to exercise
at ask more requently in ne methinks especially so frequent
t of genteel
manner of
and doubtpanions, as ingle him-
into such ess instruct-not but it
e plays, to autiful part
r sometimes ophocles, or Milo might
ble judges,
le, and an-aged at the
these noble

amusements, we could hope to see the early dawnings of their imagination daily brighten into sense, their innocence improve into virtue, and their unexperienced good nature directed to a generous love of their country. I am," &c.

T.

No. 231.] SATURDAY, NOVEMBER 24, 1711.

O pudor! O pietas! —MART. viii. 78.

O modesty! O piety!

LOOKING over the letters which I have lately received from my correspondents, I met with the following one, which is written with such a spirit of politeness, that I could not but be very much pleased with it myself, and question not but it will be as acceptable to the reader.

"MR. SPECTATOR,

"You, who are no stranger to public assemblies, cannot but have observed the awe they often strike on such as are obliged to exert any talent before them. This is a sort of elegant distress, to which ingenuous minds are the most liable, and may therefore deserve some remarks in your paper. Many a brave fellow, who has put his enemy to flight in the field, has been in the utmost disorder upon making a speech before a body of his friends at home. One would think there was some kind of fascination in the eyes of a large circle of people, when darting all together upon one person. I have seen a new actor in a tragedy so bound up by it as to be scarce able to speak or move, and have expected he would have died above three acts before the dagger or cup of poison were brought in. It would not be amiss, if such a one were at first introduced as a ghost or statue, until he recovered his spirits, and grew fit for some living part.

"As this sudden desertion of one's self shows a diffidence, which is not displeasing, it implies at the same time the greatest respect to an audience that can be. It is a sort of mute eloquence, which pleads for their favour much better than words could do; and we find their generosity naturally moved to support those who are in so much perplexity to entertain them. I was extremely pleased with a late instance of this kind at the opera of Almahide, in the encouragement given to a young singer,* whose more than ordinary concern on her first appearance, recommended her no less than her agreeable voice and just performance. Mere bashfulness without merit is awkward; and merit without modesty insolent. But modest merit has a double claim to acceptance, and generally meets with as many patrons as beholders.

"I am," &c.

It is impossible that a person should exert himself to advantage in an assembly, whether it be his part either to sing or speak, who lies under too great oppressions of modesty. I remember, upon talking with a friend of mine concerning the force of pronunciation, our discourse led us into the enumeration of the several organs of speech which an orator ought to have in perfection, as the tongue, the teeth, the lips, the nose, the palate, and the wind-pipe: Upon which, says my friend, "You have omitted

* Mrs. Barbier. See a curious account of this lady, in Mr John Hawkins's History of Music, vol. v. p. 154.

most material organ of them all, and that is the rebeck."

But notwithstanding an excess of modesty obstructs the tongue and renders it unfit for its office, the proportion of it is thought so requisite to an orator, that rhetoricians have recommended it to their disciples as a particular in their art. Cicero tells us that he never liked an orator who did not appear in some little confusion at the beginning of his speech, and confesses that he himself never entered upon an oration without trembling and confusion. It is indeed a kind of deference which is due to a great assembly, and seldom fails to raise a benevolence in the audience towards the person who speaks. My correspondent has taken notice that the bravest men often appear timorous on these occasions, as indeed we may observe, that there is generally no creature more impudent than a coward:

—Lingua melior, sed frigida bello Dextera— Vire. Æn. xi. 328.

—Bold at the council-board;
But cautious in the field he shrunk the sword.

DRYDEN.

A bold tongue and a feeble arm are the qualifications of Drances in Virgil; as Homer, to express a man both timorous and saucy, makes use of a kind of point, which is very rarely to be met with in his writings, namely, that he had the eyes of a dog, and the heart of a deer.*

A just and reasonable modesty does not only recommend eloquence, but sets off every great talent which a man can be possessed of. It heightens all his virtues which it accompanies; like the shades in paintings, it raises and rounds every figure, and makes the colours more beautiful, though not so bright as they would be without it.

Modesty is not only an ornament, but also a guard to virtue. It is a kind of quick and delicate lining in the soul which makes her shrink and withdraw herself from every thing that has danger about it. It is such an exquisite sensibility, as warns her to shun the first appearance of every thing which is hurtful.

I cannot at present recollect either the place or time of what I am going to mention; but I have it somewhere in the history of ancient Greece, that the women of the country were seized with an insupportable melancholy, which disposed several of them to make away with themselves. The senate, after having tried many expedients to prevent this disorder, which was so frequent among them, published an edict, that if any woman whatever should lay violent hands upon herself, her corpse should be exposed naked in the street, and dragged out the city in the most public manner. This immediately put a stop to the practice which was before so common. We may see in this instance the strength of female modesty which was able to overcome even the violence of madness and despair. The fear of shame in the fair sex was in our days more prevalent than that of death.

Modesty has so great an influence over our actions, and is in many cases so impregnable a fence to virtue: what can more undermine morality than dissimulation which reigns among the unthinking part of mankind, and treats as unfashionable the most innocent part of our behaviour; which represents impudence as good-breeding, and keeps us always in countenance, not because we are not ashamed, but because we are shameless?

* Æn. i. 285.

Seneca thought that he prescribed and advises us to use modesty on ordinary occasions, themselves; for that when we are in solitude, we should be as we are, and see every thing as it is, without banish modesty from our minds with her half the modesty.

After these reflections, I must observe which justly deserves those persons who sell themselves most upon happens when a reason, and would be surprised at the performance of which an impudent liberal a serious discourse his head after had Decency of behaviour and abhorrence of this set of shame parade their gaiety them to dishonour spirit, such a desperate abject state of nature incapable instances of it in.

There is another makes a man ashamed of his profession, his pride which it was not in his power to resist by any of the he becomes much more than a recompense for them. occasion to exert a imperfections which imperfections which perfection of an eminent who, because his feet with laurels.

No. 232.] MODESTY.

Nihil largiunde gloriæ
By bestowing nothing

My wise and good divides himself all the country. His public, and the manner, and after every manner, he retires a few miles of the his family, and he sure, or rather, he commend each other so quick a vicissitude or takes possession of the whole, he should be him at our club is too with an air of country retreat a companion as I dom fail to make to invite me.

The other day, in a chariot, two or three ty with the d at home,

all starving
ed to part
portunity;
y with the
ble.
go off with eggars, and at the next
e ourselves
ade of the ment. But n the backs
y shall next
er dressed;
like objects
are such as y cannot be l worse fed.
their bread,
l then what
l have for tomers, and advance the
of the gen-

who live by age beggars.
e product of heir value is ch of these e hire them from us are ght that no
ef from the he has first n livelihood
en the pub-
od the defi-sserved, we ude of new reduce the he very life
dear. The eap as pos-
fit upon his do this like on all our eady way to rkets. The cture would
t countries;
y beneficial ests. As so uld produce
erchant and
on beggars,
ease of la-oth." It that the re-
ures by the e no incon-
was some-ade a short
It may e price of atement of out any in-nothing is ers may hap-
the greatest

part of the price of every thing that is useful; and if in proportion with the wages the prices of all other things should be abated, every labourer with less wages would still be able to purchase as many necessities of life; where then would be the inconvenience? But the price of labour may be reduced by the addition of more hands to a manufacture, and yet the wages of persons remain as high as ever. The admirable Sir William Petty has given examples of this in some of his writings: one of them, as I remember, is that of a watch, which I shall endeavour to explain so as shall suit my present purpose. It is certain that a single watch could not be made so cheap in proportion by only one man, as a hundred watches by a hundred; for as there is vast variety in the work, no one person could equally suit himself to all the parts of it; the manufacture would be tedious, and at last but clumsily performed. But if a hundred watches were to be made by a hundred men, the cases may be assigned to one, the dials to another, the wheels to another, the springs to another, and every other part to a proper artist. As there would be no need of perplexing any one person with too much variety, every one would be able to perform his single part with greater skill and expedition; and the hundred watches would be finished in one fourth part of the time of the first one, and every one of them at one-fourth part of the cost, though the wages of every man were equal. The reduction of the price of the manufacture would increase the demand of it; all the same hands would be still employed, and as well paid. The same rule will hold in the clothing, the shipping, and all other trades whatsoever. And thus an addition of hands to our manufactures will only reduce the price of them; the labourer will still have as much wages, and will consequently be enabled to purchase more conveniences of life; so that every interest in the nation would receive a benefit from the increase of our working people.

"Besides, I see no occasion for this charity to common beggars, since every beggar is an inhabitant of a parish, and every parish is taxed to the maintenance of their own poor. For my own part I cannot be mightily pleased with the laws which have done this, which have provided better to feed than employ the poor. We have a tradition from our forefathers, that after the first of those laws was made, they were insulted with that famous song;

Hang sorrow and cast away care,
The parish is bound to find us, &c.

And if we will be so good-natured as to maintain them without work, they can do no less in return than sing us 'The merry Beggars.'

"What then? Am I against all acts of charity? God forbid! I know of no virtue in the Gospel that is in more pathetic expressions recommended to our practice. 'I was hungry, and ye gave me no meat; thirsty, and ye gave me no drink; naked, and ye clothed me not; a stranger, and ye took me not in; sick, and in prison, and ye visited me not.' Our blessed Saviour treats the exercise and neglect of charity towards a poor man, as the performance or breach of this duty towards himself. I shall endeavour to obey the will of my Lord and Master; and therefore if an industrious man shall submit to the hardest labour and coarsest fare, rather than endure the shame of taking relief from the parish, or asking it in the street, this is the hungry, the thirsty, the naked; and I ought to believe, if any man is come hither for shelter against persecution or oppression, this is the stranger, and I ought to take him in. If

man of our own is fallen into the hands and lives in a state of miserable captivity, and in prison; and I should contribute to

I ought to give to an hospital of in-covers as many useful subjects as I can; bestow none of my bounties upon an of idle people; and for the same reason of think it a reproach to me if I had charity from those common beggars. scribe better rules than we are able to e are ashamed not to give into the mis-uns of our country: but at the same time, it think it a reproach worse than that of earing, that the idle and the abandoned in the name of Heaven and all that is xfort from Christian and tender minds a profligate way of life, that is always to d, but never relieved."—Z.

TUESDAY, NOVEMBER 27, 1711.

equam hac sint nostri medicina furoris, is ille malis hominum mitescere discat.

VING. ECL. x. v. 60.

these my sufferings I could ease;
my pains the god of love appease.—DRYDEN.

in this paper discharge myself of the ave made to the public, by obliging them anslation of the little Greek manuscript, id to have been a piece of those records reserved in the temple of Apollo, upon tory of Leucate. It is a short history of Leap, and is inscribed, An account of le and female, who offered up their vows de of the Pythian Apollo in the forty piad, and leaped from the promontory of o the Ionian sea; in order to cure them passion of love.

unt is very dry in many parts, as only the name of the lover who leaped, theaped for, and relating in short, that heured, or killed, or maimed, by the fall. ives the names of so many, who died by ould have looked like a bill of mortality, lated it at full length; I have therefore ridgment of it, and only extracted such assages as have something extraordinary, e case or in the cure, or in the fate of who is mentioned in it. After this short e the account as follows:

he son of Menalcas the Sicilian, leaped a the musician: got rid of his passion s of his right leg and arm, which were he fall.

n love with Daphnis, very much bruised, with life.

the wife of Eschines, being in love with Eschines her husband being in love t (which had made this married couple to one another for several years); both and the wife took the leap by consent; them escaped, and have lived very hap- ever since.

virgin of Thessaly, deserted by Plexip- courtship of three years; she stood upon the promontory for some time, and after sn down a ring, a bracelet, and a little rother presents which she had received pus; she threw herself into the sea, and p alive. rissa, before she leaped, made an offer Cupid in the temple of Apollo.

Simætha, in love with rished in the fall.

Charixus, the brother Rhodope the courtesan, estate upon her, was advi the beginning of his amo to her until he was reduc forsaken by Rhodope, at l leap. Perished in it.

Aridaus, a beautiful yo Praxinoe, the wife of damage, saving only that struck out and his nose a Cleora, a widow of Ep for the death of her husb this leap in order to get r memory: but being arrive there met with Dimmach a short conversation wi thoughts of her leap, and of Apollo.

N.B. Her widow's w hanging up in the western Olphis, the fisherman, h the ear from Thestylis determined to have no mo and escaped with life.

Atalanta, an old maid, years before driven two o to this leap: being now in age, and in love with an o neck in the fall.

Hipparchus, being pass wife, who was enamoured died of his fall; upon whi gallant.

Tettyx, the dancing-mas an Athenian matron, three with great agility, but was Diagoras, the usurer, in he peeped several times o heart misgiving him, he her that evening.

Cinædus, after having e the Pythian records, being person whom he leaped fo discover it, he was set as leap.

Eunica, a maid of Paph with Eurybates. Hurt in N.B. This was the seco

Hesperus, a young mu with his master's daught not coming in soon enoug

Sappho, the Lesbian, in at the temple of Apollo ha ments as white as snow. myrtle on her head, and little musical instrument

After having sung a hymn her garland on one side o on the other. She then t like a Spartan virgin, a spectators, who were anxie fered up vows for her deli forwards to the utmost su where, after having repeat verses, which we could not off the rock with such an before observed in any dangerous leap. Many w that they saw her fall into

others who bottom of her swan as she g in the air the whiteness
not deceive er she might musical and the Lesbians.
had for some ppho, arrived
y evening in t; but hear-
ore him, and nd, he very said to have de upon that

124

126

250

51

69

120

28, 1711.

Sat. ill. 41.

—CREECH.

a story has
circumstances,
destroy the
he narration.
ninent, has
ceeds from occasions. If se an agreed-
d; for which
of our time,
t us right in arm, whether es which are
man should ould not be ut of malice
e and that of n should rise
officious liar,
cause it does
the man who n a fight in d told them
and put the ultation, was sehood; but nians! am I
appy days?"
an acquaint-
some emi-
He is ever Plato said their patients
ful whether usable. His at the cheer-
even diffident
as makes his lie a truth. He will, as if he did not know thing of the circumstance, ask one whom he knows at variance with another, what is the meaning of Mr. Such-a-one, naming his adversary, does not applaud him with that heartiness which formerly he has heard him? "He said, indeed," continues he, "I would rather have that man for my friend than any man in England; but for an enemy—" —This melts the person he talks to, who expects nothing but downright raillery from that side. According as he sees his practice succeed, he goes to the opposite party, and tells him, he cannot imagine how it happens that some people know one another so little; "You spoke with so much coldness of gentleman who said more good of you, than, let me tell you, any man living deserves." The success of one of these incidents was that the next time one of the adversaries spied the other, he hems after him in the public street, and they must crack a bottle at the next tavern, that used to turn out the other's way to avoid one another's eyes. He will tell one beauty she was commended by another, nay, he will say she gave the woman he speaks to the preference in a particular for which she herself is admired. The pleasantest confusion imaginable is made through the whole town by the friend's indirect offices. You shall have a visit returned after half a year's absence, and mutual railing at each other every day of that time. The meet with a thousand lamentations for so long a separation, each party naming herself for the greatest delinquent, if the other can possibly be so good as to forgive her, which she has no reason in the world, but from the knowledge of her goodness, to hope for. Very often a whole train of railings each side tire their horses in setting matters right, which they have said during the war between the parties; and a whole circle of acquaintance are put into a thousand pleasing passions and sentiments instead of the pangs of anger, envy, detraction, and malice.

The worst evil I ever observed this man's falsehood occasion, has been, that he turned detraction into flattery. He is well skilled in the manners of the world, and by overlooking what men really are, he grounds his artifices upon what they have a mind to be. Upon this foundation, if two distant friends are brought together, and the cement seems to be weak, he never rests until he finds new appearances to take off all remains of ill-will, and that by new misunderstandings they are thoroughly reconciled.

"TO THE SPECTATOR."

"SIR,

Devonshire, Nov. 14, 1711

"There arrived in this neighbourhood two days ago one of your gay gentlemen of the town, who being attended at his entry with a servant of his own, besides a countryman he had taken up for guide, excited the curiosity of the village to learn whence and what he might be. The countryman (to whom they applied as most easy of access) knew little more than that the gentleman came from London to travel and see fashions; and was, as he heard say a freethinker.* What religion that might be, he could not tell; and for his own part, if they had in-told him the man was a freethinker, he should have guessed, by his way of talking, he was little better

* The person here alluded to was probably Mr. Toland, who is said by the Examiner to have been the butt of a Tatler and Spectator.

men; excepting only that he had been a gentleman to him, and made him drunk day over and above what they had bargained for. I look upon the simplicity of this, and inquiries with which I shall not trouble myself; much less can I think that of fine wit, and enlarged understandings, reason, to laugh. There is no necessity for a freethinker in Great Britain should know what a freethinker stands for; but it were wished, that they who value themselves on that title, were a little better in what it ought to stand for; and that they persuade themselves a man is really a freethinker, in any tolerable sense, by virtue of his being an atheist, or an inquirer in other distinction. It may be doubted, whether there ever was in nature a slavish, and bigoted generation than the beaux-espri, at present so prevailing in France.

Their pretension to be freethinkers, is an rakes have to be free-livers, and free-men; that is, they can think what they like, and give themselves up to their fancy, shall suggest; they can do as they talk and act, and will not let their wit should be controlled by such things as decency and common sense. Deference, consistency, and all the rules they accordingly disdain, as too precise and formal for men of a liberal education. As far as I could ever learn from their own observation, is a true account of a freethinker. Our visitant here, who on this paper, has brought with him a great deal of common sense, the particulars of which I am not yet acquainted with, but will lose no opportunity of informing myself whether it con- sists of anything worth Mr. Spectator's notice. In time, Sir, I cannot but think it would be of good to mankind, if you would take it into your consideration, and convince the youth of our nation, that licentiousness is not a virtue; or, if such a paradox will not be, that a prejudice towards atheism is not a virtue.

I am, Sir, your most humble Servant,

"PHILOUS."

THURSDAY, NOVEMBER 29, 1711.

Populares
stem strepitus. Hon. Ars Poet. v. 81.
the tumultuous noises of the pit.—Roscommon.

is nothing which lies more within the power of a Spectator than public shows and plays; and as among these there are none which pretend to vie with those elegant entertainments which are exhibited in our theatres, I think it incumbent on me to take notice of that which is remarkable in such numerous assemblies.

I have observed, that of late years there has been a great noise in the upper gallery of the playhouse, when he is pleased with any thing that is said on the stage, expresses his approbation by a knock upon the benches or the wainscot, or he heard over the whole theatre. This is commonly known by the name of the "Trunk-maker in the upper gallery." He is that the blow he gives is a signal to the other spectators that which is of such artisans, or that he is a real trunk-maker, who, in the day's work, used to unbend himself with his hammer and diversions with his hammer, certainly tell. There are so many foolish enough to imagine that the upper gallery, and those strange noises; and it is observed to be louder than the ghost of Hamlet appeared that it is a dumb man, who uttering himself when he sees or hears.

the playhouse thunder, in this manner in the upper gallery, to do upon the roof.

But having made it my business to find out the trunk-maker, I found a large black man whom I saw leaning forward on a huge beam, and paying attention to every thing that was said. He is never seen to smile, or do any thing that pleases him, but with both hands, and lays it on the timber that stands in his way; after which, he resumes his former posture, till such time as he is again at work.

It has been observed, that the most judicious critics are against it. As soon as a play is pressed in the poet, or an actor appears in the actor, he smiles. If the audience does not clap a second time; and if he is awakened, looks round him, and repeats the blow a third time to produce the clap. He so begins the clap of themselves of their applause ratifies it.

He is of so great use to the said a former director of the theatre, to pay his attendance; by one in pay to officiate for him, recovered; but the person laid about him with iron in such wrong places, found out that it was not the trunk-maker.

It has been remarked, that he himself with vigour this applies at the opera; and his appearance was said to have been in the fury of his applause, dozen oaken planks upon the wainscot extremely shabby.

The players do not on the other hand, receive the same perous approbation, but their own cost whatever of once had a thought of an anvil for his use, that a sounding plank, in order

* Thomas Dogget, an excellent many years joint-manager of the Colley Cibber, of whom the account in Cibber's Apology for his

BRITISH ESSAYISTS.

ot have been
tle-drum, the ake notice of hat a person
e the director
eir attention,
to raise my trunk-maker
gil's ruler of a mountain,
the side of it,
cavern in an

aved many a ful actor into e have been the audience hemselves bein the upper actors do not regard it as a e, when it has
t. I know it
e enemies to re bribed 2, or a vicious has no found-nd his admoni-
out his blows
mail upon the ewith he lays e and strength
d author is invery fence and stands within

ay thoughts in our matter of them for the ake the liberty whenever the whenever he a by sickness,
e able-bodied
t, and have a ife, to be fur-
b-tree cudgels ragedy, at the hat this place ng to merit, I has not given dgment, and a
upon occasion,
comment upon
I would have nd Apollo, and nt office, that d by our pos-

ER 30, 1711.

Poet. v. 398.
in.

rect a manner important case
to observe upon the peculiarity in the youth of Great Britain of railing and laughing at that institution; and when they fall into it, from a profligate habit of mind, being insensible of the satisfaction in that way of life, and treating their wives with the most barbarous disrespect.

"Particular circumstances, and cast of temper, must teach a man the probability of mighty uneasinesses in that state; (for unquestionably some there are whose very dispositions are strangely averse to conjugal friendship) but no one, I believe, is by his own natural complexion prompted to tease and torment another for no reason but being nearly allied to him. And can there be any thing more base, or serve to sink a man so much below his own distinguishing characteristic (I mean reason), than returning evil for good in so open a manner, as that of treating a helpless creature with unkindness, who has had so good an opinion of him, as to believe what he said relating to one of the greatest concerns of life, by delivering her happiness in this world to his care and protection? Must not that man be abandoned even to all manner of humanity, who can deceive a woman with appearances of affection and kindness, for no other end but to torment her with more ease and authority? Is any thing more unlike a gentleman, than when his honour is engaged for the performing his promises, because nothing but that can oblige him to it, to become afterward false to his word, and be alone the occasion of misery to one whose happiness he but lately pretended was dearer to him than his own? Ought such a one to be trusted in his common affairs? or treated but as one whose honesty consisted only in his incapacity of being otherwise?

"There is one cause of this usage no less absurd than common, which takes place among the more unthinking men; and that is, the desire to appear to their friends free and at liberty, and without those trammels they have so much ridiculed. To avoid this they fly into the other extreme, and grow tyrants that they may seem masters. Because as uncontrollable command of their own actions is a certain sign of entire dominion, they won't so much as recede from the government even in one muscle of their faces. A kind look they believe would be fawning, and a civil answer yielding the superiority. To this must we attribute an austerity they betake in every action. What but this can put a man out of humour in his wife's company, though he is as distinguishingly pleasant every where else? The bitterness of his replies, and the severity of his frowns to the tenderest of wives, clearly demonstrate that an ill-grounded fear of being thought too submissive, is at the bottom of this, as I am willing to call it, affected moroseness; but if it be such, we put on to convince his acquaintance of his entire dominion, let him take care of the consequence, which will be certain and worse than the present evil; if seeming indifference will by degrees grow into contempt, and if it doth not wholly alienate the affection of his wife for ever from him, make him and her more miserable than if it really did!

"However inconsistent it may appear, to thought a well-bred person has no small share in this clownish behaviour. A discourse therefore relating to good breeding towards a loving and tender wife, would be of great use to this sort of gentlemen. Could you but once convince them, that to be civil at least is not beneath the character of a gentleman, nor even tender affection towards one who would make it reciprocal, betrays any softness or effeminate may that the most masculine disposition need be ashamed of; could you satisfy them of the generosity of voluntary civility; and the greatness of soul that is conspicuous in benevolence without immediate obligations; could you recommend to people's practice the saying of the gentleman quoted in one of your speculations, 'That he thought it incumbent upon him to make the inclinations of a woman of merit go along with her duty;' could you, I say, persuade these men of the beauty and reasonableness of this sort of behaviour, I have so much charity, for some of them at least, to believe you would convince them of a thing they are only ashamed to allow. Besides, you would recommend that state in its truest, and consequently its most agreeable colours; and the gentlemen, who have for any time been such professed enemies to it, when occasion should serve, would return you their thanks for assisting their interest in prevailing over their prejudices. Marriage in general would by this means be a more easy and comfortable condition; the husband would be no where so well satisfied as in his own parlour, nor the wife so pleasant as in the company of her husband. A desire of being agreeable in the lover would be increased in the husband, and the mistress be more amiable by becoming the wife. Besides all which, I am apt to believe we should find the race of men grow wiser as their progenitors grew kinder, and the affection of their parents would be conspicuous in the wisdom of their children; in short, men would in general be much better humoured than they are, did they not so frequently exercise the worst turns of their temper where they ought to exert the best."

"MR. SPECTATOR,

"I am a woman who left the admiration of this whole town to throw myself (for love of wealth) into the arms of a fool. When I married him, I could have had any one of several men of sense who languished for me; but my case is just. I believed my superior understanding would form him into a respectable creature. But, alas! my spouse has cunning and suspicion, the inseparable companions of little minds; and every attempt I make to divert, by putting on an agreeable air, a sudden cheerfulness, or kind behaviour, he looks upon as the first step towards an insurrection against his undeserved dominion over me. Let every one who is still to choose, and hopes to govern a fool, remember

"TRISTISSA."

"MR. SPECTATOR, St. Martin's, Nov. 25.

"This is to complain of an evil practice which I think very well deserves a redress, though you have as yet taken any notice of it; if you mention in your paper, it may perhaps have a very good effect. What I mean is, the disturbance some people give to others at church, by their repetition of the prayers after the minister; and that not only the prayers, but also in the absolution; and the commandments fare no better, which are in a particular manner the priest's office: this I have known me in so audible a manner, that sometimes their voices have been as loud as his. As little as you would think it, this is frequently done by people seemingly devout. This irreligious inadvertency is a thing extremely offensive: but I do not recommend it as a thing I give you liberty to ridicule, I hope it may be amended by the bare mention.

"Sir, your very humble Servant,

"T. S."

No. 237.] S

Vita carente

They that as

It is very pleasure which state, will at the Divine W and a discovery of Providence time. Nothing adapted to the curiosity is on appetites imp one of our most perpetual success both these, in then be laid on perior spirits, delightful a pr

It is not im the punishment may consist no vilege, but in l vastly increas to them. In t shall, perhaps, them into laby and uncertain state. Milton h reasoning toge torments, and amidst their v perly have desc without that ca so judiciously

Others ap

In thought

Of provid

First fate,

And found

In our present our minds are a falsehood: and views imperfect must meet with mankind in the know, their pos accordingly.

From hence tive has so long accounting for t and evil to the world. From b plaints of so ma the wise and the perity, which is foolish; that res loss what to pro pensation.

Plato expressed the poets, which authors of injustice, that what man, whether p things which see death conduce t serve how agreea delivered by grea

* Par

† Spe

BRITISH ESSAYISTS.

in which he voies, to show and mentions othing would never known to the indulwhich often the Divine
ould have his tments, and
and improve
philosopher
that there is the regard of ave man su-
adds, that it
to look down
ruins of his

reasonable, if obation, and assigned often

here is, that tion to judge
cts, since but ven that little to the elegant art, and as in red that Pro-
ole system of cannot dis-
en incidents
by losing so ings become parts of the ute, may yet
some other
is eye before me," are set
hose events,
o accuse his
f things both isdom. And n, since it is larity to mat-
ecedents nor e end.

is abstracted
radition con-
ad of parable,
That great a voice from ere, in a con-
was admitted
ncerning his midst of this
to look down
he mountain er, at which a
nk. He was to the same ch the soldier
with it. Imf man, weary
quenched his he side of the se returns to live quod in sa-

search for it, and demands it of the old man, who affirms he had not seen it, and appeals to Heaven in witness of his innocence. The soldier, not believing his protestations, kills him. Moses fell on his face with horror and amazement, when the Divine voice thus prevented his expostulation: "Be not surprised, Moses, nor ask why the Judge of the whole earth has suffered this thing to come to pass. The child is the occasion that the blood of the old man is spilt; but know that the old man whom thou sawest was the murderer of that child's father."

No. 238.] MONDAY, DECEMBER 3, 1711.

Nequiquam populo bibulas donaveris aures;

Resque quod non es ——— PRÆFAT. Sat. IV. 30.

No more to flattering crowds thine ear incline;

Eager to drink the praise which is not thine.

BAYNE.

Among all the diseases of the mind, there is not one more epidemic or more pernicious than the love of flattery. For as where the juices of the body are prepared to receive the malignant influence, there the disease rages with most violence; so in this distemper of the mind, where there is ever a propensity and inclination to suck in the poison, it cannot be but that the whole order of reasonable action must be overturned; for, like music, it

So softens and disarms the mind, That not one arrow can resistance find.

First, we flatter ourselves, and then the flattery of others is sure of success. It awakens our self-love within, a party which is ever ready to revolt from our better judgment, and join the enemy without. Hence it is, that the profusion of favours we so often see poured upon the parasite, are represented to us by our self-love, as justice done to the man who so agreeably reconciled us to ourselves. When we are overcome by such soft insinuations and ensnaring compliances, we gladly recompense the artifices that are made use of to blind our reason, and which triumph over the weaknesses of our temper and inclinations.

But were every man persuaded from how mean and low a principle this passion is derived, there can be no doubt that the person who should attempt to gratify it, would then be as contemptible as he is now successful. It is the desire of some quality we are not possessed of, or inclination to be something we are not, which are the causes of our giving ourselves up to that man who bestows upon us the characters and qualities of others; which perhaps suit us as ill, and were as little designed for our wearing, as their clothes. Instead of going out of our own complexional nature into that of others, it were a better and more laudable industry to improve our own, and instead of a miserable copy become a good original; for there is no temper, or disposition, so rude and untractable, but may in its own peculiar cast and turn be brought to some agreeable use in conversation, or in the affairs of life. A person of a rougher deportment, and less tied up to the usual ceremonies of behaviour, will like Manly in the play,* please by the grace which Nature gives to every action wherein she is complacited with; the brisk and lively will not want their admirers, and even a more reserved and melancholic temper may at some times be agreeable.

When there is not vanity enough awake in a man to undo him, the flatterer stirs up that dormant weakness.

* Wycherley's comedy of the Plain Dealer.

inspire him with merit enough to be a

But if flattery be the most sordid act so complied with, the art of praising justly commendable; for it is laudable to praise well; it once and the same time give immortality, we it themselves as a reward. Both are the one whilst he receives the recompense the other whilst he shows he knows how to it; but above all, that man is happy in who, like a skilful painter, retains the feeble complexion, but still softens the picture most agreeable likeness.

can hardly, I believe, be imagined a more pleasure, than that of praise unmixed with ability of flattery. Such was that which was enjoyed, when, the night before a witness of some sincere mark of the esteem given for him, he is described by Tacitus in a disguise to the discourse of a soldier, and up in the fruition of his glory, whilst redoubled sincerity they praised his noble heroic mind, his affability, his valour, consequences in war. How must a man have full-blown with joy in such an article of this? What a spur and encouragement succeed in those steps which had already him to acquire a taste of the greatest of pleasures?

It sometimes happens that even enemies and enemies bestow the sincerest marks of esteem by least design it. Such afford a greater as extorted by merit, and freed from all of favour or flattery. Thus it is with Malvolio his wit, learning, and discernment, but with an alloy of envy, self-love, and de-

Malvolio turns pale at the mirth and pour of the company, if it centre not in his he grows jealous and displeased when he be the only person admired, and looks commendations paid to another as a de- from his merit, and an attempt to lessen fortify he affects; but by this very method, as such praise as can never be suspected of

His uneasiness and distaste are so many certain signs of another's title to that glory, and has the mortification to find himself used of.

A name is fitly compared to a precious ointment when we are praised with skill and de- it is indeed the most agreeable perfume; but strongly admitted into the brain of a less and happy texture, it will, like too strong, overcome the senses, and prove pernicious nerves it was intended to refresh. A ge- mind is of all others the most sensible of ad dispraise; and a noble spirit is as much sed with its due proportion of honour and as it is depressed by neglect and con- it is only persons far above the common who thus affected with either of these ex- to a thermometer, it is only the purest and most refined spirit that is either contracted by the benignity or inclemency of the tribulations which you have lately given me speak in some of your last papers, a the occasion of my looking into some of your papers, whom I chanced on a collection of letters which pa- netus. Of all the rec- there can be nothing p and polite; each letter venture, which is told v guage, and heightened There are several of such wide deviations style so far differing translator seems rather expressing his own sen- endeavoured to render the following translati- meaning of the Greek added a few words to m sit together a little bet- wise have done. The that of Pygmalion and the thoughts are of the written in a kind of po-

THE SPECTATOR,

" PHILOPINA

" Never was a man- tastical a passion as m- tiful woman, and am d- ture. My own skill ha- dart of Venus, but my d- me. Ah, me! with wh- to adore my own idol! every one must as im- praises the picture, and equal to my art! But Have there not been n- passions than mine? n- sentations of Phædra. Phædra was unhappy i- was monstrous; and w- beloved likeness, he d- which ever eluded his d- presented Narcissus to- that and him thirsting I am yet less unhappy- tually, and if I touch- teous form, but she look- sits in the charming e- One would swear that- ing out, and that on- sound. How often ha- credulity, heightened i- whisper me! and when- often have I taken my- cheeks and eyes, and- brace, whilst she (as t- held her tongue the- madman that I am, sh- representation only of- hair, and thus waste m- shadow? Ah, laurel at- reality; for see her b- lustre, and she seems- reproaches. Oh, may- this form, that when- nature with that of art, to choose, and be long- uncertainty!"—T. B.

By Tom Brown and others

and

ER 4, 1711.

EN. vi. 86.

with considera debate whichdispute, as our kind of wildmethod of ar-question upon out of his ownThis way of corner, seizes
ake an escape,
ion.of attack, and eapons, called of dispute you
advances; in g and contrahe says. So-stotle by force.
other sword inany years, car-insomuch that turies laid out
the good sense
t an infinitudewas no end of kind of argu-
mood or figure mentum Basir Baculinum), English word
ble to confute down. It was ebates, first to ward to betake n time as they eir gainsayers.
to make use of s used to entains the name gentleman, a when he was a nes at the head lled a body of gh-street, until elter into theirr in Erasmus's t upon the re-
universities in and Trojans.
ortal enmity to uch that if they ey did not fail
himself had, it the hands of a
with so manyated doctor of the and from his op-Aquinas, gave rise to the Thomists,

amous logician of blows and buffets that he never forgot their host-ties to his dying day.

There is a way of managing an argument as much unlike the former, which is made use of in states and communities, when they draw up a hundred thousand disputants on each side, and combat one another by dint of sword. A certain grammarian* was so sensible of his strength in the way of reasoning, that he writ upon his great gun—Ratio ultima regum, "The logic of kings;" but God be thanked, he is now pretty well baffled at his own weapons. When one has to do with a philosopher of this kind, one should remember the old gentleman's saying, who had been engaged in an argument with one of the Roman emperors.† Upon his friends telling him that he wondered he would give up the question, when he had visibly the better of the dispute; "I am never ashamed," says he, "to be confuted by one who is master of fifty legions."

I shall but just mention another kind of reasoning which may be called arguing by poll; and another which is of equal force, in which wagers are made use of as arguments, according to the celebrated line in Hudibras.‡

But the most notable way of managing a controversy, is that which we may call arguing by torture. This is a method of reasoning which has been made use of with the poor refugees, and which was so fashionable in our country during the reign of Queen Mary, that in a passage of an author quoted by Monsieur Bayle, it is said the price of wood was raised in England, by reason of the executions that were made in Smithfield.§ These disputants convince their adversaries with a sorites,|| commonly called a pile of faggots. The rack is also a kind of syllogism which has been used with good effect, and has made multitudes of converts. Men were formerly disputed out of their doubts, reconciled to truth by force of reason, and won over to opinion by the candour, sense, and ingenuity of those who had the right on their side; but this method of conviction operated too slowly. Pain was found to be much more enlightening than reason. Every scruple was looked upon as obstinacy, and not to be removed but by engines invented for that purpose. In a word, the application of whips, racks, gibbets, galleys, dungeons, fire and faggot, in a dispute, was he looked upon as popish refinements upon the old heathen logic.

There is another way of reasoning which seldom fails, though it be of a quite different nature to that I have last mentioned. I mean, convincing a man by ready money, or as it is ordinarily called, bribing a man to an opinion. This method has often proved successful, when all the others have been made use of to no purpose. A man who is furnished with arguments from the mint, will convince his antagonist much sooner than one who draws them from reason and philosophy. Gold is a wonderful cleaver of the understanding; it dissipates every doubt and scruple in an instant; accommodates itself to the meanest capacities; silences the loud and clamorous, and brings over the most obstinate and is

* Lewis XIV. of France.

† The Emperor Adrian.

‡ Part 2 c. l. v. 297.

§ The author quoted is And. Ammonius. See his life in Bayle's Dict.—The Spectator's memory deceived him in applying the remark, which was made in the reign of Henry VII. It was, however, much more applicable to that of Queen Mary.

|| A sorites is a heap of propositions thrown together

THE SPECTATOR.

Philip of Macedon was a man of most reason this way. He refuted by it all the notions of Athens, confounded their statesmen, silenced their orators dumb, and at length argued of all their liberties.

where touched upon the several methods of arguing, as they have prevailed in different parts of the world, I shall very suddenly give my account of the whole art of cavilling; I'll be a full and satisfactory answer to all queries and pamphlets as have yet appeared in the Spectator.—C.

WEDNESDAY, DECEMBER 5, 1711.

—Aliter non fit, Avite, liber.—MART. Ep. l. 17. materials, Sir, are books composed.

SPECTATOR,

one of the most genteel trades in the world, to understand thus much of liberal education, and to have an ardent ambition of being useful to the world, and to think that the chief end of being in the world. I had these good impressions given me by the handsome behaviour of a learned, and wealthy man towards me, when I was in the world. Some dissatisfaction between my parents made me enter into it with less seriousness than I ought; and to turn off this business, I gave myself to criminal pleasures, dissipation, and a general loose conduct. I thought what the excellent man above mentioned said, but he descended from the superiority of his own merit to throw himself frequently into my company. This made me soon hope that I might be able to do something in the world worth cultivating, and his conversation made me sensible of satisfactions in a way, which I had never before imagined. I was grown familiar with me, he opened to me a good angel, and told me he had long intended to ripen me into a preparation to receive wisdom and advice, both which I should daily have, and the use of any part of his fortune, and the measures he should propose to me, for the betterment of my own. I assure you, I cannot reflect the goodness and confusion of the world when he spoke to this purpose to me, melting into tears: but in a word, Sir, I thought to tell you, that my heart burns with affection towards him, and he is so happy a man, that I never be in my power to return him his kindness; but I am sure I have made him the sensible satisfaction I could possibly, in being able to serve others to my utmost ability, as far as I am enabled with the prudence he prescribes to me. Spectator, I do not owe to him only the esteem and affection of my own relations (who are distinguished by the present ease and plenty of circumstances); but also the government of my desires, and regulation of my desires. I doubt not but in your imagination such virtues as are worthy of a friend, bear as great a figure as such are more glittering in the common world. What I would ask of you, is to give the Spectator upon heroic virtue in common, which may incite men to the same generous actions, as have by this admirable person been raised in.

"Sir, your most humble Servant."

SPECTATOR,

a country gentleman, of a good plentiful estate, and live as the Spectator.

estate, and live as the Spectator. I have the ladies the best company, and access as a sort of favour to the public but I saluted them, and all around; where it was avoided hampering my whilst I moved amongst them, side how prettily they were standing in proper rows, they saw their elders, or by me. But so it is, that good breeding is of late years of a courtier, or town gentleman among us. This person in the room made a profound bow, recovered with a soft smile next, and so to one or two gross of the room, by which I perceived until he arrived at the door, per particularly to enter with good a grace and assurance in the present fashion; and then within several miles of London ever since his first appearance in country gentlemen cannot these fine and reserved. I am at a stand, until we have been against kissing by way of which is impatiently expected of both sexes, but by none.

"You

"MR. SPECTATOR,

"I was the other night expected to hear your famous sermon, and was unhappily disappointed. I saw another person who had distinguished himself in a new way of oration, or talking loud and low. This was a very sort of beau, who getting on the stage before the curtain, to show the whole audience over the spikes; he passed the entering doors, where he showed a considerable good grace, displayed two or three feint passions, then faced about the door. Here he affected to bow and smiled at the teeth, which were some. After this, he retired behind the scenes, and was followed us with several views of the opening.

"During the time of action in the prince's apartment, match, and was very for there were no injunctions of practice must be confessed of the audience, and for the most part unwarlike and late command has made authority to take notice

"Sir

T.

* Different scenes in the play. 1 In the playbills about the theatre. By her majesty's command had the scenes.

BER 6, 1711.

Metur

unknown.—P.

artuous love in mber that you
 the absence
 w they should g separations undergo. I stance, having is abroad in not possibly and generous
 h the tender-
 ing, make his
 of him every very night in ne in mind of ordinary di-
 is estate; but e but so many frequent the
 him, and not air and fall a delighted in,
 he esteemed.
 ay, and place ether. I pass where I used my mind the between us: I
 oints of view
 my eye upon
 ke notice of,
 ble remarks
 s. I write to vary to other when an east
 bringing me a, Sir, to give nd to let me
 y widowhood.
 Servant,
 ASTERIA."

in love, and beautiful com-
 created of this full of them.
 ly upon this

y mate.
 desert;
 n.
 best,
 soul.

APHAN, Act II. occasions are mentioned by es of comfort
 s.
 Romances, a their parting
 to think of The romance
 ally observed whatever company or business they were engaged in, they left abruptly as soon as the clock warned them to retire. The romance further adds, that the lovers expected the return of this stated hour with as much impatience as if it had been a real assignation, and enjoyed an imaginary happiness, that was almost as pleasing to them as what they would have found from a real meeting. It was an inexpressible satisfaction to these divided lovers, to be assured that each was at the same time employed in the same kind of contemplation, and making equal returns of tenderness and affection.

If I may be allowed to mention a more serious expedient for the alleviating of absence, I shall take notice of one which I have known two persons practise, who joined religion to that elegance of sentiment with which the passion of love generally inspires its votaries. This was, at the return of such an hour, to offer up a certain prayer for each other, which they had agreed upon before their parting. The husband, who is a man that makes a figure in the polite world as well as in his own family, has often told me, that he could not have supported an absence of three years without this expedient.

Strada, in one of his Prolusions,* gives an account of a chimerical correspondence between two friends by the help of a certain load-stone, which had such virtue in it, that if it touched two several needles, when one of the needles so touched began to move, the other, though at never so great a distance, moved at the same time, and in the same manner. He tells us, that the two friends being each of them possessed of one of these needles, made a kind of dial-plate, inscribing it with four-and-twenty letters, in the same manner as the hours of the day are marked upon the ordinary dial-plate. They then fixed one of the needles on each of these plates in such a manner, that it could move round without impediment, so as to touch any of the four-and-twenty letters. Upon their separating from one another into distant countries, they agreed to withdraw themselves punctually into their closets at a certain hour of the day, and to converse with one another by means of this their invention. Accordingly when they were some hundred miles asunder, each of them shut himself up in his closet at the time appointed, and immediately cast his eye upon his dial-plate. If he had a mind to write any thing to his friend, he directed his needle to every letter that formed the words which he had occasion for, making a little pause at the end of every word or sentence, to avoid confusion. The friend in the meanwhile saw his own sympathetic needle moving of itself to every letter which that of his correspondent pointed at. By this means they talked together across a whole continent, and conveyed their thoughts to one another in an instant over cities or mountains, seas or deserts.

If Monsieur Scudery, or any other writer of romance, had introduced a necromancer, who is generally in the train of a knight-errant, making a present to two lovers of a couple of these above-mentioned needles, the reader would not have been a little pleased to have seen them corresponding with one another when they were guarded by spies and watches, or separated by castles and adventures.

In the meanwhile, if ever this invention should be revived or put in practice, I would propose that upon the lover's dial-plate there should be written not only the four-and-twenty letters, but several en-

* Lib. II. prol. 6.

which have always a place in passionate flames, darts, die, language, absence, art, eyes, hang, drown, and the like. This much abridge the lover's pains in this thing a letter, as it would enable him to most useful and significant words with such of the needle.—C.

[ FRIDAY, DECEMBER 7, 1711.

ex medio quia res accessit. habere minimum—Hos. 2 Ep. i. 168.
on vulgar themes, is thought an easy task.

SPECTATOR,

speculations do not so generally prevail in manners as I could wish. A former yours concerning the misbehaviour of people necessarily in each other's company in thought to have been a lasting admonition in expressions of that kind. But I had the Quaker, in meeting with a rude fellow coach, who entertained two or three women there was no man besides himself) as indecent as ever was heard upon. The impertinent observations which he made upon our shame and confusion were it is an unspeakable grief to reflect upon much as you have declaimed against. I hope you will do us the justice to defend the brute has courage enough to send where he saw us all alight together to him, there is not one of us but has a lover to avenge the insult. It would certainly be consideration, to look into the frequent of this kind, to which the modest and exposed, by the licentious behaviour are as much strangers to good-breeding.

Could we avoid hearing what we do, as easily as we can seeing what is done here were some consolation; but since a play, in an assembly of ladies, or even church, it is in the power of a gross utter what a woman cannot avoid hearable is her condition who comes within of such impertinents? and how necessary eat invectives against such behaviour? tious had not utterly forgot what it is to they would know that offended modesty for one of the greatest sufferings to which can be exposed. If these brutes could much, though they want shame, they loved by their pity, to abhor an impudent in the presence of the chaste and innocent will oblige us with a Spectator on it, and procure it to be pasted against coach in Great Britain as the law of the u will highly oblige the whole sex, for have professed so great an esteem; and r, the two ladies my late fellow-sufferers,

Sir, your most humble Servant,

" REBECCA RIDINGHOOD."

SPECTATOR,

after which I am now going to send you, py story in low life, and will recommend it you must excuse the manner of ex-

A poor idle drunken weaver in Spital-fairful laborious wife, who by her frugality has laid by her as much money as her a ticket in the present lottery. She had hid this very privately and had given her number who had promised to keep news of the success. The day gone abroad, when hearing she had saved some corner, till at length he found he immediately carries away the money, without anything of the matter. A friend, who was a woman, word, that she had a better creature, overjoyed, flies to who was then at work, and loom for that evening, and friend of his and hers be this cheerful invitation as do, and after a cross wouldn't come. His wife her importunity, and at love! I have within these you, scraped together as much as a ticket in the lottery. Quick come to tell me, that a 500*l.* prize.' The husband ' You lie, you slut, you have sold it.' The poor woman a fit, recovers, and is now had no design to defraud willing only to participate every one pities her, but the punishment but just. This, and would, if the persons greater, in a well-wrought Distress. I have only seen and know a good hand can with worse materials.

" MR. SPECTATOR,

" I am what the world calls by good success in trade I capacity of making some fine no matter for that, I have a ship a couple of nieces, who run mad; which you will tell you they are female within three years and a half that my care, they never in their thoughts towards any one sister of a notable woman. I have been considering the proper posset, you should hear a magnetic virtue of the loss pressure of the atmosphere peculiar to themselves, and themselves on the meaneast not of a Latin derivation. I am able still, would they suffer interrupted ignorance; but unless tracted ideas of things (as not expect to smoke one pipe fit of the gout I complained temper, when my niece Kitty me, that whatever I might philosophers, both ancient and that both pleasure and pain distinctions, and that there was in rerum naturâ. I have seen that the fire was not hot; and the authority of an old fellow to put my blue cloak on me. Sir, I will reach the cloak

BRITISH ESSAYISTS.

for it might colour is no-
the rays of the
at to say snow for as it con-
cles, it might
ek. In short,
p, that to beceived; and to trust any
I have to beg n to the due at least, as to ch whose fate to tell us the should make a lady that thematics. In

le Servant,
M THRIFTY."

BER 8, 1711.

nam faciem ho-
s amores (ut ait

were embodied,
would (as Plato

any discourse loveliness of y, and as the
and hereafter.

an essay upon
der virtue no
able nature,
stand by the s affixed to it by devout men igion, and by onour.

or rather jusdges it to be he hypocrite on the appear-was the most
the love and

common saying an hates non of thoughts

e love a vir-
the remotest gether out of
ve from it no
died several benevolence
s story. Nay, the enemy of regulated by ce of Pyrrhus,
in opposition
uty and love.

rtue, ascribes
soever to the n the charac-
atters so far,
ut a virtuous

man to be handsome. This indeed looks more like a philosophical rant than the real opinion of a wise man; yet this was what Cato very seriously maintained. In short, the stoics thought they could not sufficiently represent the excellence of virtue, if they did not comprehend in the notion of it all possible perfections; and therefore did not only suppose, that it was transcendently beautiful in itself, but that it made the very body amiable, and banished every kind of deformity from the person in whom it resided.

It is a common observation, that the most abandoned to all sense of goodness, are apt to wish those who are related to them of a different character; and it is very observable, that none are more struck with the charms of virtue in the fair sex, than those who by their very admiration of it are carried to a desire of ruining it.

A virtuous mind in a fair body is indeed a fine picture in a good light, and therefore it is no wonder that it makes the beautiful sex all over charms.

As virtue in general is of an amiable and lovely nature, there are some particular kinds of it which are more so than others, and these are such as dispose us to do good to mankind. Temperance and abstinence, faith and devotion, are in themselves perhaps as laudable as any other virtues; but those which make a man popular and beloved, are justice, charity, munificence, and, in short, all the good qualities which render us beneficial to each other. For this reason even an extravagant man, who has nothing else to recommend him but a false generosity, is often more beloved and esteemed than a person of a much more finished character, who is defective in this particular.

The two great ornaments of virtue, which show her in the most advantageous views, and make her altogether lovely, are cheerfulness and good-nature. These generally go together, as a man cannot be agreeable to others who is not easy within himself. They are both very requisite in a virtuous mind, to keep out melancholy from the many serious thoughts it is engaged in, and to hinder its natural hatred of vice from souring into severity and censoriousness.

If virtue is of this amiable nature, what can we think of those who can look upon it with an eye of hatred and ill-will, or can suffer their aversion for a party to blot out all the merit of the person who is engaged in it? A man must be excessively stupid, as well as uncharitable, who believes that there is no virtue but on his own side, and that there are not men as honest as himself who may differ from him in political principles. Men may oppose one another in some particulars, but ought not to carry their hatred to those qualities which are of so amiable a nature in themselves, and have nothing to do with the points in dispute. Men of virtue, though of different interests, ought to consider themselves as more nearly united with one another, than with the vicious part of mankind, who embark with them in the same civil concerns. We should bear the same love towards a man of honour who is a living antagonist, which Tully tells us in the fore-mentioned passage, every one naturally does to an enemy that is dead. In short, we should esteem virtue though in a foe, and abhor vice though in a friend.

I speak this with an eye to those cruel treatments which men of all sides are apt to give the characters of those who do not agree with them. How many persons of undoubted probity and exemplary virtue, on either side, are blackened and defamed? How many men of honour exposed to public phloguoy and

? Those therefore who are either the instruments or abettors in such infernal dealings, be looked upon as persons who make use of art to promote their cause, not of their country's religion.—C.

.] MONDAY, DECEMBER 10, 1711.

—Judex et callidus audis.—HOR. 2 Sat. vii. 101.
 of painting you, a connoisseur.

“Covent Garden, Dec. 7.

R. SPECTATOR,

NOT, without a double injustice, forbearing to you the satisfaction which a whole of virtuosos have received from those hints I have lately given the town on the cartoon of the inimitable Raphael. It should, methinks, be the business of a Spectator to improve the eyes of sight, and there cannot be a more easy way to it than by recommending the observation of excellent drawings and pictures. When I first went to view those of Raphael you have celebrated, I must confess I was sorely pleased; the next time I liked them at least, as I grew better acquainted with them, I fell deeply in love with them; like wise men, they sunk deep into my heart; for you, Mr. Spectator, that a man of wit may expect to affect one for the present, but if he has not a great merit soon vanishes away; while a picture that has not so great a stock of wit, shall less give you a far greater and more lasting pleasure. Just so it is in a picture that is smartly drawn, but not well studied; one may call it a picture, though the painter in the mean time is labouring of being called a fool. On the other hand, a picture that is thoroughly understood in the details well performed in the particulars, that is to say, the foundation of geometry, carried on by the use of perspective, architecture, and anatomy, directed by a good harmony, a just and natural colouring, and such passions and expressions as are almost peculiar to Raphael; this you may justly style a wise picture, and wisdom fails to strike us dumb, until we can use all our faculties to make but a tolerable guess upon it. Other pictures are made for the young, as rattles are made for children's ears; namely that picture that only pleases the eye, representing some well-chosen part of nature, does but show what fine colours are sold at the colour-shop, and mocks the workman's pretence. If the best imitator of nature is esteemed the best painter, but he that can show the greatest show and glare of colours; it necessarily follow, that he who can array himself in the most gaudy draperies is best dressed, and can speak loudest the best orator. Every man he looks on a picture should examine it with regard to that share of reason he is master of, or else he is in danger of making a wrong judgment. As they walk abroad would make more frequent observations on those beauties of Nature which commonly present themselves to their view, they are better judges when they saw her well imitated at home. This would help to correct those high most pretenders fall into, who are over their judgments, and will not stay to let come in for a share in the decision. It is for this that men mistake in this case, and in the life, a wild extravagant pencil for one that is truly bold and great, a man of true courage and of reasonable actions for entertainment, gaudy colouring for show, a false and insinuating truth elegantly recommended through all the parts of the picture, the virtuosos above mentioned you draw it with your tongue, in a picture represent the lights do the bright there should be but one which should catch the eye there should be but one. Author of nature, These well improved, might very the beauty of that art, from being poisoned by the gaunt workman that should

“I am, Sir, your

“MR. SPECTATOR,

“Though I am a woman who confess themselves to be in emulation you obliged me from an old Greek poet's allusion to the several natural of my own sex. I could not but be charmed with the characters of the women of the times of Simonides, the sorts I have not some time with a sample of. But the present address are a set I think, in the ninth called the Apes: the de be, “That they are such natured, who have not and endeavour to detract from something that appears so perfect, as I have been to great town where you live in life obliges me to reside though not many miles from I met with a great number a desirable acquaintance experience. You must begin of this summer and settled for the season where I live. As they try, they were visited by whom I was one, with whom who pass most of their lives with us very agreeable towards the end of the summer bethink themselves of it was, Mr. Spectator, that I myself about the proper of their character; and that they are apt to carry they are about to leave; common mercy, civility, mimic and fall foul on the virtue of their innocent and innumerable censures and commonly called nickname short, like true fine ladies, and sincerity matter but acquaint you with at the desire of all the own inclination. I hope entirely to reform this practice of it in some of y

BRITISH ESSAYISTS.

ex on their
he same time
t of mirth is t it is in the
to compre-

Servant,
TIA FIELD."

R 11, 1711.

Poet. v. 338.
truth.

ds so much eence, when ne time that l to laugh at
When a man
out the least he becomes ife, and very e Cordeliers
s, that as he evening, he
in a corner;
lited up his ag, that there
n the world.
mistake the rity. I am us man with-world; and if is this, that also alluring
ght into the
ure in all its
as not been world, or, as n the ways of llies and ex-
n-ocent may never arrive d the snares
ous, and the inds may be

rrrespondent,
y well-meant preface, to he said Mr.

would let us
nt diversions
ch are very r those who
t an opera,
now, in park-
les; as also,
commands,
ve not more
e diversions mong us. If
d daughters,
of pleasure,
may be prac-
we, who are liged to you.
these sports

and pastimes not only merry but innocent; for which reason I have not mentioned either whist or lanterloo, nor indeed so much as one-and-thirty. After having communicated to you my request upon this subject, I will be so free as to tell you how my wife and I pass away these tedious winter evenings with a great deal of pleasure. Though she be young and handsome, and good-humoured to a miracle, she does not care for gadding abroad like others of her sex. There is a very friendly man, a colonel in the army, whom I am mightily obliged to for his civil-ties, that comes to see me almost every night; for he is not one of those giddy young fellows that cannot live out of a playhouse. When we are together, we very often make a party at Blind-man's-Buff, which is a sport that I like the better, because there is a good deal of exercise in it. The colonel and I are blinded by turns, and you would laugh your heart out to see what pains my dear takes to hoodwink us, so that it is impossible for us to see the least glimpse of light. The poor colonel sometimes hits his nose against a post, and makes us die with laughing. I have generally had the good luck not to hurt myself, but I am very often above half an hour before I can catch either of them; for you must know we hide ourselves up and down in the corners, that we may have the more sport. I only give you this hint as a sample of such innocent diversions as I would have you recommend; and am, most esteemed Sir,

"Your ever loving Friend,

"TIMOTHY DOODLE."

The following letter was occasioned by my last Thursday's paper upon the absence of lovers, and the methods therein mentioned of making such absence supportable:

"SIR,

"Among the several ways of consolation which absent lovers make use of while their souls are in that state of departure, which you say is death in love, there are some very material ones that have escaped your notice. Among these, the first and most received is a crooked shilling, which has administered great comfort to our forefathers, and is still made use of on this occasion with very good effect in most part of her majesty's dominions.
There are some, I know, who think a crown piece cut into two equal parts, and preserved by the distant lovers, is of more sovereign virtue than the former. But since opinions are divided in this particular, why may not the same persons make use of both? The figure of a heart, whether cut in stone or cast in metal, whether bleeding upon an altar, stuck with darts, or held in the hand of a Cupid, has always been looked upon as talismanic in distresses of this nature. I am acquainted with many a brave fellow, who carries his mistress in the lid of his snuff-box, and by that expedient has supported himself under the absence of a whole campaign.
For my own part I have tried all these remedies, but never found so much benefit from any as from a ring, in which my mistress's hair is plaited together very artificially in a kind of true-lover's knot. As I have received great benefit from this secret, I think myself obliged to communicate it to the public for the good of my fellow-subjects. I desire you will add this letter as an appendix to your consolations upon absence, and am

"Your very humble Servant,

"T. B."

I shall conclude this paper with a letter from a university gentleman, occasioned by my last Tuesday's paper, wherein I gave some account of the great feuds which happened formerly in those earned bodies, between the modern Greeks and Trojans.

"SIR,

"This will give you to understand, that there is at present, in the society whereof I am a member, a very considerable body of Trojans, who, upon a proper occasion, would not fail to declare themselves. In the mean while we do all we can to annoy our enemies by stratagem, and are resolved by the first opportunity to attack Mr. Joshua Barnes,* whom we look upon as the Achilles of the opposite party. As for myself, I have had the reputation ever since I came from school of being a rusty Trojan, and am resolved never to give quarter to the smallest particle of Greek, wherever I chance to meet it. It is for this reason I take it very ill of you, that you sometimes hang out Greek colours at the head of your paper, and sometimes give word of the enemy even in the body of it. When I meet with any thing of this nature, I throw down your speculations upon the table, with that form of words which we make use of when we declare war upon an author,

Græcum est, non potest legi.

give you this hint, that you may for the future abstain from any such hostilities at your peril.

C.

"TROILUS."

[a. 246.] WEDNESDAY, DECEMBER 12, 1711.

No amorous hero ever gave thee birth, Nor ever tender goddess brought thee forth:
Some rugged rock's hard entrails gave thee form,
And raging seas produced thee in a storm:
A soul well suited thy tempestuous kind,
So rough thy manners, so untam'd thy mind.—POPE.

"MR. SPECTATOR,

"As your paper is part of the equipage of the estate, I conjure you to print what I now write to you; for I have no other way to communicate what I have to say to the fair sex on the most important circumstances of life, even 'the care of children.' I do not understand that you profess your paper is always to consist of matters which are only to entertain the learned and polite, but that it may agree with your design to publish some which may tend to the information of mankind in general: and when it does so, you do more than writing wit and humour. Give me leave then to tell you, that of all the abuses that ever you have as yet endeavoured to reform, certainly not one wanted so much your assistance as the abuse in the nursing of children. It is unmerciful to see, that a woman endowed with all the perfections and blessings of nature can, as soon as she is delivered, turn off her innocent, tender, and helpless infant, and give it up to a woman that is (ten thousand to one) neither in health nor good condition, neither sound in mind nor body, that has neither honour nor reputation, neither love nor pity for the poor babe, but more regard for the money than for the whole child, and never will take further care of it than what by all the encouragement of money and presents she is forced to; like Esop's earth, which would not nurse the plant of another ground, although never so much improved,

by reason that p
And since anot nurse, than a pl how can it be s and if it thrives
mours and qual
different groun stock? Do we goat changes v
skin and wool a nurse over a milk her quali
and daily obser concerning an that 'he had i
milk, or that s nurse.' Hence have been nur Hercules by a h a mare; and A
had actually suc
tons have imagin
of such a natur
them.

"Many instat
thorities and dai suck in the sever
tions of their nu choly, sadness, d
lib. 2. witnesses the emperor's m
to drinking; wh
nurse, and was people took so m berius Nero, the same Diodorus to Nero, that hi
of her breast fr
gula take the l Diodorus, was thirsty and crue
only committed but likewise w
one neck, that h
off. Such-like who not knowin
one incline to st stupidity; yet a
easy to demonst
born from the be an ill-tempered see daily broug &c. merely by su
sion or fury? bu
nurse is a disord
be found in this distemper or oth
rally asked a you why she should b
is answered, by she must make s
answer is enough considered; for if he does not,
temper, or at lea
sides, as she take her food will be best; whence p
food for the child and hence I an scurvy, the evil,
of you, for the s

* The noted Greek professor of the university of Cambridge.

use seriously
hemence, to both for the general arguing suck to will maintain and will have otherwise.
preservative
s, much be-
Her children
they are but
and certainly orth a child, to nurse it
and consider ed by care-they to be or blow, est senseless,

as yet; for woman that nine months,
rther, when
and when by e office of a brutes tend delight ima-
her that will is called the roduces, but at she pro-
the effect of
and choice.
ome cases of e suck, and chosen; but a thousand
if a woman spare about ry (although tainly, with persuade the d easily imitation. This ature gives

Servant."

ER 13, 1711.

Hession

ors, that So-
a woman, Aspasia. I
at art as the
I think the er whether s with she-

he men, that upon any honour of the g them who nothing. I long extempetticoat, and cup, in all urts of judi-

cature, I am persuaded they would carry the eloquence of the bar to greater heights than it has yet arrived at. If any one doubt this, let him but be present at those debates which frequently arise among the ladies of the British fishery.

The first kind, therefore, of female orators which I shall take notice of, are those who are employed in stirring up the passions; a part of rhetoric in which Socrates' wife had perhaps made a greater proficiency than his above-mentioned teacher.

The second kind of female orators are those who deal in invectives, and who are commonly known by the name of the censorious. The imagination and elocution of this set of rhetoricians is wonderful. With what a fluency of invention, and copiousness of expression, will they enlarge upon every little slip in the behaviour of another! With how many different circumstances, and with what variety of phrases, will they tell over the same story! I have known an old lady make an unhappy marriage the subject of a month's conversation. She blamed the bride in one place; pitied her in another; laughed at her in a third; wondered at her in a fourth; was angry with her in a fifth; and, in short, wore out a pair of coach-horses in expressing her concern for her. At length, after having quite exhausted the subject on this side, she made a visit to the new-married pair, praised the wife for the prudent choice she had made, told her the unreasonable reflections which some malicious people had cast upon her, and desired that they might be better acquainted. The censure and approbation of this kind of women are therefore only to be considered as helps to discourse.

A third kind of female orators may be comprehended under the word gossips. Mrs. Fiddle-Faddle is perfectly accomplished in this sort of eloquence; she launches out into descriptions of christenings, runs divisions upon a head-dress, knows every dish of meat that is served up in our neighbourhood, and entertains her company a whole afternoon together with the wit of her little boy, before he is able to speak.

The coquette may be looked upon as a fourth kind of female orator. To give herself the larger field for discourse, she hates and loves in the same breath, talks to her lap-dog or parrot, is uneasy in all kinds of weather, and in every part of the room. She has false quarrels and feigned obligations to all the men of her acquaintance; sighs when she is not sad, and laughs when she is not merry. The coquette is in particular a great mistress of that part of oratory which is called action, and indeed seems to speak for no other purpose, but as it gives her an opportunity of stirring a limb, or varying a feature, of glancing her eyes, or playing with her fan.

As for newsmongers, politicians, mimics, story-tellers, with other characters of that nature which gave birth to loquacity, they are as commonly found among the men as the women: for which reason I shall pass them over in silence.

I have often been puzzled to assign a cause why women should have this talent of a ready utterance in so much greater perfection than men. I have sometimes fancied that they have not a retentive power, or the faculty of suppressing their thoughts, as men have, but that they are necessitated to speak every thing they think; and if so, it would perhaps furnish a very strong argument to the Cartesianes for the supporting of their doctrine that the soul always thinks. But as several are of opinion that the fair sex are not altogether strangers to the art of dissembling and concealing their thoughts, I have been forced to relinquish that opinion, and have therefore endeavoured to seek after some better reason. In order to it, a friend of mine, who is an excellent anatomist, has promised me by the first opportunity to dissect a woman's tongue, and to examine whether there may not be in it certain fibres which render it so wonderfully voluble or supple, or whether the fibres of it may not be made up of a finer or more pliant thread; or whether there are not in it some particular muscles which dart it up and down by such sudden glances and vibrations; or whether, in the last place, there may not be certain undiscovered channels running from the head and the heart to this little instrument of eloquence, and conveying into it a perpetual affluency of animal spirits. Nor must I omit the reason which Hudibras has given, why those who can talk in trifles speak with the greatest fluency; namely, that the tongue is like a race-horse, which runs the faster the lesser weight it carries.

Which of these reasons soever may be looked upon as the most probable, I think the Irishman's thought was very natural, who, after some hours' conversation with a female orator, told her, that he believed her tongue was very glad when she was asleep, for that it had not a moment's rest all the while she was awake.

That excellent old ballad of The Wanton Wife of Bath has the following remarkable lines:

I think, quoth Thomas, women's tongues Of aspen leaves are made.

And Ovid, though in the description of a very barbarous circumstance, tells us, that when the tongue of a beautiful female was cut out, and thrown upon the ground, it could not forbear muttering even in that posture:

Comprensam forcipe linguam Abstulit ense fero, radix micat ultima linguae.
Ipsa jacet, terraeque tremens immurmurat atrae; Utiq; salire solet mutilata cauda colubrae Palpitat. — Msr. vi. 356.

The blade had cut
Her tongue sheer off, close to the trembling root, The mangled part still quiver'd on the ground, Murmuring with a faint imperfect sound;
And as a serpent writhes his wounded train, Uneasy, panting, and possessed with pain.—CHALKHILL.

If a tongue would be talking without a mouth, what could it have done when it had all its organs of speech, and accomplices of sound about it? I might here mention the story of the Pippin Woman, had I not some reason to look upon it as fabulous.*

I must confess I am so wonderfully charmed with the music of this little instrument, that I would by no means discourage it. All that I aim at by this dissertation is, to cure it of several disagreeable notes, and in particular of those little jarrings and dissonances which arise from anger, censoriousness, gossiping and coquetry. In short, I would always have it tuned by good-nature, truth, discretion, and sincerity.—C.

* The crackling crystal yields, she sinks, she dies;
Her head chapt off, from her lost shoulders flies:
Pippas she cried, but death her voice confounds,
And pip-pip-pip along the ice resounds.

No. 248.] F

Hoc maxime optu
ei potissimum optu

It is a principal stands most in need

THERE are others in the es it their endeav who upon all oc life can adminis
pleasure in con
Those whose g placed them in dispensably obli
for the service o
become misfortu more eligible p inclinations are times see sublim
our imagination which in lower
able to practise.

and it bears som
man to imagine adventures, to l every man's pov poverty, not ou
The great found and there is no has opportunities and doing as n for the ease an he who does mo
such occasions
value of his frie
which are usual Men of public s stances than the
he can, in a low omits any worth a great one. It
rius, in wrong o
estate by gift of behaviour of the reformed the lif became as rema
merly for his c brother's amend
in the morning t

"HONOUR

"I enclose to gave me this h
now, he would n
he took it from t
the man you are

"I am, S

As great and e of hazardous act
same time gratif
worthy minds themselves many benevolence, wh
pressed with dist
one may call st tuated by a sec
the ordinary gra
to a heart loaded
family, to preserv

BRITISH ESSAYISTS.

ous, preserve
and raise the whose hearts
intent upon ences among ould look like
ous merchant,
minent trader,
in whose fall
erished; but
and true gal-
ever read from n in the mer-
at:

ich have ins time; and d-nature, in-stand by you.
with him five answer your
I did this for your rene to the sum
ry cheerfully
ch than I am
ve.

ervant,
W. S.* gne mention
e occurrences
that house to ach a method n this gene-
e greatest in ce of a benefit
ore graceful
w barbarous
e to the dis-
uch such an uch an act of remember to d a story of a d formerly a ason, and al-
of the society.
ied his royal
a committee
his treasury.
his majesty
heard a poor sum would world." The ely inquired
roper object hen the com-
his accounts nation, upon

£10 0 0

ER 15, 1711.

Vel. Poet.

that has not ether my re-

alties was one merchant, here

er of the public

time a student

lections on it without any order or method, so that they may appear rather in the looseness and freedom of an essay, than in the regularity of a set discourse. It is after this manner that I shall consider laughter and ridicule in my present paper.

Man is the merriest species of the creation; and above and below him are serious. He sees things in a different light from other beings, and finds his mirth arising from objects that perhaps cause some thing like pity or displeasure in higher natures. Laughter is indeed a very good counterpoise to the spleen; and it seems but reasonable that we should be capable of receiving joy from what is no real good to us, since we can receive grief from what is no real evil.

I have in my forty-seventh paper raised a speculation on the notion of a modern philosopher,* who describes the first motive of laughter to be a secret comparison which we make between ourselves and the persons we laugh at; or, in other words, the satisfaction which we receive from the opinion of some pre-eminence in ourselves, when we see the absurdities of another, or when we reflect on our past absurdities of our own. This seems to hold in most cases, and we may observe that the vainest part of mankind are the most addicted to this passion.

I have read a sermon of a conventual in the church of Rome, on those words of the wise man "I said of Laughter, it is mad; and of mirth, what does it?" Upon which he laid it down as a point of doctrine, that laughter was the effect of original sin, and that Adam could not laugh before the fall.

Laughter, while it lasts, slackens and unbraces the mind, weakens the faculties, and causes a kind of remissness and dissolution in all the powers of the soul; and thus far it may be looked upon as a weakness in the composition of human nature. But if we consider the frequent reliefs we receive from it, and how often it breaks the gloom which is apt to depress the mind and damp our spirits, will transient unexpected gleams of joy, one would take care not to grow too wise for so great a pleasure of life.

The talent of turning men into ridicule, and exposing to laughter those one converses with, is the qualification of little ungenerous tempers. A young man with this cast of mind cuts himself off from all manner of improvement. Every one has his flaws and weaknesses; nay, the greatest blemishes are often found in the most shining characters; but what an absurd thing is it to pass over all the valuable parts of a man, and fix our attention on his infirmities? to observe his imperfections more than his virtues? and to make use of him for the sport of others, rather than for our own improvement?

We therefore very often find, that persons the most accomplished in ridicule are those that are very shrewd at hitting a blot, without exerting anything masterly in themselves. As there are many eminent critics who never writ a good line, there are many admirable buffoons that animadvert upon every single defect in another, without ever discovering the least beauty of their own. By this means, these unlucky little wits often gain reputation in the esteem of vulgar minds, and raise themselves above persons of much more laudable characters.

If the talent of ridicule were employed to laugh men out of voice and folly, it might be of some use world; but instead of this, we find that it is only made use of to laugh men out of virtue and sense, by attacking every thing that is good and serious, decent and praiseworthy in life.

* Hobbes.

We may observe that in the first ages of the world when the great souls and master-pieces of nature were produced, men shined by a simplicity of behaviour, and were strangers to little embellishments which are so fashionable in our present conversation. And it is very probable, that notwithstanding we fall short at times of the ancients in poetry, painting, oratory, architecture, and all the noble arts and sciences which depend more upon genius than exercise, we exceed them as much in doggrel burlesque, and all the trivial arts of ridicule. Yet with more raillery among the moderns, we have more good sense among the ancients.

Two great branches of ridicule in writing are burlesque and doggrel. The first ridicules persons by putting them in their proper characters, the second by drawing them quite unlike themselves. Burlesque is therefore of two kinds; the first represents persons in the accoutrements of heroes; the second describes great persons acting and speaking in the basest manner among the people. Don Quixote is an instance of the first, and Lucian's gods of the second. It is a dispute among the critics, whether burlesque poetry runs best in heroic verse, or in the style of the Dispensary; or in doggrel, like Hudibras. I think where the low character is raised, the heroic is the proper measure; and when a hero is to be pulled down and degraded, the best is doggrel.

Hudibras had been set out with as much wit and humour in heroic verse as he is in doggrel, he would have made a much more agreeable figure than he is; though the generality of his readers are wonderfully pleased with the double rhymes, that they expect many will be of my opinion in this matter.

I will conclude this essay upon laughter with the metaphor of laughing, applied to flowers and meadows when they are in flower, or to persons when they are in blossom, runs through all ages; which I have not observed of any other sort, excepting that of fire and burning when it is applied to love. This shows that we naturally regard laughter, as what is in itself both pleasant and beautiful. For this reason likewise it has gained the title of Philomydes "the laughing dame," as Waller has translated it, and is represented by Horace as the goddess who presides in laughter. Milton, in a joyous assembly of many persons, has given us a very poetical description of laughter. His whole band of mirth is so described, that I shall set down the passage with it:

But come, thou goddess fare and free,
In heaven ycleped Euphrosyne, And by men heart-easing mirth, Whom lovely Venus at a birth With two sister Graces more,
To ivy-crowned Bacchus bore.
Haste thee, nymph, and bring with thee Jest and youthful jollity, Quips, and cranks, and wanton wiles, Nods, and becks, and wreathed smiles,
Such as hang on Hebe's cheek,
And love to live in dimple aleek;

It is called — Euphrosyne is the name of one of the Sport that wrinkles

And laughter hinders Come, and trip it
On the light fantastic foot
And in thy right hand
The mountain top
And if I give thee Mirth, admit me
To live with thee
In unimproved youth

C.

No. 250.] MONDAY

Disce docendus adhuc Cecus iter monstrare vices Et nos, quod cures pro

Yet hear what an un-
As if a blind man show
So I myself, though w May yet impart a hint

"MR. SPECTATOR

"You see the nature of the motto which I address to you. I ought not to use many words, but the few I have chosen for speculation, in propriety of its kind, begs your poetical virtuoso's criticism, since the several translations, have obliged your service.

"The first eye of the visible Author of all) the universe. This glorious being opens his eyes at his levee, having a whole kingdom waiting at his levee. Their sight from this of the great director of our eyes be of the same kind, or that of an owl. The main assurance to look before the faces of a nation he dazzles out of countenance. The sun dances in a full court of lustre of beauty, can complaisance to a person each of which deserves another sneaks from court who never dares to look at nobody, and nobody else.

"The next instance is of a person, who (to speak in his own words) was one of a hundred of the affairs of jealousy eyes about him. Particular colours, cast eyes; but as he was is probable he used all and other ocular art. Some look upon him to the heathenish deity his eyes than of so many coats.

"The next upon the stood in a double-sit placed betwixt two of took a sort of retrospect of this double-faced with many professions pretend to keep up canes and spoons; faculty, except in the

BRITISH ESSAYISTS.

nd rear, or a ct of his past
urs, qualities,
y head; for,
ions of the ray, and the
that borrow of some parr to the eyes of a greedy
the cat, that awk, those of r title even one has a e innocence,
r is this mention, for we te the eye of ncipal god-

of the eye,
ns as much
is, appetites,
at least it is to the house
thfare to let anger, pride,
little orbs.
e a certain
cret desire of
-balls; nay, looking half dress. You
t by a gold-
eye at the naughty per-supercilious
n the height n our head nick flashes
urs sparkle

—Æn. xii. 101.

DRYDEN.

e-sight, such half or the y particular that oblique
he mark of
and to this it is forced
gn, and in s ocular ind practices.
er with such cumspetive
or fan, must all wrong
the general
ous applica-
nder the diu-
ou will arm ch are daily
will highly
"T. B."

our particular endeavours in the province of Spectator, correct the offences committed by Starkers, wi disturb whole assemblies without any regard time, place, or modesty. You complained als that a starker is not usually a person to be co vinced by the reason of the thing, nor so easi rebuked as to amend by admonitions. I thought therefore fit to acquaint you with a convenien mechanical way, which may easily prevent or co rect staring, by an optical contrivance of new pe spective-glasses, short and commodious like opera glasses, fit for short-sighted people as well as others these glasses making the objects appear either a they are seen by the naked eye, or more distinct though somewhat less than life, or bigger an nearer. A person may, by the help of this inven tion, take a view of another without the imperi ence of staring; at the same time it shall not b possible to know whom or what he is looking at One may look towards his right or left hand, whe he is supposed to look forwards. This is set for at large in the printed proposals for the sale o these glasses, to be had at Mr. Dillon's in Long acre, next door to the White Hart. Now, Sir, a your Spectator has occasioned the publishing o this invention for the benefit of modest spectato the inventor desires your admonitions concerni the decent use of it; and hopes, by your recom mendation, that for the future beauty may be held without the torture and confusion which i suffers from the insolence of starers. By thi means you will relieve the innocent from an insu which there is no law to punish, though it is greater offence than many which are within th cognisance of justice."

"I am, Sir, your most humble servant,
Q. "ABRAHAM SPT."

No. 251.] TUESDAY, DECEMBER 18, 1711

—Lingue centum sunt, oraque centum, Ferrea vox— VISO. Æn. vi. 625.

—A hundred mouths, a hundred tongues.
And throats of brass inspir'd with iron lungs.—DRYDEN.

THERE is nothing which more astonishes a fo reigner, and frights a country squire, than th Cries of London. My good friend Sir Roger offe declares that he cannot get them out of his head or go to sleep for them, the first week that he is i town. On the contrary, Will Honeycombe call them the Ramage de la Ville, and prefers them to the sound of larks and nightingales, with all th music of fields and woods. I have lately receiv a letter from some very odd fellow upon this subject, which I shall leave with my reader, without saying any thing further of it.

"Sir,

"I am a man out of all business, and would willingly turn my head to any thing for an honest livelihood. I have invented several projects for raising many millions of money without burdening the subject, but I cannot get the parliament to listen to me, who look upon me, forsooth, as a crack, and a projector; so that despairing to enrich either myself or my country by this public-spiritedness, I would make some proposals to you relating to a design which I have very much at heart, and which may procure me a handsome subsistence, if you will be pleased to recommend it to the cities of London and Westminster.

The post I would aim at, is to be comptroller-general of the London Cries, which are at present under no manner of rules or discipline. I think I am pretty well qualified for this place, as being a man of very strong lungs, of great insight into all the branches of our British trades and manufactures, and of a competent skill in music.

"The Cries of London may be divided into vocal and instrumental. As for the latter, they are at present under a very great disorder. A freeman of London has the privilege of disturbing a whole street for an hour together, with a twanking of a brass kettle or frying-pan. The watchman's thump at midnight startles us in our beds as much as the breaking in of a thief. The sowgelder's horn has indeed something musical in it, but this is seldom heard within the liberties. I would therefore propose, that no instrument of this nature should be made use of, which I have not tuned and licensed, after having carefully examined in what manner it may affect the ears of her majesty's liege subjects.

"Vocal cries are of a much larger extent, and indeed so full of incongruities and barbarisms, that we appear a distracted city to foreigners, who do not comprehend the meaning of such enormous outcries. Milk is generally sold in a note above E-la, and in sounds so exceedingly shrill, that it often sets our teeth on edge. The chimney-sweeper is confined to no certain pitch; he sometimes utters himself in the deepest bass, and sometimes in the sharpest treble; sometimes in the highest, and sometimes in the lowest, note of the gamut. The same observation might be made on the retailers of small-coal, not to mention broken glasses, or brick-dust. In these, therefore, and the like cases, it should be my care to sweeten and mellow the voices of these itinerant tradesmen, before they make their appearance in our streets, as also to accommodate their cries to their respective wares; and to take care in particular, that those may not make the most noise, who have the least to sell, which is very observable in the venders of card-matches, to whom I cannot but apply that old proverb of 'Much cry, but little wool.'

"Some of these last-mentioned musicians are so very loud in the sale of these trifling manufactures, that an honest splenetic gentleman of my acquaintance bargained with one of them never to come into the street where he lived. But what was the effect of this contract? Why the whole tribe of card-matchmakers which frequent that quarter passed by his door the very next day, in hopes of being bought off after the same manner.

"It is another great imperfection in our London cries, that there is no just time nor measure observed in them. Our news should indeed be published in a very quick time, because it is a commodity that will not keep cold. It should not, however, be cried with the same precipitation as fire. Yet this is generally the case. A bloody battle alarms the town from one end to another in an instant. Every motion of the French is published in a great hurry, that one would think the enemy were at our gates. This likewise I would take upon me to regulate in such a manner, that there should be some distinction made between the spreading of victory, a march, or an encampment, a Dutch, a Portugal, or a Spanish mail. Nor must I omit under this head those excessive alarms with which several boisterous rustics infest our streets in turnip season; and which are more inexcusable, because they are wares which are in no danger of cooling upon their hands.

"There are others who affect a very slow time, and are in my former. The note in a hollow mony; nor can agreeable melody solemn air with asked, if they memory may su ditties of the s wonderfully late

"I am always of the year which and cucumbers; the nightingale, would therefore the same air m other words.

"It might like sideration, how humourists are with the tradition invented parties such as was, not commonly know Puff,* and suc powder and wa formed, goes un

"I must not which runs thro and which rende incommodious, I mean, that idl them aim at, of Whether or no of our affected say; but most c wares they deal their words; ins a country boy r mender, and gi and scissors.

some very emine a cry, that none guess at their p that 'work if I of a corn-cutter.

"Forasmuch, are seldom men would be very p and sound judgm cries, who shoul in our streets, th are not only abe and the rattling respective merc most distinct and humbly recomme fied for this post ragement, shall which I have by the emolument o

C.

* This little man pastry which he ca that tone the cant w Molly-Puff. There London Cries, M. Biographical History

BRITISH ESSAYISTS.

ER 19, 1711.

renti.
En. ii. 570.

scourse upon
studied the
auteous face.
have said ten
not occur to use it makes to kindle, the auses in the ose things are
ou will own,
which moves
that the whole
d there; that scourse could tters it what ' is the lan-

When the
d in a glance,
arise in the er see the at-an instant?
e intelligence
ly; that good-
the heart, and e nature has
may not be oor bride can a languishing
el parents to he same time
eye is full of
while the of-what we call
r go to plays?
eyes of those o be seen? I on the obser-
r your corre-
scourse on the e of Leonora nt; she looks ses you speak
bjects directly
hance-medley,
another thing.
The eye of
tated murder;
the execution
n that of Leo-ere is a brave
r eye has been r made fly be-ence eloquent,
assent, an en-
his little mem-t us, and I be-ore, than that y, every other s force repre-
y itself. But

ing eye
stray.
nt, and likewise
agnos.

this is heathen Greek to those who have not eversed by glances. This, Sir, is a language which there can be no deceit, nor can a skilful server be imposed upon by looks, even among peticians and courtiers. If you do me the honour print this among your speculations, I shall in a next make you a present of secret history, by tralating all the looks of the next assembly of ladi and gentlemen into words, to adorn some futupaper.

"I am, Sir, your faithful Friend,

"MARY HEARTFREE."

"MR. SPECTATOR,

"I have a sot of a husband that lives a very seadulous life; who wastes away his body and fortune in debaucheries; and is immovable to all the arguments I can urge to him. I would gladly know whether in some cases a cudgel may not be allowed as a good figure of speech, and whether it may not lawfully be used by a female orator.

"Your humble Servant,

"BARBARA CRADTREE."

"MR. SPECTATOR,

"Though I am a practitioner in the law of sam-standing, and have heard many eminent pleaders in my time, as well as other eloquent speakers both universities, yet I agree with you, that women are better qualified to succeed in oratory than the men, and believe this is to be resolved into natural causes. You have mentioned only the volubility of their tongues; but what do you think of the silent flattery of their pretty faces, and the persuasion which even an insipid discourse carries with it when flowing from beautiful lips, to which it would be cruel to deny anything? It is certain, too, that they are possessed of some springs of rhetoric which men want, such as tears, fainting fits, and the like, which I have seen employed upon occasion, with good success. You must know that I am a plain man, and love my money; yet I have a spouse who is so great an orator in this way, that she draws from me what sum she pleases. Every room in my house is furnished with trophies of her eloquence, rich cabinets, piles of china, japan screens, and costly jars; and if you were to come into my great parlour, you would fancy yourself in an India warehouse. Besides this she keeps a squirrel, and I am doubly taxed to pay for the china he breaks. She is seized with periodical fits about the time of the subscriptions to a new opera, and is drowned in tears after having seen any woman there in finer clothes than herself. These are arts of persuasion purely feminine, and which a tender heart cannot resist. What I would therefore desire of you, is, to prevail with your friend who has promised to dissect a female tongue, that he would at the same time give us the anatomy of a female eye, and explain the springs and sluices which feed it with such ready supplies of moisture; and likewise show by what means, if possible, they may be stopped at a reasonable expense. Or indeed, since there is something so moving in the very image of weeping beauty, it would be worthy his art to provide, that these eloquent drops may no more be lavished on trifles, or employed as servants to their wayward wills; but reserved for serious occasions in life, to adorn generous pity, true penitence, or real sorrow

T

"I am," &c.

253 ] THURSDAY, DECEMBER 20, 1711.

Indignor quicquam reprehendi, non quia crasse Compositum, illepidè utetur, sed quia nuper.
Hos. 1 Ep. ii. 76.

I feel my honest indignation rise,
When with affected air a coxcomb cries,
The work I own has elegance and ease, But sure no modern should presume to please.

FRANCIS.

THERE is nothing which more denotes a great mind than the abhorrence of envy and detraction. This passion reigns more among bad poets than any other set of men.

As there are none more ambitious of fame than those who are conversant in poetry, it is very natural for such as have not succeeded in it, to depreciate those who have. For since they cannot raise themselves to the reputation of their fellow-writers, they must endeavour to sink that to their own pitch, they would still keep themselves upon a level with them.

The greatest wits that ever were produced in our age, lived together in so good an understanding, and celebrated one another with so much generosity, that each of them receives an additional lustre from his contemporaries, and is more famous for having been with men of so extraordinary a genius, than he had himself been the sole wonder of the age. I need not tell my reader, that I here point at the reign of Augustus; and I believe he will be of my opinion, that neither Virgil nor Horace would have gained so great a reputation in the world, had they not been the friends and admirers of each other. Indeed all the great writers of that age, for whom we have so great an esteem, stand up together as vouchers for one another's reputation. But at the same time that Virgil was celebrated by allus, Propertius, Horace, Varius, Tucca, and others, we know that Bavius and Mævius were his declared foes and calumniators.

In our own country a man seldom sets up for a poet, without attacking the reputation of all his brothers in the art. The ignorance of the moderns, the scribbles of the age, the decay of poetry, are the topics of detraction with which he makes his entrance into the world: but how much more noble is the fame that is built on candour and ingenuity, according to those beautiful lines of Sir John Denham, in his poem on Fletcher's works:

But whither am I stray'd? I need not raise, Trophies to thee from other men's dispraise:
Nor is thy fame on lesser ruins built, Nor needs thy juster title the foul guilt Of Eastern kings, who, to secure their reign, Must have their brothers, sons, and kindred slain.

I am sorry to find that an author, who is very justly esteemed among the best judges, has admitted some strokes of this nature into a very fine poem; I mean the Art of Criticism,* which was published some months since, and is a master-piece in its kind. The observations follow one another like those in Horace's Art of Poetry, without that methodical regularity which would have been requisite in a prose author. They are some of them uncommon,† but such as the reader must assent to, when he sees them explained with that elegance and perspicuity in which they are delivered. As for those which are the most known, and the most received, they are placed in contrast with such as them all the grace who was before convinced of the give me leave to has so very well his works, that with so much in advancing things that It is impossible for the world, to make lity, or in any art touched upon by us, but to represent in more strong, lights. If a re Poetry, he will which he may not were not common Augustan age. ing them, not his chiefly to admire.

For this reason world so tiresome write in a position language, genius would see how they may find their manner the characters of and Longinus, and which I am now

Since I have reflections has given which he observes sioned them; I English author has plied several of themselves. I shall of this kind. Some which some readers has the following

These equal Thou' oft the While explain
And ten joy

The gaping of expletive "do" labels in the fourth sage, as would be ancient poet. ing lines in the s

A needless Alex
That like a wou

And afterward

'Tis not enough n
The sound must s Soft is the strain
And the smooth s
But when loud su
The hoarse rough
When Ajax strive
The line too labor
Not so, when swi
Flies o'er the un

The beautiful lines puts me in Odyssey, which of. It is where stone up the hill top of it, but it This double mo * See Pope's Works, vol. v. p. 201. 6 vols. Edit. Lond. 12mo. 1710.

† See Essay on the Genius and Writings of Pope, sect. III. 171. 2d ed. 1763.

BRITISH ESSAYISTS.

in the four intermixed
last trundles

the ground.
POPE

out of Virgil beauty in the
in a future have escaped

taking nogue, which a masterated Verse,*
Essay upon

21, 1711

with sorrow.

essions which world, I am in levity of quality have characters, and
The first of
at the faults
er to it, the

ow changer;
is gay and to be buried al to be shut ades of my old manor-
he conversa-
rd chamber-
ay entertain
gown, the
this time, I pts for mak-
dial waters,

my dear, of would per-rent enough
child, I am
red with ro-
s' marriage
the country
one would es, or roved
first happy isms, and like other
y interested
give you a rance under is a little inon; but I am
e as a fond ot to appear in any public places with your husband, and never to saunter about St. James's-park together: if you presume to enter the ring at Hyde-park together, you are ruined for ever: nor must you take the least notice of one another, at the playhouse, or opera, unless you would be laughed at for a very loving couple, most happily paired in the yoke of wedlock. I would recommend the example of an acquaintance of ours to your imitation; she is the most negligent and fashionable wife in the world; she is hardly ever seen in the same place with her husband, and if they happen to meet, you would think them perfect strangers; she was never heard to name him in his absence, and takes care he shall never be the subject of any discourse that she has a share in. I hope you will propose this lady as a pattern, though I am very much afraid you will be so silly as to think Portia, &c. Sabine and Roman wives, much brighter examples. I wish it may never come into your head to imitate those antiquated creatures so far as to come into public in the habit, as well as air, of a Roman matron. You make already the entertainment at Mrs. Modish's tea-table: she says, she always thought you a discreet person, and qualified to manage a family with admirable prudence; she dies to see what demure and serious airs wedlock has given you; but she says, she shall never forgive your choice of so gallant a man as Bellamour, to transform him into a mere sober husband; it was unpardonable. You see, my dear, we all envy your happiness, and no person more than

"Your humble Servant

"LYDIA."

"Be not in pain, good madam, for my appearance in town; I shall frequent no public places, or make any visits where the character of a modest wife is ridiculous. As for your wild raillery on matrimony, it is all hypocrisy; you, and all the handsome young women of your acquaintance, show yourselves to no other purpose, than to gain a conquest over some man of worth, in order to bestow your charms and fortune on him. There is no indecency in the confession; the design is modest and honourable, and all your affectation cannot disguise it.

"I am married, and have no other concern but to please the man I love; he is the end of every care I have; If I dress, it is for him; If I read a poem, or a play, it is to qualify myself for a conversation agreeable to his taste; he is almost the end of my devotions; half my prayers are for his happiness. I love to talk of him, and never hear him named but with pleasure and emotion. I am your friend, and wish you happiness, but am sorry to see, by the air of your letter, that there are a set of women who are got into the common-place raillery of every thing that is sober, decent, and proper; matrimony and the clergy are the topics of people of little wit and no understanding. I own to you, I have learned of the vicar's wife all you tax me with. She is a discreet, ingenious, pleasant, pious woman; I wish she had the handling of you and Mrs. Modish; you would find, if you were too free with her, she would soon make you as charming as ever you were; she would make you blush as much as if you never had been fine ladies. The vicar, madam, is so kind as to visit my husband, and his agreeable conversation has brought him to enjoy many sober happy hours when even I am shut out, and my dear master is entertained only with his own thoughts. These things, dear madam, lasting satisfactions, when the fine ladies, the coxcombs, by whom they form themselves, are so far from being ridiculous, ridiculous in old age.

"I am, Madam,

"Your most humble Servant,

"MARY HOME."

DEAR MR. SPECTATOR,

I have no goodness in the world, and are not at all in any thing you say that is serious, if not send me a plain answer to this. I happened some days past to be at the play, where, at the time of the performance, I could not keep myself off from a beautiful young creature who sat before me, and who, I have been since informed, is of fortune. It would utterly ruin my reputation, discretion to marry such a one, and by what I learn she has a character of great modesty, so there is nothing to be thought on any other. My mind has ever since been so wholly bent that I am much in danger of doing something extravagant, without your speedy advice.

"Sir,

"Your most humble Servant."

I am sorry I cannot answer this impatient gentleman by another question.

DEAR CORRESPONDENT,

Could you marry to please other people, or not?—T.

[.] SATURDAY, DECEMBER 22, 1711.

Adis amore tunc? sunt certa placula, quæ te et pure lecto poterunt recreare libello.

HOR. EP. I. LIB. I. VER. 36.

IMITATED.

There are rhymes, which (fresh and fresh apply'd)
Are the arrant'st puppy of his pride.—POPE.

The soul, considered abstractedly from its passion, is of a remiss and sedentary nature, slow in its moves, and languishing in its executions. The office of the passions is to stir it up, and to put it upon action, to awaken the understanding, to direct the will, and to make the whole man vigorous and attentive in the prosecution of his business. As this is the end of the passions in general, so it is particularly of ambition, which directs the soul to such actions as are apt to procure honour and reputation to the actor. But if we reflect on the higher, we may discover the wisdom of Providence in implanting this passion in the mind.

It is necessary for the world, that arts should be improved, books written and translated, posterity, nations conquered and civilized. Hence the proper and genuine motives to do the like great actions, would only influence the minds; there would be but small improvements in the world, were there not some common principle of action working equally with all, and such a principle is ambition, or a desire by which great endowments are not sufficient idle and useless to the public, and many men are overreached, as it were, and contrary to their natural inclinations, in a bold and laudable course of action. For we may observe, that men of the greatest abilities are most fired with ambition; and that, on the other hand, mean and narrow minds are the least affected with it: whether it be that a man's sense of honour—Nos. 37 & 38.

his own incapacities, or that he has no share in fame, or that he has no way to look out for any good, or that he immediately relate to his own condition, that Providence, in his wisdom, would not subject him to a pursuit so useless to the world, as to himself.

Were not this the difficulty of obtaining what is desired, when obtained, would be from so vain a pursuit.

How few are there of abilities sufficient to receive the admiration of the world, and how few of the most part sets us in a kind of proportion to it. If it renders us perfect, it generally leaves us defective, and is rather of a being mean and defective, than of making any single one perfect.

Among those who are ambitious by nature, and according to how few are there who are not by the ignorance, pride, and ambition, holders! Some men are content with a mean action, and are content with them to some false end, and purposely misrepresentation on them. But the moderation, we may observe, is most unsuccessful in the world, and are most desirous of a remark upon Cato, that the more he acquired, the more he was inclined to.

Men take an ill-natural inclination, and disordered hearts are most set upon it. We have discovered the passion of the ambitious man (as not to show itself), they begin in their commendation of an applause, and as a kindness done to him, paid to his merit. Of natural perverseness of praises of one who sets least they should raise imagination, and by a greater distance from the truth.

But, further, this desire of the ambitious man in lessening to his reputation any of his actions should least his deserts should be of the world, or receive reports which others sets them on empty of himself, and betrays the capitals of his own performance. He generally leans one way, of it, tends obliquely either to others, or to the extolling natural weakness of and poses him to the secret he converses with, and industrious to advance but are never so glorious, they are drawn at large.

to find fault
ably be cen-
sured it is looked on as stest charac-

of soul looks censures and man beyond Accordingly,
eneration for us in a regu-
without any him, to our
on the con-
take off from scribe it to actor. Nor of mankind
great bravery
action by so
of a desire of to by a dis-
trous passion

obtained by first after it, ill-nature, or
the vanity of thirst after decencies as itself looked characters,
and as dif-
t to be ac-
fect of a fol-

24, 1711.

HENSON

ers of mind and vilify the mankind. All the world with
looked on as his merits a will therefore deal of some of the pre-
same level consideration once his su-
their merit
and overtake all therefore they may the were once
se they now
were once
as their

ary reputa-
observation
upon him,
him, con-
be a little the worst and many who mon reports aknesses of an exalted character. They publish their ill-natured discoveries with a secret pride, and applaud themselves for the singularity of their judgment, which has searched deeper than others, detected what the rest of the world have overlooked, and found a flaw in what the generality of mankind admire. Others there are who proclaim the errors and infirmities of a great man with an inward satisfaction and complacency, if they discover none of the like errors and infirmities in themselves; for while they are exposing another's weaknesses, they are tacitly aiming at their own commendations, who are not subject to the like infirmities, and are apt to be transported with a secret kind of vanity, to see themselves superior, in some respects, to one of a sublime and celebrated reputation. Nay, it very often happens, that none are more industrious in publishing the blemishes of an extraordinary reputation, than such as lie open to the same censures in their own characters, as either hoping to excuse their own defects by the authority of so high an example, or to raise an imaginary applause to themselves, for resembling a person of an exalted reputation, though in the blameable parts of his character. If all these secret springs of detraction fail, yet very often a vain ostentation of wit sets a man on attacking an established name, and sacrificing it to the mirth and laughter of those about him. A satire or a libel on one of the common stamp, never meets with that reception and approbation among its readers, as what is aimed at a person whose merit places him upon an eminence, and gives him a more conspicuous figure among men. Whether it be, that we think it shows greater art to expose and turn to ridicule a man whose character seems so improper a subject for it, or that we are pleased, by some implicit kind of revenge, to see him taken down and humbled in his reputation, and in some measure reduced to our own rank, who had so far raised himself above us, in the reports and opinions of mankind.

Thus we see how many dark and intricate motives there are to detraction and defamation, and how many malicious spies are searching into the actions of a great man, who is not always the best prepared for so narrow an inspection. For we may generally observe, that our admiration of a famous man lessens upon our nearer acquaintance with him: and that we seldom hear the description of a celebrated person, without a catalogue of some notorious weaknesses and infirmities. The reason may be, because any little slip is more conspicuous and observable in his conduct than in another's, as it is not of a piece with the rest of his character; or because it is impossible for a man at the same time to be attentive to the more important part of his life, and to keep a watchful eye over all the inconsiderable circumstances of his behaviour and conversation; or because, as we have before observed, the same temper of mind which inclines us to a desire of fame, naturally betrays us into such slips and unwarinesses, as are not incident to men of a contrary disposition.

After all, it must be confessed, that a noble and triumphant merit often breaks through and dissipates these little spots and sullies in its reputation; but if by a mistaken pursuit after fame, or through human infirmity, any false step be made in the more momentous concerns of life, the whole scheme of ambitious designs is broken and disappointed. The smaller stains and blemishes may die away, and disappear amidst the brightness that surrounds at a blot of a deeper nature casts a shade on other beauties, and darkens the whole. How difficult, therefore, is it to preserve fame, when he that has acquired it is so subject to such little weaknesses and infirmities, a small diminution to it when discovered; when they are so industriously promoted and aggravated by such as were once his equals; by such as would set to show-gement, or their wit, and by such as are innocent of the same slips or misconducts of their own behaviour.

Were there none of these dispositions in a famous man, nor any such misfortune in himself, yet would he meet with no trouble in keeping up his reputation, in all its splendour. There must be always a succession of actions to preserve his fame in life. For when it is once at a stand, it languishes. Admiration is a very short passion, that immediately decays upon becoming familiar with its object, unless it be still fresh discoveries, and kept alive by a new succession of miracles rising up to its aid, and even the greatest actions of a celebrated labourer under this disadvantage, that, surprising and extraordinary they may be, no more than what are expected from him; the contrary, if they fall any thing below what is conceived of him, though they raise the reputation of another, they are a blot on his.

One would think there should be something peculiarly pleasing in the possession of fame, that, notwithstanding all these mortifying considerations, would make a man in so desperate a pursuit; and yet consider the little happiness that attends a reputation, and the multitude of disquietudes to the desire of it subjects an ambitious mind, and he is still the more surprised to see so many candidates for glory.

It raises a secret tumult in the soul; it agitates the mind, and puts it into a violent hurry. It is still reaching after an empty good, that has not in it the power to abate its desire. Most other things we long for, can allay the ardour of their proper sense, and for a while set us at rest; but fame is a good so wholly foreign to our natures, that we have no faculty in the mind to it, nor any organ in the body to it; an object of desire, placed out of the possibility of fruition. It may indeed fill the mind with a giddy kind of pleasure, but it is such as makes a man restless and uneasy under which does not much satisfy the present; it excites fresh desires, and sets the soul on new enterprises. For how few ambitious men are to be found who have got as much fame as they desired, and yet thirst after it has not been as eager in the pursuit of their reputation, as it was before they were known and eminent among men? There is a circumstance in Cesar's character which gives us a greater idea of him, than a saying which he frequently made use of in private conversation, "That he was satisfied with his share of fame." "Se satis vel ad naturam, vel ad vicium." Many indeed have given over the pursuit after fame, but that has proceeded from the disappointments they have met in it, from their experience of the little pleasure which it affords, or from the better informations or natural wisdom of old age; but seldom from a full satisfaction and acquiescence in the attainments of it.

Nor is fame only unsatisfactory, because the desire of it lays us open to the attacks of fortune, which those are free from who are content to be regarded for it. How often do we see men brought down and disappointed where he expected it? How often is he satisfied with the very praise which he has risen so high as he thought he should seldom do unless increased. How often do men have so good an opinion of themselves? But if the fame which has so much grieved even with the power to be able to bear up under the same temper of mind, fame makes him hate reported with the extraordinary, he is as much dejected by the success, therefore, is the happiness which gives every one a dominating power over himself to the good or ill of the world, it is in the power of every man to bring him into a fit of melancholy, and to disturb his rest and repose of mind. Consider that the world is made up of vanity, of applause, and himself full of virtues.

We may further observe, that we are more grieved for the loss of fame, than we have been pleased with the acquisition, though the presence of fame makes us happy, the absence of it is so miserable: because in the loss of fame we only find that share of pleasure which was giving us, but in the loss of fame we find our grief to the real value of our fancies and imaginations.

So inconsiderable is the pleasure which fame brings along with it, and so liable to be taken away, which it makes us liable to very uneasy motions in the mind, than satisfied by the possession of it. The enjoyment of fame is a pleasure, though the loss of it is so miserable and afflicting; and the desire of it is so very precarious, that it is in the power of the will of others. We reproach ourselves which are pointed by the silence of others, and humbled even by the

No. 257.] SATURDAY

No slumber seals the eye Present to every action

THAT I might not be so great extent as that of particular order and method, I have considered the reasons why fame is so much planted in our mind, and what it has in the next place, the reasons, first, that fame is so much desired, and easily to be obtained, and secondly, that the ambitious man very often has him to much uneasiness in the last place show, and which is accompanied with an end which we I need not tell my reader, that happiness which is procure, and of joy, and

er us in the ve the reader
siderations:
fame breeds

tions, which nature con-

w the same
both of acpiness, they t of this last the first.

ent to those rality. For n them, but which may eculation.

l, I think we
at it is the ation of any or these two ake a right ding to our considerable
and appro-

make a right ding to our
our outside,
of us from ut how unfit
each other's siderations.

own nature
ation; many man, which but not able
e of others;

oise or show,
er of hearts.
e purity of
rtuous man?

mind, which present con-
complacency
delight and prosperity and like virtues secret graces

ortal eye, but is sight from b, there are
y of exerting

Every virtue ect and a fit
due exercise
the virtues of ce and fortied in the e virtues are prosperity;

lic capacity.
eholds every ly sees what ews our be-

and sees us
n. He dis-

the trial of flames and tortures, and will hereafter entitle man to the reward of actions which they had never at opportunity of performing. Another reason why men cannot form a right judgment of us is, because the same actions may be aimed at different ends and arise from quite contrary principles. Actions are of so mixed a nature, and so full of circumstances, that as men pry into them more or less, they observe some parts more than others, they take different hints, and put contrary interpretations on them; so that the same actions may represent man as hypocritical and designing to one, while they make him appear a saint or hero to another. He therefore, who looks upon the soul through its outward actions, often sees it through a deceitful medium, which is apt to discolour and pervert the object; so that, on this account also, he is the least proper judge of our perfections, who does not gaze at the sincerity of our intentions from the goodness of our actions, but weighs the goodness of our actions by the sincerity of our intentions.

But further, it is impossible for outward actions to represent the perfections of the soul, because they can never show the strength of those principles from whence they proceed. They are not adequate expressions of our virtues, and can only show what habits are in the soul, without discovering the degree and perfection of such habits. They are the best but weak resemblances of our intentions, fair and imperfect, that may acquaint us with the general design, but can never express the beauty and life of the original. But the great Judge of all the soul knows every different state and degree of human improvement, from those weak stirrings and tendencies of the will which have not yet formed themselves into regular purposes and designs, to the last entire finishing and consummation of a good habit. He beholds the first imperfect rudiments of a virtue in the soul, and keeps a watchful eye over it in all its progress, until it has received every grace it is capable of, and appears in its full beauty and perfection. Thus we see, that none but the Supreme Being can esteem us according to our proper merits, since all others must judge of us from our outward actions; which can never give them a just estimate of us, since there are many perfections of a man which are not capable of appearing in actions; many which, allowing no natural incapacity of showing themselves, want an opportunity of doing it; or should they all meet with an opportunity of appearing by actions, yet those actions may be misinterpreted, and applied to wrong principles, so that though they plainly discovered the principles from whence they proceeded, they could never show the degree, strength, and perfection of those principles.

And as the Supreme Being is the only proper judge of our perfections, so he is the only fit rewarder of them. This is a consideration that comes home to our interest, as the other adapts itself to our ambition. And what could the most aspiring man desire more, were he to form the notion of a Being to whom he would recommend himself, than such a knowledge as can discover the least appearance of perfection in him, and such goodness as will proportion a reward to it?

Let the ambitious man, therefore, turn off his desire of fame this way; and, that he may propose himself a fame worthy of his ambition, let him consider, that if he employs his abilities to the best advantage, the time will come when the Supreme Governor of the world, the great Judge of mankind, who sees every degree of perfection in others, and possesses all possible perfection in himself, shall proclaim his worth before men and angels, and pronounce to him in the presence of the whole creation that best and most significant of applause, "Well done, thou good and faithful servant, enter thou into thy Master's joy."—C.

No. 258.] WEDNESDAY, DECEMBER 26, 1711.

Divide et impera

Divide and rule.

PLEASURE and recreation of one kind or other are absolutely necessary to relieve our minds and bodies from too constant attention and labour: where therefore public diversions are tolerated, it behoves persons of distinction, with their power and example, to preside over them in such a manner as to check any thing that tends to the corruption of manners, or which is too mean or trivial for the entertainment of reasonable creatures. As to the diversions of this kind in this town, we owe them to the arts of poetry and music. My own private opinion, with relation to such recreations, I have heretofore given with all the frankness imaginable; what concerns those arts at present the reader shall have from my correspondents. The first of the letters with which I acquit myself for this day, is written by one who proposes to improve our entertainments of dramatic poetry, and the other comes from three persons, who, as soon as named, will be thought capable of advancing the present state of music.

"MR. SPECTATOR,

"I am considerably obliged to you for your speedy publication of my last in yours of the 18th instant, and am in no small hopes of being settled in the post of Comptroller of the Cries. Of all the objections I have hearkened after in public coffee-houses, there is but one that seems to carry any weight with it, viz. That such a post would come too near the nature of a monopoly. Now, Sir, because I would have all sorts of people made easy, and being willing to have more strings than one to my bow; in case that a comptroller should fail me, I have since formed another project, which being grounded on the dividing of a present monopoly, I hope will give the public an equivalent to their full content. You know, Sir, it is allowed, that the business of the stage is, as the Latin has it, jucunda et idonea dicere vita. Now, there being but one dramatic theatre licensed for the delight and profit of this extensive metropolis, I do humbly propose, for the convenience of such of its inhabitants as are too distant from Covent-garden, that another theatre of ease may be erected in some spacious part of the city; and that the direction thereof may be made a franchise in fee to me and my heirs for ever. And that the town may have no jealousy of my ever coming into a union with the set of actors now in being, I do further propose to constitute for my deputy my near kinsman and adventurer, Kit Crotchbet,* whose long experience and improvements in those affairs need no recommendation. It was obvious to every spectator, what a quite different foot the stage was upon during his government; and had he not been bolted out of his trap-doors, his garrison might have held out for ever; he having by long pains and perseverance arrived at the art of making his army fight without pay or provisions. I must confess it is with a melancholy amazement I and the late masters; during theatrical entertainments are not able to

"Every man have either w it, that all wh may improve pable. In sho as well as said active body, t for the imitat so speak, corp fain ask any should not ro walkers, and stage? After would be lea of the audien cry aloud for the province o should it be twenty years master was in others more t in contempt o have the inso at the end o public good; get a private will recomme week's paper you will accep have received

"P. S. I h will declare fo

"MR. S.

"We whos the properet offer the tow which we pro your favour f which the tow sure of this b judging is, th as it is agreea poetry, we co of relishing th composure of where all the served, though to say it sho art no other t Music, theref by poetry; it sentiment to o other organs o little above t this opinion o had finished b the opera of Dieupart, wh and received zealously incl introducing s Italian music this end, Mr. to their sever * Christopher Rich.

BRITISH ESSAYISTS.

at advantage
not proper to complaints
that without equally set
tion, there-
ter in your ve all three ts of music
e in York-
is, to make times; and e of the au-
be sold in l authors of music for e receipt of
It will, we e capable of rce and dif-
e in music;
hing as an
matter un-
ly contains to say, that iving an art-
ism under at establish-
, at recoveramilies who rs who pre-ne language
to be so inefined and eirs. In a e and humi-
is undertakshmen who red in it for e things we pass others,
a science is as who have hat we hope contemning
nce recom-

ts,
AYTON.
AYM.
IEUPART."

ER 27, 1711.

est decet.
TULL

honourable is come under k could not ivilities and e might be se, without ich we call for it some-ty which is gnifies right ent to. In is no great

since it is d there are fewer, who against common rules and fashions, dare obey its dictates. As to salutations, which I was about to talk of, I observe, as I stroll about town, there are great enormities committed with regard to this particular.—You shall sometimes see a man begin the offer of a salutation, and observe a forbidding air, or escaping eye, in the person he is going to salute, and stop short in the poll of his neck. This in the person who believed he could do it with a good grace, and was refused the opportunity, is justly resented with a coldness the whole ensuing season. Your great beauties, people in much favour, or by any means or for any purpose overflattered, are apt to practise this, which you may call the preventing aspect, and throw their attention another way, lest they should confer a bow or a courtesy upon a person who might not appear to deserve that dignity. Others you shall find so obsequious, and so very courteous, as there is no escaping their favours of this kind. Of this sort may be a man who is in the fifth or sixth degree of favour with a minister. This good creature is resolved to show the world, that great honours cannot at all change his manners; he is the same civil person he ever was; he will venture his neck to bow out of a coach in full speed, at once to show he is full of business, and yet not be taken up as to forget his old friend. With a man who is not so well formed for courtship and elegant behaviour, such a gentleman as this seldom finds his account in the return of his compliments; but he will still go on, for he is in his own way, and must not omit; let the neglect fall on your side, or where it will, his business is still to be well-bred to the end. I think I have read, in one of our English comedies, a description of a fellow that affects knowing every body, and for want of judgment in time and place, would bow and smile in the face of a judge sitting in the court, would sit in an opposite gallery and smile in the minister's face as he came up into the pulpit, and nod as if he alluded to some familiarities between them in another place. But now I happen to speak of salutation at church, must take notice that several of my correspondents have importuned me to consider that subject, and settle the point of decorum in that particular.

I do not pretend to be the best courtier in the world, but I have often on public occasions thought it a very great absurdity in the company (during the royal presence) to exchange salutations from all parts of the room, when certainly common sense should suggest, that all regards at that time should be engaged, and cannot be diverted to any other object, without disrespect to the sovereign. But as to the complaint of my correspondents, it is not to be imagined what offence some of them take at the custom of saluting in places of worship. I have very angry letter from a lady, who tells me of one of her acquaintance, who, out of mere pride and pretence to be rude, takes upon her to return no civilities done to her in the time of divine service, and is the most religious woman, for no other reason but to appear a woman of the best quality in the church. This absurd custom had better be abolished than retained; if it were but to prevent evil of no higher a nature than this is; but I am informed of objections much more considerable. A dissenter of rank and distinction was lately prevailed upon by a friend of his to come to one of the greatest congregations of the church of England about town. After the service was over, he declared he was very well satisfied with the little ceremon-which was used towards God Almighty; but at the same time he feared he should not be able to go through those required towards one another: as to this point he was in a state of despair, and feared he was not well-bred enough to be a convert. There have been many scandals of this kind given to our Protestant dissenters, from the outward pomp and respect we take to ourselves in our religious assemblies. A Quaker who came one day into a church, fixed his eye upon an old lady with a carpet larger than that from the pulpit before her, expecting when she would hold forth. An anabaptist who designs to come over himself, and all his family, within a few months, is sensible they want breeding enough for our congregations, and has sent his two oldest daughters to learn to dance, that they may not misbehave themselves at church. It is worth considering whether, in regard to awkward people with scrupulous consciences, a good Christian of the best air in the world ought not rather to deny herself the opportunity of showing so many graces, than keep a bashful proselyte without the pale of the church.—T.

No. 260.] FRIDAY, DECEMBER 28, 1711.

Singula de nobis anni prædantur euntes.—HON. J. EP. II. 55.

Years following years steal something every day.
At last they steal us from ourselves away.—POPE.

“MR. SPECTATOR,

I AM now in the sixty-fifth year of my age, and having been the greater part of my days a man of pleasure, the decay of my faculties is a stagnation of my life. But how is it, Sir, that my appetites are increased upon me with the loss of power to gratify them? I write this like a criminal, to warn people to enter upon what reformation they please to make in themselves in their youth, and not expect they shall be capable of it from a fond opinion some have often in their mouths, that if we do not leave our desires, they will leave us. It is far otherwise; I am now as vain in my dress, and as suppliant, if I see a pretty woman, as when in my youth I stood upon a bench in the pit to survey the whole circle of beauties. The folly is so extravagant with me, and I went on with so little check of my desires or resignation of them, that I can assure you, I very often, merely to entertain my own thoughts, sit with my spectacles on, writing love-letters to the beauties that have been long since in their graves. This is to warm my heart with the faint memory of delights which were once agreeable to me: but how much happier would my life have been now, if I could have looked back on any worthy action done for my country? if I had laid out that which I profused in luxury and wantonness, in acts of generosity or charity? I have lived a bachelor to this day; and instead of a numerous offspring, with which in the regular ways of life I might possibly have delighted myself, I have only to amuse myself with the repetition of old stories and intrigues which no one will believe I ever was concerned in. I do not know whether you have ever treated of it or not; but you cannot fall on a better subject, than that of the art of growing old. In such a lecture you must propose, that no one set his heart upon what is transient; the beauty grows wrinkled while we are yet gazing at her. The witty man sinks into a humourist imperceptibly, by want of reflecting that all things around him are a flux, and continually changing: thus he is in the space of ten years, a new set of people looks upon them as his delusion of living, were it not for the But the mischief of error which is of scorn, and entertain again. Thus a crazy man, fretted with vanity, doing foolishly. Sir, this is my I should laugh at the time of youth, the way in which I these consequences away life as the pleasant; only actions is a feast to the soul than the highest enjoyment me, if I sit down ponder, the vagabondous than the common my memory; the tunes, interrupt quarrels, are very soliloquy. I ladies of my age persuaded to waste son; and that I him a cane, and I must add to a pleasure, which very late years faction left; but 1714, and all worth fifty thou-

“MR. SPECTATOR,

“You will insert you will insert your letter to me not a person of humour of story she herself told fits. These fits together; and vocation, so it them without the and love will pray let her be

“MADAM,

“I love you, not tell me of until humours, have that happy ten weeks together that while I be still you say it you too grow Which do you should alter a and that to oblige that to lay no I indulge your you favour my

BRITISH ESSAYISTS.

able resolu-

Servant."

in the same
try to in my me to those
Do not you
and you have

vant,
"T. B."

and am in all at hot-days; when lled off her p, as almost as this love

ER 29, 1711.

ca.

first specu-
with honour
lled to me my younger and partly by
of a person
d not at my sion to me;
ed me from
, she by de-
silly fellow,
re than any eir applica-ragoons who its in those

an aversion
ouraged me
x. The obncture, and at that time
l, have prod marriage.
is generally
his passion
with discre-
ng emotions

not in love,
sion for her,
or one who le love has esentments,
eyes of the sides that it ensions, and n appear ri-
end himself.
most with d by a long e, and gather
it. A long the idea in dness of the

ce to us, as the good qualities of one to whom we join ourselves for life; they do not make our present state agreeable, but often determine our happiness to all eternity. Where the choice is left to friends, the chief point under consideration is an estate; where the parties choose for themselves, their thoughts turn most upon the person. They have both their reasons. The first would procure many conveniences and pleasures of life to the party whose interests they espouse; and at the same time may hope that the wealth of their friends will turn to their own credit and advantage. The others are preparing for themselves a perpetual feast. A good person does not only raise but continue love, and breeds a secret pleasure and complacency in the beholder, when the first heats of desire are extinguished. It puts the wife or husband in countenance both among friends and strangers, and generally fills the family with a healthy and beautiful race of children.

I should prefer a woman that is agreeable in my own eye, and not deformed in that of the world, to a celebrated beauty. If you marry one remarkably beautiful, you must have a violent passion for her, or you have not the proper taste for her charms; and if you have such a passion for her, it is odds but it would be imbibited with fears and jealousies.

Good-nature and evenness of temper will give you an easy companion for life; virtue and good sense an agreeable friend; love and constancy, a good wife or husband. Where we meet one person with all these accomplishments, we find a hundred without any one of them. The world, notwithstanding, is more intent on trains and equipages, and all the showy parts of life; we love rather to dazzle the multitude, than consult our proper interests; and, as I have elsewhere observed, it is one of the most unaccountable passions of human nature, that we are at greater pains to appear easy and happy to others, than really to make ourselves so. Of all disparities, that in humour makes the most unhappy marriages, yet scarce enters into our thoughts at the contracting of them. Several that are in this respect unequally yoked, and uneasy for life with a person of a particular character, might have been pleased and happy with a person of a contrary one, notwithstanding they are both perhaps equally virtuous and laudable in their kind.

Before marriage we cannot be too inquisitive and discerning in the faults of the person beloved, nor after it too dim-sighted and superficial. However perfect and accomplished the person appears to you at a distance, you will find many blemishes and imperfections in her humour, upon a more intimate acquaintance, which you never discovered or perhaps suspected. Here, therefore, discretion and good-nature are to show their strength; the first will hinder your thoughts from dwelling on what is disagreeable, the other will raise in you all the tenderness of compassion and humanity, and by degrees soften those very imperfections into beauties.

Marriage enlarges the scene of our happiness and miseries. A marriage of love is pleasant; a marriage of interest easy; and a marriage where both meet, happy. A happy marriage has in it all the pleasures of friendship, all the enjoyments of sense and reason, and indeed all the sweets of life. Nothing is a greater mark of a degenerate and vicious age, than the common ridicule which passes on this state of life. It is, indeed, only happy in those who can look down with scorn and neglect on the impieties of the times, and tread the paths of life together in a constant uniform course of virtue.—C.

[ MONDAY, DECEMBER 31, 1711.

monato littera mista joco est.—OVID. Trist. ii. 566.

ADAPTED.

My paper flows from no satiric vein, Contains no poison, and conveys no pain.

Am myself highly obliged to the public for the acceptance of a paper which visits them every morning, and has in it none of those seasonable recommendations so many of the writings are in vogue among us.

On the one side, my paper has not in it a word of news, a reflection in politics, nor a party; so, on the other, there are no able touches of infidelity, no obscene ideas, no upon priesthood, marriage, and the like topics of ridicule; no private scandal; nor any that may tend to the defamation of persons, families, or societies.

It is not one of those above-mentioned subjects which would not sell a very indifferent paper, sink of gratifying the public by such mean methods. But notwithstanding I have every thing that savours of party, every thing that is loose and immoral, and every thing that creates uneasiness in the minds of partisans, I find that the demand for my papers is every month since their first appearance in the world. This does not perhaps reflect so honourably upon myself, as on my readers, who show greater attention to discourses of immorality than ever I expected, or indeed desire.

I broke loose from that great body of men who have employed their wit and parts in vice and irreligion, I did not question could be treated as an odd kind of fellow, or a mind to appear singular in my way of thinking; but the general reception I have found of me that the world is not so corrupt as we imagine; and that if those men of parts who have been employed in vitiating the age had been employed to rectify and amend it, they needed not have sacrificed their good sense and virtue to vice and reputation. No man is so sunk in ignorance, but there are still some hidden goodness and knowledge in him; which a relish of such reflections and speculations is aptness to improve the mind, and make it better.

As I have shown in a former paper, with how much care I have avoided all such thoughts as are loose, or immoral; and I believe my reader would be the better of me, if he knew the pains I am qualifying what I write after such a manner, that nothing may be interpreted as aimed at persons. For this reason, when I draw any character, I consider all those persons to whom the malice of the world may possibly apply, and take care to dash it with such particular circumstances as may prevent all such ill-natured applications.

If I write any thing on a black man, or in my mind all the eminent persons in the world who are of that complexion: when I give an imaginary name at the head of a character, every syllable and letter of it, that it bears any resemblance to one that is real, I value very well the value which every man sets upon his reputation, and how painful it is to be exposed to the mirth and derision of the public, and therefore strive to divert my reader at the expense of my private man.

As I have been thus careful of a person's reputation, so I have not given ordinary care not to give in the higher figures of the world, and myself merry even with a public.

I have never glanced at the possession of his Holiness, or standing it might have in the ridiculous speculations.

which the public may not the least, that it draws the bitterness of party, and subjects of discourse that warmth or passion. The first design of those gentlemen of the Royal Society; and has it turned many of the gentlemen to the disquisitions of the sciences they had engaged in, and application, might have been a flame. The air-pump, and the like inventions, and the busy spirits, as tubs, and that he may let the ship sink while he diverts himself with amusements.

I have been so very careful of not hurting any man, that I forbore mentioning even names, not name with honour. I have been a piece of very great public relishes nothing better than upon a writer of any country, which a man that has been in ridicule may execute with ease, and raise laughter for a quarter of a century. The works of a person who has written few volumes. For while those who have made so very little of their time, I have hitherto published with intention rather to discover in the writers of my own country of their faults and immorality, while, I should take it for granted that some of my underhand measures break all measures with pretence for examining with an impartial eye: nor should I have a breach of charity to cry out, I keep clear of the persons.

In the mean while, and hostilities, I shall from now do justice to those who have served in the politest part of the world, out such beauties in the world as have escaped the observation of the public.

As the first place among the ancients is due to Milton; and as I have not out of him than from any other, a regular criticism upon his works shall publish every Saturday my thoughts upon that poet, and presume to impose upon the judgment on this author, and private opinion. Criticism and every particular manner of favourite passages in an author, strike the best judges. If I discover many beauties in others, I have not attended

ers publish
In short, I
ay papers of s expressed

Ep. vi. ult.
our own, com-
of these I pre-

1, 1711-12.

re, qualiscun-
quam.
apud TELL.
ed from duty,
an love from

wardly son,
ut also my extremely ntly resume
of relations
th those of gence, and e this done
t think any od play, fit necessarily sses of hued by com-
outrageous
s to answer
e, and look
t infancy to committed myself bea notion

as when he
the sudden
he will act
imagined,
ng train of n I saw my
w, and turn ungest boy nations will numberless
ce of while when they
l look upon hat they did ded were to d things do pleased my n, but that of humour
had reason
o into the ad with an nsequence,
e good man
raves, who ir children,
thing at the

The truth
re in these ng instinct ould be on welcome to the generality of mankind, and growth towards manhood so desirable to all, that resignation to decay is too difficult a task in the father; and deference, amidst the impulse of gay desires, appears unreasonable to the son. There are so few who can grow old with a good grace, and yet fewer who can come slow enough into the world, that a father, were he to be actuated by his desires, and a son, were he to consult himself only, could neither of them behave himself as he ought to the other. But when reason interposes against instinct, where it would carry either out of the interests of the other, there arises that happiest intercourse of good offices between those dearest relations of human life. The father, according to the opportunities which are offered to him, is throwing down blessings on the son, and the son endeavouring to appear the worthy offspring of such a father. It is after this manner that Camillus and his first-born dwell together. Camillus enjoys a pleasing and indolent old age, in which passion is subdued, and reason exalted. He waits the day of his dissolution with a resignation mixed with delight; and the son fears the accession of his father's fortune with diffidence, lest he should not enjoy or become it as well as his predecessor. Add to this, that the father knows he leaves a friend to the children of his friends, an easy landlord to his tenants, and an agreeable companion to his acquaintance. He believes his son's behaviour will make him frequently remembered, but never wanted. This commerce is so well cemented, that without the pomp of saying, 'Son, be a friend to such-a-one when I am gone,' Camillus knows, being in his favour is direction enough to the grateful youth who is to succeed him, without the admission of his mentioning it. These gentlemen are honoured all in their neighbourhood, and the same effect which the court has on the manners of a kingdom, their characters have on all who live within the influence of them.

"My son and I are not of fortune to communicate our good actions or intentions to so many as these gentlemen do; but I will be bold to say, my son has, by the applause and approbation which his behaviour towards me has gained him, occasioned that many an old man besides myself has rejoiced. Other men's children follow the example of mine, and I have the inexpressible happiness of overhearing our neighbours, as we ride by, point to their children, and say, with a voice of joy, 'There they go.'

"You cannot, Mr. Spectator, pass your time better than in insinuating the delights which those relations, well regarded, bestow upon each other. Ordinary passages are no longer such, but mutual love gives an importance to the most indifferent things, and a merit to actions the most insignificant. When we look round the world, and observe the many misunderstandings which are created by the malice and insinuation of the meanest servant between people thus related, how necessary will it appear that it were inculcated, that men would be upon their guard to support a constancy of affection, and that grounded upon the principles of reason, not the impulses of instinct.

"It is from the common prejudices which men receive from their parents, that hatreds are kept alive from one generation to another; and what men act by instinct, hatred will descend when good offices are forgotten. For the degeneracy of human life is such, that our anger is more easily transferred to our children, than our love. Love always gives

ng to the object it delights in, and anger he person against whom it is moved of ng landable in him; from this degeneracy, e, and a sort of self-love, we are more prone up the ill-will of our parents, than to follow their friendships.

e would think there should need no more to en keep up this sort of relation with the sanctity, than to examine their own hearts. y father remembered his own thoughts and ions when he was a son, and every son reed what he expected from his father, when he was in a state of dependance, this one reflection reserve men from being dissolute or rigid in veral capacities. The power and subjection them, when broken, make them more emly tyrants and rebels against each other, rater cruelty of heart, than the disruption of nd empires can possibly produce. I shall application to you with two letters, which between a mother and son very lately, and allows:

DEAR FRANK,

the pleasures, which I have the grief to hear ue in town, do not take up all your time, deny your mother so much of it as to read y this letter. You said before Mr. Letacre, old woman might live very well in the upon half my jointure, and that your father ond fool to give me a rent charge of eight d a-year to the prejudice of his son. What said to you upon that occasion, you ought borne with more decency, as he was your well-beloved servant, than to have called ntry-put. In the first place, Frank, I must a, I will have my rent duly paid, for I will p to your sisters for the partiality I was d, in making your father do so much as he s for you. I may, it seems, live upon half ture! I lived upon much less, Frank, when d you from place to place in these arms, and either eat, dress, or mind any thing for feed- l tending you a weakly child, and shedding hen the convulsions you were then troubled turned upon you. By my care you outgrew to throw away the vigour of your youth in s of harlots, and deny your mother what is rs to detain. Both your sisters are crying the passion which I smother; but if you to go on thus like a gentleman of the town, get all regards to yourself and family, I shall ately enter upon your estate for the arrear me, and, without one tear more, condemn forgetting the fondness of your mother, as is you have the example of your father. O do I live to omit writing myself,

"Your affectionate Mother,

"A. T."

MADAM,

will come down to-morrow and pay the on my knees. Pray write so no more. I te care you never shall, for I will be for ever er,

"Your most dutiful Son,

"F. T."

will bring down new hoods for my sisters. t all be forgotten."—T.

No. 264.] WEDNESDAY

— Secretum iter et

In public walks let w I'll silent steal through

It has been from ag the pleasure of soliti possibly be supposed manner. This peopl the many agreeable th on that subject, for w lent persons who delig stracted from the plea rality of the world. T indeed with great bee disposes the reader fo fulness, or negligence in which he is engage that state which he is But when we consider there are capable of sophic solitude, we sh to that sort of solitud enjoying time after best in the world, wi withdraw from it. I not a man breathing other men as much in the features of his fa one is so happy as to proper bent of his gen to exert himself accor stead of this, which is a man's self, and tur wherein you have cro who pursue their ow spirit of contradiction which they are able punity could not go t only because anothe sooth an inviolable manner of moment. shall wear this or tha great integrity, while degenerated into bu known to their ance this is, if it were sear would find it not s fashion in his heart, nacy. But I am runn which was to celebra of passing away life, but with a resolution bitant desires by whi best way of separati is to give up the desi a man has preserved all duties incumbent own way is what mal slave. If they who a many of their specta they would be very n inclination to exami do with: they woul many who make a fig merit entitles them elegant desire of ease look like romance to man who is content one who does not un lodging of ant; while on in cloth

y attention to prayers
able to re-
which is the methods to a numerous
e has every widow, the er, bless his ourist gives of his own
pleasure of ly, and best keeps to gives a vast eaven, and of worldly
r.

icular way,
a the most l not admit uld not be t, though he
in the world
y, at which spent some on him. A l the little averns and ect skill in and acting
e was poor,
have of all
ery rightly,
y a secret,
proved this and covet-
resolved to
-sixth year
and looked deserted by urchase of hanged his ch younger
for a much ipped from the form of ress, turned is in ready ne, he took at the manwashes, and time to this ration under e left off all all his arts
mon, upon
s. Irus has,
mood, given of being a nes to visit his money
the public
asses, shuns uldern when g rich, with g so. He is e peace, who
that what he has must come to somebody, and that he has no heirs, have that effect wherever he is known, that he has every day three or four invitations to dine at different places, which he generally takes care to choose in such a manner as not to seem inclined to the richer man. All the young men respect him, and say he is just the same man he was when they were boys. He uses no artifice in the world, but makes use of men's designs upon him to get a maintenance out of them. This he carries on by a certain peevishness (which he acts very well,) that no one would believe could possibly enter into the head of a poor fellow. His mien, his dress, his carriage, and his language, are such, that you would be at a loss to guess whether in the active part of his life he had been a sensible citizen, or scholar that knew the world. These are the great circumstances in the life of Irus, and thus does he pass away his days a stranger to mankind; and at his death, the worst that will be said of him will be, that he got by every man who had expectations from him, more than he had to leave him.

I have an inclination to print the following letters; for I have heard the author of them has somewhere or other seen me, and by an excellent faculty in mimicry my correspondents tell me he can assume my air, and give my taciturnity a slyness which diverts more than any thing I could say if I were present. Thus I am glad my silence is atoned for to the good company in town. He has carried his skill in imitation so far, as to have forged a letter from my friend Sir Roger in such a manner, that any one but I, who am thoroughly acquainted with him, would have taken it for genuine.

"MR. SPECTATOR,

"Having observed in Lilly's grammar how sweetly Bacchus and Apollo run in a verse; I have (to preserve the amity between them) called in Bacchus to the aid of my profession of the theatre. So that while some people of quality are bespeaking plays of me to be acted on such a day, and others, hogsheads for their houses against such a time; I am wholly employed in the agreeable service of wit and wine. Sir, I have sent you Sir Roger de Coverley's letter to me, which pray comply with in favour of the Bumper Tavern. Be kind, for you know a player's utmost pride is the approbation of the Spectator.

"I am your admirer, though unknown,

"RICHARD ESTCOURT."

"TO MR. ESTCOURT.

"AT HIS HOUSE IN COVENT-GARDEN,

"Coverley, December 10th, 1711.

"OLD COMICAL ONE,

"The hogsheads of neat port came safe, and have gotten thee good reputation in these parts; and I am glad to hear, that a fellow who has been laying out his money ever since he was born, for the mere pleasure of wine, has bethought himself of joining profit and pleasure together. Our sexton (poor man) having received strength from thy wine since his fit of the gout, is hugely taken with it; he says it is given by nature for the use of families, and that no steward's table can be without it; that it strengthens digestion, excludes surfeits, fevers, and physic; which green wines of any kind cannot do

Pray get a pure snug room, and I hope next term to help to fill your Bumper with our people of the club; but you must have no bells stirring when the Spectator comes; I forbore ringing to dinner while he was down with me in the country. Thank you for the little hams and Portugal onions; pray keep some always by you. You know my supper is only good Cheshire cheese, best mustard, a golden pippin, attended with a pipe of John Sly's best. Sir Harry has stolen all your songs, and tells the story of the 5th of November to perfection.

"Yours to serve you,

"ROGER DE COVERLEY.

"We have lost old John since you were here."

T.

No. 265.] THURSDAY, JANUARY 3, 1711-12.

Dixerit e multis aliquis, quid virus in angues Adjicis? et rabidæ tradis ovile lupæ.

Ovid, de Art. Am. lib. 7

But some exclaim; What frenzy rules your mind?
Would you increase the craft of womankind?
Teach them new wiles and arts? As well you may Instruct a snake to bite, or wolf to prey.—CONGREVE.

ONE of the fathers, if I am rightly informed, has defined a woman to be an animal that delights in finery. I have already treated of the sex in two or three papers, conformably to this definition; and have in particular observed, that in all ages they have been more careful than the men to adorn that part of the head which we generally call the outside.

This observation is so very notorious, that when in ordinary discourse we say a man has a fine head, a long head, or a good head, we express ourselves metaphorically, and speak in relation to his understanding; whereas when we say of a woman, she has a fine, a long, or a good head, we speak only in relation to her commode.

It is observed among birds, that nature has lavished all her ornaments upon the male, who very often appears in a most beautiful head-dress: whether it be a crest, a comb, a tuft of feathers, or a natural little plume, erected like a kind of pinnacle on the very top of the head. As Nature on the contrary has poured out her charms in the greatest abundance upon the female part of our species, so they are very assiduous in bestowing upon themselves the finest garnitures of art. The peacock, in all his pride, does not display half the colours that appear in the garments of a British lady, when she is dressed either for a ball or a birth-day.

But to return to our female heads. The ladies have been for some time in a kind of moulting season with regard to that part of their dress, having cast great quantities of riband, lace, and cambric, and in some measure reduced that part of the human figure to the beautiful globular form, which is natural to it. We have for a great while expected what kind of ornament would be substituted in the place of those antiquated commodes. Our female projectors were all the last summer so taken up with the improvement of their petticoats, that they had not time to attend to any thing else; but having at length sufficiently adorned their lower parts, they now begin to turn their thoughts upon the other extremity, as well remembering the old kitchen proverb, "that if you light the fire at both ends, the middle will shift for itself."

I am engaged in this speculation by a sight which I lately met with at the opera. As I was standing in the hinder part of a box, I took notice of a little cluster of the prettiest colour that I ever saw; and I thought them was blue, and I thought they were blue; the fourth of a pale green upon this little bed of tulips, might not be upon my going in front, I was much beauty it be English. 8 heads, could. The complexion serving any, though I could satisfaction with own thoughts ornaments they

I am informed insomuch that ready to hang their principles believe my friend certain old cox to appear very Iris in Dryden among such a charm for ever

My friend upon his great he can already her hood, as the position of the the dress which wraps her head upon execution I would not, she her; but if she may hand her

Will inform be used as signet elia always present is gone into the Such are the lantry. For many colours in the in the faces of his Art of Love particular, the those which pleads commends a complexion; white On the contrary a greater mass that the palest white sarcenet appears to advance the darkest colour black hood. the face in the and a candle

"This," says where he treats that the blue coloured garment appears in the saffron."

Whether the I cannot tell; have stood together praise the com

BRITISH ESSAYISTS.

and [he] has es.
the honour
not conclude the British of all other ense as they y do, if they ir minds as mean while s considera-

nan.

, 1711-12.

ium

ere;

ft.

act v. sc. 4.

at I have dis-
the artifices of them for ever

le fall into atural to all,
ssion of the ndeed often
erity of their ed at other commerce of avoid; and r the rigider
little mercy.
cannot ab-
but pray let
t in others.
nded ladies,

in general,
at present
gin with the

The other
arden, I was e piazza, on
-street, by a o with a pert
e. I do not curiosity in am informed nd it would agreeable to ave in others concerned in tator. This d under one
ould observe
e most agree-
e, in a word,
ly beautiful.
wantonness hecked with
and eager.
genteel and
e much an-with her, I ving her a
ed, and with vehemence,
hat they call ho, falling I e first month

from her dishonour, and exposed to pass through the hands and discipline of one of those bags of hell whom we call bawds. But lest I should grow too suddenly grave on this subject, and be myself outrageously good, I shall turn to a scene in one of Fletcher's plays, where this character is drawn, and the economy of whoredom most admirably described. The passage I would point to is in the third scene of the second act of The Humorous Lieutenant. Leucippe, who is agent for the king's lust, and bawds at the same time for the whole court, is very pleasantly introduced, reading her minutes as a person of business, with two maids, her under-secretaries, taking instructions at a table before her. Her women, both those under her present tutelage, and those which she is laying wait for, are alphabetically set down in her book; and as she is looking over the letter C in a muttering voice, as if between soliloquy and speaking out, she says,

Her maidenhead will yield me: let me see now:— She is not fifteen they say: for her complexion—Cloe, Cloe, Cloe, here I have her.
Cloe, the daughter of a country gentleman;
Her age upon fifteen. Now her complexion,— A lovely brown; here 'tis; eyes black and rolling.
The body neatly built: she strikes a lute well; Sings most enticingly. These helps consider'd, Her maidenhead will amount to some three hundred.
Or three hundred and fifty crowns; twill bear it handsomely:
Her father's poor, some little share deducted.
To buy him a hunting nag—

The creatures are very well instructed in the circumstances and manners of all who are any way related to the fair one whom they have a design upon. As Cloe is to be purchased with 350 crowns, and the father taken off with a pad; the merchant's wife next to her, who abounds in plenty, is not to have downright money, but the mercenary part of her mind is engaged with a present of plate and a little ambition. She is made to understand that it is a man of quality who dies for her. The examination of a young girl for business, and the crying down her value for being a slight thing, together with every other circumstance in the scene, are inimitably excellent, and have the true spirit of comedy; though it were to be wished the author had added a circumstance which should make Leucippe's business more odious.

It must not be thought a digression from my intended speculation, to talk of bawds in a discourse upon wenches: for a woman of the town is not thoroughly and properly such, without having gone through the education of one of these houses. But the compassionate case of very many is, that they are taken into such hands without any the least suspicion, previous temptation, or admonition to what place they are going. The last week I went to an inn in the city to inquire for some provisions which were sent by a waggon out of the country; and as I waited in one of the boxes till the chamberlain had looked over his parcels, I heard an old and young voice repeating the questions and responses of the church-catechism. I thought it no breach of good manners to peep at a crevice, and look in at people so well employed; but who should I see there but the most artful procuress in town, examining a most beautiful country girl, who had come up in the same waggon with my things, "whether she was well educated, could forbear playing the wanton with servants and idle fellows, of which this town says she, is too full." At the same time, whether she knew enough of breeding, as that if a squire or a gentleman, or one that was her betters, should give her a civil salute, she could courtesy and be nevertheless." Her innocent "forsooths, please you, and she would do her end, moved the good old lady to take her out of a country bumpkin, her brother, and her own maid. I staid till I saw them out to take coach; the brother loaded it cheese, he prevailed upon her to take liberties to his sister. This poor creature's far off that of her's whom I spoke of, it is not to be doubted, but after she long enough a prey to lust, she will be dear to famine. The ironical commendation of industry and charity of these antiquated directors of sin, after they can no more omit it, makes up the beauty of the indication to the Plain-Dealer, and is a sort of railery on this vice. But to undo the puerile of this game the better, Istrate this subject in future discourses, nature myself, with my friend Will, into of beauty and gallantry; from pampered habitations of the wealthy, to distressed sickness expelled the harbours of the F.

SATURDAY, JANUARY 5, 1711-12.

late Romani scriptores, cedite Græci.

PROPERT. EL. 34. lib. 2. ver. 95.

the place, ye Roman and ye Grecian wits.

There is nothing in nature so irksome as general criticism, especially when they turn chiefly upon the reason I shall wave the discussion about which was started some years since, Milton's Paradise Lost may be called an epic? Those who will not give it that title, (if they please) a divine poem. It will not be its perfection, if it has in it all the force of the highest kind of poetry: and as for to allege it is not an heroic poem, they add more to the diminution of it, than if they say Adam is not Æneas, nor Eve Helen.

We therefore examine it by the rules of epic poetry, and see whether it falls short of the Iliad or of the beauties which are essential to that writing. The first thing to be considered in an epic poem is the fable, which is perfect or imperfect according to the action which it relates is less so. This action should have three parts in it. First, it should be but one accordingly, it should be an entire action; and secondly, it should be a great action. To consider of the Iliad, Æneid, and Paradise Lost, in three several lights. Homer, to preserve the unity of his action, hastens into the midst of the story. Horace has observed. Had he gone up to the beginning, or begun much later, even at the death of Helen, or the investing of Troy, it is manifest the story of the poem would have been a several actions. He therefore opens his poem with the discord of his princes, and artfully carries on the several succeeding parts of it, without any thing material which relates to the action which had passed before that fatal dissension. In the same manner Æneas makes his first appearance in the Tyrrhene seas, and within sight of the action proposed to be celebrated in his settling himself in Latium. But because it is necessary for the reader to know what led to him in the taking of Troy, and in the several parts of his voyage, Virgil makes his hero relate it by way of introduction in the third books of the Æneid, which books come before the thread of the story, the unity of action they follow of the poem. Milton, in his poems, opens his Paradise Lost with a council plotting the fall of Satan, which he proposed to celebrate; and in his poems, which preceded in the angels, and the creation, which would have entirely destroyed the principal action, had he related that they happened, he carried on the seventh books, by way of introduction to the poem.

Aristotle himself allows to boast of as to the unity of action, at the same time that great poets have endeavoured to palliate this defect in their poems, by imputing it to the nature of an epic poem. In his opinion, that the Æneid also is an epic poem, and has Episodes which are intercalations rather than as the contrary, the poem is in our consideration, bath as naturally arise from the nature of such a multitude of events, it gives us at the same time variety and of the greatest beauty, its nature, though diversified.

I must observe also, that the Iliad which was designed to celebrate the fall of the Roman empire, has described the Carthaginian war, with the like art in his poem, he has related the fall of the Carthaginian empire, and his fessed enemies. Besides in such an episode, its great action of the poem, the unity so much as is done, that had not so great a principal subject. In short, the beauty which the critics allow to the Iliad or the Double Discovery, plots look like counterplots to another.

The second qualification of an epic poem is, that it should be an entire action. An action is entire when it has a beginning, a middle, and an end; or, as Aristotle describes it, of a beginning, a middle, and an end, should go before it, be in the middle, and after it, that is not related to any other action, contrary, no single step should be taken from its original to any other action, we see the anger of Achilles, and the effects; and the Carthaginian war, Italy carried on through the whole way to it both by sea and land. Milton excels (I think) in this particular: we see it contrived in the earth, and punished by the angels, and are told in the most distinct manner of one another in the poem.

The third qualification of an epic poem is, its greatness. The anger of Achilles, the

* The clause in Italics is not in the original.

Greece, designed all the Roman emperors than either the fate of whole species, together for effected in not Omnipotent actors are man in her fallen angels; mighty their great in the the verge of assigned it in by the whole, part of them, say, that the in the Iliad, end Virgil's the same kind in this parti- derogating of there is an part of Para- than could m.

the action, at in its nar- words, that as what we sure of this following sim- ite, cannot ight takes it of the whole, if, on the mal of ten ould be so ould not give at these ani- y long ac- st would be, and the other and Virgil particular; Eneid, were o beautifully tion of epi- ith the like an agreeable outhout over- ed with such ve taken as of his books, with. It is he Iliad and ces in them it is related t Homer and as they were on of their d not only a ise his poem, the greatest t of his own ling all the is story with ear so close an analogy with what is delivered in holy writ that it is capable of pleasing the most delicate reader, without giving offence to the most scrupulous.

The modern critics have collected from several hints in the Iliad and Æneid the space of time, which is taken up by the action of each of these poems; but as a great part of Milton's story was transacted in regions that lie out of the reach of the sun and the sphere of day, it is impossible to gratify the reader with such a calculation, which indeed would be more curious than instructive; none of the critics, either ancient or modern, having laid down rules to circumscribe the action of an epic poem with any determined number of years, days, or hours.

This piece of criticism on Milton's Paradise Lost shall be carried on in the following Saturday's papers.—L.

No. 268.] MONDAY, JANUARY 7, 1711-12.

Mimus aptus acutis Naribus horum hominum.—HOR. l Sat. lib. 22.

—unfit
For lively sallies of corporeal wit.—CRÆCÆ.

It is not that I think I have been more witty than I ought of late, that at present I wholly forbear any attempts towards it: I am of opinion that I ought sometimes to lay before the world the plain letters of my correspondents in the artless dress in which they hastily send them, that the reader may see I am not accuser and judge myself, but that the indictment is properly and fairly laid before I proceed against the criminal.

“MR. SPECTATOR,

“As you are spectator-general, I apply myself to you in the following case, viz. I do not wear a sword, but I often divert myself at the theatre, where I frequently see a set of fellows pull plain people, by way of humour and frolic, by the nose, upon frivolous or no occasions. A friend of mine the other night applauding what a graceful exit Mr. Wilks made, one of those nose-wringers overhearing him, pinched him by the nose. I was in the pit the other night (when it was very much crowded), a gentleman leaning upon me, and very heavily, I very civilly requested him to remove his hand; for which he pulled me by the nose. I would not resent it in so public a place, because I was unwilling to create a disturbance; but have since reflected upon it as a thing that is unmanly and disingenuous, renders the nose-puller odious, and makes the person pulled by the nose look little and contemptible. This grievance I humbly request you would endeavour to redress.

“I am your Admirer, &c.

“JAMES EASY.”

“MR. SPECTATOR,

“Your discourse of the 29th of December,* on love and marriage, is of so useful a kind, that I cannot forbear adding my thoughts to yours on this subject. Methinks it is a misfortune, that the marriage-state, which in its own nature is adapted to give us the completest happiness this life is capable of, should be so uncomfortable a one to so many, as it daily proves. But the mischief generally proceeds from the unwise choice people make for them-an expectation of happiness from things of giving it. Nothing but the good of the person beloved can be a foundation of judgment and discretion; and whoever happiness from any thing but virtue, wisdom, humour, and a similitude of manners, themselves widely mistaken. But how rare is it for a man, when he engages in the thoughts of marriage, to place his having in such a woman a constant agree-panion? One who will divide his cares, his joys? Who will manage that share he entrusts to her with care, with prudence, frugality, govern his house with economy, and be an ornament to himself and Where shall we find the man who looks at a woman who places her chief happiness in the exercise of virtue, and makes her duty her continual

No, men rather seek for money as the object of all their desires; and, regardless of the wives they take, they think riches minister to all kind of pleasures, and endeavour to keep mistresses, horses, hounds; to play, and game with their companions, pay debts contracted by former extravagancies, such vile and unworthy end: and indulge in pleasures which are a shame and dishonour to human nature. Now as for women; if there are there, who place the happiness of marriage in the having a wise and virtuous husband who will be faithful and just to all, and not loving to them? Who with care will look after and improve the estate, without grudging, allow whatever is prudent and prudent? Rather, how few are there, who place their happiness in outshining others in show; and that do not think within themselves they have married such a rich person, if of their acquaintance shall appear so fine equipage, so adorned in their persons, or so rich in their furniture as themselves? Thus their minds are filled with vain ideas; and I wish I could say that equipage and show the chief good of so many women as I fear in this manner do both sexes deceive themselves and bring reflections and disgrace upon the happy and most honourable state of life; if they would but correct their depraved and derate their ambition, and place their affections upon proper objects, we should not find the marriage state such a wonder in the world now is.

If you think these thoughts worth inserting in your own, be pleased to give them a better and let them pass abroad; and you will

"Your Admirer,
A. B."

L. SPECTATOR,

As I was this day walking in the street, there to pass by on the other side of the way a woman whose charms were so attracting, that my eyes wholly on that side, insomuch that I did my own way, and chanced to run my head against a post: which the lady no perceived, but she fell into a fit of laughter, at the same time she was sensible that she was the cause of my misfortune, which, in return—Nos. 39 & 40 my opinion, was the cause of my crime. I being busy with my thoughts, trickled down my face, and she, with her barbarity, viz. never to look out of more: therefore, that you revenged, he desires you in your next papers, which to all the rest of the world poor

"MR. SPECTATOR,

"I desire to know if the game of 'The parson' is mightily in vogue among the ladies, because I see they which I suppose is for the you think it proper, I should hood with me to our late they enjoined me to be in London that was very thing in which I can agreeably, be pleased to extremely oblige

"MR. SPECTATOR,

"Since you appear to be the distressed, I beg you to understand under which I have reigning toast of this place, I sued her with the utmost month, and find nothing who flatters her more favourite passion; therefore my friend as to make a in one of your papers, in my addresses. The they did to be sure in you and she has all the devotion of youths who are unacquainted have inexperience added ever, if it succeeds according make me the happiest man most obliged amongst all

"MR. SPECTATOR,

"I came to my mistress for I am admitted when she frowned and cried that I stole; and I will it was not very pretty. shall forbear that part of in others, but you cannot does not hide a beauty."

No. 269.] TUESDAY

Ævo rarissima
Simplicitas.—
Most rare is now our

I was this morning knocking at the door, when came up to me, and told below desired to speak with her who it was, she told elderly person, but that I immediately went down to be the coachman of my friend Coverley. He told me take a turn s wondering

ger to town,
rom him, he get a sight
I would im-

iosity of the
vonder at it,
e in private Eugenio (for greater man

a walks, but ce to himself his pipes in ase), and is kes notice of his morning

sight of the was engaged at had asked
d chide him
e same time
and give him

both sides,
e hand, and
st upon one ne my good much at my had made a arrow. "I
his hands,
upon him,
s, to be dis-

with the wel-
out his hand ame with a d been busy rning great a present of who has good at poor Will or that Tom utting some

the knight ned me that month after that it blew But for my t think that

f the diver-
during the udable cus-
en house at

ed eight fat
t about his abours, and f hogs' pud-
or family in s says Sir Christmas
t. It is the r, when the m their po-
cheer, warm

fires, and Christmas gambols to support them. I love to rejoice their poor hearts at this season, and to see the whole village merry in my great hall. I allow a double quantity of malt to my small-beer, and set it a running for twelve days to every one that calls for it. I have always a piece of cold beef and a mince-pie upon the table, and am wonderfully pleased to see my tenants pass away a whole evening in playing their innocent tricks, and smutting one another. Our friend Will Wimble is as merry as any of them, and shows a thousand roguish tricks upon these occasions."

I was very much delighted with the reflection of my old friend, which carried so much goodness in it. He then launched out into the praise of the late act of parliament for securing the Church of England,* and told me with great satisfaction, that he believed it already began to take effect, for that a rigid dissenter, who chanced to dine at his house on Christmas-day, had been observed to eat very plentifully of his plum-porridge.

After having dispatched all our country matters, Sir Roger made several inquiries concerning the club, and particularly of his old antagonist Sir Andrew Freeport. He asked me with a kind of smile whether Sir Andrew had not taken advantage of his absence, to vent among them some of his republican doctrines; but soon after gathering up his countenance into a more than ordinary seriousness, "Tell me truly," says he, "don't you think Sir Andrew had a hand in the Pope's procession?" But without giving me time to answer him, "Well, well," says he, "I know you are a wary man, and do not care to talk of public matters."

The knight then asked me if I had seen Prince Engenio, and made me promise to get him a stand in some convenient place where he might have a full sight of that extraordinary man, whose presence did so much honour to the British nation. He dwelt very long on the praises of this great general, and I have found that since I was with him in the country, he had drawn many observations together out of his reading in Baker's Chronicle and other authors, who always lie in his hall-window, which very much redound to the honour of this prince.

Having passed away the greatest part of the morning in hearing the knight's reflections, which were partly private and partly political, he asked me if I would smoke a pipe with him over a dish of coffee at Squire's? As I love the old man, I take delight in complying with every thing that is agreeable to him, and accordingly waited on him to the coffee-house, where his venerable figure drew upon us the eyes of the whole room. He had no sooner seated himself at the upper end of the high table, but he called for a clean pipe, a paper of tobacco, a dish of coffee, a wax-candle, and the Supplement,† with such an air of cheerfulness and good-humour, that all the boys in the coffee-room (who seemed to take pleasure in serving him) were at once employed on his several errands, insomuch that nobody else could come at a dish of tea, until the knight had got all his conveniences about him.—I.

* Stat. 10 Ann. cap. 2. The act against occasional conformity.

† A periodical paper.

No. 270.] WEDNESDAY, JAN. 9, 1711-12.

Disce enim citius, meminisque libentius illud, Quod quis deridet, quam quod probat.—MOR. l Ep. ii. 262.For what's derided by the censuring crowd, Is thought on more than what is just and good.—DAYDEN.There is a lust in man no power can tame,
Of loudly publishing his neighbour's shame;
On eagle's wings invidious scandals fly, While virtuous actions are but born, and die.—E. of CORKE.Sooner we learn, and seldom forget, What critics scorn, than what they highly rate.
HUGHES'S LETTERS, vol. ii. p. 222.

I do not know that I have been in greater delight for these many years, than in beholding the boxes at the play the last time The Scornful Lady was acted. So great an assembly of ladies placed in gradual rows in all the ornaments of jewels, silks, and colours, gave so lively and gay an impression to the heart, that methought the season of the year was vanished; and I did not think it an ill expression of a young fellow who stood near me, that called the boxes those "beds of tulips." It was a pretty variation of the prospect, when any one of those fine ladies rose up and did honour to herself and friend at a distance, by curtsying; and gave opportunity to that friend to show her charms to the same advantage in returning the salutation. Here that action is as proper and graceful, as it is at church unbecoming and impertinent. By the way I must take the liberty to observe that I did not see any one who is usually so full of civilities at church, offer at any such indecorum during any part of the action of the play. Such beautiful prospects gladden our minds, and when considered in general, give innocent and pleasing ideas. He that dwells upon any one object of beauty, may fix his imagination to his disquiet; but the contemplation of a whole assembly together is a defence against the encroachment of desire. At least to me, who have taken pains to look at beauty abstracted from the consideration of its being the object of desire; at power, only as it sits upon another, without any hopes of partaking any share of it; at wisdom and capacity, without any pretensions to rival or envy its acquisitions. I say to me, who am really free from forming any hopes by beholding the persons of beautiful women, or warming myself into ambition from the successes of other men, this world is not only a mere scene, but a very pleasant one. Did mankind but know the freedom which there is in keeping thus aloof from the world, I should have more imitators, than the powerfulest man in the nation has followers. To be no man's rival in love, or competitor in business, is a character which, if it does not recommend you as it ought to benevolence among those whom you live with, yet has it certainly this effect, that you do not stand so much in need of their approbation, as you would if you aimed at it more, in setting your heart on the same things which the generality doat on. By this means, and with this easy philosophy, I am never less at a play than when I am at the theatre; but indeed I am seldom so well pleased with action as in that place; for most men follow nature no longer than while they are in their night-gowns, and all the busy part of the day are in characters which they neither become, nor set in with pleasure to themselves or their beholders. But to return to my ladies: I was very well pleased to see so great a crowd of them assembled at a play, wherein the heroine, as the phrase is, is so just a picture of the vanity of the sex in form

pines for the pertinence a
and humour.
but her vani
solved to ex
one who had ration is fixe or three othe moved with senseless, an lain. It is orders, and world; but s
of all manne
a pedant, is into the hea the play. I shows a wre
his function
he should gr
four or five
It is not to maid whom performed;
grows still r
of it. It is with a sea
putable am no beauty, s
for it; nay,
guilt, and a viction of I Wit should should rise reputation o
religion or But all this mind, that virtue, less
An author
one man o
house, and upon all t critics is no
and place.
that must
manners;
port of soc
monsters o
in both of their educa instead of apt to be ex
his superior particular
acompanie
and pre-emi
and learning as silly as i paragement itself, than could make after it. I myself airs
assert it f
must alway
to be overk

* In form of Sir to the See Dodslav

BRITISH ESSAYISTS.

at is praise-
vice, with all n as any that ght to be re-

O, 1711-12.

6. Æn. iv. 701.

BYDEN.

the letters of ow me which them; and in
th materials eed I do not he hints of it
times I take thought into
and always o the sense) es which are

mentioned,
are sent me,
ning out my e subscribing s does not a
f and reader.
e to myself,
ent I have.
ial, were the fied with my ndeavouring
ired in them
But I shall
r own ima-
wing letters

ly of ladies,
poured hoods.
on the table,
ch I did with Greek verse
little startled However,
ld, and after ds to myself,
d jest, faith.
them; but I
them, that i ey might be ed it up in essions, as i not fit to be on which the d in a cherry-
etion of the oughts into
t few of his d herself very sive opinion
to tell you
d have made Sir, you must pened to me passed for a one who is d he assures tation means

no more than that "manners, not dress, are the ornaments of a woman." If this comes to the knowledge of my female admirers, I shall be very hard put to it to bring myself off handsomely. In the meanwhile, I give you this account, that you may take care hereafter not to betray any of your well-wishers into the like inconveniences. It is in the number of these that I leg leave to subscribe myself,

"TOM TRIPPIET."

"MR. SPECTATOR,

"Your readers are so well pleased with your character of Sir Roger de Coverley, that there appeared a sensible joy in every coffee-house, upon hearing the old knight was come to town. I am now with a knot of his admirers, who make it their joint request to you, that you would give us public notice of the window or balcony where the knight intends to make his appearance. He has already given great satisfaction to several who have seen him at Squires's coffee-house. If you think fit to place your short face at Sir Roger's left elbow, we shall take the hint, and gratefully acknowledge so great a favour.

"I am, Sir,

"Your most devoted humble Servant,

"C. D."

"SIR,

"Knowing that you are very inquisitive after every thing that is curious in nature, I will wait on you, if you please, in the dusk of the evening, with my show upon my back, which I carry about with me in a box, as only consisting of a man, a woman, and a horse. The two first are married; in which state the little cavalier has so well acquitted himself, that his lady is with child. The big-bellied woman and her husband, with their whimsical palfrey, are so very light, that when they are put together into a scale, an ordinary man may weigh down the whole family. The little man is a bully in his nature; but when he grows choleric, I confine him to his box until his wrath is over, by which means I have hitherto prevented him from doing mischief. His horse is likewise very vicious, for which reason I am forced to tie him close to his manger with a pack-thread. The woman is a coquette. She struts as much as it is possible for a lady of two feet high, and would ruin me in silks, were not the quantity that goes to a large pincushion sufficient to make her a gown and petticoat. She told me the other day, that she heard the ladies wore coloured hoods, and ordered me to get her one of the finest blue. I am forced to comply with her demands while she is in her present condition, being very willing to have more of the same breed. I do not know what she may produce me, but provided it be a show I shall be very well satisfied. Such novelties* should not, I think, be concealed from the British Spectator; for which reason I hope you will excuse this presumption in "Your most dutiful, most obedient,

and most humble Servant,

L.

"S. T."

* Three dwarfs, a little man, a woman equally diminutive, and a horse proportionably so, were on exhibition in London about this time.

No. 272.] FRIDAY, JANUARY, 11, 1711-12.

Longa est injuria, longæ Ambages. — Viso. Æn. l. 345.
Great is the injury, and long the tale,

"MR. SPECTATOR,

"THE occasion of this letter is of so great importance, and the circumstances of it such, that I know you will but think it just to insert it, in preference of all other matters that can present themselves to your consideration. I need not, after I have said this, tell you that I am in love. The circumstances of my passion I shall let you understand as well as a disordered mind will admit. 'That cursed pickthank, Mrs. Jane!' Alas, I am railing at one to you by her name, as familiarly as if you were acquainted with her as well as myself: but I will tell you all, as fast as the alternate interruptions of love and anger will give me leave. There is the most agreeable young woman in the world, whom I am passionately in love with, and from whom I have for some space of time received as great marks of favour as were fit for her to give, or me to desire. The successful progress of the affair, of all others the most essential towards a man's happiness, gave a new life and spirit not only to my behaviour and discourse, but also a certain grace to all my actions in the commerce of life, in all things however remote from love. You know the predominant passion spreads itself through all a man's transactions, and exalts or depresses him according to the nature of such passion. But, alas! I have not yet begun my story, and what is the use of making sentences and observations when a man is pleading for his life? To begin then. This lady has corresponded with me under the names of love, she my Belinda, I her Cleanthes. Though I am thus well got into the account of my affair, I cannot keep in the thread of it so much as to give you the character of Mrs. Jane, whom I will not hide under a borrowed name; but let you know, that this creature has been, since I knew her, very handsome (though I will not allow her even 'she has been' for the future,) and during the time of her bloom and beauty, was so great a tyrant to her lovers, so over-valued herself, and under-rated all her pretenders, that they have deserted her to a man: and she knows no comfort but that common one to all in her condition, the pleasure of interrupting the amours of others. It is impossible but you must have seen several of these volunteers in malice, who pass their whole time in the most laborious way of life in getting intelligence, running from place to place with new whispers, without reaping any other benefit but the hopes of making others as unhappy as themselves. Mrs. Jane happened to be at a place where I, with many others well acquainted with my passion for Belinda, passed a Christmas evening. There was among the rest a young lady, so free in mirth, so amiable in a just reserve that had accompanied it; I wrong her to call it a reserve, but there appeared in her a mirth or cheerfulness which was not a forbearance of more immoderate joy, but the natural appearance of all which could flow from a mind possessed of a habit of innocence and purity. I must have utterly forgot Belinda to have taken no notice of one who was growing up to the same womanly virtues which shine to perfection in her, had I not distinguished one who seemed to promise to the world the same life and conduct with my faithful and lovely Belinda. What young thing Mrs. Jane is informed of. She came and asked her — 'No.' —

'Nor your says Mrs. Jane. Nay, they tell you any. What d'ye nothing to Mrs. — ready to die Jane goes clerk to a the rough d world says pounds more innocently admitted; I unopened. side, has be me the who could be so her mistress that she dare are placed presented i dare not bu and has pro own this wa to a hearing say by her once in my true relation are crowds themselves out of malice the hopes of the benevol be, Sir,

"You

"Sir,

"The of fair sex, I of them a k turned her any notice

The cor the offend

Fr

All ladi fashioned vine servio the congre T.

No. 273.]

— No

Note well

HAVING let us in the

the fable, and
ly call them
s. That ever his charac-
his poem,
itable to no
istinguished
; and even seem wholly ther as to the y excel. In in the Iliad, person who
at the head

er poets in s characters.
nces a person
d conversed
and the first the son of a
ther deities,
and the ve-
father of so these several y as well as ore peculiar
a. Though,
ater variety,
foon, among
ortals.
r in the cha-
variety and character; but hero's friend,
ich may de-ergestus, and same stamp

anthen.

idents in the annot be suf-
thing new or under are re-Lausus and as and Evanalus are beau-
t the parts of which are fine
short, there is e persons of
of the Iliad.
lton, we shall sity his fable
le species of ime to which e have, how-two persons.
est innocence
state of guilt
s are, indeed,
o first are not than any cha-
indeed in the

in the subject s it would af-
two actors of a persons of Sin
ought into the body of his fable a very beautiful and well-invented allegory. But notwithstanding the fineness of this allegory may atone for it in some measure, I cannot think that persons of such a chimerical existence are proper actors in an epic poem; because there is not that measure of probability annexed to them, which is requisite in writings of this kind, as I shall show more at large hereafter.

Virgil has indeed admitted Fame as an actress in the Æneid, but the part she acts is very short, and none of the most admired circumstances in that divine work. We find in mock-heroic poems, particularly in the Dispensary and the Lutrin, several allegorical persons of this nature, which are very beautiful in these compositions, and may perhaps be used as an argument, that the authors of them were of opinion such characters might have a place in an epic work. For my own part, I should be glad the reader would think so, for the sake of the poem I am now examining: and must further add, that if such empty unsubstantial beings may be ever made use of on this occasion, never were any more nicely imagined, and employed in more proper actions, than those of which I am now speaking.

Another principal actor in this poem is the great enemy of mankind. The part of Ulysses in Homer's Odyssey is very much admired by Aristotle, as perplexing that fable with very agreeable plots and intricacies, not only by the many adventures in his voyage, and the subtilty of his behaviour, but by the various concealments and discoveries of his person in several parts of that poem. But the crafty being I have now mentioned makes a much longer voyage than Ulysses, puts in practice many more wiles and stratagems, and hides himself under a greater variety of shapes and appearances, all of which are severally detected, to the great delight and surprise of the reader.

We may likewise observe with how much art the poet has varied several characters of the persons that speak in his infernal assembly. On the contrary, how has he represented the whole Godhead exerting itself towards man in its full benevolence under the threefold distinction of a Creator, a Redeemer, and a Comforter!

Nor must we omit the person of Raphael, who, amidst his tenderness and friendship for man, shows such a dignity and condescension in all his speech and behaviour, as are suitable to a superior nature. The angels are indeed as much diversified in Milton, and distinguished by their proper parts, as the gods are in Homer and Virgil. The reader will find nothing ascribed to Uriel, Gabriel, Michael, or Raphael, which is not in a particular manner suitable to their respective characters.*

There is another circumstance in the principal actors of the Iliad and Æneid, which gives a peculiar beauty to those two poems, and was therefore contrived with very great judgment. I mean the authors having chosen for their heroes, persons who were so nearly related to the people for whom they wrote. Achilles was a Greek, and Æneas, the remote founder of Rome. By this means their countrymen (whom they principally propose to themselves for their readers) were particularly attentive to all the parts of their story, and sympathized with their heroes in all their adventures. A Roman could not but rejoice in the escapes, successes, and victories, of Æneas, and be grieved at any defeats, misfortunes, or disappointments, that befall him; as a Greek must have had the same regard for Achilles. And it is plain, that each of those poems have lost this great advantage, among those readers to whom their heroes are as strangers, or indifferent persons.

* These two last sentences were not in the original paper in folio.

Milton's poem is admirable in this respect, since it is impossible for any of its readers, whatever nation, country, or people, he may belong to, not to be related to the persons who are the principal actors in it; but what is still infinitely more to its advantage, the principal actors in this poem are not only our progenitors, but our representatives. We have an actual interest in every thing they do, and no less than our utmost happiness is concerned, and lies at stake in all their behaviour.

I shall subjoin, as a corollary to the foregoing remark, an admirable observation out of Aristotle, which has been very much misrepresented in the quotations of some modern critics; "If a man of perfect and consummate virtue falls into a misfortune, it raises our pity, but not our terror, because we do not fear that it may be our own case, who do not resemble the suffering person." But, as that great philosopher adds, "if we see a man of virtue mixed with infirmities fall into any misfortune, it does not only raise our pity but our terror; because we are afraid that the like misfortunes may happen to ourselves, who resemble the character of the suffering person."

I shall take another opportunity to observe, that a person of an absolute and consummate virtue should never be introduced in tragedy, and shall only remark in this place, that the foregoing observation of Aristotle, though it may be true in other occasions, does not hold in this; because in the present case, though the persons who fall into misfortune are of the most perfect and consummate virtue, it is not to be considered as what may possibly be, but what actually is our own case; since we are embarked with them on the same bottom, and must be partakers of their happiness or misery.

In this, and some other very few instances, Aristotle's rules for epic poetry (which he had drawn from his reflections upon Homer) cannot be supposed to quadrate exactly with the heroic poems which have been made since his time; since it is plain his rules would still have been more perfect, could he have perused the Æneid, which was made some hundred years after his death.

In my next, I shall go through other parts of Milton's poem; and hope that what I shall there advance, as well as what I have already written, will not only serve as a comment upon Milton, but upon Aristotle.—L.

No. 274.] MONDAY, JANUARY 14, 1711-12.

Audire est operæ pretium, procedere recte Qui machis non vultis.—HOM. I SAT. II. 37.

All you, who think the city ne'er can thrive Till every cuckold-maker's slay'd alive, Attend.—FORZ.

I HAVE upon several occasions (that have occurred since I first took into my thoughts the present state of fornication) weighed with myself in behalf of silly females, the impulses of flesh and blood, together with the arts and gallantries of crafty men; and reflect with some scorn that most part of what we in our youth think gay and polite, is nothing else but a habit of indulging a pruriency that way. It will cost some labour to bring people to so lively a sense of this the behaviour grace in the f which come i previously to light into the the first place, tent wenchers with, and are to the devil of are so happy great havoc w beauty and inn only lay waste observe the p offenders are s no impulse to ness, you see s so in pleasure wenchers. Th basis and fund ing of; you sha scrawls from th descriptions of will please to s This interview brought to suc banish shame ratives the hags until they are what shall befa men. It is a co fellow whom sh I assure you, se It pleases the o to him unador commodated w lovers. This is ing beauty and town: but the skilful pimps, a trade, and are merce of sin, w the same time done, we are that mitigation names does no than it deserves of the accuser, apology in the shall, therefore differ, vary ou those who offend not scandals to sober part of th them as to be a common word d gard is to be h fell, to the unea under senseless nity of poverty, beginning well which make u teristic of their thus, would be thinks all crime Spectator, who stances that di in hopes, if thi hereafter from to their future their tempers m in familiarity houses. After d this paper

d desire all ure specula-
they have to n their lives,
ade for their

5, 1711-12.

aper is of so ndling of it
tion of many ck every one
nts he can to of those un-
to this, the
the copy of this town to mes of both,
persons, but

Servant."

honour, and a
the quality,
t I hope will that came to arents being o have found
up in a mile pound with d she is not n as ever you
our lordship
exion for red
ut your lord-
designs to go
n provide for ther was one there is four dship thinks
I shall wait p, I stay for d up since I
our. I told eman, a very take no no-orant of the
you meet us honour you er to. So I

's

command.

read it."

15, 1711-12.

oct. ver. 300.

mbly of vir-
many curious
y in the anathe company
discoveries
object, by the help of very fine glasses. This gave birth to a great variety of uncommon remarks, and furnished discourse for the remaining part of the day.

The different opinions which were started on this occasion presented to my imagination so many new ideas, that by mixing with those which were already there, they employed my fancy all the last night, and composed a very wild extravagant dream.

I was invited, methought, to the dissection of a beau's head, and a coquette's heart, which were both of them laid on a table before us. An imaginary operator opened the first with a great deal of nicety, which, upon a cursory and superficial view, appeared like the head of another man; but upon applying our glasses to it, we made a very odd discovery, namely, that what we looked upon as brains, were not such in reality, but a heap of strange materials wound up in that shape and texture, and packed together with wonderful art in the several cavities of the skull. For, as Homer tells us, that the blood of the gods is not real blood, but only something like it; so we found that the brain of a beau is not a real brain, but only something like it.

The pineal gland, which many of our modern philosophers suppose to be the seat of the soul, smelt very strong of essence and orange-flower water, and was encompassed with a kind of horny substance, cut into a thousand little faces or mirrors, which were imperceptible to the naked eye, inasmuch that the soul, if there had been any here, must have been always taken up in contemplating her own beauties.

We observed a large antrum or cavity in the sinciput, that was filled with ribands, lace, and embroidery, wrought together in a most curious piece of net-work, the parts of which were likewise imperceptible to the naked eye. Another of these antrums or cavities was stuffed with invisible billets-doux, love-letters, pricked dances, and other trumpery of the same nature. In another we found a kind of powder, which set the whole company sneezing, and by the scent discovered itself to be right Spanish. The several other cells were stored with commodities of the same kind, of which it would be tedious to give the reader an exact inventory.

There was a large cavity on each side the head, which I must not omit. That on the right side was filled with fictions, flatteries, and falsehoods, vows, promises, and protestations: that on the left with oaths and imprecations. There issued out a duct from each of these cells, which ran into the root of the tongue, where both joined together, and passed forward in one common duct to the tip of it. We discovered several little roads or canals running from the ear into the brain, and took particular care to trace them out through their several passages. One of them extended itself to a bundle of sonnets and little musical instruments. Others ended in several bladders which were filled either with wind or froth. But the large canal entered into a great cavity of the skull, from whence there went another canal into the tongue. This great cavity was filled with a kind of spongy substance, which the French anatomists call galimatias, and the English, nonsense.

The skins of the forehead were extremely tough and thick, and, what very much surprised us, had not in them any single blood-vessel that we were able to discover, either with or without our glasses; from whence we concluded that the party whom have been entirely deprived of the fashioning.

The cribriforme was exceedingly stuffed, and the faces damaged with snuff. We could take notice in particular of that small ich is not often discovered in dissection, the nose upwards, when it expresses the which the owner of it has, upon seeing he does not like, or hearing any thing he understand. I need not tell my learned s is that muscle which performs the motion mentioned by the Latin poets, when of a man's cocking his nose, or playing eros.

I do not find any thing very remarkable in giving only, that the muscoli amatorii, or, y translate it into English, the ogling ere very much worn and decayed with eas, on the contrary, the elevator, or the ch turns the eye towards heaven, did not have been used at all.

I only mentioned in this dissection such new as we were able to make, and have not notice of those parts which seem to be n common heads. As for the skull, the indeed the whole outward shape and figure d, we could not discover any difference we observe in the heads of other men. informed, that the person to whom this aged, had passed for a man above five-and- s: during which time he ate and drank eople, dressed well, talked loud, laughed and on particular occasions had acquitted rably at a ball or an assembly; to which company added, that a certain knot of him for a wit. He was cut off in the his age by the blow of a paring-shovel, o surprised by an eminent citizen, as he ng some civilities to his wife.

We had thoroughly examined this head, apartments, and its several kinds of fur- put up the brain, such as it was, into its ce, and laid it aside under a broad piece loth, in order to be prepared, and kept repository of dissections; our operator that the preparation would not be so that of another brain, for that he had veral of the little pipes and tubes which h the brain were already filled with a mercurial substance, which he looked upon quick-silver.

I sed himself in the next place to the co-art, which he likewise laid open with rity. There occurred to us many par- in this dissection; but being unwilling my reader's memory too much, I shall subject for the speculation of another of mankind with the fr resolve upon; at least, take along with you the the world, according to t of the persons concern speaks of even misfortu giving it the most terribl this tenderness towards t preserved when you spea are so far related, that ca to which all are liable, y concerns one in terms w Thus to tell a rich man o man of his, or abruptly t of the lapse of one who u degree of esteem with her each of them in some par vantages. It is therefo writer, to treat his argum is most proper to enterta whom his discourse is dir when you write to the draw vices which carry a contempt: if you paint a artful glance, an assumed which you ought to supp guilty of. When you tal have yourself so as that y conversation may second you do it in a style which in respect to their quality medly in forbearing to r more of their faults. A n guilty of an intemperanc drunkard; but the rule o of a man's faults as if you ture is what was said b railing with an uncourtly with, 'What must we cal intrigue with another n svered very gravely, 'A at once a reprimand for e in those days had not the it ought, as well as an in rate behaviour before su accusing in a method unfit to the wise. All I mean, the most free person of q than being a kind woma say of a man of figure v the world.

"I am, Sir, your m

"MR. SPECTATOR,

"I am a woman of an know nothing I have eve courage such insolence; other day, and he was dre who took the liberty to fellow' in my presence, resent it in behalf of,

"Sir, y

"MR. SPECTATOR,

"You lately put out a you promise a full account love; and call all the fair that kind by one very rud care to repeat: but I desi I am or am not one of th

WEDNESDAY, JAN. 16, 1711-12.

en virtus posuisset honestum.—HOR. I Sat. iii. 42.
screen'd behind a specious name.

SPECTATOR,

you have philosophy enough to be ca-aring the mention of your faults. Your ch regard the fallen part of the fair sex t, written with an indelicacy which makes rthy to be inserted in the writings of a ho knows the world. I cannot allow e at liberty to observe upon the actions

BRITISH ESSAYISTS.

to took me so y me. He is , a very gay
y thing for scowerer, a d invader of all dominion
females met before them
r rule to the s is his way
sits me; but has alarmed eps me in a tticoats, and a manner, he s of one far-
ies provided cured for him know nothing it: I have a ght step in n old fellow
outh, and is violin a cer-
nd when that at has more
ust have seen
-park, which
of any of the manner, and in company
d. He sends operas, and elights in me, nours in my
he time was,
to follow the
ve-mentioned truth of my ed for a pur-it for when I of you as a circumstances
he guilty,

Reader,
"UCKELLA."
CTATOR.

labour, thou
ing alone the only endea-
s of this our peeches, and y, save Sun-
ation of my Susanna the
But, alas!
and that the ou in a paper
e mention of our females,
s, and which
y, why didst eeming, as if uch that my nton; and to ely thou dost
ly, therefore,

unless thou dost speedily amend, and leave off following thine own imaginations, I will leave off thee

"Thy Friend,
"As hereafter thou dost demean thyself, T. "HEZEKIAH BROADBRIM."

No. 277.] THURSDAY, JANUARY 17, 1711-12

— fas est et ab hoste doceri.—Ovid. Met. lib. iv. ver. 438.
Receive instruction from an enemy.

I PRESUME I need not inform the polite part my readers, that before our correspondence with France was unhappily interrupted by the war, our ladies had all their fashions from thence; which the milliners took care to furnish them with by means of a jointed baby, that came regularly over once a month, habited after the manner of the most eminent toasts in Paris.

I am credibly informed, that even in the hottest time of the war, the sex made several efforts, and raised large contributions towards the importation of this wooden mademoiselle.

Whether the vessel they sent out was lost or taken or whether its cargo was seized on by the officers of the custom-house as a piece of contraband goods, I have not yet been able to learn: it is however certain, that their first attempts were without success to the no small disappointment of our whole female world; but as their constancy and application, in a matter of so great importance, can never be sufficiently commended, so I am glad to find, that in spite of all opposition, they have at length carried their point, of which I received advice by the two following letters:

"MR. SPECTATOR,

"I am so great a lover of whatever is French that I lately discarded an humble admirer, because he neither spoke that tongue, nor drank claret.
I have long bewailed in secret the calamities of my sex during the war, in all which time we have li-boured under the insupportable inventions of English tire-women, who though they sometimes capindifferently well, can never compose with that 'gout' they do in France.

"I was almost in despair of ever more seeing model from that dear country, when last Sunday overheard a lady in the next pew to me whisper as other, that at the Seven Stars, in King-street Covent-garden, there was a mademoiselle completel-dressed, just come from Paris.

"I was in the utmost impatience during the remaining part of the service, and as soon as ever I was over, having learnt the milliner's 'adresse', I went directly to her house in King-street, but was told that the French lady was at a person of great quality's in Pall-mall, and would not be back again until very late that night. I was therefore obliged to renew my visit early this morning, and had then a full view of the dear moppet from head to foot.

"You cannot imagine, worthy Sir, how ridiculously I find we have been trussed up during the war, and how infinitely the French dress excels ours.

"The mantua has no lead in the sleeves, and hope we are not lighter than the French ladies, as as to want that kind of ballast; the petticoat has no whalebone, but sits with an air altogether gallant and degagé: the coiffure is inexpressibly pretty and in short, the whole dress has a thousand beauties in it which I would not have as yet made to public.

get fit, however, to give you this notice, may not be surprised at my appearing in Paris on the next birth-night.

"I am, Sir, your humble Servant,
"TERAMINTA."

An hour after I had read this letter, I received her from the owner of the puppet.

Tuesday last, being the 12th instant, there was my house in King-street, Covent-garden, ready for the year 1712. I have taken care to have her dressed by the most celebrated women and mantua-makers in Paris, and find that I have any reason to be sorry that I have been at in her clothes and imitations, however, as I know no person who is so good of dress as yourself, if you please to come to house in your way to the city, and take a letter, I promise to amend whatever you approve in your next paper, before I exhibit a pattern to the public.

"I am, Sir, your most humble Admirer, and most obedient Servant,
"BETTY CROSS-STITCH."

I was willing to do any thing in reason for the good of my countrywomen, and had much rather find faults than find them, I went last night to see the above-mentioned Mrs. Cross-stitch.

I entered, the maid of the shop, who, I was prepared for my coming, without asking questions, introduced me to the little puppet, and ran away to call her mistress.

The puppet was dressed in a cherry-coloured petticoat, with a short working apron which discovered her shape to the most advantage. Her hair was cut and divided very prettily, several ribands stuck up and down in it. She assured me, that her complexion was improved by the ladies of the best fashion. Her head was extremely high, on which being long since declared my sentiments, nothing more to it at present. I was told at a small patch she wore on her breast, cannot suppose is placed there with any purpose.

The place was of an immoderate length, being drawn in such a manner, that the two ends met to her girdle; but whether these supply the missing strings in our enemy's country, or our British ladies have any occasion to shall leave to their serious consideration. Having observed the particulars of her dress, taking a view of it altogether, the shopkeeper's pert wench, told me that mademoiselle being very curious in the tying of her garters, I pay a due respect even to a pair of garters they are under petticoats, I did not go to that particular. Upon the whole, I thought pleased with the appearance of this and the more so, because she is not talkative very rarely to be met with in the rest of my countrywomen.

On taking my leave, the milliner further observed, that with the assistance of a watchmaker, was her neighbour, and the ingenious she had also contrived another puppet, the help of several little springs to be within it, could move all its limbs, and had sent it over to her correspondent in London, taught the various leanings and bendings of the head, the risings of the body, and recovery, the genteelness of the jet, as they are all now to be seen in France.

She added, that she hoped to have my encouragement, as this was a petition of pardon, answered extempore, I left her, and made the best of my way to my lodgings, without whose assistance I could not have cate any thing to the public.

No. 278.] FRIDAY, JUNE 10, 1712.

— Sermones ego malle Repetere per humum—
I rather choose a low and

"MR. SPECTATOR,

"SIR,

"Your having done con- siderable good to this great city, by rectifying the manners of several wives having given directions to those of their husbands to apply to you at this time, and though but a young man, that nothing but the utmost industry of band and wife (among tradesmen) could have brought to pass in any tolerable order the governing of our establishment, assisting to me in my business in her way, and I have reached her inclination; but of late with a schoolman, who was of knowledge in the Greek tongue, frequently in the shop with the excellences of that language, her several passages out of the book he tells her there is unspeakable sounds that all other languages acquainted with. He has a jargon, that instead of using in the shop, she now neglects and is wholly taken up with by heart scraps of Greek, on all occasions. She told me soon after I use some Latin inscriptions, I revised me with a great deal of change into Greek; it being understood, would be more conformable to my profession; that our assistance to us in this work; that if gentlemen would find the time to me, that they would inform me. In short, her frequent importunities and other impertinencies of the shop were very uneasy; and if your more effect upon her than to be obliged to ruin myself at Oxford with her time, mad for Bedlam. Now, Sir, my family is exposed to, and becoming both troublesome, I am reading herself in your paper. She is so very learned that the word of mouth to argue with at your ending a paper in the hint to women of literature to translate it to expose them how it is with,

"Sir, y

FOR,
 at humanity and compassion in you take such pains to make one you will not deny your voice to a who intends to be determined by a matter of great importance to now then, there is an agreeable those person, wit, and humour objection, that pretends to have with me. To this I must add from the vanity of my nature, certainty of my lover, I will not at I verily believe he has a real n, if true, you will allow may merit with his mistress. In able of his good qualities, and passion, that I think I could ve up my liberty to him than there not an objection to be in regard they do not answer expect, and are not sufficient undergoing the reproachful used, that she has played the I am one of those few who nage, diamonds, and a coxcomb, site notions from mine prevail amongst the best, and such as most prudent people, I cannot resolve upon incurring the censors, which I am conscious I enter into a married state, I beyond that of equalling, if not nes. Under this difficulty I being in the least determined overnored by the vain world, and es I meet with, or hearken to t, and the motions I find in my um. Sir, your opinion and adthe only thing I know can turn which I earnestly entreat I may til I have your thoughts upon to give my swain a final dis-particular obligation you will lay as subject room in one of your e it may be of use to some who will be as grateful for the

Sir, your humble Servant,

" FLORINDA.

you the truth I am married to may say something to justify

OR,
 us professors of music if we cation to you, in order to proexhibiting entertainments of ings. It is industriously insitution is to destroy operas in of you to insert this plain ex-s in your paper. Our purpose r circumstances, by improving profess. We see it utterly deand as we were the persons as, we think it a groundless should set up against the opera tend to assert is, that the songs judiciously put together, and manner which are expected in formed amongst us, has put music itself to a stand; inasmuch the people cannot now be enterthing but what has an impertinent any just spirit, or a languishment any passion, or common sense.

 persons of sense and quality who honour to subscribe, will not be a patronage towards us, and not rec-that patronizing us is being for or a but truly promoting their own divi-just and elegant manner than he performed.

" We are, Sir, your most ht

" THOMAS

" NICKO

" CHAS

" There will be no performance ings until after that of the subscrip

No. 279.] SATURDAY, JANUA

Reddere personæ scilicet convenientia

HON. A

He knows what best befits each cha

WE have already taken a gene-fable and characters in Milton's The parts which remain to be consito Aristotle's method, are the sen-language. Before I enter upon th I must advertise my reader, that it soon as I have finished my genera these four several heads, to give par-out of the poem which is now before and imperfections which may be each of them, as also of such other may not properly fall under any of thought fit to premise, that the judge too hastily of this piece of c upon it as imperfect, before he has extent of it.

The sentiments in an epic poem and behaviour which the author persons whom he introduces, and are are conformable to the characters persons. The sentiments have like-to things as well as persons, and a when they are such as are adapted If in either of these cases the poet argue or explain, to magnify or di-love or hatred, pity or terror, or any we ought to consider whether the makes use of are proper for those censured by the critics for his defect ticular in several parts of the Iliad though at the same time those wh this great poet with candour, have defect to the times in which he live fault of the age and not of Homer; that delicacy in some of his sentime appears in the works of men of a genius. Besides, if there are blemi-ticular thoughts, there is an infinite greatest part of them. In short, if poets who would not have fallen int of some of his sentiments, there are have risen up to the greatness of has excelled all others in the proposentiments. Milton shines likewise ve particular: nor must we omit one which adds to his honour and reput introduced persons whose characters are known among men, and such as are to be either in history or in ordinary conversation. Milton's characters, most of them, lie out and were to be formed purely by his own

It shows a greater genius in Shakespeare drawn his Caliban, than his Hotspur, or Messias: the one was to be supplied out of imagination, whereas the other might have been drawn upon tradition, history, and observation. It was much easier therefore for Homer to draw sentiments for an assembly of Grecians than for Milton to diversify his infernal with proper characters, and inspire them with variety of sentiments. The loves of Dido are only copies of what has passed before persons. Adam and Eve, before the different species from that of mankind, descended from them; and none but a most unbounded invention, and the most judicious, could have filled their conversational behaviour with so many apt circumstances of their state of innocence.

It is sufficient for an epic poem to be filled with thoughts as are natural, unless it abound with such as are sublime. Virgil in this part is short of Homer. He has not indeed so many thoughts that are low and vulgar; but at the same time has not so many thoughts that are sublime. The truth of it is, Virgil seldom expresses astonishing sentiments, where he is equal to the Iliad. He every where charms and transports us by the force of his own genius; but seldom transports us where he does not transport us from Homer.

His chief talent, and indeed his distinguishing excellence, lies in the sublimity of his thoughts. He is not one of the moderns who rival him in the part of poetry; but in the greatness of his thoughts he triumphs over all the poets both ancient and modern, Homer only excepted. It is for the imagination of man to distend with greater ideas, than those which he has in his first, second, and sixth books. The first, which describes the creation of the world, is likewise wonderfully sublime, though not stirring emotion in the mind of the reader, frequently so perfect in the epic way of writing, because it is filled with less action. Let the reader compare what Longinus has on several passages in Homer, and he will find parallels for most of them in the Paradise which has been said we may infer, that as there are two kinds of sentiments, the natural and the artificial, which are always to be pursued in a poem, there are also two kinds of thoughts, which are carefully to be avoided. The first are those that are affected and unnatural; the second are those that are mean and vulgar. As for the first, we meet with little or nothing of them in Virgil. He has none of those sententious and puerilities that are so often to be met in Ovid, none of the epigrammatic turns, none of those swelling sentiments which are frequent in Statius and Claudian, none of the embellishments of Tasso. Every thing is natural. His sentiments show that he has insight into human nature, and that every thing which was the most proper to which I may hereafter take notice of, the way of thinking as to the relation he has given us of the member that Homer any of the above mentioned, which are the refinements of latter ages. I confess, has sometimes expressed sentiments which shall show more at large, considering how all the thoughts he writ were infected with the disease, he is rather to be admired for more into it, than that he is infected with the vicious taste which is common among modern writers.

But since several thoughts are low and grovelling, and avoid such sentiments as are mean, but also such as are mean, have opened a great field of rancour, more efficacy than greatness of genius, of some of his sentiments. I have said, these are rather to be avoided, the simplicity of the age in which he lived, also add, of that which is the imperfection in that division of the ancients, and Monsieur de la Fontaine, the moderns, pushed their riches on account of some such blemish to be observed in them, and but a very few in Milton.

I shall give but one instance of thought in Homer, and of it with an instance of the same in Virgil and Milton. Sentiments can very seldom be admitted in a heroic poem, whose business is to be a much nobler nature in his characters of Vulcan, in his story of Mars and Venus, and in other passages, he has fallen into the burlesque, and parted from that serious style to the magnificence of an epic, but one laugh in the whole. In the fifth book, upon Monarch being sent as thrown overboard a rock. But this piece of that the severest critic could say against it; for it is the business, where the reader's mind is sufficiently relaxed for such a piece of pleasantry in the evil spirits are described upon the success of their design. This passage I look upon as allowable in the whole poem, as a string of puns, and those, that

—Satan beheld their
And to his mates thus in deep "O friends, why come not on Ere while they hence were gone To entertain them fair with And breast (what could we Of composition, straight they Flew off, and into strange As they would dance; yet for Somewhat extravagant, and For joy of offer'd peace; but If our proposals once again We should compel them to a

To whom thus Belial in like "Leader, the terms we sent Of hard contents, and full of Such as we might perceive And stumbled many; who Had need from head to foot

BRITISH ESSAYISTS.

ides, upright," asant vein
t, b. vi. l. 609, &c.

RY 21, 1711-12.

ma lant est.
for. I Ep. xvii. 35.
st praise.—CAREW.

man agreeable or he converses, ac-
that inclination
or pleasing others it never fails of l, its disappoint-
ve call an agree-with the natural a delight he takes tion of that cha-
nder these leaders
ake any manner
A rational and se-ersons, who have cy of sentiments ought; but mixed
of pretenders to
with constrained,

Now and then
actly formed for at he is doing or eed be no manner
gain upon every his felicity is not be attended with dignity to the fa-es him whom we
a this that every
a. He is in the y of life, but has enes in it; though er, and acted with a decisive day of which only make as it were super-ace which gives ections: for as a
er, so is acknow-
and serves in the
a. This renders
rtant in business,
ordinary occur-
characters which
ons to our hearts,
the methods of rough the world tages. Falling
ner of one above rules of good be-parasite differs ant, but that the
our, subjected to er, but the other
tuted to speak, de of him whom on, in an honest
a that of wearing
e of those things
ous.
ther those above
lly owing to the opinion they have of your sincerity. This q is to attend the agreeable man in all the acti his life; and I think there need no more be s honour of it, than that it is what forces the a bation of your opponents. The guilty man h honour for the judge who with justice pronou against him the sentence of death itself. Thea of the sentence at the head of this paper, was a cellent judge of human life, and passed his o company the most agreeable that ever was i world. Augustus lived amongst his friends, he had his fortune to make in his own court. dour and affability, accompanied with as much as ever mortal was vested with, were what him in the utmost manner agreeable among of admirable men, who had thoughts too hig ambition, and views too large to be gratifi what he could give them in the disposal of an pire, without the pleasures of their mutual co sation. A certain unanimity of taste and judg which is natural to all of the same order in species, was the band of this society; and the peror assumed no figure in it, but what he be was his due from his private talents and qual tions, as they contributed to advance the plea and sentiments of the company.

Cunning people, hypocrites, all who are but virtuous, or half wise, are incapable of tasting refined pleasure of such an equal company as t wholly exclude the regard of fortune in their versations. Horace, in the discourse from wh I take the hint of the present speculation, down excellent rules for conduct in conversa with men of power; but he speaks with an a one who had no need of such an application for thing which related to himself. It shows he un stood what it was to be a skilful courtier, by admonitions against importunity, and showing forcible it was to speak modestly of your own w There is, indeed, something so shameless in tak all opportunities to speak of your own affairs, he who is guilty of it towards him on whom he pends, fares like a beggar who exposes his s which, instead of moving compassion, makes man he begs of turn away from the object.

I cannot tell what is become of him, but I rem ber about sixteen years ago an honest fellow, so justly understood how disagreeable the men or appearance of his want would make him, I have often reflected upon him as a counterpart Irus, whom I have formerly mentioned. This whom I have missed for some years in my wa and have heard was some way employed about army, made it a maxim, that good wigs, deli linen, and a cheerful air, were to a poor depend the same that working tools are to a poor artificer.
It was no small entertainment to me, who knew circumstances, to see him, who had fasted two d attribute the thinness they told him of, to the lence of some gallantries he had lately been ge of. The skilful dissembler carried on this i the utmost address; and if any suspected his ad were narrow, it was attributed to indulging him in some fashionable vice rather than an irrepro bable poverty, which saved his credit with those whom he depended.

The main art is to be as little troublesome you can, and make all you hope for come rather a favour from your patron than claim from But I am here prating of what is the metho pleasing so as to succeed in the world, when t are crowds, who have in city, town, court, arrived to considerable acquisitions, and incapable of acting in any constant tenor; have gone on from one successful error to another; therefore I think I may shorten this by the method of pleasing; and as the said to his son, once for all, "Pray, Jack, gentleman;" so may I to my reader, by instructions, and finish the art of pleasing, "Be rich."—T.

TUESDAY, JANUARY 22, 1711-12.

inhibens spirantia consultat extra.—Vine. Æn. iv. 64. he reeking entrails he consults.

I have already given an account of the dissection of the beau's head, with the several discoveries that occasioned; I shall here, according to promise, enter upon the dissection of a coxcomb, and communicate to the public such particulars as we observed in that curious piece of anatomy.

I have perhaps have waived this undertaking, but have been put in mind of my promise by several unknown correspondents, who are very desirous with me to make an example of the coxcomb as I have already done of the beau. It is in compliance with the request of my friends that I have looked over the minutes of my plan, in order to give the public an exact account of it, which I shall enter upon without further delay.

My friend, before he engaged in this visionary project, told us, that there was nothing in his dissection more difficult than to lay open the heart of a coxcomb, by reason of the many labyrinths and recesses which are to be found in it, and which do not exist in the heart of any other animal.

We first of all to observe the pericardium, the outward case of the heart, which we did not open; and by the help of our glasses we found in it millions of little scars, which seem to be occasioned by the points of innumerable needles and arrows, that from time to time had passed upon the outward coat; though we could not see the smallest orifice, by which any of these needles entered and pierced the inward substance. A skilful anatomist in anatomy knows that this pericardium, or case of the heart, contains in it a thin liquor, supposed to be bred from the vapours which exhale out of the heart, and being there, are condensed into this watery substance.

Upon examining this liquor, we found that it had all the qualities of that spirit which is contained in the thermometer, to show the change of the weather.

My friend here omit an experiment one of the company assured us he himself had made with this liquor, which he found in great quantity about the neck of a coquette whom he had formerly dissected. He told us, that he had actually enclosed it in a glass tube made after the manner of a weather-glass; that instead of acquainting him with the state of the atmosphere, it showed him the state of those persons who entered the room he stood in. He affirmed also, that it rose at the approach of a plume of feathers, an embroidered gown, a pair of fringed gloves; and that it fell as soon as an ill-shaped periwig, a clumsy pair of shoes, or an unfashionable coat came into the room. Nay, he proceeded so far as to assure us, that on his laughing aloud when he stood by it, the liquor mounted, and immediately sank again upon his being silent; short, he told us, that he had made this invention, whenever he was in a coxcomb in his room.

Having cleared away the case, and liquor above mentioned, we found the heart itself. The outward coat was extremely slippery, and the inward cold withal, that upon entering it, it glided through the fingers like oil.

The fibres were turned outwards, and intricate and perplexed manner, as is found in other hearts; the heart was wound up to the top of the head, and must have had very great exertions, while it was employed in this manner.

One thing we thought that upon examining all the fibres, it, or issued out of it, was a communication that it had with the brain.

We could not but take notice of those little nerves affected by the sentiment of passions, did not descend into the brain, but from the muscles of the heart.

Upon weighing the heart, we found it to be extremely light, and low, which I did not wait to enter into the inside of it, I found several cavities, running one into another, as the ancients describe the chambers of a bower. Several of these cavities, with innumerable sorts of vessels, bear giving any particular name; therefore only take notice of the most important, which upon our dissection, we found our microscopes to it, and a small coloured hood.

We are informed that when living, received the love of her, and them encouragement, but was conversed with believe the eye of kindness; for we have seen the impression among the several plaited but to our great surprise, the nature discovered itself, the core and centre of it, a figure, which, upon appeared dressed in a vesture, more I looked upon it, I saw the face before, but either the place or time of the company, who had been so nicely than the rest, she showed of its face, and the severe the little idol which was in the middle of the heart was the head I gave some account of it on paper.

As soon as we had finished, we solved to make an experiment, able to determine among several substances, which differed from that of the heart, we accordingly laid it in a pan of oil, observed in it a certain flame, made it capable of living, and without being con-

BRITISH ESSAYISTS.

phenomenon,
e, it gave a nd dispersed
is imaginary
an the burst shake in my leep and left

3, 1711-12.

viii. 580.

DRYDEN.

man is full of ences against ties they fall tter for their
at which pro-
of mankind,
with so saneir hearts are ch they have ve arrived to ulating their affliction for g of this unes, I cannot ople, who in at is possible on that proppen. Will looking on a ve me an acad laid waste
air of melan-
at lady and a Will, fourteen at town; but ts, by bad se-
are reduced
were at that ties in town;
m at that un-
wing scheme,
e answered.
en our mother
ave any chilm, at twenty ar uncle, who which, at the widow aunt,
l, left by her
no has 6,000l.
annum, which us has of our these summed

£.

16,000

8,000

16,000

18,000

3,000

61,000

ee amounts to
ven for an en-
lawfully pass

In prospect of this, and the knowledge of their own personal merit, every one was contemptible in their eyes, and they refused those offers which had been frequently made them. But mark the end. The mother dies, the father is married again and has a son; on him was entailed the father's, uncle's, and grandmother's estate. This cut off 42,000l. The maiden aunt married a tall Irishman, and with her went the 6,000l. The widow died, and left but enough to pay her debts and bury her; so that there remained for these three girls but their own 1,000l. They had by this time passed their prime, and got on the wrong side of thirty; and must pass the remainder of their days, upbraiding mankind that they mind nothing but money, and bewailing that virtue, sense, and modesty, are had at present in no manner of estimation.

I mention this case of ladies before any other, because it is the most irreparable; for though youth is the time least capable of reflection, it is in that sex the only season in which they can advance their fortunes. But if we turn our thoughts to the men, we see such crowds unhappy, from no other reason than an ill-grounded hope, that it is hard to say which they rather deserve, our pity or contempt. It is not unpleasant to see a fellow, after growing old in attendance, and after having passed half a life in servitude, call himself the unhappiest of all men, and pretend to be disappointed, because a courtier broke his word. He that promises himself any thing but what may naturally arise from his own property or labour, and goes beyond the desire of possessing above two parts in three even of that, lays up for himself an increasing heap of afflictions and disappointments. There are but two means in the world of gaining by other men, and these are by being either agreeable, or considerable. The generality of mankind do all things for their own sakes; and when you hope any thing from persons above you, if you cannot say, "I can be thus agreeable, or thus serviceable," it is ridiculous to pretend to the dignity of being unfortunate when they leave you; you were injudicious in hoping for any other than to be neglected for such as can come within these descriptions of being capable to please or serve your patron, when his humour or interests call for their capacity either way.

It would not methinks be a useless comparison between the condition of a man who shuns all the pleasures of life, and of one who makes it his business to pursue them. Hope in the recluse make his austerities comfortable, while the luxurious man gains nothing but uneasiness from his enjoyment. What is the difference in happiness of him who macerated by abstinence, and his who is surfeited with excess? He who resigns the world has a temptation to envy, hatred, malice, anger, but in constant possession of a serene mind; he who follows the pleasures of it, which are in their very nature disappointing, is in constant search of care, solicitude, remorse, and confusion.

"MR. SPECTATOR, Jan. the 14th, 1722

"I am a young woman, and have my father's make, for which reason I come constantly to church to hear divine service, and make comparisons. One great hinderance to my design is, that one who was once a gardener, has this Christmas overdecked the church with greens, that hath quite spoiled my prospect; inasmuch that I have scarce seen the young baronet I doted on for three weeks, though we have both been very near

dear Sir, your most obedient Servant,
"JENNY SIMPER."

L] THURSDAY, JAN. 24, 1711-12.

artis ingenique iargitor PENA. Prolog. ver. 10.

Is the mother of invention.—ENGLISH PROVERBS.

He rallies the philosophers in his time, who do not agree whether they should admit riches a number of real goods; the professors of the arts threw them quite out, while others as soon inserted them.

It is apt to believe, that as the world grew more and more rigid doctrines of the first were wholly discarded. I do not find any one so hardy at this time to deny that there are very great advantages in the enjoyment of a plentiful fortune. Indeed the best and wisest of men, though they may despise a good part of those things which the world calls pleasures, can, I think, hardly be so foolish as to reject that weight and dignity which a moderate degree of wealth adds to their characters, counsels, and actions.

It is not without reason that it is a general complaint in professions and trades, that the richest members of them are chiefly ruined, and this is falsely imputed to the ill-nature of mankind, who are ever bestowing their favours on such as least want them. Whereas if we consider their proceedings in this case, we shall find them founded on undoubted reason: since, being both equal in their natural integrity, I suppose common prudence, to fear foul play from any person, rather than from one whose riches seem to have placed him above the temptation of money.

Reason also makes the commonwealth regard not subjects, as those who are most convenient for her quiet and interest, and consequently be intrusted with her highest employments.
Contrary, Catiline's saying to those men of great fortunes, who applied themselves to him, friend how he was able to manage affairs in which he was the whole art consisted in "If," says he, "I have to make, I think of no more finished: if any domestic affair, I give myself up to be set in order."

In short, we often see temperaments arriving to regular and orderly dispositions that without it the great imaginings rather puzzle them to a happy issue.

From what has been said down as a maxim, that sense may, if he pleases life, most certainly be sometimes see that men are not so, is either by comparison of something content to be getting at it in their own way, and the pleasures and gratifications.

But besides these ordinary it must be allowed that well in this as in all other

Though the ways of since very numerous,
ones have been found out tainly still remaining so that a man of an indifferent down and draw up such support of his life, as was

We daily see methodical and ingenious men, who of invention in this part

It is reported of Scipio Italian comedian, that want, he bethought himself of the door of a noted performer any one came out who failed to desire a taste of

BRITISH ESSAYISTS.

No. 284.] FRIDAY, JANUARY 25, 1711-12

Posthabui tamen illorum mea seria ludo.*—Vine. Ecl. vii. 11

Their mirth to share, I bid my business wait.

AN unaffected behaviour is without question a very great charm; but under the notion of being unconstrained and disengaged, people take upon them to be unconcerned in any duty of life. A general negligence is what they assume upon all occasions, and set up for an aversion to all manner of business and attention. "I am the careless creature in the world, I have certainly the worst memory of any man living," are frequent expressions in the mouth of a pretender of this sort. It is a professed maxim with these people never to think; there is something so solemn in reflection, they, forsooth, can never give themselves time for such a way of employing themselves. It happens often that this sort of man is heavy enough in his nature to be a good proficient in such matters as are attainable by industry; but, alas! he has such an ardent desire to be what he is not, to be so volatile, to have the faults of a person of spirit, that he professes himself the most unfit man living for any manner of application. When this humor enters into the head of a female, she generally professes sickness upon all occasions, and acts all things with an indisposed air. She is offended, but her mind is too lazy to raise her to anger, therefore she lives only as actuated by a violent spleen, and gentle scorn. She has hardly curiosity to listen to scandal of her acquaintance, and has never attention enough to hear them commended. This affectation in both sexes makes them vain of being useless, and take a certain pride in their insignificance.

Opposite to this folly is another no less unreasonable, and that is, the "impertinence of being always in a hurry." There are those who visit ladies, and beg pardon, before they are well seated in their chairs, that they just called in, but are obliged to attend business of importance elsewhere the very next moment. Thus they run from place to place, professing that they are obliged to be still in another company than that which they are in. These persons who are just a going somewhere else should never be detained; let all the world allow that business is to be minded, and their affairs will be at an end. Their vanity is to be important, and compliance with their multiplicity of affairs will effectually dispatch them. The travelling ladies, who have half the town to see in an afternoon, may be pardoned for being in a constant hurry; but it is inexcusable in men to come where they have no business, to profess they absent themselves where they have. It has been remarked by some nice observers and critics, that there is nothing discovers the true temper of a person so much as his letters. I have by me two epistles, which are written by two people of the different humours above mentioned. It is wonderful that a man cannot observe upon himself when he sits down to write, but that he will gravely commit himself to paper the same manner that he is in the freedom of conversation. I have hardly seen a line from any of these gentlemen, but spoke them as absent from what they were doing; they profess they are when they come into company. For the folly is, that they have persuaded themselves they really are busy. Thus their whole life is spent in suspense of the present moment till the next, and then from the next to the succeeding, which, to the end of life is to pass away without pretence to many things, and execution of nothing.

* The motto of the original paper in folio was what is the motto of No. 54 "Strenua non exercet inertia."—Hos.

"SIR,

"The post is just going out, and I have many of her letters of very great importance to write this evening, but I could not omit making my compliments to you for your civilities to me when I was last in town. It is my misfortune to be so full of business, that I cannot tell you a thousand things I have to say to you. I must desire you to communicate the contents of this to no one living: but believe me to be, with the greatest fidelity,

"Sir, your most obedient humble Servant,
"STEPHEN COURIER."

"MADAM,

"I hate writing, of all things in the world; however, though I have drank the waters, and am told ought not to use my eyes so much, I cannot forbear writing to you, to tell you I have been to the last degree hipped since I saw you. How could you entertain such a thought, as that I could hear of that silly fellow with patience? Take my word for it, there is nothing in it; and you may believe it when so lary a creature as I am undergo the pains to assure you of it, by taking pen, ink, and paper in my hand. Forgive this; you know I shall not often offend in this kind.

"I am very much your Servant,

"BRIDGET EITHERDOWN.

"The fellow is of your country, pr'ythee send me word however whether he has so great an estate."

"MR. SPECTATOR,

Jan. 24, 1712.

"I am clerk of the parish from whence Mrs. Simper sends her complaint, in your Spectator of Wednesday last. I must beg of you to publish this as a public admonition to the aforesaid Mrs. Simper, otherwise all my honest care in the disposition of the greens in the church will have no effect; I shall therefore, with your leave, lay before you the whole matter. I was formerly, as she charges me, for several years a gardener in the county of Kent: but I most absolutely deny that it was out of any affection I retain for my old employment that I have placed my greens so liberally about the church, but out of a particular spleen I conceived against Mrs. Simper (and others of the same sisterhood) some time ago. As to herself, I had one day set the hundredth Psalm, and was singing the first line in order to put the congregation into the tune; she was all the while curtsying to Sir Anthony, in so affected and indecent a manner, that the indignation I conceived at it made me forget myself so far, as from the tune of that psalm to wander into Southwell tune, and from thence into Windsor tune, still unable to recover myself, until I had with the utmost confusion set a new one. Nay, I have often seen her rise up and smile, and curtsy to one at the lower end of the church in the midst of a Gloria Patri; and when I have spoken the assent to a prayer with a long Amen, uttered with decent gravity, she has been rolling her eyes round about in such a manner, as plainly showed, however she was moved, it was not towards a heavenly object. In fine, she extended her conquests so far over the males, and raised such envy in the females, that what between the love of those, and the jealousy of these, I was almost the book all church-head to put a stone I have long lived how the Kentish crying green bound mind of practising I find I have preyed-shot by this boughs may be for her peaceable

T.

No. 285.] SAT

Ne, quicunque
Regali conspectu
Migret in obscurum
Aut, dum vilis

But then they
To make a good (Strip of his girdle) Descend to a Nor (to avoid
With empty so

HAVING already mentioned the last place, the learned world is to this point, I particular in those who judge

It is requisite should be both portion as either the language is and most necessary good-natured slip even in the possible for his this kind is the speaks of Satan

Created the
and that in which Adam the
His sons,

It is plain, that according to the mentioned in the beings; and the confounded with little blemishes and natural, was pardonable in man nature, was particular, and cumstance in so therefore, who rather than that of speech, on the nature in the many greater be

If clearness resulted, the poet to clothe his expressions. The most obvious ordinary conveyance, and contrived through the

BRITISH ESSAYISTS.

against idio-Lucan have
this account,
that offered,
ble of looking
been natural,
lton has but however, you
the following

rumpety.

can urse

now very well improper for debased by cks of ancient anguages, have are written in ere there any Homer, they licate modern one that of an ver hear them
inary conver-

e language of t be also sub-
ate from the speech. The vers itself in sion, without ay seem stiff
o a false sub-
ther extreme.
ometimes So-
g the Latins, ur own coun-
these authors
ts the perspi-
endeavour
ss.
iomatic style
rmed, by the
of metaphors:

as.

—

stances, the must however so thick sown
much of wit, er, which, as
into a kind of
has recourse
words will do

e, and giving the idioms of reek forms of as, as Horace a more than eral dialects

which Homer has made use of for this end. Milton, in conformity with the practice of the ancient poets, and with Aristotle's rule, has infused a great many Latinisms, as well as Græcisms, and sometimes Hebraisms, into the language of his poem; as towards the beginning of it:

Nor did they not perceive the evil plight In which they were, or the fierce pains not feel.
Yet to their general's voice they soon obey'd——— Who shall tempt with wandering feet The dark unbottom'd infinite abyss, And through the palpable obscure find out His uncouth way, or spread his airy flight Upborne with indefatigable wings Over the vast abrupt?
—— So both ascend
In the visions of God — BOOK II.

Under this head may be reckoned the placing the adjective after the substantive, the transposition of words, the turning the adjective into a substantive, with several other foreign modes of speech which this poet has naturalized to give his verse the greater sound, and throw it out of prose.

The third method mentioned by Aristotle, is what agrees with the genius of the Greek language more than with that of any other tongue, and is therefore more used by Homer than by any other poet. I mean the lengthening of a phrase by the addition of words, which may either be inserted or omitted, as also by the extending or contracting of particular words by the insertion or omission of certain syllables. Milton has put in practice this method of raising his language, as far as the nature of our tongue will permit, as in the passage above mentioned, hermite, for what is hermit in common discourse. If you observe the measure of his verse, he has with great judgment suppressed a syllable in several words, and shortened those of two syllables into one; by which method, besides the above-mentioned advantage, he has given a greater variety to his numbers. But this practice is more particularly remarkable in the names of persons and of countries, as Beëlzebub, Hessebon, and in many other particulars, wherein he has either changed the name, or made use of that which is not the most commonly known, that he might the better deviate from the language of the vulgar.

The same reason recommended to him several old words, which also makes his poem appear the more venerable, and gives it a greater air of antiquity.

I must likewise take notice, that there are in Milton several words of his own coining, as "cerberean, miscreated, hell-doomed, embryon atoms," and many others. If the reader is offended at this liberty in our English poet, I would recommend to him a discourse in Plutarch, which shows us how frequently Homer has made use of the same liberty.

Milton, by the above-mentioned helps, and by the choice of the noblest words and phrases which our tongue would afford him, has carried our language to a greater height than any of the English poets have ever done before or after him, and made the sublimity of his style equal to that of his sentiments.

I have been the more particular in these observations on Milton's style, because it is in that part of him in which he appears the most singular. The remarks I have here made upon the practice of other poets, with my observations out of Aristotle, will perhaps alleviate the prejudice which some have taken to his poem upon this account; though, after all, I must confess that I think his style, though admirable in general, is in some places too much stiffened and obscured by the frequent use of those methods which Aristotle has prescribed for the raising of it.

This redundancy of those several ways of speech which Aristotle calls "foreign language," and with which Milton has so very much enriched, and in some places darkened, the language of his poem, was the more proper for his use, because his poem is written in blank verse. Rhyme, without any other assistance, throws the language off from prose, and very often makes an indifferent phrase pass unregarded; but where the verse is not built upon rhymes, there pomp of sound and energy of expression are indispensably necessary to support the style, and keep it from falling into the flatness of prose.

Those who have not a taste for this elevation of style, and are apt to ridicule a poet when he departs from the common forms of expression, would do well to see how Aristotle has treated an ancient author called Euclid, for his insipid mirth upon this occasion. Mr. Dryden used to call these sort of men his prose-critics.

I should, under this head of the language, consider Milton's numbers, in which he has made use of several elisions, which are not customary among other English poets, as may be particularly observed in his cutting off the letter Y, when it precedes a vowel. This, and some other innovations in the measure of his verse, has varied his numbers in such a manner, as makes them incapable of satiating the ear, and cloying the reader, which the same uniform measure would certainly have done, and which the perpetual returns of rhyme never fail to do in long narrative poems. I shall close these reflections upon the language of Paradise Lost with observing, that Milton has copied after Homer rather than Virgil in the length of his periods, the copiousness of his phrases, and the running of his verses into one another.—L.

No. 286.] MONDAY, JANUARY 28, 1711-12.

Nomina honesta præstentur vilis.—TACIT. ANN. I. xiv. c. 21.
Specious names are lent to cover vices.

"York, Jan. 18, 1711-12.

"MR. SPECTATOR,

"I PRETEND not to inform a gentleman of so much taste, whenever he pleases to use it; but it may not be amiss to inform your readers, that there is a false delicacy, as well as a true one. True delicacy, as I take it, consists in exactness of judgment and dignity of sentiment, or, if you will, purity of affection, as this is opposed to corruption and grossness. There are pedants in breeding, as well as in learning. The eye that cannot bear the light is not delicate, but sore. A good constitution appears in the soundness and vigour of the parts, not in the squeamishness of the stomach; and a false delicacy is affectation, not politeness. What then can be the standard of delicacy, but truth and virtue? Virtue, which as the satirist long since observed, is real honour: whereas the other distinctions among mankind are merely titular. Judging by that rule, in my opinion, and in that of many of your virtuous female readers, you are so far from deserving Mr. Courtly's accusation, that you seem too gentle, and to allow too many excuses for an enormous crime, which is as reproach of the age, and is in all its branches and degrees expected. I pretend to prove that that calls itself delicacy, takes place of true delicacy in the minds, and those who know not any better, than the pedants, than the pedants, for this confusion of that natural honest creature, who would may think it proper if her seducer has a union of hearts of heaven, and a middle ceremony. between obscene and the same action, could there is nothing of Fornication and cause they express so as to excite her representing the for this reason papers would be than indelicacy, treat the detestable same manner as and an artful girl unjust that should with the same pity that the pity shewness, first betray the bours of the brother, when we cations of the quality, in Mr. properly, a woman and breeding, did abandoned her to the natural mod soul, is so far from worse character is, doubtless, Mr. that one can see as she sins again and liable to fever and distemper you will not lay posing that me whereby a multitude more barbarous to Moloch. The vice exposed, and filth without dirt tator may look out partaking in vince us you put your own advantage can one help but a feint to get your own, or the whom you are afraid, would not

"Your humble
as you and honest

"Truly

"MR. SPECTATOR,

"It is my fortune whom, though I

BRITISH ESSAYISTS.

as contrary
love. His vely brown.
uty employs arrels in en-ys all he can part, I have netimes with ve told him,
ny more fine
last night I t than judgwhite. Now ased to give he matter of furnish me
maintain my g allow that well that I
orace on my rhymers and s me, and is lden tresses,
ver, swads,
nows what;
much vehe-
e in a brown at I am in a your timely

vant,
OBRUNE."

29, 1711-12.

e!—MENAND.

ss, that were p, and under uld most cer-
of religion in my own etermined by e told that I
is an honest es from the a one as I papers en-
eem for the n essay upon ng often en-
his subject,
ers.

me the most
to the equa-rovided it be illity. This which ex-
another, so
erament will

of a people,
; if it only
y aggravates
ed of it, by ect of com-

The Senses'

This liberty is best preserved, where the legislative power is lodged in several persons, especially if those persons are of different ranks and interests; for where they are of the same rank, and consequently have an interest to manage peculiar to that rank, it differs but little from a despotical government in a single person. But the greatest security a people can have for their liberty, is when the legislative power is in the hands of persons so happily distinguished, that by providing for the particular interests of their several ranks, they are providing for the whole body of the people; or, in other words, when there is no part of the people that has not a common interest with at least one part of the legislators.

If there be but one body of legislators, it is no better than a tyranny; if there are only two, there will want a casting voice, and one of them must at length be swallowed up by the disputes and contentions that will necessarily arise between them.
Four would have the same inconvenience as two, and a greater number would cause too much confusion. I could never read a passage in Polybius and another in Cicero to this purpose without a secret pleasure in applying it to the English constitution, which it suits much better than the Roman.
Both these great authors give the pre-eminence to a mixed government, consisting of three branches, the regal, the noble, and the popular. They had doubtless in their thoughts the constitution of the Roman commonwealth, in which the consul represented the king, the senate the nobles, and the tribunes the people. This division of the three powers in the Roman constitution was by no means so distinct and natural, as it is in the English form of government. Among several objections that might be made to it, I think the chief are those that affect the consular power, which had only the ornament without the force of the regal authority. Their number had not a casting voice in it; for which reason, if one did not chance to be employed abroad, while the other sat at home, the public business was sometimes at a stand, while the consuls pulled two different ways in it. Besides, I do not find that the consuls had ever a negative voice in the passing of a law, or decree of the senate; so that indeed they were rather the chief body of the nobility, or the first ministers of state, than a distinct branch of the sovereignty, in which none can be looked upon as a part, who are not a part of the legislature. Had the consuls been invested with the regal authority to as great a degree as our monarchs, there would never have been any occasions for a dictatorship, which had in it the power of all the three orders, and ended in the subversion of the whole constitution.

Such a history as that of Suetonius, which gives us a succession of absolute princes, is to me an unanswerable argument against despotie power. Where the prince is a man of wisdom and virtue, it is indeed happy for his people that he is absolute; but since in the common run of mankind, for one that is wise and good you find ten of a contrary character, it is very dangerous for a nation to stand to its chance, or to have its public happiness or misery depend on the virtue or vices of a single person.
Look into the history I have mentioned, or into any series of absolute princes, how many tyrants must you read through, before you come to an emperor that is supportable. But this is not all; an honest private man often grows cruel and abandoned, when converted into an absolute prince. Give a man power of doing what he pleases with impunity, and extinguish his fear, and consequently overturn in him one of the great pillars of morality. This too we find confirmed by matter of fact. How many hopeful heirs apparent to grand empires, when in the possession of them, have become such monsters of lust and cruelty as are a reproach to human nature!

Some tell us we ought to make our governments on earth like that in heaven, which, say they, is altogether monarchical and unlimited. Was man like his Creator in goodness and justice, I should be for allowing this great model; but where goodness and justice are not essential to the ruler, I would by no means put myself into his hands to be disposed of according to his particular will and pleasure.

It is odd to consider the connexion between despotic government and barbarity, and how the making of one person more than man, makes the rest less. Above nine parts of the world in ten are in the lowest state of slavery, and consequently sunk in the most gross and brutal ignorance. European slavery is indeed a state of liberty, if compared with that which prevails in the other three divisions of the world; and therefore it is no wonder that those who grovel under it, have many tracks of light among them, of which the others are wholly destitute.

Riches and plenty are the natural fruits of liberty, and where these abound, learning and all the liberal arts will immediately lift up their heads and flourish. As a man must have no slavish fears and apprehensions hanging upon his mind, who will indulge the flights of fancy or speculation, and push his researches into all the abstruse corners of truth, so it is necessary for him to have about him a competency of all the conveniences of life.

The first thing every one looks after, is to provide himself with necessaries. This point will engross our thoughts until it be satisfied. If this is taken care of to our hands, we look out for pleasures and amusements; and among a great number of idle people, there will be many whose pleasures will lie in reading and contemplation. These are the two great sources of knowledge, and as men grow wise they naturally love to communicate their discoveries; and others seeing the happiness of such a learned life, and improving by their conversation, emulate, imitate, and surpass one another, until a nation is filled with races of wise and understanding persons. Ease and plenty are therefore the great cherishers of knowledge; and as most of the despotic governments of the world have neither of them, they are naturally overrun with ignorance and barbarity. In Europe, indeed, notwithstanding several of its princes are absolute, there are men famous for knowledge and learning; but the reason is, because the subjects are many of them rich and wealthy, the prince not thinking fit to exert himself in his full tyranny like the princes of the eastern nations, lest his subjects should be invited to new-mould their constitution, having so many prospects of liberty within their view. But in all despotic governments, though a particular prince may favour arts and letters, there is a natural degeneracy of mankind, as you may observe from Augustus's reign, how the Romans lost themselves by degrees until they fell to an equality with the most barbarous nations that surrounded them. Look upon Greece under its free states, and you would think its inhabitants lived in different climates, and under different heavens, from those at present, so different are the geniuses which are formed under Turkish slavery, and Grecian liberty.

Besides that debasement, very, though natural to and barbarous is, I think, a form of government is to the great human nature all civil ins

No. 288.]

—Favor

"Ma.

"When then promise even your faults come me encourage mankind are gentlemen they may think they fair; in order the herd make their first take company, and particular the testing the oaths, solic things as they are not defend admit of a lous fair is since it free young creat as herself, a prey to the perceive it, shun her w mire, and villany tow many of the sorry for the thought of can be so Spectator, will, I hope noble passio deceitful aff the enamou sel on those have, or ar in which yo but in a par

"Y

Melainia a folly, that look it. Be impotence guilty of it selves appro wife whom one has pov

BRITISH ESSAYISTS.

is reason, I came in that resolution of more than improrners would luded in the way. They quets, should r is one who the woman g so much as the force of rce of judg-parents of wink at the r children to a complains are to lose, others, and, iage lead a re I shall, in as severe as so will I be mischievous ho frequent es, are forth-absent from ch as would those whom oment to be ll my young ances. Streeven days to adamia; and er band, to as, whom a and of supe-

s, and write e wares, one y be allowed uthor again. of them, for st tradesman known for an wares, oter Indian -street, near f that trade, ase is graced and operas; s acceptable abelais, and e, and while my writings. I frequently Dutch and ave the con- ch brocades, without, and les and best pictures, at ade I have an by an ap- for such as to print this e minds you persons and presume to beg it, will be the greater favour, as I have lately received rich silks and fine lace to a considerable value, which will be sold cheap for a quick return, and as I have also a large stock of other goods. Indian silks were formerly a great branch of our trade; and since we must not sell them, we must seek amends by dealing in others. This I hope will plead for one who would lessen the number of teasers of the Muses, and who, suiting his spirit to his circumstances, humbles the poet to exalt the citizen. Like a true tradesman, I hardly ever look into any books, but those of accounts. To say the truth, I cannot, I think, give you a better idea of my being a downright man of traffic, than by acknowledging I oftener read the advertisements, than the matter of even your paper. I am under a great temptation to take this opportunity of admonishing other writers to follow my example, and trouble the town no more; but as it is my present business to increase the number of buyers rather than sellers, I hasten to tell you that I am, Sir,

"Your most humble,
and most obedient Servant,
T. "PETER MORTEUX."

No. 289.] THURSDAY, JANUARY 31, 1711-12.

Vitæ summa brevis spem nos vetat inchoare longam.
Hos. 1 Od. iv. 15.

Life's span forbids us to extend our cares,
And stretch our hopes beyond our years.—CREECH.

UPON taking my seat in a coffee-house I often draw the eyes of the whole room upon me, when in the hottest seasons of news, and at a time perhaps that the Dutch mail is just come in, they hear me ask the coffee-man for his last week's bill of mortality. I find that I have been sometimes taken on this occasion for a parish sexton, sometimes for an undertaker, and sometimes for a doctor of physic. In this, however, I am guided by the spirit of a philosopher, as I take occasion from thence to reflect upon the regular increase and diminution of mankind, and consider the several various ways through which we pass from life to eternity. I am very well pleased with these weekly admonitions, that bring into my mind such thoughts as ought to be the daily entertainment of every reasonable creature; and consider with pleasure to myself, by which of those deliverances, or, as we commonly call them, distempers, I may possibly make my escape out of this world of sorrows, into that condition of existence, wherein I hope to be happier and better than it is possible for me at present to conceive.

But this is not all the use I make of the above-mentioned weekly paper. A bill of mortality is, in my opinion, an unanswerable argument for a Providence. How can we, without supposing ourselves under the constant care of a Supreme Being, give any possible account for that nice proportion, which we find in every great city, between the deaths and births of its inhabitants, and between the number of males and that of females brought into the world? What else could adjust in so exact a manner the recruits of every nation to its losses, and divide these new supplies of people into such equal bodies of both sexes? Chance could never hold the balance with so steady a hand. Were we not counted out by an intelligent supervisor, we should sometimes be overcharged with multitudes, and at others waft away into a desert: we should be sometimes populus virorum, as Florus elegantly expresses it, I generation of males, and at others a species of women. We may extend this consideration to every species of living creatures, and consider the whole animal world as a huge army made up of innumerable corps; if I may use that term, whose quotas have been kept entire near five thousand years, in so wonderful a manner, that there is not probably a single species lost during this long tract of time. Could we have general bills of mortality of every kind of animals, or particular ones of every species in each continent or island, I could almost say in every wood, marsh, or mountain, what astonishing instances would they be of that Providence which watches over all his works?

I have heard of a great man in the Romish church, who upon reading those words in the fifth chapter of Genesis, "And all the days that Adam lived were nine hundred and thirty years, and he died; and all the days of Seth were nine hundred and twelve years, and he died; and all the days of Methuselah were nine hundred and sixty-nine years, and he died;" immediately shut himself up in a convent, and retired from the world, as not thinking any thing in this life worth pursuing, which had not regard to another.

The truth of it is, there is nothing in history which is so improving to the reader as those accounts which we meet with of the deaths of eminent persons, and of their behaviour in that dreadful season. I may also add, that there are no parts in history which affect and please the reader in so sensible a manner. The reason I take to be this, there is no other single circumstance in the story of any person, which can possibly be the case of every one who reads it. A battle or a triumph are conjectures in which not one man in a million is likely to be engaged: but when we see a person at the point of death, we cannot forbear being attentive to every thing he says or does, because we are sure that some time or other we shall ourselves be in the same melancholy circumstances. The general, the statesman, or the philosopher, are perhaps characters which we may never act in, but the dying man is one whom, sooner or later, we shall certainly resemble.

It is, perhaps, for the same kind of reason, that few books written in English have been so much perused as Dr. Sherlock's Discourse upon Death; though at the same time I must own, that he who has not perused this excellent piece, has not perhaps read one of the strongest persuasives to a religious life that ever was written in any language.

The consideration with which I shall close this essay upon death, is one of the most ancient and most beaten morals that has been recommended to mankind. But its being so very common, and so universally received, though it takes away from it the grace of novelty, adds very much to the weight of it, as it shows that it falls in with the general sense of mankind. In short, I would have every one consider that he is in this life nothing more than a passenger, and that he is not to set up his rest here, but to keep an attentive eye upon that state of being to which he approaches every moment, and which will be for ever fixed and permanent. This single consideration would be sufficient to extinguish the bitterness of hatred, the thirst of avarice, and the cruelty of ambition.

I am very much pleased with the passage of Antiphanes, a very ancient poet, who lived near a hundred years before Socrates, which represents the life of man under this view, as I have here translated it with he, "above

They are journey wh take. We reception in and in this together in

I think I
of those be life is terr
through it earth. I s have some Chardin.

that the in
and the co
of caravans purpose:—

"A der arrived at palace by n or caravan
some time,
he laid dov
order to re
of the east
this postur
the guards,
in that plac
to take up

The guards
that the he but the kin himself pas bate, and asked him to distingui
says the de
jesty a ques
lodged in t
king replie
the dervise

The king
says the d
The king t
who,' says
The king
'Ah, Sir,'
its inhabit petual succ caravansar

No. 290,

Proj

For

THE pla friend, tak
to me for occasion of took hold o
comb to be it is call though som
entertainm
ters dwell
congratula

* The mo
likewise:—

the incidents of the first education, the highest to me, to those who assemble affliction, and then threw it to the humble touches of sorrow, from had any not, upon the weakness of person represented, entertained as are ena- merit; and play, is one virtue in the life, those If there be upon the passion of ly to parti- tioned consid- move even virtues con- living who is be an in- iction to the tender care with the con- ds preserved ession of the be venerable nt frequents Honeycomb were said, at whispered busy enough, he recom- ful in their part should d to find that ion, because criticism who ruth is, that Nature. The fe, even that presented by and waiters heir grandeur dowing from ke a charac- nds, that it thoughts and , that many ulty, though he sake of a er husband's an deny but but no be- laudable, in highest degree into Uticensis inary quality on which one ived, though "Cottius's let things at the upper end of the world pass as they would. What is further very extraordinary in this work, is, that the persons are all of them laudable, and their misfortunes arise rather from unguarded virtue, than propensity to vice. The town has an opportunity of doing itself justice in supporting the representations of passion, sorrow, indignation, even despair itself, within the rules of decency, honour, and good-breeding; and since there is none can flatter himself his life will be always fortunate, they may here see sorrow, as they would wish to bear it whenever it arrives.

"MR. SPECTATOR,

"I am appointed to act a part in the new tragedy called The Distrest Mother. It is the celebrated grief of Orestes which I am to personate; but I shall not act as I ought, for I shall feel it too intimately to be able to utter it. I was last night repeating a paragraph to myself, which I took to be an expression of rage, and in the middle of the sentence there was a stroke of self-pity which quite unmanned me. Be pleased, Sir, to print this letter, that when I am oppressed in this manner at such an interval, a certain part of the audience may not think I am out; and I hope, with this allowance, to do it with satisfaction.

"I am, Sir,

"Your most humble Servant,

"GEORGE POWELL."

"MR. SPECTATOR,

"As I was walking the other day in the Park, I saw a gentleman with a very short face; I desire to know whether it was you. Pray inform me as soon as you can, lest I become the most heroic Hecata's rival.

"Your humble Servant to command,

"SOPHIA."

"DEAR MADAM,

"It is not me you are in love with, for I was very ill, and kept my chamber all that day.

"Your most humble Servant,

T. "THE SPECTATOR."

No. 291.] SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 2, 1711-12.

— Ubi plura nitent in carmine, non ego paucis Offendar maculis, quas ant incuria fudit,

Aut humana parum cavit natura.—

HOR. Ars Poet. ver. 351.

But in a poem elegantly writ,

I will not quarrel with a slight mistake,

Such as our nature's frailty may excuse.—ROSCOMMON.

I HAVE now considered Milton's Paradise Lost under those four great heads of the fable, the characters, the sentiments, and the language; and have shown that he excels in general, under each of these heads. I hope that I have made several discoveries which may appear new, even to those who are versed in critical learning. Were I indeed to choose my readers, by whose judgment I would stand or fall, they should not be such as are acquainted only with the French and Italian critics, but also with the ancient and modern who have written in either of the learned languages. Above all, I would have them well versed in the Greek and Latin poets, without which a man very often fancies that he understands a critic, when in reality he does not comprehend his meaning.

It is in criticism as in all other sciences and speculations; one who brings with him any implied notions and observations, which he has made in his reading of the poets, will find his own reflections methodized and explained, and perhaps several little hints that had passed in his mind, perfected and improved in the works of a good critic; whereas one who has not these previous lights is very often an utter stranger to what he reads, and apt to put a wrong interpretation upon it.

Nor is it sufficient that a man, who sets up for a judge in criticism, should have perused the authors above mentioned, unless he has also a clear and logical head. Without this talent he is perpetually puzzled and perplexed amidst his own blunders, mistakes the sense of those he would confute, or, if he chances to think right, does not know how to convey his thoughts to another with clearness and perspicuity. Aristotle, who was the best critic, was also one of the best logicians that ever appeared in the world.

Mr. Locke's Essay on Human Understanding would be thought a very odd book for a man to make himself master of, who would get a reputation by critical writings; though at the same time it is very certain, that an author who has not learned the art of distinguishing between words and things, and of ranging his thoughts and setting them in proper lights, whatever notions he may have, will lose himself in confusion and obscurity. I might further observe that there is not a Greek or Latin critic, who has not shown, even in the style of his criticisms, that he was a master of all the elegance and delicacy of his native tongue.

The truth of it is, there is nothing more absurd, than for a man to set up for a critic, without a good insight into all the parts of learning; whereas many of those, who have endeavoured to signalize themselves by works of this nature, among our English writers, are not only defective in the above-mentioned particulars, but plainly discover, by the phrases which they make use of, and by their confused way of thinking, that they are not acquainted with the most common and ordinary systems of arts and sciences. A few general rules extracted out of the French authors, with a certain cant of words, has sometimes set up an illiterate heavy writer for a most judicious and formidable critic.

One great mark, by which you may discover a critic who has neither taste nor learning, is this, that he seldom ventures to praise any passage in an author which has not been before received and applauded by the public, and that his criticism turns wholly upon little faults and errors. This part of a critic is so very easy to succeed in, that we find every ordinary reader, upon the publishing of a new poem, has wit and ill-nature enough to turn several passages of it into ridicule, and very often in the right place. This Mr. Dryden has very agreeably remarked in these two celebrated lines:

Errors, like straws, upon the surface flow;
He who would search for pearls, must dive below.

A true critic ought to dwell rather upon excellences than imperfections, to discover the concealed beauties of a writer, and communicate to the world such things as are worth their observation. The most exquisite words, and finest strokes of an author, are those which very often appear the most doubtful and exceptionable to a man who wants a relish for polite learning; and they are these, which a sour undistinguishing critic generally attacks with the greatest violence. Tully observes, that it is very easy to brand or fix a mark upon what he calls verbum ardens, or as it may be rendered into English, "a glowing bold expression," and to turn it into ridicule by a cold ill-natured criticism. A little wit is equally capable of exposing a beauty and of aggravating of an autho mind of an its effect a hands it fall apt to think with any m

Such a n critic, as it
vinces him, well as a b
who cannot dull and st
per place,

a man who fault with a
of exerting
sures a pass it, but bec kinds of pl
ous in wor
masters, bo peared with

As I inte
in Milton's
these few p
may know
work, and tions witho ridicule. I the product
and inadver
works of an pulously ex
correct writ

I shall o Boccalini,
that judic critics I ha critic, says
faults of an to Apollo, v
resolved to
the trouble
order to thi
it had been bid him pic
and lay it self to the
and, after h sented by A

No. 292.]

Ilham,
Compo

Whate
Grace o

As no o
only not sic some and i suffer him action; so i some addit excelling in mond may intrinsically done with should be does well, b
best and mo

BRITISH ESSAYISTS.

Offices, beh some cor-
nor is there
panying it,
seem to be ing, and yet
which distin-
ble sunshine
landscapes;
always un-

quality I am ved, than in
of kindness.
a benefac-while Carus

From the
at last, but has almost of bestowing

Carus inan opportu-
the petition
h a counte-
of his mind

erved in li-
performed
the god-like ne's fellow-
and benevo-
e men, run
of a grudg-

est decorum
good offices,
ple drawn
uch a profu-
by nothing
h accompa-
I shall here appear in its sign or am-

the contented, and the given your et since she distinction,
sary for her in clothes quality; by augmented, lustre; and s the riches
hallenge to as a parent
ve hundred
ases; which feared the inducement

with a good of light; it exigencies shes. It is adds new art and nadistasteful
uld degene-

rate into brutality, learning into pedantry, and the genteelst demeanour into affectation. Even Religion itself, unless Decency be the handmaid which waits upon her, is apt to make people appear guilty of sourness and ill-humour: but this shows Virtue in her first original form, adds a comeliness to Religion, and gives its professors the justest title to "the beauty of holiness." A man fully instructed in this art, may assume a thousand shapes, and please in all; he may do a thousand actions shall become none other but himself; not that the things themselves are different, but the manner of doing them.

If you examine each feature by itself, Aglaure and Calliclea are equally handsome; but take them in the whole, and you cannot suffer the comparison: the one is full of numberless nameless graces, the other of as many nameless faults.

The comeliness of person, and the decency of behaviour, add infinite weight to what is pronounced by any one. It is the want of this that often makes the rebukes and advice of old rigid persons of no effect, and leave a displeasure in the minds of those they are directed to: but youth and beauty, if accompanied with a graceful and becoming severity, is of mighty force to raise, even in the most prodigal, a sense of shame. In Milton, the devil is never described ashamed but once, and that at the rebuke of a beauteous angel:

So spake the cherub; and his grave rebuke, Severe in youthful beauty, added grace Invincible. Abash'd the devil stood, And felt how awful Goodness is, and saw Virtue in her own shape how lovely! saw and pin'd His loss.

The care of doing nothing unbecoming has accompanied the greatest minds to their last moments. They avoided even an indecent posture in the very article of death. Thus Cæsar gathered his robe about him, that he might not fall in a manner unbecoming of himself; and the greatest concern that appeared in the behaviour of Lucretia when she stabbed herself, was, that her body should lie in an attitude worthy the mind which had inhabited it:

—Ne non procumbat honeste, Extrema hæc etiam cura cadentis erat.
Ovid, Fast. xl. 682.

'Twas her last thought, how decently to fall.

"MR. SPECTATOR,

"I am a young woman without a fortune; but of a very high mind: that is, good Sir, I am to the last degree proud and vain. I am ever railing at the rich, for doing things, which, upon search into my heart, I find I am only angry at, because I cannot do the same myself. I wear the hooped petticoat, and am all in calicoes when the finest are in silks. It is a dreadful thing to be poor and proud; therefore, if you please, a lecture on that subject for the satisfaction of your uneasy humble Servant,

Z.

"JEZEBEL."

No. 293.] TUESDAY, FEBRUARY 5, 1711-12.

The prudent still have fortune on their side.—FRAG. Vet. Poet.

THE famous Grecian, in his little book wherein he lays down maxims for a man's advancing himself at court, advises his reader to associate himself with the fortunate, and to shun the company of the unfortunate; which, notwithstanding the baseness of the precept to an honest mind, may have something useful in it, for those who push their interest in the

It is certain, a great part of what we call fortune, rises out of right or wrong measures of life. When I hear a man of his being unfortunate in all his undertakings, I shrewdly suspect him for a very weak man in his affairs. In conformity with this way of thinking, Cardinal Richelieu used to say, that un- and imprudent were but two words for the same thing. As the cardinal himself had a great deal of prudence and good fortune, his famous minister, the Count d'Olivares, was disgraced at Madrid, because it was alleged against him that he had never any success in his undertakings. This, says an eminent author, was indicating him of imprudence.

He recommended Pompey to the Romans for several upon three accounts, as he was a man of great conduct, and good fortune. It was, for the reason above mentioned, namely, that a man of good fortune supposes a prudent man in the person whom it befalls, that not a dictator, but several of the Roman emperors, as is still to be seen upon their medals, under their other titles, gave themselves that of Fortunate. The heathens, indeed, seem to have valued a man more for his good fortune than for his quality, which I think is very natural in those who have not a strong belief of another world. How can I conceive a man crowned with distinguishing blessings, that has not some extraordinary fund of merit and perfection in him, to be open to the Supreme eye, though perhaps not discovered by my observation? What is to be said of Homer's and Virgil's heroes do not form an exception, or strike a blow, without the conduct of some deity? Doubtless, because they were esteemed it the greatest honour to be favoured by the gods, and thought the best way of making a man was, to recount those favours which implied an extraordinary merit in the person whom they descended.

Those who believe a future state of rewards and punishments act very absurdly, if they form their estimate of a man's merit from his successes. But, if I thought the whole circle of our being deduced between our births and deaths, I should value a man's good fortune the measure and standard of his merit, since Providence would have no other way of rewarding his virtue and perfections, than in the present life. A virtuous unbeliever, who is not under the pressure of misfortunes, has reason to say as they say Brutus did, a little before his death, "O Virtue, I have worshipped thee as a goddess, but I find thou art an empty name." I return to our first point. Though Providence undoubtedly in a great measure produces good and ill fortune in the world, it is certain there are many unforeseen accidents and occurrences, which often pervert the finest schemes that can be formed by human wisdom. "The race is not always to the swift, nor the battle to the strong." Nothing but infinite wisdom can have an absolute command over fortune; the highest degree of it which man can possess, is by no means equal to fortuitous accidents and contingencies as may rise in the course of our affairs. Nay, it very often happens that prudence, which has always in it a great deal of caution, hinders a man from being so successful as he might possibly have been without it. A person who only aims at what is likely to succeed, and follows closely the dictates of human wisdom, never meets with those great and unforeseen successes, which are the portion of a more generous temper or a more daring spirit. Perhaps may be the reason of this common observation, that Providence delights rather in favouring the good than the great.

Upon the whole, since man is a creature, and the accidents of his life so various, I cannot but think that Providence, yet it certainly seems there should be such a blessing as good fortune, on whose direction the conduct of human life is to be managed.

It is a great presumption to suppose that we are to manage our own affairs, upon any blessing, rather than upon the acquisition of it. I am very well pleased to see that Queen Elizabeth was struck by Queen Elizabeth of the invincible armada of that extraordinary event, the King of Spain, and the ruin of that great prince's glory, ascribed the ruin of the armada to the violence of storms and tempests of the English. Queen Elizabeth upon this as a diminution of her own glory, ascribed herself upon such a sign, and accordingly, in the inscription mentioned, has represented herself as a tempest, and falling foul upon religious inscription, "Alas! He blew with his wind."

It is remarked of a man whose name I cannot at present remember, that he had been a particular favourite of fortune upon recounting his virtues, he added at the end of his list, in this fortune had no share. He observed in history, that he had undertaken.

As arrogance and a want of abilities are very shocking qualities in sense and virtue, we may imagine it displeasing to that Being who governs the mind, and by several of his creatures purposely to show us, that those who are so proud, have no share in his favour.

Since on this subject I have collected several quotations, which I thought worthy to remember upon writing this paper, I will begin with a little Persian fable of a cloud into the sea, and an immensity of fluid in the following reflection: "Able creature am I in the waters! My existence is as a drop; I am reduced to less than the least of the things that are opened that an oyster, with the hood of this drop, changes up in the midst of this drop, says the fable, lay open the shell, until by degrees the pearl, which falling into a long series of adventures, becomes a famous pearl which is fixed in a diadem.—L.

* Timotheus the Athenian, in his Works, 4to. vol. 1. p. 21.
† Altered from insignificant Spect. in folio, No. 295.

, 1711-12.

emper secunda

ly have much

which every one respect of it, and value upon it is here in a propriety peak of perple of con-
proper use of all the good
by a man of ding to the
just, benefi-
at very de-ration; but the support of from being pect. It is e, in a crea-
and hun-
before they he common cast an eye
who escaped
in the west,
destroy his
was thought every man
e naturally
died distress
er of mind?
th regard to wn in pomp
ery servants,
flooking the n the same ying out, in d, to behold against hun-
these two
so it is, that a up all our poverty and he places of
ns there will ve souls too
ndices, and,
ding for suc-
eir thoughts them. The cted of late ic spirit the
we consider
een on foot,
of those in-alue of the so great a
that in the ot have been his way, nor males and
. It is not
olly with the ly therefore
h any lady
rice of one

half yard of the silk towards clothing, feeding, and instructing an innocent helpless creature of her own sex, in one of these schools. The consciousness of such an action will give her features a nobler life on this illustrious day,* than all the jewels that can hang in her hair, or can be clustered in her bosom. It would be uncourtly to speak in harsher words to the fair, but to men one may take a little more freedom. It is monstrous how a man can live with so little reflection, as to fancy he is not in a condition very unjust and disproportioned to the rest of mankind, while he enjoys wealth, and exerts no benevolence or bounty to others. As for this particular occasion of these schools, there cannot any offer more worthy a generous mind. Would you do a handsome thing without return; do it for an infant that is not sensible of the obligation. Would you do it for public good; do it for one who will be an honest artificer. Would you do it for the sake of heaven; give it to one who shall be instructed in the worship of him for whose sake you gave it. It is, methinks, a most laudable institution this, if it were of no other expectation than that of producing a race of good and useful servants, who will have more than a liberal, a religious education. What would not a man do in common prudence, to lay out in purchase of one about him, who would add to all his orders he gave, the weight of the commandments, to enforce an obedience to them? for one who would consider his master as his father, his friend, and benefactor, upon easy terms, and in expectation of no other return, but moderate wages and gentle usage? It is the common vice of children, to run too much among the servants; from such as are educated in these places they would see nothing but lowliness in the servant, which would not be disingenuous in the child. All the ill offices and defamatory whispers, which take their birth from domestics, would be prevented, if this charity could be made universal: and a good man might have a knowledge of the whole life of the person he designs to take into his house for his own service, or that of his family or children, long before they were admitted. This would create endearing dependencies; and the obligation would have a paternal air in the master, who would be relieved from much care and anxiety by the gratitude and diligence of a humble friend, attending him as his servant. I fall into this discourse from a letter sent to me, to give me notice that fifty boys would be clothed, and take their seats (at the charge of some generous benefactors) in St. Bride's church, on Sunday next. I wish I could promise to myself any thing which my correspondent seems to expect from a publication of it in this paper; for there can be nothing added to what so many excellent and learned men have said on this occasion. But that there may be something here which would move a generous mind, like that of him who wrote to me, I shall transcribe a handsome paragraph of Dr. Snape's sermon on these charities, which my correspondent enclosed with his letter.

"The wise Providence has amply compensated the disadvantages of the poor and indigent, in wanting many of the conveniences of this life, by a more abundant provision for their happiness in the next. Had they been higher born, or more richly endowed, they would have wanted this manner of education, of which those only enjoy the benefit was are low enough to submit to it; where they have such advantages without money, and without price, as the rich cannot purchase with it. The learning which is given, is generally more edifying to them, than that which is sold to others. Thus do they become exalted in goodness, by being depressed in fortune, and their poverty is, in reality, their preferment."

* The birth-day of her majesty Queen Anne, who was born Feb. 6, 1665, and died Aug. 1, 1714, aged 49.

T.

No. 295.] THURSDAY, FEBRUARY 7, 1711-12.

Prodiga non sentit pereuntem fœmina cœsum:

At velut exhausta redivivus pullulet arca

Nummus, et e pleno semper tollatur acervo.

Non unquam reputat, quanti sibi gaudia constant.

Juv. Sat. vi. 361.

But womankind, that never knows a mean,
Down to the dregs their sinking fortunes drain.
Hourly they give, and spend, and waste, and wear,
And think no pleasure can be bought too dear.—DAYDEN

"MR. SPECTATOR,

"I AM turned of my great climacteric, and am naturally a man of a meek temper. About a dozen years ago I was married, for my sins, to a young woman of good family, and of a high spirit; but could not bring her to close with me, before I had entered into a treaty with her, longer than that of the grand alliance. Among other articles, it was therein stipulated, that she should have 400*l.* a-year for pin-money, which I obliged myself to pay quarterly into the hands of one who acted as her plenipotentiary in that affair. I have ever since religiously observed my part in this solemn agreement. Now, Sir, so it is, that the lady has had several children since I married her; to which, if I should credit our malicious neighbours, her pin-money has not a little contributed. The education of these my children, who, contrary to my expectation, are born to me every year, straitens me so much, that I have begged their mother to free me from the obligation of the above-mentioned pin-money, that it may go towards making a provision for her family. This proposal makes her noble blood swell in her veins, inasmuch that, finding me a little tardy in my last quarter's payment, she threatens me every day to arrest me; and proceeds so far as to tell me that if I do not do her justice, I shall die in a gaol. To this she adds, when her passion will let her argue calmly, that she has several play-debts on her hands, which must be discharged very suddenly, and that she cannot lose her money as becomes a woman of fashion, if she makes me any abatement in this article. I hope, Sir, you will take an occasion from hence to give your opinion upon a subject which you have not yet touched, and inform us if there are any precedents for this usage among our ancestors; or whether you find any mention of pin-money in Grotius, Puffendorf, or any other of the civilians.

"I am ever the humblest of your Admirers,

"JOSIAH FRIBBLE, Esq."

As there is no man living who is a more professed advocate for the fair sex than myself, so there is none that would be more unwilling to invade any of their ancient rights and privileges; but as the doctrine of pin-money is of a late date, unknown to our great-grandmothers, and not yet received by many of our modern ladies, I think it is for the interest of both sexes to keep it from spreading.

Mr. Fribble may not, perhaps, be much mistaken where he intimates, that the supplying a man's wife with pin-money, is furnishing her with arms against himself, and his own dishonour. I think the beautiful, and stands in need, and, upon her demand, owned, the much infla-

But when parties are thought the ordinary; and upon this one who is lover that is willing to think of the she asks for use? Should be told the tain, under gious cons in this isle proverb, "this calculate year make forty thous

I am not they compr other conv for the hot rather calli plied some given the dress and in a woma

I know fence of the vision they band prove this allow may lay th from their a woman v riage, whe prehensio will not re may very homely pr foolish."

It is obse never eng in case the tions; on have burn behind the or die in t should ver precaution how she m one to wh purses be as unnatu be happy, terests of no greater than the e for her e her endea upon as h For this

BRITISH ESSAYISTS.

, who, being of a young demands of enary tem
As much as
show all the Upon which her more.

he was in-
ough Persia,
and, and in-
as, they told
ch he adds,
, was called ame manner
et aside for These lands een of Per-

who, I dare old me some he perverse
nt in former acres in a resented her t; and that e carried on estate. He ve given her at he would
for her fans,
ears with the ticoats. To ough he did e should not tter dressed erhaps, may devices, ap-
the humour
uld be very ate to mark le of "The 8, 1711-12.

ix. 42

with the fair (which, since on the chief ty), I found
ction at your eces of your y, I thought it to you in o be effected
usual dignity
to the great
as usurped;
endation of
e Greek, yet
e with their pelling-book
wants: and this nation, s abstracted
honour the m a solicitor yself in that character more likely to be prevalent in this request, than if I should subscribe myself by my proper name.

"J. M.

"I desire you may insert this in one of your speculations, to show my zeal for removing the dissatisfaction of the fair sex, and restoring you to their favour."

"SIR,

"I was some time since in company with a young officer, who entertained us with the conquest he had made over a female neighbour of his: when a gentleman who stood by, as I suppose, envying the captain's good fortune, asked him what reason he had to believe the lady admired him? 'Why,' says he, 'my lodgings are opposite to hers, and she is continually at her window either at work, reading, taking snuff, or putting herself in some toying posture, on purpose to draw my eyes that way.' The confession of this vain soldier made me reflect on some of my own actions; for you must know, Sir, I am often at a window which fronts the apartments of several gentlemen, who I doubt not have the same opinion of me. I must own I love to look at them all, one for being well dressed, a second for his fine eye, and one particular one, because he is the least man I ever saw; but there is something so easy and pleasant in the manner of my little man, that I observe he is a favourite of all his acquaintance. I could go on to tell you of many others, that I believe think I have encouraged them from my window: but pray let me have your opinion of the use of a window, in the apartment of a beautiful lady; and how often she may look out at the same man, without being supposed to have a mind to jump out to him.

"Yours,

"AURELIA CARELESS."

Twice.

"MR. SPECTATOR,

"I have for some time made love to a lady, who received it with all the kind returns I ought to expect: but, without any provocation that I know of,
she has of late shunned me with the utmost abhor-rence, insomuch that she went out of church last Sunday in the midst of divine service, upon my coming into the same pew. Pray, Sir, what must I do in this business?

"Your Servant,

"EUPHUES."

Let her alone ten days.

York, Jan. 20, 1711-12.

"MR. SPECTATOR,

"We have in this town a sort of people who pretend to wit, and write lampoons; I have lately been the subject of one of them. The scribbler had not genius enough in verse to turn my age, as indeed I am an old maid, into raillery, for affecting a youth-ier turn than is consistent with my time of day; and therefore he makes the title of his madrigal, the character of Mrs. Judith Lovebane, born in the year 1680. What I desire of you is, that you disallow that a coxcomb, who pretends to write verse, should put the most malicious thing he can say in prose. This I humbly conceive will disable our country wits, who indeed take a great deal of pains to say any thing in rhyme, though they say it very ill.

"I am, Sir, your humble Servant,

"SUSANNA LOVEBANE."

"MR. SPECTATOR,

"We are several of us, gentlemen and ladies, who board in the same house, and after dinner one of our company (an agreeable man enough otherwise) stands up and reads your paper to us all. We are the civillest people in the world to one another, and therefore I am forced to this way of de- siring our reader when he is doing this office, not to stand afore the fire. This will be a general good to our family this cold weather. He will, I know, take it to be our common request when he comes to these words, 'Pray, Sir, sit down;' which I desire you to insert, and you will particularly oblige

"Your daily Reader,

"CHARITY FROST."

"SIR,

"I am a great lover of dancing, but cannot per- form so well as some others; however, by my out- of-the-way capers, and some original grimaces, I do not fail to divert the company, particularly the ladies, who laugh immoderately all the time. Some, who pretend to be my friends, tell me they do it in derision, and would advise me to leave it off, withal that I make myself ridiculous. I do not know what to do in this affair, but I am resolved not to give over upon any account, until I have the opi- nion of the Spectator.

"Your humble Servant,

"JOHN TROTT."

"If Mr. Trott is not awkward out of time, he has a right to dance let who will laugh; but if he has no ear he will interrupt others; and I am of opinion he should sit still. Given under my hand this fifth of February, 1711-12.

T.

"THE SPECTATOR."

No. 297.] SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 9, 1711-12.

— velut si
Egregio inspersionem reprehendas corpore naves.
Hor. l. Sat. vi. 66.

As perfect beauties somewhere have a mole.—CREECH.

AFTER what I have said in my last Saturday's paper, I shall enter on the subject of this without further preface, and remark the several defects which appear in the fable, the characters, the sen- timents, and the language of Milton's Paradise Lost; not doubting but the reader will pardon me, if I allege at the same time whatever may be said for the extenuation of such defects. The first im- perfection which I shall observe in the fable is, that the event of it is unhappy.

The fable of every poem is, according to Ari- stotle's division, either simple or implex. It is called simple when there is no change of fortune in it: implex, when the fortune of the chief actor changes from bad to good, or from good to bad. The implex fable is thought the most perfect: I suppose, be- cause it is more proper to stir up the passions of the reader, and to surprise him with a great variety of accidents.

The implex fable is therefore of two kinds: in the first, the chief actor makes his way through a long series of dangers and difficulties, until he ar- rives at honour and prosperity, as we see in the stories of Ulysses and Æneas; in the second, the chief actor in the poem falls from some eminent pitch of honour and prosperity, into misery and dis- grace. Thus we see Adam and Eve sinking from a state of innocence and happiness, into the most abject condition of sin and sorrow.

SPECTATOR.—Nos. 43 & 44.

The mo- were built l- larly the tr story, if w for tragedy man. I h to show, the event is un than that excellent p of those w our own co I must how which is th per for an

Milton s- fection in l to cure it the mortifi- kind meets infernal sp- sage of the wherein A offspring tr self restore which he f

There is which is in though plac the hero in by no mean occasion for was in real- ated this o- dise Lost i that looks Milton, nev the name o- tainly the principal a- ism could t- greater tha- fore a heat- poem than- roic. Whe I will not- that I shov- greatness o- beauties w-

I must i- interwoven- culars whic- for an epic- he ascribes- he draws- passages in- ther savou- than of Ho-

In the st- mitted too- by Aristot- should sel- his work as- his princip- for this pre- mind of th- when he h- Virgil or- sides that- man is ap- ideas of th- dialogue o-

BRITISH ESSAYISTS.

is agreeably Cato, and rights on that

to see how is delivered
be surprised
ms proceeds general dis-
ed this great tenth part
st is spoken
ood or evil
destruction,

it appears,
allowed of in the ordinary
as little as his narration
his own. I eration, that in that pas-
represented as, whom he and still, for How is the
ed unable to n! The time he had left
e the day on s." As the n of Turnus,
him adorned
his incident,
is reflection circumstance
er's memory.
ets drop his
is unneces-
caliger calls
he prodigies
ms upon the
it would be one before it
by its real
t. Milton's tric on marve's going al other pas-
e exception,
a beauty in t wish them

the charac-
eclared my he are intro-
nk they are
ing heads;
uch pointed,
ms. Of this book, where,

come of his then fables,
the divine
d fault with represents

them as fabulous, as he does in some places, but where he mentions them as truths and matters of fact. The limits of my paper will not give me leave to be particular in instances of this kind; the reader will easily remark them in his perusal of the poem.

A third fault in his sentiments is an uneasy ostentation of learning, which likewise occurs very frequently. It is certain that both Homer and Virgil were masters of all the learning of their times, but it shows itself in their works after an indirect and concealed manner. Milton seems ambitious of letting us know, by his excursions on free will and predestination, and his many glances upon history, astronomy, geography, and the like, as well as by the terms and phrases he sometimes makes use of, that he was acquainted with the whole circle of arts and sciences.

If in the last place we consider the language of this great poet, we must allow what I have hinted in a former paper, that it is often too much laboured, and sometimes obscured by old words, transpositions, and foreign idioms. Seneca's objection to the style of a great author, "Riget ejus oratio, nihil in eâ placidum, nihil lenè," is what many critics make to Milton. As I cannot wholly refute it, so I have already apologised for it in another paper: to which I may further add, that Milton's sentiments and ideas were so wonderfully sublime, that it would have been impossible for him to have represented them in their full strength and beauty, without having recourse to these foreign assistances. Our language sunk under him, and was unequal to that greatness of soul which furnished him with such glorious conceptions.

A second fault in his language is, that he often affects a kind of jingle in his words, as in the following passages and many others:

And brought into the world a world of woe.
— Begirt th' Almighty throne Beseeching or besieging—This tempted our attempt—At one slight bound high over leapt all bound.

I know there are figures for this kind of speech; that some of the greatest ancients have been guilty of it, and that Aristotle himself has given it a place in his rhetoric among the beauties of that art. But as it is in itself poor and trifling, it is, I think, at present universally exploded by all the masters of polite writing.

The last fault which I shall take notice of in Milton's style, is the frequent use of what the learned call technical words, or terms of art. It is one of the greatest beauties of poetry, to make hard things intelligible, and to deliver what is abstruse of itself in such easy language as may be understood by ordinary readers; besides that the knowledge of a poet should rather seem born with him, or inspired, than drawn with books and systems. I have often wondered how Mr. Dryden could translate a passage out of Virgil after the following manner:

Tack to the larboard and stand off to sea, Veer starboard sea and land.—

Milton makes use of larboard in the same manner. When he is upon building, he mentions doric pillars, pilasters, cornice, frieze, architrave. When he talks of heavenly bodies, you meet with ecliptic and eccentric, the trepidation, stars dropping from the zenith, rays emanating from the equator: to which might be added many instances of the like kind in several other arts and sciences.

"I shall in my next papers give an account of the many particular beauties in Milton, which would have been too long to insert under those general heads I have already treated of, and with which I intend to conclude this piece of criticism.—L.

No. 298.] MONDAY, FEBRUARY, 11, 1711-12.

Nusquam tuta fides.—VIRG. ÆN. iv. 373.

Honour is no where safe.

London, Feb. 9, 1711-12.

"MR. SPECTATOR,

"I AM a virgin, and in no case despicable, but yet such as I am I must remain, or else become, it is to be feared, less happy; for I find not the least good effect from the good correction you some time since gave that too free, that looser part of our sex which spoils the men; the same connivance at the vices, the same easy admittance of addresses, the same vitiated relish of the conversation of the greatest rakes (or, in a more fashionable way of expressing one's self, of such as have seen the world most) still abounds, increases, multiplies.

"The humble petition, therefore, of many of the most strictly virtuous and of myself is, that you will once more exert your authority, and that according to your late promise, your full, your impartial authority, on this sillier branch of our kind; for why should they be the uncontrollable mistresses of our fate? Why should they with impunity indulge the males in licentiousness whilst single, and we have the dismal hazard and plague of reforming them when married? Strike home, Sir, then, and spare not, or all our maiden hopes, our gilded hopes of nuptial felicity are frustrated, are vanished, and you yourself as well as Mr. Courtly, will, by smoothing over immodest practices with the gloss of soft and harmless names, for ever forfeit our esteem. Nor think that I am herein more severe than need be; if I have not reason more than enough, do you and the world judge from this ensuing account, which, I think, will prove the evil to be universal.

"You must know, then, that since your reprehension of this female degeneracy came out, I have had a tender of respects from no less than five persons, of tolerable figure too as times go; but the misfortune is that four of the five are professed followers of the mode. They would face me down, that all women of good sense ever were, and ever will be, latitudinarians in wedlock; and always did and will give and take, what they profanely term conjugal liberty of conscience.

"The two first of them, a captain and a merchant, to strengthen their arguments, pretend to repeat after a couple of ladies of quality and wit, that Venus was always kind to Mars; and what soul that has the least spark of generosity can deny a man of bravery any thing? And how pitiful a trader that, whom no woman but his own wife will have correspondence and dealings with? Thus these; whilst the third, the country squire, confessed, that indeed he was surprised into good-breeding, and entered into the knowledge of the world unawares; that dining the other day at a gentleman's house, the person who entertained was obliged to leave him with his wife and nieces; where they spoke with so much contempt of an absent gentleman for being so slow at a hint, that he resolved never for the future to be so much in the morning no husband about.

"The next full of the gallantry to was invited question by widow, resprightly j their way of and conce dropped him that this wa

"I am re advances be to hear any above ment character of I find even relating to in suspense There is a and the case dowed fema and consol divine now prostitute h that my ecc himself to t that on his nounced th

"I put th disingenui quent defen possible:— accept of a of was inde by him re easily perce their purpos gaged befor expectation in) was giv nation itel putable wit open profes minute cot induction, procurer, v report whic neighbourh in the univ wherever e cation to a this alone any previou her affection thus laid to in justice t and freedo

"This is tified with epistle with resume you criminals sacred orde a mercenar not to dece ing against assistance a

this subject

servant,
"NEWORTH."

2, 1711-12.

phos.
phacem

Sat. vi. 166.

n.

—DEYDEN.

es more by or prudence precepts of sentation of a weak man all-concerted impression
and instruc-
the like fol-
ate conduct.
readers the
to make his tions of my

sent you by nt discourse
le you with ook upon to aire Fribble.
c began the
and was for me of Jack y genius for age of five-ur thousand
d a few odd erable busi-
by sea and a very great as knighted
lived with ours by the temper very g a family, descendants
their veins.
Lady Mary
uality. To her a carte
iring her to
as very con-
the disposal
my family,

of this letter
Mary Compared the annorowley and his
ditional notes,
his name from
to be ridiculed rdly made by

should be entirely in her hands. Her father and brothers appeared exceedingly averse to this match, and would not see me for some time: but at present are so well reconciled, that they dine with me almost every day, and have borrowed considerable sums of me; which my Lady Mary very often twits me with, when she would show me how kind her relations are to me. She had no portion, as I told you before; but what she wanted in fortune she makes up in spirit. She at first changed my name to Sir John Envil, and at present writes herself Mary Envil. I have had some children by her, whom she has christened with the surnames of her family, in order, as she tells me, to wear out the homeliness of their parentage by the father's side. Our eldest son is the honourable Oddly Envil, Esq., and our eldest daughter Harriet Envil. Upon her first coming into my family, she turned off a parcel of very careful servants who had been long with me, and introduced in their stead a couple of black-a-moors, and three or four very genteel fellows in laced liveries, besides her French woman, who is perpetually making a noise in the house, in a language which nobody understands, except my Lady Mary. She next set herself to reform every room of my house, having glazed all my chimney-pieces with looking-glasses, and planted every corner with such heaps of china, that I am obliged to move about my own house with the greatest caution and circumspection, for fear of hurting some of our brittle furniture. She makes an illumination once a week with wax candles in one of our largest rooms, in order, as she phrases it, to see company; at which time she always desires me to be abroad, or to confine myself to the cock-loft, that I may not disgrace her among her visitants of quality. Her footmen, as I told you before, are such beaux, that I do not much care for asking them questions; when I do, they answer with a saucy frown, and say that every thing which I find fault with was done by my Lady Mary's order. She tells me, that she intends they shall wear swords with their next liveries, having lately observed the footmen of two or three persons of quality hanging behind the coach with swords by their sides. As soon as the first honeymoon was over, I represented to her the unreasonableness of those daily innovations which she made in my family; but she told me, I was no longer to consider myself as Sir John Anvil, but as her husband; and added with a frown, that I did not seem to know who she was. I was surprised to be treated thus, after such familiarities as had passed between us. But she has since given me to know, that whatever freedoms she may sometimes indulge me in, she expects in general to be treated with the respect that is due to her birth and quality. Our children have been trained up from their infancy with so many accounts of their mother's family, that they know the stories of all the great men and women it has produced. Their mother tells them, that such-a-one commanded in such a sea-engagement, that their great-grandfather had a horse shot under him at Edge-hill, that their uncle was at the siege of Buda, and that her mother danced in a ball at court with the Duke of Monmouth; with abundance of fiddle-faddle of the same nature. I was the other day a little out of countenance at a question of my little daughter Harriet, who asked me, with a great deal of innocence, why I never told her of the generals and admirals that had been in my family? As for my eldest son, Oddly, he has been so spirited up by his mother, that if he does not mend his manners I shall go near to disinherit him. He drew his sword upon me before he was nine years old, and told me that he expected to be used like a gentleman: upon my offering to correct him for his insolence, my Lady Mary stepped in between us, and told me I ought to consider there was some difference between his mother and mine. She is perpetually finding out the features of her own relations in every one of my children, though, by the way, I have a little chub-faced boy as like me as he can stare, if I durst say so; but what most angers me, when she sees me playing with any of them upon my knee, she has begged me more than once to converse with the children as little as possible, that they may not learn any of my awkward tricks.

"You must further know, since I am opening my heart to you, that she thinks herself my superior in sense, as she is in quality, and therefore treats me as a plain well-meaning man, who does not know the world. She dictates to me in my own business, sets me right in points of trade, and if I disagree with her about any of my ships at sea, wonders that I will dispute with her, when I know very well that her great-grandfather was a flag-officer.

"To complete my sufferings, she has teased me for this quarter of a year last past to remove into one of the squares at the other end of the town, promising, for my encouragement, that I shall have as good a cock-loft as any gentleman in the square; to which the Honourable Oddly Enville, Esq. always adds, like a jack-a-napes as he is, that he hopes it will be as near the court as possible.

"In short, Mr. Spectator, I am so much out of my natural element, that to recover my old way of life I would be content to begin the world again, and be plain Jack Anvil: but, alas! I am in for life, and am bound to subscribe myself, with great sorrow of heart,

L.

"Your humble Servant,
"JOHN ENVILLE, KNT."

No. 300.] TUESDAY, FEBRUARY 13, 1711-12.

— Diversum vitio vitium prope majus.

HOR. l. Ep. xviii. 5.

— Another falling of the mind.

Greater than this, of quite a different kind.—POOLEY.

"MR. SPECTATOR,

"WHEN you talk of the subject of love, and the relations arising from it, methinks you should take care to leave no fault unobserved which concerns the state of marriage. The great vexation that I have observed in it is, that the wedded couple seem to want opportunities of being often enough alone together, and are forced to quarrel and be fond before company. Mr. Hotspur and his lady, in a room full of their friends, are ever saying something so smart to each other, and that but just within rules, that the whole company stand in the utmost anxiety and suspense, for fear of their falling into extremities which they could not be present at. On the other side, Tom Faddle and his pretty spouse, wherever they come are billing and cooing at such a rate, as they think must do our hearts good to behold them. Cannot you possibly propose a mean between being wasps and doves in love? I should think, if you advised to hate or love sincerely it would be better; for if they would be so discreet as to bate from the very bottoms of their hearts, their aversion would be too strong for little gibes every moment: a noble valor warmth like impatient of fondness.

appearance side are ma with them, pertinent li be very lov make naus and the like cretion, yo very much two qualitie before us v very grave per so muc greatest ex bodies, not purest good offenders in before you you will sh not witty: blush a dai humble Ser

"MR.

"In your your corre men, whom other reason ing a shallo some men c not seem to same time to be impe dresses. I is to debar versation w I dare say, common tea matters of of discourse in the worl selves praise trate at the that there them those have few pe all were so you would all impositi but I must laid the fau you with m pardon. S and most e parents are advise and to take car hinder men versation, i the suspici vate reason terminè on women thea tion, I mea and govern are yet lia

BRITISH ESSAYISTS

lay the fault own with their om you sum-
unks however only to ent day of the and pray no

"THROPOS,"

hom I much
d; but met what I exyself to you
t civility and y her, an af-fness in her the welcome
she has often ter myself to eat fault, and efore I hope me part of a how we must inary friend-
lds, and you
Servant,
IRANDA."

delight your ven me; for criticism, and es I had read called Julius
r fate. The ice ye;

raise.

urs,

"D. G."

1, 1711-12.

od. xiii. 26.

ight,

ht,

night.—ANON.

with any little
mind, which
world, that we s not in the
are eternally
t procured us a this notion
e is come to t his memory
ife, and those cy, and fired
aders a man re, and makes r at five-and-
et, though he rd, which fills annuated co-

of Stirling, fol.
tic piece of this

Canidia, a lady of this latter species, passed by me yesterday in a coach. Canidia was a haughty beauty of the last age, and was followed by crowds of adorers, whose passions only pleased her, as they gave her opportunities of playing the tyrant. She then contracted that awful cast of the eye and forbidding frown, which she has not yet laid aside, and has still all the insolence of beauty without its charms. If she now attracts the eyes of any beholders, it is only by being remarkably ridiculous; even her own sex laugh at her affectation; and the men, who always enjoy an ill-natured pleasure in seeing an imperious beauty humbled and neglected, regard her with the same satisfaction that a free nation sees a tyrant in disgrace.

Will Honeycomb, who is a great admirer of the gallantries in King Charles the Second's reign, lately communicated to me a letter written by a wit of that age to his mistress, who it seems was a lady of Canidia's humour; and though I do not always approve of my friend Will's taste, I liked this letter so well, that I took a copy of it, with which I shall here present my reader:

"TO CLOE.

"MADAM,

"Since my waking thoughts have never been able to influence you in my favour, I am resolved to try whether my dreams can make any impression on you. To this end I shall give you an account of a very odd one which my fancy presented to me last night, within a few hours after I left you.

"Methought I was unaccountably conveyed into the most delicious place mine eyes ever beheld: it was a large valley divided by a river of the purest water I had ever seen. The ground on each side of it rose by an easy ascent, and was covered with flowers of an infinite variety, which, as they were reflected in the water, doubled the beauties of the place, or rather formed an imaginary scene more beautiful than the real. On each side of the river was a range of lofty trees, whose boughs were loaded with almost as many birds as leaves. Every tree was full of harmony.

"I had not gone far in this pleasant valley, when I perceived that it was terminated by a most magnificent temple. The structure was ancient and regular. On the top of it was figured the god Saturn, in the same shape and dress as the poets usually represent Time.

"As I was advancing to satisfy my curiosity by a nearer view, I was stopped by an object far more beautiful than any I had before discovered in the whole place. I fancy, Madam, you will easily guess that this could hardly be any thing but yourself: in reality it was so; you lay extended on the flowers by the side of the river, so that your hands, which were thrown in a negligent posture, almost touched the water. Your eyes were closed; but if your sleep deprived me of the satisfaction of seeing them, it left me at leisure to contemplate several other charms which disappear when your eyes are open. I could not but admire the tranquillity you slept in, especially when I considered the uneasiness you produce in so many others.

"While I was wholly taken up in these reflections, the doors of the temple flew open, with a very great noise; and lifting up my eyes, I saw two figures in human shape, coming into the valley. Upon a nearer survey, I found them to be Youth and Love. The first was encircled with a kind of purple light, that spread a glory over all the place.

in the midst
gloomy vale heaven and conversation
most happy with admini-
sophic soul
auty is often reflection; it
e gravity of

ties in their ons, love or drawn the nt an imper-
er, and as I erest in her
nt impartial
g brightness
male excel-
ould be set ld; for how were, made

ferent turn:
uest and ar-
and beauty
teem of all reable per-er husband
or Honoria:
an acquisi-
right of an re of life is ant fear of

of her per-so; but she precarious a beauties of
When in the aw her sur-
ook no plea-
ave no false
he torments
g for some oyneess, and pretensions, signing her-
s. Bromius
s and a mo-
unexpectedly
for a good urnished his ties of evil
have longer
d folly, had over to the ity has been his passions,
showed him,
sistent with r rather that r good sense
xample, and ays be more s and admo-
e interwoven
an obstinate er, and then Thus by an persuasions,

having at first brought him not to dislike, and at length to be pleased with that which otherwise he would not have bore to hear of, she then knew how to press and secure this advantage, by approving it as his thought, and seconding it as his proposal. By this means she has gained an interest in some of his leading passions, and made them accessory to his reformation.

There is another particular of Emilia's conduct which I cannot forbear mentioning: to some, perhaps, it may at first sight appear but a trifling inconsiderable circumstance: but, for my part, I think it highly worthy of observation, and to be recommended to the consideration of the fair sex. I have often thought wrapping-gowns and dirty linen, with all that huddled economy of dress which passes under the name of "a mob," the bane of conjugal love, and one of the readiest means imaginable to alienate the affection of a husband, especially a fond one. I have heard some ladies who have been surprised by company in such a dishabille, apologize for it after this manner: "Truly, I am ashamed to be caught in this pickle: but my husband and I were sitting all alone by ourselves, and I did not expect to see such good company." This, by the way, is a fine compliment to the good man, which it is ten to one but he returns in dogged answers and a churlish behaviour, without knowing what it is that puts him out of humour.

Emilia's observation teaches her, that as little inadvertencies and neglects cast a blemish upon a great character; so the neglect of apparel, even among the most intimate friends, does insensibly lessen their regards to each other, by creating a familiarity too low and contemptible. She understands the importance of those things which the generality account trifles; and considers every thing as a matter of consequence that has the least tendency towards keeping up or abating the affection of her husband: him she esteems as a fit object to employ her ingenuity in pleasing, because he is to be pleased for life.

By the help of these, and a thousand other nameless arts, which it is easier for her to practise than for another to express, by the obstinacy of her goodness and unprovoked submission, in spite of all her afflictions and ill usage, Bromius is become a man of sense and a kind husband, and Emilia a happy wife.

Ye guardian angels, to whose care Heaven has intrusted its dear Emilia, guide her still forward in the paths of virtue, defend her from the insolence and wrongs of this undiscerning world: at length, when we must no more converse with such purity on earth, lead her gently hence, innocent and unreplicable, to a better place, where, by an easy transition from what she now is, she may shine forth an angel of light.—T.

No. 303.] SATURDAY, FEB. 16, 1711-12.

— Volo hæc sub luce videri, Judicis argutum quæ non formidat acumen.
Hos. Ars Poet. ver. 363.
— Some choose the clearest light,
And boldly challenge the most piercing eye.
Roscommon.

I HAVE seen, in the works of a modern philosopher, a map of the spots in the sun. My last paper of the faults and blemishes in Milton's Paradise Lost may be considered as a piece of the same nature. To pursue the illusion: as it is observed, among the bright parts of the luminous body we mentioned, there are some which glow moreensely, and dart a stronger light than others; so, withstanding I have already shown Milton's poem to be very beautiful in general, I shall now proceed to take notice of such beauties as appear to be more exquisite than the rest. Milton has proposed the subject of his poem in the following verses:

Of man's first disobedience, and the fruit Of that forbidden tree, whose mortal taste Brought death into the world and all our woe, With loss of Eden, till one greater man, Restore us, and regain the blissful seat, Sing, heavenly Muse!

These lines are, perhaps, as plain, simple, and adorned, as any of the whole poem, in which particular the author has conformed himself to the example of Homer, and the precept of Horace.

His invocation to a work which turns in a great measure upon the creation of the world, is very properly made to the Muse who inspired Moses in his books from whence our author drew his subject, and to the Holy Spirit, who is therein represented as operating after a particular manner in the production of nature. This whole exordium is very happily into noble language and sentiments, as I think the transition to the fable is exquisitely beautiful and natural.

The nine days' astonishment, in which the angels entranced after their dreadful overthrow and fall in heaven, before they could recover either the use of thought or speech, is a noble circumstance, very finely imagined. The division of hell into a mass of fire, and into firm ground impregnated with the same furious element, with that particular circumstance of the exclusion of Hope from those infernal regions, are instances of the same great and useful invention.

The thoughts in the first speech and description of Satan, who is one of the principal actors in this poem, are wonderfully proper to give us a full idea of him. His pride, envy, and revenge, obstinacy, despair, and impenitence, are all of them very artfully interwoven. In short, his first speech is a compilation of all those passions which discover themselves separately in several other of his speeches in the poem. The whole part of this great enemy of mankind is filled with such incidents, as are very proper to raise and terrify the reader's imagination. Of this nature, in the book now before us, is his being first that awakens out of the general trance, with a posture on the burning lake, his rising from it, and the description of his shield and spear:

Thus Satan talking to his nearest mate, With head up-lift above the wave, and eyes That sparkling blaz'd, his other parts beside Prone on the flood extended long and large, Lay floating many a rood—Forthwith upright he rears from off the pool His mighty stature; on each hand the flames Driv'n backward slope their pointing spires, and, roll'd In billows, leave i' th' midst a horrid vale.
Then with expanded wings he steers his flight Aloft, incumbent on the dusky air That felt unusual weight—

— His pond'rous shield, Ethereal temper, massy, large, and round, Behind him cast; the broad circumference Hung on his shoulders like the moon, whose orb Through optic glass the Tuscan artists view At evening from the top of Fesole, Or in Valdarno, to descry new lands, Rivers, or mountains, on her spotty globe.
His spear (to equal which the tallest pine Hewn on Norwegian hills to be the mast Of some great admiral, were but a wand) He walk'd with, to support uneasy steps Over the burning marl—

To which we may add that lay plunged.

He call'd so loud
Of hell resound

But there is no more worked up to a great pitch, his person is described

— He, ab
In shape and g Stood like a to

His sentiments, character, and most exalted and that in which he is tormented:

— Hail, he Infernal world
Receive thy no
A mind not to

And afterward:

— Here a
We shall be fr
Here for his e Here we may
To reign is w
Better to reign

Amidst those images he utters in other places taken care to introduce absurdity, and is a reader; his words are then, bearing out substance." He is as owning his advantage, perverse interpretation, mercy, and other he frequently conveys the perfection he only consideration under the shame of

Nor must I here of his bursting of those innumerable the same guilt and

— He n
To speak: wh
From wing to
With all his pe
Thrice he asse Tears, such as

The catalogue of learning in it, and which rises in a number of the places where beautiful marks of ancient poets. To place Homer's catalogue of warriors, in which Belial's respective speeches in the sixth books. The romantic, and such as the ancients of the world

* — The Whose annual
The Syrian da
In am'rous dis
While smooth Ran purple to
Of Thammuz

* This quotation is immediately following it, in the paper in folio.

rch

as a note on en us by the ncient piece
 sion of such large river;
 mous for the mentation of what may be inion which
 iz. That this r, especially ody colour;
 eeding from
 the death of n the moun-
 Something for the water
 d, as we obe sea a great subtlety by a
 into the river
 by any stain

plaining the
 ves by con-
 sions, is inke way for equal of the y end of the critics call
 able, by rea-
 soon as the multitude
 k themselves
 be room for pacious hall.
 his thought eed is very withstanding
 tracted their ity still pre-

as
 e at large,
 hall,
 lves,

description of the first book
 that sublime
 ch is the de-
 the infernal that ghastly
 e another in flames

 angels when

yond
 st.

The review, which the leader makes of his infernal army:

— He through the armed flies Darts his experienc'd eye, and soon traverses The whole battalion views, their order due,
 Their visages and stature as of gods,
 Their number last he sums: and now his heart Distends with pride, and hard'ning in his strength Glories —

The flash of light which appeared upon the drawing of their swords:

He spake; and to confirm his words out flew Millions of flaming swords, drawn from the thighs Of mighty cherubim: the sudden blaze Far round illumin'd hell. —

The sudden production of the Pandæmonium:

Anon out of the earth a fabric huge Rose like an exhalation, with the sound Of dulcet symphonies and voices sweet.

The artificial illuminations made in it:

— From the arch'd roof Pendent by subtle magic, many a row Of starry lamps and blazing cressets,* fed With Naphtha and Asphaltus, yielded light As from a sky. —

There are also several noble similes and allusions in the first book of Paradise Lost. And here I must observe, that when Milton alludes either to things or persons, he never quits his simile until it rises to some very great idea, which is often foreign to the occasion that gave birth to it. The resemblance does not, perhaps, last above a line or two, but the poet runs on with the hint until he has raised out of it some glorious image or sentiment, proper to illuminate the mind of the reader, and to give it the sublime kind of entertainment which is suitable to the nature of an heroic poem. Those who are acquainted with Homer's and Virgil's way of writing, cannot but be pleased with this kind of structure in Milton's similitudes. I am the more particular on this head because ignorant readers, who have formed the taste upon the quaint similes and little turns of wit which are so much in vogue among modern poets, cannot relish these beauties, which are of a much higher nature, and are therefore apt to censure Milton's comparisons, in which they do not see at surprising points of likeness. Monsieur Perrault was a man of this vitiated relish, and for that reason has endeavoured to turn into ridicule several of Homer's similitudes, which he calls "comparaisons à longue queue," "long-tailed comparisons." I shall conclude this paper on the first book of Milton with the answer which Monsieur Boileau makes to Perrault on this occasion: "Comparisons," says he, "in odes and epic poems, are not introduced only to illustrate and embellish the discourse, but to amuse and relax the mind of the reader, by frequently disengaging him from too painful an attention to the principal subject, and by leading him into other agreeable images. Homer, says he, excelled in this particular, whose comparisons abound with such images of nature as are proper to relieve and diversify his subjects. He continually instructs the reader, and makes him take notice, even in objects which are every day before his eyes, of such circumstances as he should not otherwise have observed. To this he adds, as a maxim universal acknowledged, 'that it is not necessary in poet for the points of the comparison to correspond with * Cresset, i. e. a blazing light set on a beacon, in French "croisette," because beacons formerly had crosses on the top — JOHNSON.

BRITISH ESSAYISTS.

Long-lane, loudness of passengers, violence of Worriers,' ready to repeat you want? out their arms' and relax the distinction between a handmaid and the roughness of the pass-petitioners. humbly pray, and to inhabit Round-court a more soft ners," &c. ge, concern-particularly a seller, will 19, 1711-12. tis 521 DEN.

project now publishing a perceived letters a correspond-fair, I intend culation. A met with in the following Amsterdam:—ued, that the academy for cy, minister or. Six aca—with proper ademy, into r twenty-five ve each an per in posses-. The King asand livres. ers to teach ruct them in others, which esemembers. From this to embassies, ployments." France the ve appeared the contrary, of its neigh-ous academy e learning to in that insti-om meddling did not care im. On the s resolved to make several young men in France as wise as him self, and is therefore taken up at present in establishing a nursery of statesmen.

Some private letters add, that there will also be erected a seminary of petticoat politicians, who are to be brought up at the feet of Madame de Maintenon, and to be dispatched into foreign courts upon any emergencies of state: but as the news of this last project has not been yet confirmed, I shall take no further notice of it.

Several of my readers may doubtless remember that upon the conclusion of the last war, which had been carried on so successfully by the enemy, their generals were many of them transformed into ambassadors; but the conduct of those who have commanded in the present war, has, it seems, brought a little honour and advantage to their great monarch that he is resolved to trust his affairs no longer in the hands of those military gentlemen.

The regulations of this new academy very much deserve our attention. The students are to have in possession or reversion, an estate of two thousand French livres per annum, which, as the present exchange runs, will amount to at least one hundred and twenty-six pounds English. This, with the royal allowance of a thousand livres, will enable them to find themselves in coffee and snuff; not mention newspapers, pens and ink, wax and wafers with the like necessaries for politicians.

A man must be at least five-and-twenty before he can be initiated into the mysteries of this academy though there is no question but many grave persons of a much more advanced age, who have been constant readers of the Paris Gazette, will be glad to begin the world anew, and enter themselves upon this list of politicians.

The society of these hopeful young gentlemen is to be under the direction of six professors, who, it seems, are to be speculative statesmen, and drawn out of the body of the royal academy. These six wise masters, according to my private letters, are to have the following parts allotted to them.

The first is to instruct the students in state logic; as how to take off the impression of a seal to split a wafer, to open a letter, to fold it up again with other the like ingenious feats of dexterity and art. When the students have accomplished themselves in this part of their profession, they are to be delivered into the hands of their second instructor who is a kind of posture-master.

This artist is to teach them how to nod judiciously, to shrug up their shoulders in a dubious case, to connive with either eye, and, in a word, the whole practice of political grimace.

The third is a sort of language-master, who is to instruct them in a style proper for a minister in his ordinary discourse. And to the end that this college of statesmen may be thoroughly practised in the political style, they are to make use of it in their common conversations, before they are employed either in foreign or domestic affairs. If one of them asks another what o'clock it is, the other is to answer him indirectly, and, if possible, to turn the question. If he is desired to change a loud or, he must beg time to consider of it. If it is inquired of him whether the King is at Versailles or Marly, he must answer in a whisper. If he is asked the news of the last Gazette, or the subject of a proclamation, he is to reply that he has not yet read it; or if he does not care for explaining himself so far, he needs only draw up his brow in wrinkles or elevate the left shoulder.

th professor is to teach the whole art of characters and hieroglyphics; and to the they may be perfect also in this practice, ot to send a note to one another (though borrow a Tacitus or a Machiavel) which ten in cipher.

th professor, it is thought, will be chosen society of Jesuits, and is to be well read ntroversies of probable doctrines, mental n, and the rights of princes. This learned instruct them in the grammar, syntax, and part of Treaty Latin; how to distinguish the spirit and the letter, and likewise de how the same form of words may lay an upon any prince in Europe, different which it lays upon his most Christian Ma e is likewise to teach them the art of find-loop-holes, and evasions in the most solemn and particularly a great rabbinical secret, f late years by the fraternity of Jesuits, that contradictory interpretations of the sle may both of them be true and valid.

our statesmen are sufficiently improved by eral instructors, they are to receive their ing from one who is to act among them as the ceremonies. This gentleman is to give res upon the important points of the elbow the stair-head, to instruct them in the dif- gations of the right hand, and to furnish bows and inclinations of all sizes, mea- proportions. In short, this professor is to ociety their stiffening, and infuse into their that beautiful political starch, which may em for levees, conferences, visits, and make e in what vulgar minds are apt to look rifles.

not yet heard any further particulars, which observed in this society of unfledged states- t I must confess, had I a son of five-and- hat should take it into his head at that age for a politician, I think I should go near rit him for a blockhead. Besides, I should ensive lest the same arts which are to en- to negotiate between potentates, might a t his ordinary behaviour between man and here is no question but these young Ma- fill in a little time turn their college upside h plots and stratagems, and lay as many o circumvent one another in a frog or a they may hereafter put in practice to over- neighbouring prince or state.

e told that the Spartans, though they pu- eft in the young men when it was discovered, on it as honourable if it succeeded. Pro- conveyance was clean and unsuspected, a ght afterwards boast of it. This, say the s, was to keep them sharp, and to hinder a being imposed upon, either in their pub- cate negotiations. Whether any such re- of morality, such little jeux d'esprit, ought allowed in this intended seminary of poli- shall leave to the wisdom of their founder. mean time, we have fair warning given us ightly body of statesmen; and as Sylla saw ruses in Cæsar, so I think we may discover rcs in this college of academicians. What- hink of ourselves, I am afraid neither our or St. James's will be a match for it. Our ses are, indeed, very good institutions; er or no these our British schools of poli- furnish out as able envoys and secretaries ademy that is set apart for that purpose, will deserve our serious we remember that our producing men of integ that, on the contrary, policy make a conspicuo Earl of Rochester has ve mirable poem upon that

No. 306.] WEDNES

— *Quæ forma, ut
Impulet? — Juv.
What beauty, or wi
So great a price, if She still insults? — I*

“MR. SPECTATOR,

“I WRITE this to com-tune which frequently serves a consolatory disc within this half-year in beauty and as many lov England. But my adm cannot complain of their that time had the small (according to many amo by me) was the seat o woman, is now disfigured very soul of me to speak face; and though I thi beauty while I had it, it ha value with me, now it is stance which makes my ugliest fellow that ever p most in my favour, and most unreasonably. If an obligation which he o that is not amiable.—Bu bility of making passion son and gratitude. But who has survived herself in a new being. My lo rivals, my rivals are eve I cannot enjoy what I an ing reflection upon what I was did not die of old the prime of youth, and nature may have forty y have nothing of myself l

“I am, Sir, your

When Louis of Franc
milie, the addresses to of his fortitude, and the his glory; in that, durin never have manifested distresses, and so the w nent part of his characte gives her the same oppo quests is a task as difficu the very entrance upon her love-letters; or sinc call her lovers, who follo it would be a very goo from that of a beauty,
who writ them, with th
ticles of a marriage trea pox.” I have known matter of this kind wen where the lady, who w this billet to her lover :—

BRITISH ESSAYISTS.

this terrible
but if you sin-
at the same

"CORINNA."

g so sprightly

ot the same

tered you or

I tell you I

ope you will

both one, as

elf now you take such a

please.

"MILCAR."

wn mind and

ught to have

o great dimi-

formerly af-

haviour will

. Take the

who have the not eminent

en that those

ce, are such

d take to be

The fondest

a crowd of

"You have that woman

had fixed my

y he showed

for beauty

ving my cue-

keep my eyes

and with a

r to see who

that I was the secret.

ne object of

ver is a very

l him was a

e cares and out sincerely

mind, to ac-

ort, that the

ost imperti-

n apparent

n their own

general con-

in beauties.

importunity

so much of possession of

fancy which ration of a

with a toler-

eerful good-

it never en-

happily, are

ppy. There

aste, write a

asonable an-

eldest sister,

the spleen,

quality new ways of being uneasy and displeased; and that happens for no reason in the world, but that poor Liddy knows she has no such thing as a certain negligence that is so becoming; that there is not know not what in her air; and that if she talks like a fool, there is no one will say, "Well! I know not what it is, but every thing pleases when she speaks it."

Ask any of the husbands of your great beauties and they will tell you that they hate their wives nine hours of every day they pass together. There is such a particularity for ever affected by them that they are encumbered with their charms in what they say or do. They pray at public devotions: they are beauties. They converse on ordinary occasions as they are beauties. Ask Belinda what is o'clock, and she is at a stand whether so great beauty should answer you. In a word, I think instead of offering to administer consolation to Patience, I should congratulate her metamorphosis and however she thinks she was not the least insistent in the prosperity of her charms, she was enough so to find she may make herself a much more agreeable creature in her present adversity. The endeavour to please is highly promoted by a consciousness that the approbation of the person you would be agreeable to, is a favour you do not deserve for in this case assurance of success is the most certain way to disappointment. Good-nature will always supply the absence of beauty, but beauty cannot long supply the absence of good-nature.

POSTSCRIPT.

"MADAM,

February 18.

"I have yours of this day, wherein you twice bid me not disoblige you, but you must explain yourself further, before I know what to do.

"Your most obedient Servant,

T.

"THE SPECTATOR."

No. 307.] THURSDAY, FEBRUARY 21, 1711-12.

— Versate din, quid ferre recusant.

Quid valeant humeri. — HOR. Ars Poet. ver. 22.

— Often try what weight you can support,

And what your shoulders are too weak to bear.

ROSCOMBE.

I AM so well pleased with the following letter, that I am in hopes it will not be a disagreeable present to the public:—

"SIR,

"Though I believe none of your readers more admire your agreeable manner of working up trifles than myself, yet as your speculations are now swelling into volumes, and will in all probability pass down to future ages, methinks I would have a single subject in them, wherein the general good of mankind is concerned, left unfinished.

"I have a long time expected with great impatience that you would enlarge upon the ordinary mistakes which are committed in the education of our children. I the more easily flattered myself that you would one time or other resume this consideration, because you tell us that your 168th paper was only composed of a few broken hints but finding myself hitherto disappointed, I have ventured to send you my own thoughts on this subject.

"I remember Pericles, in his famous oration at the funeral of those Athenian young men who perished in the Samian expedition, has a thought very much celebrated by several ancient critics that the loss which the commonwealth by the destruction of its youth, was like which the year would suffer by the destruction of a spring. The prejudice which the public from a wrong education of children, is an the same nature, as it in a manner starves, and defrauds our country of those persons, with due care, might make an eminent in their respective posts of life.

We have seen a book written by Juan Huarter, a physician, entitled Examen de Ingenios, he lays it down as one of his first positions, being but nature can qualify a man for; and that without a proper temperament in particular art or science which he studies, without pains and application, assisted by the masters, will be to no purpose.

He illustrates this by the example of Tully's sons.

So, in order to accomplish his son in that learning which he designed him for, sent him, the most celebrated academy at that time in the world, and where a vast concourse, out of all polite nations, could not but furnish the student with a multitude of great examples of men that might insensibly have instructed in the designed studies. He placed him under the tuition of Cratippus, who was one of the greatest men of the age, and as if all the books that were at that time written had not been sufficient for his use, he composed others on purpose notwithstanding all this, history informs us that he proved a mere blockhead, and that though, it seems, was even with the son for her father's sake rendered him incapable of profiting by all the rules of eloquence, the precepts of philosophy, his own endeavours, and the most liberal education in Athens. This author therefore says, that there should be certain triers or examiners appointed by the state, to inspect the progress of every particular boy, and to allot him the study that is most suitable to his natural talents.

So, in one of his dialogues tells us, that Socrates was the son of a midwife, used to say, that his mother, though she was very skilful in her art, could not deliver a woman unless she was assisted by a child, so neither could he himself extricate out of a mind where nature had not ordained, accordingly, the method this philosopher took, of directing his scholars by several interrogations, was only helping the birth, and bringing their own thoughts to light.

The Spanish doctor above mentioned, as his name grew more refined, asserts that every man has a particular science corresponding to him, in which alone it can be truly excellent. These geniuses, which may seem to have an aptitude for several things, he regards them as unfinished pieces of nature wrought off are indeed but very few to whom nature has given so unkind, that they are not capable of any one science or other. There is a certain aptitude towards knowledge in every mind, which is strengthened and improved by proper application.

The story of Clavius* is very well known. He was bred in a college of Jesuits, and after having been tried at several points of being distinguished, until one of the friends of his father, to make an essay of his genius, hit his genius, and he became one of the greatest men of the age. It is common to see of these fathers, in a young student, has not the figure which their order

* Clavius, a geometrician and astronomer, wrote several volumes in folio, who died at Rome in 1612.

"How different from that which prevails in the world, nothing is more usual than to see of several ages, temperaments together in the same class of authors, and enjoined to follow their natural genius may be poets, historians, and obliged to have the same manner of writing, the same tale of verse, and the same method of prose. Every boy is put to memory as the captain of a ship, instead of adapting studies to the youth, we expect from him that he should adapt his genius to the studies he must confess, is not so much an instructor as to the parents brought to believe, that a boy performing as much as he can, may not make him what he is.

"If the present age is so much degenerated, which have gone before, it is in that generous and noble disposed persons have taken the place of children: and as in the present age, no place left for the ordinary parent, the directors of education, beneficial to the public, except which I have been speaking of. They might easily, by withdrawing those under their inspection from the profession of them into proper studies, allot to them this or that study, if their genius qualifies them for it, for arts, crafts, or service, by sea or land.

"How is this kind of education three great professions!

"Dr. South, complained of them holy orders, and of the sacred function, many a man runs his head against the mill, might have done his duty in the plough-tail.

"In like manner many a man is an indifferent figure at the top of a very elegant water-mill, many a man is in the Temple stairs, though he is a very good house.

"I have known a corner of education would have been a very good education.

"To descend lower, and to see sagacious draymen, and to see several tailors of many a broad pair of sleeves, away upon a barber, when we see a pigmy porter who might have managed a nation, or have snapped his fingers at himself, and advantage to the world.

"The Spartans, though they were a very good people, which I am here speaking of, is rather than what I propose.

BRITISH ESSAYISTS.

his children were seven companies, old men were often raised to strife with overies they and, without of them ac- monwealth. e mistress of world for her place among ble you with ct.

am," &c.

22, 1711-12.

b. il. ver. 15.

ca.

propose my- cares which public good. at is to say, dy what one elf to under- e relating to der you, as and vested a marriages. eing women them con- umbers, that nveyance of dge's apart- examined in rightened or e is going to ll. Now, if and equity, r officer for the state of y parents on the other, to rkward heirs trained com- ay it myself, a: for I am r. My father her a witty ade by con- own, and I g night; so a my father, mother. It ould use me er regulated ore children pretensions r, servant, ALFREY," n within the of quality, but her temper is somewhat different from that of Lady Anvil. My lady's whole time and thoughts are spent in keeping up to the mode both in apparel and furniture. All the goods in my house have been changed three times in seven years. I have had seven children by her: and by our marriage articles she was to have her apartment new furnished as often as she lay in. Nothing in our house is useful but that which is fashionable; my pewter holds out generally half a year, my plate a full twelvemonth; chairs are not fit to sit in that were made two years since, nor beds fit for any thing but to sleep in, that have stood up above that time. My dear is of opinion that an old fashioned grate consumes coals, but gives no heat. If she drinks out of glasses of last year she cannot distinguish wine from small-beer. Oh, dear Sir, you may guess all the rest. " Yours.

" P. S. I could bear even all this, if I were not obliged also to eat fashionably. I have a plain stomach, and have a constant loathing of whatever comes to my own table; for which reason I dine at the chop-house three days in a week; where the good company wonders they never see you of late. I am sure, by your unprejudiced discourses, you lost broth better than soup."

" MR. SPECTATOR, Will's, Feb. 13.

" You may believe you are a person as much talked of as any man in town. I am one of your best friends in this house, and have laid a wager you are so candid a man, and so honest a fellow, that you will print this letter, though it is in recommendation of a newspaper called The Historian. I have read it carefully, and find it written with skill, good sense, modesty, and fire. You must allow the town is kinder to you than you deserve; and I doubt not but you have so much sense of the world's change of humour, and instability of all human things, as to understand, that the only way to preserve favour is to communicate it to others with good-nature and judgment. You are so generally read, that what you speak of will be read. This with men of sense and taste, is all that is wanting to recommend The Historian.

" I am, Sir, your daily Advocate,
" READER GENTLE."

I was very much surprised this morning that any one should find out my lodging, and know it so well as to come directly to my closet-door, and knock at it, to give me the following letter. When I came out I opened it, and saw, by a very strong pair of shoes and a warm coat the bearer had on, that he walked all the way to bring it me, though dated from York. My misfortune is that I cannot talk, and I found the messenger had so much of me, that he could think better than speak. He had, I observed a polite discerning, hid under a shrewd rusticity. He delivered the paper with a Yorkshire tone and a town leer.

" MR. SPECTATOR,

" The privilege you have indulged John Trot has proved of very bad consequence to our illustrious assembly, which, besides the many excellent maxims it is founded upon, is remarkable for the extraordinary decorum observed in it. One instance of which is, that the carders (who are always of the first quality) never begin to play until the French dances are finished, and the country dances begin; but John Trot having now got your commission in his

THE SPECTATOR.

which every one here has a profound respect for the assurance to set up for a minuet-dancer. So, but he has brought down upon us the day of the Trots, which are very numerous, and auxiliaries the hobblers and the skippers, means the time is so much wasted, that, to break all rules of government, it must rest on the utter subversion of the brag-table, the members of which value time, as Fribble's her pin-money. We are pretty well assured that your indulgence to Trot was only in re-country dances; however, we have deferred an order of council upon the premises, to get you to join with us, that Trot, nor any one, presume for the future to dance any but dances, unless a hornpipe upon a festival; you will do this, you will oblige a great deal, and particularly your most humble

k, Feb. 16. "ELIZ. SWEEPSTAKES."

ever meant any other than that Mr. Trot confine himself to country dances. And I direct, that he shall take out none but his tions according to their nearness of blood, gentlewoman may take out him.

n, Feb. 21. "THE SPECTATOR."

09.] SATURDAY, FEB. 23, 1711-12.

bus imperium est Animarum, Umbraeque silentes, os, et Phlegethon, loca nocte silentia late:
i fas audita loqui! sit numine vestro res alta terra et caligine mersas.

VING. Æn. vi. ver. 264.

ma. yet unreveal'd to human sight, s, who rule the regions of the night, ing ghosts, permit me to relate astic wonders of your silent state.—DRYDEN.

before observed in general, that the poem Milton introduces into his poem always such sentiments and behaviour as are in a manner conformable to their respective characters.

Every circumstance in their speeches and actions with great justice and delicacy adapted to the persons who speak and act. As the poet very feels in this consistency of his characters, I leave to consider several passages of the poem in this light. That superior greatness of majesty which is ascribed to the prince of the fallen angels, is admirably preserved in the beginning of this book. His opening and closing of the gates; his taking on himself that great enterprising thought of which the whole infernal assembly trembled; his encountering the hideous monster who guarded the gates of hell, and exposing him in all his terrors; are instances of a bold and daring mind which could not brook any, even to Omnipotence!

was now at hand, and from his seat the monster, moving onward, came as fast as a horrid strider: hell trembled as he strode. Undaunted fiend what this might be admir'd, dur'd, not fear'd—

the boldness and intrepidity of behaviour in himself in the several adventures which he has, during his passage through the regions of the infernal matter, and particularly in his address to the tremendous powers who are described as over it.

port of Moloch is likewise, in all its circumstances, full of that fire and fury which distinguish him from the rest of the fallen angels. He is described in the first book of human sacrifice, tears of parents, and in the second book he is made that fought in heaven; which he makes in the third book of the angels is described as answerable to the same

— Where the monster
And with fierce ensigns Of Moloch, furious king
And at his chariot-wheel Threaten'd, nor from Refrain'd his tongue Down cloven to the heels And uncouth pain flew

It may be worth while to represent this violent hurried on by such pressure that rises in the assembly their present posture of declares himself abruptly censured at his companion as even to deliberate that are rash, audacious and of arming themselves with ing their punishments

— No, let us rather Arm'd with hell flames O'er heaven's high towers Turning our tortures Against the torturer;
Of his almighty engine Infernal thunder, and Black fire and horror Among his angels: arm Mix'd with Tartarian
His own invented torments

His preferring annihilation also highly suitable to him he draws from their discourse that if it be not victoriously truly diabolical, of this implacable spirit

Belial is described in the lewd and luxurious. pursuant to that description of his character, and slothful; and in the book, we find him celebrated for nothing but that second to Satan, on their sup enemy. As his appearance, in these three sentiments in the infernal assembly, is suitable to his character.

of a second battle, his preferring to be miserable I need not observe, that in this speech, and that agreeable variety to the Mammon's character in the book, that the poet adds. We were before told, taught mankind to run for silver, and that he was a nium, or the infernal powers were to meet in council is every way suitable to How proper is that reflection to taste the happiness of there, in the mouth of heaven, is said to have the outward pomps and have been more intent on

BRITISH ESSAYISTS.

to leave the owing senti-

dat
ruling sire

unders roar,
les hell!

il
gold;
raise
w more?

d in dignity
second that e with Satan ains his rank
a wonderful speak. He two opposite
king, which on he makes ch of a new
ed by Satan, llowing lines

'so rife
e long

;

thoughts

grounds his

e

time

ore ll
eath.
e, confirm'd.

was, not to n which the rince of the n to give it
nity was the wonderfully

ader's imagi-
report in
n. Nothing
pecies, than re their exis-
been the talk Virgil, in ealth, makes of pre-exismour to man-
pse of them

described in

l

with the partion, are described with great pregnancy of thought, and copiousness of invention. The diversions are every way suitable to beings who had nothing left them but strength and knowledge misapplied. Such are their contentions at the race, and in feats of arms with their entertainment in the following lines:

Others with vast Typhaean rage more fell Reut up both rocks and hills, and ride the air In whirlwind; hell scarce holds the wild uproar

Their music is employed in celebrating their own criminal exploits, and their discourse in sounding the unfathomable depths of fate, free-will, and foreknowledge.

The several circumstances in the description of hell are finely imagined; as the four rivers which discharge themselves into the sea of fire, the extremes of cold and heat, and the river of oblivion. The monstrous animals produced in that infernal world are represented by a single line, which gives us a more horrid idea of them, than a much longer description would have done:

Nature breeds,
Perverse, all monstrous, all prodigious things, Abominable, inutterable, and worse Than fables yet have feign'd, or fear conceiv'd, Gorgons and hydras, and chimeras dire.

This episode of the fallen spirits, and their place of habitation, comes in very happily to unbend the mind of the reader from its attention to the debate. An ordinary poet would indeed have spun out many circumstances to a great length, and by that means have weakened, instead of illustrated, the principal fable.

The flight of Satan to the gates of hell is finely imagined.

I have already declared my opinion of the allegory concerning sin and death, which is, however, a very finished piece in its kind, when it is not considered as a part of an epic poem. The genealogy of the several persons is contrived with great delicacy. Sin is the daughter of Satan, and Death the offspring of Sin. The incestuous mixture between Sin and Death produces those monsters and hell-hounds which from time to time enter into their mother, and tear the bowels of her who gave them birth.

These are the terrors of an evil conscience, and the proper fruits of sin, which naturally rise from the apprehensions of death. This last beautiful moral is, I think, clearly intimated in the speech of Sin, where, complaining of this her dreadful name, she adds,

Before mine eyes in opposition sits Grim Death, my son and foe, who sets them on,
And me his parent would full soon devour For want of other prey, but that he knows His end with mine involv'd—

I need not mention to the reader the beautiful circumstance in the last part of this quotation. He will likewise observe how naturally the three persons concerned in this allegory are tempted by a common interest to enter into a confederacy together, and how properly Sin is made the portress of hell, and the only being that can open the gates to that world of tortures.

The descriptive part of this allegory is likewise very strong, and full of sublime ideas. The figure of Death, the regal crown upon his head, his monstrosity of Satan, his advancing to the combat, the circumstances at his birth, are circumstances too noble to be passed over in silence, and extremely suitable to this kind of terrors. I need not mention the justness ought which is observed in the generation of these several symbolical persons; that Sin was produced on the first revolt of Satan, that Death appeared soon after he was cast into hell, and that the terrors of conscience were conceived at the gate of this place of torments. The description of the gates is very poetical, as the opening of them is full of Milton's spirit:

On a sudden open fly
With impetuous recoil and jarring sound Th' infernal doors, and on their hinges grate Harsh thunder, that the lowest bottom shook Of Erebus. She open'd, but to shut Excell'd her pow'r; the gates wide open stood, That with extended wings a banner'd host Under spread ensigns marching might pass through With horse and chariots rank'd in loose array; So wide they stood, and like a furnace mouth Cast forth redounding smoke and ruddy flame.

In Satan's voyage through the chaos there are several imaginary persons described, as residing in that immense waste of matter. This may perhaps be conformable to the taste of those critics who are deuced with nothing in a poet which has not life and manners ascribed to it; but for my own part, I am pleased most with those passages in this description which carry in them a greater measure of probability, and are such as might possibly have happened. Of this kind is his first mounting in the smoke that rises from the infernal pit, his falling into a cloud of nitre, and the like combustible materials, that by their explosion still hurried him forward in his voyage: his springing upward like a pyramid of fire, with his laborious passage through that confusion of elements which the poet calls

The womb of nature, and perhaps her grave.

The glimmering light which shot into the chaos from the utmost verge of the creation, with the distant discovery of the earth that hung close by the moon, are wonderfully beautiful and poetical.—L.

No. 310.] MONDAY, FEBRUARY 25, 1711-12.

Connubio jungam stabili——— VIRG. Æn. l. 77.
I'll tie the indissoluble marriage-knot.

"MR. SPECTATOR,

"I AM a certain young woman that love a certain young man very heartily; and my father and mother were for it a great while, but now they say I can do better, but I think I cannot. They bid me not love him, and I cannot unlove him. What must I do? Speak quickly.

"BIDDY DOW-BAKE."

"DEAR SPEC.,

Feb. 19, 1712.

"I have loved a lady entirely for this year and a half, though for a great part of the time (which has contributed not a little to my pain) I have been barred the liberty of conversing with her. The ground of our difference was this; that when we had inquired into each other's circumstances, we found that at our first setting out in the world, we should owe five hundred pounds more than her fortune would pay off. My estate is seven hundred pounds a-year, besides the benefit of tin mines. Now, dear Spec., upon this state of the case, and the lady's positive declaration that there is still no other objection, I beg you will not fail to insert this, with your opinion as soon as possible, whether his ought to be esteemed a just cause or impediment why we should not be joined, and you will for ever be
yours sincerely,

"DICK LOVESICK."

"Sir, if I may say so, in your opinion, you

"MR. SPE

"I have the happiness to see many happy men who have been discarded lovers, and who, by their disgrace, became creatures who sought the most humble sooth the most yet their nicety of parents to go that can be proposed was introduced, find I owe my son of my estate that I am now way to a human What makes this is, that the you this way of from on these occasions, but does your men of the of affairs for that I came home last mistress:—

"Sir,

"I hope you will respect to your nuptials between says he has a make, and has between us. If I have myself with it is, I beg we Adieu.

"This great mercenary motive I think lies natural give me your thoughts was as follows, you are to know derful ease on that it should be paid

"MADAM,

"I have received of your house so ready to obey you be to see you all the good fare

"The opera

The censor and report the how many pounds sufficient reason tender; with him in such a let. I.

"MR. SPE

"There is anness and settled to retire from him such an disturbs both Notwithstanding

BRITISH ESSAYISTS.

the same time
to acquaint
doubted, but at, he would
evil conse-
an infirmity knowing that that when ation on gos-bour. You lad to find a d: and how pouring forth
e before the ie, to check allies of that ch, under a ember of so-tions, I have
o you.

Servant,
NTHROPUS."

myself and at any time ainst letting u would be r correspon-
printer.
at you would ce of such
Mr. Buckley
ealous friend
ords he shall

which may
way will, we petitioners.
ners," &c.

to this peti-
R. may be

1711-12.

de fervet;

Sat. vi. 137.

r:
ver?—DRYDEN.

e variety of ed your spe-
a picture of us who com-tealers. You a continual lie in wait,
may be con-
the law. I n I begin to looked upon
ars. She is The fortune-
on her, and ew whenever have myself
air of silver-
must know,
of state ever
ber-windows

are cross-barred; she is not permitted to go out of house but with her keeper, who is a staid relation of my own; I have likewise forbid her the use of pen and ink, for this twelvemonth last past, and do so suffer a band-box to be carried into her room before it has been searched. Notwithstanding these precautions, I am at my wit's end for fear of any sudden surprise. There were, two or three nights ago some fiddles heard in the street, which I am afraid portend me no good; not to mention a tall Irish man, that has been seen walking before my house more than once this winter. My kinswoman likewise informs me, that the girl has talked to her twice or thrice of a gentleman in a fair wig, and that she loves to go to church more than ever she did in her life. She gave me the slip about a week ago, upon which my whole house was in alarm. I immediately dispatched a hue and cry after her to the 'Change, to her mantua-maker, and to the young ladies that visit her; but after above an hour's search she returned of herself, having been taking a walk, as she told me, by Rosamond's pond. I have hereupon turned off her woman, doubled her guards, and given new instructions to my relation who, to give her her due, keeps a watchful eye over all her motions. This, Sir, keeps me in a perpetual anxiety, and makes me very often watch what my daughter sleeps, as I am afraid she is even with me in her turn. Now, Sir, what I would desire of you is, to represent to this fluttering tribe of young fellows, who are for making their fortunes by these indirect means, that stealing a man's daughter for the sake of her portion is but a kind of a tolerated robbery; and that they make but a poor amends to the father, whom they plunder after this manner, by going to bed with his child. Dear Sir, be speedy in your thoughts upon this subject, that, if possible, they may appear before the disbanding of the army.

"I am, Sir,

"Your most humble Servant,

"TIM. WATCHWELL."

Themistocles, the great Athenian general, being asked whether he would rather choose to marry his daughter to an indigent man of merit, or to a worthless man of an estate, replied, that he should prefer a man without an estate to an estate without a man. The worst of it is, our modern fortune-hunters are those who turn their heads that way, because they are good for nothing else. If a young fellow finds he can make nothing of Coke and Littleton, he provides himself with a ladder of ropes, and by that means very often enters upon the premises.

The same art of scaling has been likewise practised with good success by many military engineers. Stratagems of this nature make parts and industry superfluous, and cut short the way to riches.

Nor is vanity a less motive than idleness to this kind of mercenary pursuit. A fop, who admires his person in a glass, soon enters into a resolution of making his fortune by it, not questioning but that every woman that falls in his way will do him a much justice as he does himself. When an heir sees a man throwing particular graces into his eyes or talking loud within her hearing, she ought to look to herself; but if withal she observes a pair of red heels, a patch, or any other particularity in his dress, she cannot take too much care of her person. These are baits not to be trifled with, charms that have done a world of execution, and made their way into hearts which have been thought impos-

BRITISH ESSAYISTS.

contempt of
contempt of
were, taken he that has been absti-
vorst of dif-
is not agures which tells us a ood taste of philosophy
esses of life Pompey,
ity to visit
out finding fortune that aim: "But immediately
phy, which discourse,
temper, he
as imperti-
shall never

pers a con-
their doing
and parti-
h a due zeal
d to lay be-essions used
ore sermon.
their giving
which are in-
and stations, prayers. Is at reverend,
these distinc-
and have no
fitted in the uld take for on.* There
ot mention.
es before a last petition ot the Lord
once;' as if am's inter-
warrant, as gs which we erefore have they did not is another
s a mind to

ullo, there was
were printed proper, is this,
y for all men;
e race of man-
ough, I think.
the beginning
have met with n the old ver-
have but little for all schools ion, especially hat from them,
d service, may y mean by all
er a tautology.
ies before ex-
eral places de-
properly be inlet us know who gave him his scarf, he speaks a parenthesis to the Almighty. 'Bless, as I am in duty bound to pray, the right-honourable the countess;' is not that as much as to say, 'Bless her, for thou knowest I am her chaplain?'

T. "Your humble Servant," "J. O."

No. 313.] THURSDAY, FEBRUARY 28, 1711-12.

Exigite ut mores temerosi seu pulchre ducati, Ut in quibus cetera vultum facit.—Juv. Sat. vii. 227.
Did I not teach his daily pains employ,
To form the tender manners of the boy,
And work him, like a waxen tube, with art,
To perfect symmetry in every part.—Cm. DAVEN.

I SHALL give the following letter no other recommendation than by telling my readers that it comes from the same hand with that of last Thursday.

"SIR,

"I send you, according to my promise, some farther thoughts on the education of youth, in which I intended to discuss that famous question, 'Whether the education at a public school, or under a private tutor, is to be preferred?'

"As some of the greatest men in most ages have been of very different opinions in this matter, I shall give a short account of what I think may be best urged on both sides, and afterward leave every person to determine for himself.

"It is certain from Suetonius, that the Romans thought the education of their children a business properly belonging to the parents themselves; and Plutarch, in the Life of Marcus Cato, tells us, that as soon as his son was capable of learning, Cato would suffer nobody to teach him but himself, though he had a servant named Chilo, who was an excellent grammarian, and who taught a great many other youths.

"On the contrary, the Greeks seemed more inclined to public schools and seminaries.

"A private education promises, in the first place, virtue and good breeding; a public school, merely assurance, and an early knowledge in the ways of the world.

"Mr. Locke, in his celebrated treatise of education, confesses that there are inconveniences to be feared on both sides: 'If,' says he, 'I keep my son at home, he is in danger of becoming my young master; if I send him abroad, it is scarce possible to keep him from the reigning contagion of rudeness and vice. He will perhaps be more innocent at home, but more ignorant of the world, and more sheepish when he comes abroad.' However, as this learned author asserts that virtue is much more difficult to be obtained than a knowledge of the world, and that vice is a more stubborn, as well as a more dangerous fault than sheepishness, he is altogether for a private education; and the more so, because he does not see why a youth, with right management, might not attain the same assurance in his father's house, as at a public school. To this end he advises parents to accustom their sons to visit ever strange faces come to the house: to take them with them when they visit their neighbours, and to engage them in conversation with men of parts and breeding.

"It may be objected to this method, that conversation is not the only thing necessary; but that unless it be a conversation with such as are in the measure their equals in parts and years, it will be

be no room for emulation, contention, and several of the most lively passions of the mind; which, without being sometimes moved by these means, may possibly contract a dulness and insensibility.

"One of the greatest writers our nation ever produced observes, that a boy who forms parties, and makes himself popular in a school or a college, would act the same part with equal ease in a senate or a privy-council; and Mr. Osborne, speaking like a man versed in the ways of the world, affirms, that the well laying and carrying on of a design to rob an orchard, trains up a youth insensibly to caution, secrecy, and circumspection, and fits him for matters of greater importance.

"In short, a private education seems the most natural method for the forming of a virtuous man; a public education for making a man of business. The first would furnish out a good subject for Plato's republic, the latter a member for a community overrun with artifice and corruption.

"It must, however, be confessed, that a person at the head of a public school has sometimes so many boys under his direction, that it is impossible he should extend a due proportion of his care to each of them. This is, however, in reality, the fault of the age, in which we often see twenty parents, who, though each expects his son should be made a scholar, are not contented all together to make it worth while for any man of liberal education to take upon him the care of their instruction.

"In our great schools, indeed, this fault has been of late years rectified, so that we have at present not only ingenious men for the chief masters, but such as have proper ushers and assistants under them. I must nevertheless own, that for want of the same encouragement in the country, we have many a promising genius spoiled and abused in those little seminaries.

"I am the more inclined to this opinion, having myself experienced the usage of two rural masters, each of them very unfit for the trust they took upon them to discharge. The first imposed much more upon me than my parts, though none of the weakest, could endure; and used me barbarously for not performing impossibilities. The latter was of quite another temper; and a boy who would run upon his errands, wash his coffee-pot, or ring the bell, might have as little conversation with any of the classics as he thought fit. I have known a lad at this place excused his exercise for assisting the cook-maid; and remember a neighbouring gentleman's son was among us five years, most of which time he employed in airing and watering our master's gray pad. I scorned to compound for my faults by doing any of these elegant offices, and was accordingly the best scholar, and the worst used of any boy in the school.

"I shall conclude this discourse with an advantage mentioned by Quintilian, as accompanying a public way of education, which I have not yet taken notice of; namely, that we very often contract such friendships at school, as are a service to us all the following parts of our lives.

"I shall give you under this head, a story very well known to several persons, and which you may depend upon as real truth.

"Every one, who is acquainted with Westminster-school, knows that there is a curtain which used to be drawn across the room, to separate the upper school from the lower. A youth happened, by some mischance, to tear the above-mentioned curtain.

The severity of the criminal to so that the boy terrified to death when his friend good cheer, for self. He kept they were grov out, in which sides; one of other the royal

"As their had torn the on the civil li blame of it, d so well, that h under the prot unhappy enter the West. I with the ever knows that the heads of them pion, imprison friend's lot at The trial of th was very short pass sentence the name of h more attentive years, asked minister schola vinced that it without saying the best of his his power and his friend from

"The gent by the gratitu the father of in the church the highest sta X.

No. 314.] F

Tandem d Tempestiv Attend thy Now grow

"MR. SP

"I AM a yo and have been same age about days in the we ness of being are at home, s if they be not I can discover a fear of fall childish timid and drives us our lives in fa tator, if you th dear creature, deformity und * Busby.

+ The gentle father to Dr. W bishop of Canter trial takes occas bench." it is m who tried this ecutor, who, upon their civil glances that when he jury, found in his sight,

The censor might not pro- bles, 'never the time call at were in- erection of at they were ased by the Montague- nothing for o execute a k before the nsor finding s of their be- s they would m both to be breast-plate er upon the y ordered to if's tribunal, for the use of als to button eced to their quietly out ve lodgings. holidays.

es LILLIE.

R 21, 1710.

as.

Ep. ii. ult.

es, scoff eeling off.

Francis.

er 20.

art of living art of grow- pretensions a, in propor- selves by the infirmities of if we did not rigorous and studying to resent follies, be the same I have often hen, that our au the other at there are n. I thought on of the fair arriages, or s were over the perform- evening has one or two r the crowds d according business.

e before my in my easy but I heard somebody come rumbling up stairs. I saw my door opened, and a human figure advancing towards me, so fantastically put together, that it was some minutes before I discovered it to be my old and intimate friend, Sam Trusty. Immediately I rose up, and placed him in my own seat; a compliment I pay to few. The first thing he uttered was, 'Isaac, fetch me a cup of your cherry-brandy before you offer to ask any question.' He drank a lusty draught, sat silent for some time, and at last broke out: 'I am come,' quoth he, 'to insult thee for an old fantastic dotard as thou art, in ever defending the women. I have this evening visited two widows, who are now in that state I have often heard you call an after-life: I suppose you mean by it, an existence which grows out of past entertainments, and is an untimely delight in the satisfactions which they once set their hearts upon too much to be ever able to relinquish. Have but patience,' continued he, 'until I give you a succinct account of my ladies, and of this night's adventure. They are much of an age, but very different in their characters. The one of them, with all the advances which years have made upon her, goes on in a certain romantic road of love and friendship which she fell into in her teens; the other has transferred the amorous passions of her first years to the love of cronies, pets, and favourites, with which she is always surrounded; but the genius of each of them will best appear by the account of what happened to me at their houses. About five this afternoon, being tired with my study, the weather inviting, and time lying a little upon my hands, I resolved, at the instigation of my evil genius, to visit them; their husbands having been our contemporaries. This I thought I could do without much trouble, for both live in the very next street. I went first to my lady Camomile; and the butler, who had lived long in the family, and seen me often in his master's time, ushered me very civilly into the parlour, and told me, though my lady had given strict orders to be denied, he was sure I might be admitted, and bid the black boy acquaint his lady that I was come to wait upon her. In the window lay two letters, one broke open, the other fresh sealed with a wafer: the first directed to the divine Cosmelia, the second to the charming Lucinda; but both, by the indented characters, appeared to have been writ by very unsteady hands. Such uncommon addresses increased my curiosity, and put me upon asking my old friend the butler, if he knew who those persons were? 'Very well,' says he, 'this is from Mrs. Furbish to my lady, an old school-fellow and great crony of her ladyship's; and thus the answer.' I inquired in what county she lived. 'Oh dear!' says he, 'but just by, in the neighbourhood. Why, she was here all this morning, and that letter came and was answered within these two hours. They have taken an odd fancy, you must know, to call one another hard names; but, for all that, they love one another hugely.' By this time the boy returned with his lady's humble service to me, desiring I would excuse her, for she could not possibly see me, nor any body else, as it was opera-night.

'Methinks,' says I, 'such innocent folly as two old women's courtship to each other, should rather make you merry than put you out of humour.' 'Peace, good Isaac,' says he, 'no interruption, I beseech you. I got soon to Mrs. Feeble's; she that was formerly Betty Frisk—you must needs remember her; Tom Feeble, of Brazen-Nose, fell in love with her for her fine dancing. Well, Mrs. Ursula, without further ceremony, carries me directly up to her mistress's chamber, where I found her environed by in a good air, I am not without hope to promote this generous design. I will you, Sir, that all who shall be my conduct, besides the usual accompaniments of needle, dancing, and the French, it fail to be your constant readers. My humble petition, that you will persevere on this important subject, and so far as to raise a curiosity and zeal, by publishing the following

"I am, Sir,

"Your constant Admirer,

"M. W."

ADVERTISEMENT.

A School for young Gentlemen, lately kept on Mile-End-Green, being now one set up almost opposite Golden Balls, and much more respectable; where besides the common education to young gentlemen, they will have the art of pastry and preserving, may render them accomplished, as to make trial of the vigilance and industry of the sons concerned, may inquire at the school on Mile-End-Green, near Stepney, for further satisfaction.

Notice, that the Spectator has taken notice of all boarding-schools where the young are educated; and designs to proceed after the same manner that the Spectator does in the two famous universities to write to the Spectator, are desired to express which is in most of the other out of laziness or want of industry of not above two thousand whole world: viz. "She has in her life in woman."—T.

TURSDAY, MARCH 1, 1711-12.

it, nisi dignus vindice nodus

— Hor. Ars Poet. ver. 191.

to make a god appear,
as worthy of a god.—ROSCOMMON.

As a poet to consider thoroughly the nature of his genius, Milton seems to do exactly well wherein his strength lay, he has chosen a subject entirely consistent with the talents of which he was master, as wonderfully turned to the sublime, was the noblest that could have engaged his thoughts of man. Every thing that is astonishing has a place in it. The intellectual world; the chaos; heaven, earth, and hell; enter into the poem.

The first and second books represented hell with all its horrors, the thread of the story leads him into the opposite region of glory.

As he forsakes him any where, it is his poem where the divine persons speak. One may, I think, observe that he proceeds with a kind of fear, as he describes the sentiments of hell he dares not give his imagination scope to confine himself to such language as is drawn from the books of the most ancient and to such expressions as may be ascribed. The beauties, therefore, which we are to look for in the poem, are of a poetical nature, nor so much with sentiments of grandeur, as of devotion. The passions which he raises, are a divine love and a particular beauty of the speech, consists in that shortness and in which the poet has couched the mysteries of Christianity, and drawn a scheme, the whole dispensation of respect to man. He has represented doctrines of predestination, from also the great points of the incarnation (which naturally grow up from the fall of man), with great and in a clearer and stronger manner than in any other writer. As in themselves to the generality of the mind, and clear manner in which it is very much to be admired, a particular art which he has made use of, in the dispersing of all those graces of the subject was capable of receiving.

The survey of the whole creation, and the thing that is transacted in it, of Omnipotence, and as much as Virgil has drawn his Jupiter, and of the Supreme Being is more than that of the Heathens. The manner in which he is described to be represented in the most beautiful

"Now had the Almighty Father (From the pure empyrean where He sits enthron'd above all height, His own works and their works About him all the sanctities of Stood thick as stars, and from Beatitude past utterance. On The radiant image of his glory His only Son. On earth he first Our two first parents, yet the end Of mankind, in the happy garden Reaping immortal fruits of joy, Uninterrupted joy, untrivall'd In blissful solitude. He then Hell and the gulf between, and Coasting the wall of heav'n on high In the dull air sublime; and ready To stoop with varied wings and On the bare outside of this world Firm land imberom'd without Uncertain which, in ocean, or Thim God beholding from his Wherein past, present, future, Thus to his only Son foreseeing

Satan's approach to the combat is finely imaged in the beginning of which immediately follows. The speech in the blessed spirits, and the son to whom it was addressed, the mind of the reader with a secret placency:

"Thus while God spake, ambrosia All heav'n, and in the blessed Sense of new joy ineffable diffused Beyond compare the Son of God Most Glorious; in him all his Father Substantially expressed; and in Divine compassion visibly appeared Love without end, and without

I need not point out the beauty of the stance, wherein the whole host is represented as standing mute; nor the occasion was to produce such a scene. The close of this divine colloquy, the angels that follows upon it, are so beautiful and poetical, that I should

BRITISH ESSAYISTS.

sounds of my paper would ightly ceas'd but all with a shout!

without number, sweet ring joy, heav'n rung winns fill'd
&c.—

outside of the universe, ed to him of a globular approach looked like an ral and noble; as his
of the creation, between was wrought into a world med heap of materials ad confusion, strikes the g astonishingly great and of the Limbo of Vanity, n this outermost surface ere explain myself more parts of the poem, which ature.

he fable of an epic poem ances that are both creas the French critics ble should be filled with vellous. This rule is as Aristotle's whole Art of ossible, it differs nothing s only marvellous, it is no ne great secret, therefore, te such circumstances as at the same time both be-is is brought to pass in a ccount of such things as at least of such things as to the received opinions ble is a master-piece of heaven, the condition of of innocence, the tempthe fall of man; though in themselves, and are al points of faith.

reconciling miracles with vention of the poet; as oduces agents of a supe-e of effecting what is t to be met with in the Ulysses' ship being Eneas's fleet into a shoal they are very surprising s probable when we are ods who thus transformed machinery which fills the Virgil with such circumat not impossible, and so reader the most pleasing e mind of man, which is y instance in the Æneid his account, it is in the ok, where Æneas is re-he myrtle that dropped wonderful circumstance, in the root of the myrtle, nts of the country having d arrows, the wood which root in his wounds, and tree. This circumstance ous without the probable;

proceeding from natural osition of any god, or other supernatural power capable of pr The spears and arrows grow of themse so much as the modern help of enchan we look into the fiction of Milton's fab we find it full of surprising incidents, th nerally suited to our notions of the thing sons described, and tempered with a due probability. I must only make an excep Limbo of Vanity, with his episode of Death, and some of the imaginary pers chaos. These passages are astonishing credible; the reader cannot so far im himself as to see a possibility in them; the description of dreams and shadows, ne or persons. I know that many critics the stories of Circe, Polypheme, the Sirens whole Odyssey and Iliad, to be allegorie lowing this to be true, they are fables, v sidering the opinions of mankind that p the age of the poet, might possibly hav cording to the letter. The persons ar might have acted what is ascribed to t circumstances in which they are repres possibly have been truths and realities. pearance of probability is so absolutely in the greater kinds of poetry, that Ar serves the ancient tragic writers made names of such great men as had actual the world, though the tragedy proceed ventures they were never engaged in, to make the subject more credible. In sides the hidden meaning of an epic al plain literal sense ought to appear prob story should be such as an ordinary read quiesce in, whatever natural, moral, o truth may be discovered in it by men penetration.

Satan, after having long wandered up face, or outmost wall of the universe, d last a wide gap in it, which led into th and is described as the opening through angels pass to and fro into the lower w their errands to mankind. His sitting brink of this passage, and taking a sur whole face of nature that appeared to h fresh in all its beauties, with the simile the circumstance, fills the mind of the as surprising and glorious an idea as any in the whole poem. He looks down int hollow of the universe with the eye, or calls it in his first book) with the ken o He surveys all the wonders in the imme theatre that lie between both the poles of takes in at one view the whole round of t

His flight between the several worlds on every side of him, with the particular of the sun, are set forth in all the want luxuriant imagination. His shape, spee haviour upon his transforming himself in of light, are touched with exquisite beauty.
thoughts of directing Satan to the sun, the vulgar opinion of mankind; is the n cuous part of the creation, and the plac angel, is a circumstance very finely co the more adjusted to a poetical probabilit a received doctrine among the most fam phers, that every orb had its intelligence apostle in sacred writ is said to have s angel in the sun. In the answer which returns to the disguised evil spirit, the becoming majesty as is altogether suita prior being. The part of it in which he ent at the creation, is very noble in only proper where it is introduced, prepare the reader for what follows book:

en at his word the formless mass, d's material mould, came to a heap.
 heard his voice, and wild Upstart d, stood vast infinitude confus'd second bidding Darkness fled, ee," &c.

ing part of the speech he points out such circumstances, that the reader bear fancying himself employed on it view of it:

rd on that globe, whose hither side hence, though but reflected, shines; earth, the seat of man, that light b.

conclude my reflections upon this Paradise Lost, without taking notice of complaint of Milton with which which certainly deserves all the praises given it; though, as I have before rather be looked upon as an excrescent essential part of the poem. The on might be applied to that beautiful a hypocrisy in the same book.

MONDAY, MARCH 3, 1711-12.

sora, tamen respexit inertem.

VINO. Ecl. l. 28.

ck came at length, though slow to come.

DAYDEN.

ECTATOR,

or read a letter which is sent with the for the reality of its complaints, this on to hope for a favourable acceptance be the most irretrievable loss, the follow will be thought, I hope, the e. The regaining of my liberty from indolence and inactivity, and the de-g the further encroachments of idleness apply to you; and the uneasiness recollect the past years, and the apprehension I expect the future, soon deter- Idleness is so general a distemper, ut imagine a speculation on this sub-universal use. There is hardly any thout some allay of it; and thousands f spend more time in an idle uncertainty begin first of two affairs, than would cient to have ended them both. The s seems to be the want of some necessity, to put the spirits in motion, and out of their lethargy. If I had less ld have more; for I should then find guished into portions, some for business for the indulging of pleasures; but of indolence overspreads the whole, land-mark to direct myself by. Were tle straitened by business, like water banks, it would have some determined less it be put into some channel it, but becomes a deluge without either anderbeg, prince of Epirus, was dead, so had but too, often felt the force of e battles he had won from them, imagining a piece of his bones near their ould be animated with a vigour and that which inspired him when living.

As I am like to be but of little am resolved to do what good I can and have accordingly ordered posed of in this manner for the men, who are troubled with the of fire. All fox-hunters, upon in a short time be brought to morning, and perhaps even at ten. Instead of hurrying animal, and run away from a chair or a chariot would be a desirable means of performing place to another. I should be tural desire of John Trot for fic to lessen the inclination to tion, and cause her always to to the present place she is in. mummy was ever half so u should be to these feverish of the violent sallies of youth, a proper weight and repose.

"I can stifle any violent is a torrent of anger, or the so with success. Indolence is slowly on, but yet undermines every virtue. A vice of a more desirable tyrant than which gives a tincture of its of one's life. It were as little a storm, as to lie thus perpet it is to no purpose to have a thousand good qualities, if v resolution necessary for the d brings all persons back to image of it, this slumber of difference between the greatest meanest understanding. A remarkably praiseworthy, the more use to the owner, than man who dares not use it.

"To-morrow is still the fact be rectified. To-morrow can please myself with the shadow reality: unmindful that the ours, the future is yet unborn and can only live (as parents the actions it has produced.

"The time we live ought the number of years, but by made of it: thus, it is not the yearly rent, which gives Wretched and thoughtless place where covetousness w prodigals! Nothing lies upon uneasiness, nor have there be any one thing, as to make it tibly and to no purpose. A s up with care, whilst that wh of an estate is flung away w tempt. There is nothing avoided as a solicitous imp of time; it is a report mu tenders the name of a wit an one fears the dreadful character: but notwithstanding t any age has produced thou who can think either Socrates any reputation, by their co overcoming the defects and nature? All are acquainted assiduity with which Tully a Seneca in his letters to Luc which he did not either write and epitomise some good author; only in one of his letters, where of the various methods he used for the saving of time, after several enumerations: 'sometimes,' says even then I carry with me a book, whilst my servants are busied in their duties and other matters, I may be doing that may be useful to me in that if I miss of my game, I may have some of my own thoughts to have the mortification of having day.

I see, how many examples I recollect of that arguments I use with myself, but as I am afraid it is not that will be of service, I shall insist on this subject with the great-est speciality since the good will not alone, but will be of universal use, no hope of amendment where is their ruin, and whilst they have a desirable character; whether they state itself, or that they think of lustre when they do exert themselves to be able to do that without lation, which others attain to but with diligence.

Most obliged humble Servant,
"SAMUEL SLACK."

ANDER TO CLEONE.

Love you is all that I desire to cultivate those about you place in and acquire all those qualifications in him who pretends to the Most devoted humble Servant,

"CLYTANDER."

SDAY, MARCH 4, 1711-12.

mere nati.—HOR. 1 Ep. ii. 27.
and eat.—CREECH.

minutes before his death, asked about him, if they thought he well; and upon receiving such due to his extraordinary merit, says he, "go off the stage with the expression with which made their exit at the conclusion * I could wish that men, while would consider well the nature engaged in, and what figure it ends of those they leave behind as worth coming into the world suitable to a reasonable being; appears graceful in this life, or age in the next. Let the sycophant, the satirist, or the good com- himself, when his body shall and his soul pass into another how much it will redound to his of him, that no man in Eng- he had an admirable talent at to ridicule, that nobody outdid valeat et plaudite.

him at an ill-natured jest, or that bed before he had dispatched These are, however, very common and eulogiums on deceased person among mankind with some figure

But if we look into the bulk of are such as are not likely to be re- ment after their disappearance. I them no traces of their existence, as though they had never been. wanted by the poor, regretted by brated by the learned. They are the commonwealth, nor lamented Their actions are of no significance might have been performed by ci less dignity than those who are dis faculty of reason. An eminent Fre somewhere to the following purpo seen from my chamber-window tw both of them of an erect countenar with reason. These two intellectu ployed from morning to night in ru stones one upon another: that i phrase is, in polishing marble.

My friend, Sir Andrew Frees sitting in the club last night, gave a sober citizen, who died a few d honest man of greater conseque thoughts than in the eye of the wc years past kept a journal of his li showed us one week of it. Since set down in it mark out such a r that I have been speaking of, I reader with a faithful copy of it; s informed him, that the deceased p youth been bred to trade, but findi well turned for business, he had last past lived altogether upon a m Monday, eight o'clock. I put o walked into the parlour.

Nine o'clock, ditto. Tied my washed my hands.

Hours ten, eleven, and twelve pipes of Virginia. Read the Supp. Courant. Things go ill in the nor opinion thereupon.

One o'clock in the afternoon. mislaying my tobacco-box.

Two o'clock. Sat down to din many plums and no suet.

From three to four. Took my s

From four to six. Walked into S.S.E.

From six to ten. At the ck opinion about the peace.

Ten o'clock. Went to bed, sle; Tuesday, being holiday, eight usual.

Nine o'clock. Washed hands put on my double-soled shoes.

Ten, eleven, twelve. Took a w

One. Took a pot of Mother C

Between two and three. Retu knuckle of veal and bacon. Mem.

* This journal was, it may be, genui- lished here as a banter on a gentleman w a congregation of dissenters, commonly where a Mr. Nesbit officiated at that the curious may find information "anti as Mr. Nesbit, in John Denton's account of Opinions. The person who kept this had such a life as is described and ridiculed timely asking or quoting his pastor's words

THE SPECTATOR.

up as usual.
to six. Coffee-house. Read the news.
at. Grand vizier strangled. to ten. At the club. Mr. Nisby's ac-Great Turk.

am of the grand vizier. Broken sleep. y, eight o'clock. Tongue of my shoes. Hands but not face.
id off the butcher's bill. Mem. To be the last leg of mutton.

en. At the coffee-house. More work
t. Stranger in a black wig asked me went.

live to one. Walked in the fields. Wind to two. Smoked a pipe and a half.

ined as usual. Stomach good.

Nap broke by the falling of a pewter . Cook-maid in love, and grown careless.
r to six. At the coffee-house. Advice a that the grand vizier was first of all and afterward beheaded.

k in the evening. Was half an hour before any body else came. Mr. Nisby that the grand vizier was not strangled tant.

ight. Went to bed. Slept without nine the next morning.

nine o'clock. Stayed within until two ir Timothy; who did not bring me my rding to his promise.

afternoon. Sat down to dinner. Loss Small beer sour. Beef over-corned.
ould not take my nap.

five. Gave Ralph a box on the ear. my cook-maid. Sent a messenger to . Mem. I did not go to the club tot to bed at nine o'clock.

Passed the morning in meditation upon , who was with me a quarter before lock. Bought a new head to my cane, to my buckle. Drank a glass of purpetite.

bree. Dined and slept well. to six. Went to the coffee-house. Met ere. Smoked several pipes. Mr. Nisby at laced coffee is bad for the head.

t. At the club as steward. Sat late. lock. Went to bed, dreamt that I peer with the grand vizier.

Waked at eleven, walked in the fields,

Caught in a shower.
afternoon. Returned home and dried Nisby dined with me. First course, s; second, ox-cheek, with a bottle of Jellier.

verslept myself.
at to the club. Like to have fallen Grand vizier certainly dead.

not but the reader will be surprised to e-mentioned journalist taking so much that was filled with such inconsiderable received so very small improvements; look into the behaviour of many whom erse with, we shall find that most of re taken up in those three important ing, drinking, and sleeping. I do not man loses his time, who is not engaged irs, or in an illustrious course of action.

On the contrary, I believe d be more profitably laid out, make no figure in the world to draw upon them the atten-may become wiser and bette employing one's self in see what is laudable without t would, however, recommen readers, the keeping a journa week, and setting down pun of employment during tha kind of self-examination w state of themselves, and incl riously what they are about the omissions of another, an those indifferent actions, w easily forgotten, must certai

No. 318.] WEDNESDAY

—Non omnia possumus om-With different talents form'd,

"MR. SPECTATOR,

"A CERTAIN vice, which y has not yet been considere deep in the heart of man, t lives the practice of it. Ye that men who have been be the most extreme and fee daring in their aspect. In have passed their time in g keep up, as well as they can and carry a petulant incli ments. Let this serve for a am going to give you of an has not only been amorous, a in general, but also, in spit gray hairs, been from his six sent seventieth in an actual the wife of his friend, and gay old Escalus has wit, fectly well-bred; but, from t of the court when he was in natural tendency to amoro thought it would be an end make no use of a familiari gentleman's house, whose dence exposed his wife to th should take it in their hea office. It is not impossible resent that the husband was of him; and though he ga a passion towards the wife, not see them, or put him to looking them. In the mea we shall call our heroine.) joined in it, as a foundation an opportunity of indulging light of being admired, add with no ill consequence to lady is of a free and diseng good-humour, such as is the those who are innocent, an vice with those who are aban of carriage, and an appare lantry, Escalus had frequen amorous epistles in her way

* This motto is likewise prefix original motto on this paper in fol Rideat, et pulset lasciva decenti Lascivious age might better play

BRITISH ESSAYISTS.

g a thousand
unconcerned,
appiness with above hinted,
f his passion,
and the ambi-
retain in their sion grew too
for his behahe would have t respect, to longer under
it. Such, for ge of Escalus
bella, who regs which had must not hear ou are a gen-
a as a friend;
ilful interpret
owing that a
should have
ple progress of husband; and their usual en-
nce. Isabella,
open assaults,
ld hold out no ne to a crisis.
e further, with ded in the fol-
t Escalus was portunity, the
with an air of
at importance
the repetition
in with an eye st that time of uld boast of a head, with a red the escape
t was matter of e spouse; and Escalus could llowing letter:

ves me a lively
n passions and ve denied, and nt, though we
as you refused gly excite my ure to think of nst the design
irtue began to made an effort
aseness of my of honour. I e most violent
over myself;
cknowledge, I
ht. However,
e a moment's eem I had for y years of ob-
rejoice that this
n of one of the sed your weakinclinations.

able Servant."

"Isabella, with the help of her husband, return the following answer:

"Sir,
"I cannot but account myself a very happy man, in having a man for a lover that can write well, and give so good a turn to a disappointment. Another excellence you have above all other pretenders I have heard of; on occasions where most reasonable men lose all their reason, you have yours most powerful. We have each of us to thank our genius, that the passion of one abated in proportion as that of the other grew violent. Does not yet come into your head to imagine, that I know my compliance was the greatest cruelty I could be guilty of towards you? In return for your long and faithful passion, I must let you know that you are old enough to become a little more gravity; but you will leave me, and coquet it any where else, may your mistress yield.

T.

"ISABELLA."

No. 319.] THURSDAY, MARCH 6, 1711-L

Quo teneam vultus mutantem Protea nodo?

Hos. 1 Ep. 1. 2

Say while they change on thus, what chains can bind These varying forms, this Proteus of the mind?

FRASER

I HAVE endeavoured in the course of my paper to do justice to the age, and have taken care as much as possible to keep myself a neuter between both sexes. I have neither spared the ladies out of complaisance, nor the men out of partiality; notwithstanding the great integrity with which I have acted in this particular, I find myself still with an inclination to favour my own half of the species. Whether it be that the women afford more fruitful field for speculation, or whether I run more in my head than the men, I cannot tell; but I shall set down the charge as it is laid against me in the following letter:

"MR. SPECTATOR,

"I always make one among a company of your females, who peruse your speculations every morning. I am at present commissioned by our weekly assembly to let you know, that we fear you are little inclined to be partial towards your own sex. We must however acknowledge, with all due gratitude, that in some cases you have given us out-venge on the men, and done us justice. We cannot easily have forgiven you several strokes in dissection of the coquette's heart, if you had much about the same time, made a sacrifice to a beau's skull.

"You may, however, Sir, please to remember that not long since you attacked our hoods and modes in such a manner, as to use your own expression, made very many of us ashamed to show heads. We must therefore beg leave to repeat to you, that we are in hopes, if you will please make a due inquiry, the men in all ages would be found to have been little less whimsical in adding that part than ourselves. The different forms of their wigs, together with the various cocks of hats, all flatter us in this opinion.

"I had a humble servant last summer, who first time he declared himself was in a full-bottomed wig: but the day after, to my no small surprise, accosted me in a thin natural one. I received at this our second interview, as a perfect stranger, but was extremely confounded when his speech covered who he was. I resolved, therefore, to fix his face in my memory for the future: but as I was walking in the park the same evening, he appeared to me in one of those wigs that I think you call a night-cap, which had altered him more effectually than before. He afterward played a couple of black riding wigs upon me with the same success, and, in short, assumed a new face almost every day in the first month of his courtship.

"I observed afterward, that the variety of cocks into which he moulded his hat had not a little contributed to his impositions upon me.

"Yet, as if all these ways were not sufficient to distinguish their heads, you must doubtless, Sir, have observed, that great numbers of young fellows have, for several months last past, taken upon them to wear feathers.

"We hope, therefore, that these may with as much justice be called Indian princes, as you have styled a woman in a coloured hood an Indian queen; and that you will in due time take these airy gentlemen into consideration.

"We the more earnestly beg that you would put a stop to this practice, since it has already lost us one of the most agreeable members of our society, who, after having refused several good estates, and two titles, was lured from us last week by a mixed feather.

"I am ordered to present you with the respects of our whole company, and am, Sir,

"Your very humble Servant,

"DORINDA.

"Note. The person wearing the feather, though our friend took him for an officer in the guards, has proved to be an errant linen-draper."*

I am not now at leisure to give my opinion upon the hat and feather: however, to wipe off the present imputation, and gratify my female correspondent, I shall here print a letter which I lately received from a man of mode, who seems to have a very extraordinary genius in his way.

"Sir,

"I presume I need not inform you, that among men of dress it is a common phrase to say, 'Mr. Such-a-one has struck a bold stroke;' by which we understand, that he is the first man who has had courage enough to lead up a fashion. Accordingly, when our tailors take measure of us, they always demand, 'whether we will have a plain suit or strike a bold stroke?' I think I may without vanity say, that I have struck some of the boldest and most successful strokes of any man in Great Britain. I was the first that struck the long pocket about two years since: I was likewise the author of the frosted button, which when I saw the town come readily into, being resolved to strike while the iron was hot, I produced much about the same time the scallop flap, the knotted cravat, and made a fair push for the silver-clocked stocking.

"A few months after I brought up the modish jacket, or the coat with close sleeves. I struck this at first in a plain Doily; but that failing, I struck it a second time in blue camlet, and repeated the stroke in several kinds of cloth, until at last it took effect. There are two or three young fellows at the other end of the town who have always their eye upon me, and answer me stroke for stroke. I was once so unwary as to mention my fancy in relation to a new-fashioned surtout before one of these gentlemen, who with thought, and by stroke.

"I have a considerable innovation ready begun which has succeeded.

"I must further to encourage, my design to the next month.

"I do not tell all the particulars only tell you, speedily appear. I took the I look upon as for these hundred.

"Your most

I have not told on this letter having shown to be acquainted.

No. 320.]

—Non
Non Hymen
Eumenides
Eumenides
Nor Hymen
Nor Juno
But fiends
And furies

"Mr. Sir

"You have the disadvantage lay plots upon you have published been very severe liberty of a life fast and loose perhaps an end dreams, and to a careless com wonders at such but common of men who were design to be in the information women who need a high hand, upon please. As for myself with the upon by them I never saw in Sir, very innocent of which I am give directions boxes, and as many of these were to be married to Upon my taking

* This last paragraph follows.

+ The motto was,

Haec sunt quaestiones How hard the * Only an ensign in the train-bands.—Spect. in folio.

BRITISH ESSAYISTS.

me smiling, eve I was not more so when of late that which he pro- the tradesmen that they had r. Spectator, I am more quisitive upon novelty. My of women of made a com- the title of chelors.' It unthinking ant all man-quisition by y have con- sumers, toy- From these rriages have as the fune- carys. All ection; and n into their who came to ted, and we poor; the resent, very ere; but my ould show me dy who is to e to be mar- sday, six in cannot but a look saucy, has denied ou joy.

DRINNA."

e the more ort from my s of is em- in, as the he has in- id for him, mmissioners son against his friend to about this to retire to, gdom to fly d be subject have their this united take, is to messengers he bachelor y have laid miliarities, ood in him tion, but as quiry, what is well re- old roaring ous fop of es uneasy ve allotted him to act. His brother huntsmen, bottle com- nions, his fraternity of fops, shall be brought in the conspiracy against him. This matter is laid in so barefaced a manner before him as to ha it intimated, Mrs. Such-a-one would make him very proper wife; but, by the force of their cor- spondence, they shall make it (as Mr. Waller- sa of the marriage of the dwarfs) as impracticable have any woman besides her they design him, as would have been in Adam to have refused E. The man named by the commission for Mrs. Suc- a-one shall neither be in fashion, nor dare ever appear in company, should he attempt to eva their determination.

The female sex wholly govern domestic life; as by this means, when they think fit they can sow di- sensions between the dearest friends, nay, mal- father and son irreconcilable enemies, in spite of a the ties of gratitude on one part, and the duty of protection to be paid on the other. The ladies, the inquisition understand this perfectly well; as where love is not a motive to a man's choosing on whom they allot, they can with very much art ins- nuate stories to the disadvantage of his honesty or courage, until the creature is too much dispirited to bear up against a general ill reception, which is every where meets with, and in due time falls into their appointed wedlock for shelter. I have a long letter bearing date the fourth instant, which gives me a large account of the policies of this court, and find there is now before them a very refractory person, who has escaped all their machinations for two years last past; but they have prevented the successive matches which were of his own inclina- tion; the one by a report that his mistress was to be married, and the very day appointed, wedding clothes bought, and all things ready for her being given to another; the second time by insinuating to all his mistress's friends and acquaintance, that he had been false to several other women and the like. The poor man is now reduced to profess his designs to lead a single life; but the inquisition gives out to all his acquaintance, that nothing is intended but the gentleman's own welfare and happiness. When this is urged, he talks still more humbly, and protests he aims only at a life without pain or re- proach; pleasure, honour, or riches, are things for which he has no taste. But notwithstanding all this, and what else he may defend himself with, as that the lady is too old or too young; of a suitable humour, or the quite contrary; and that it is im- possible they can ever do other than wrangle from June to January, every body tells him all this in spleen, and he must have a wife; while all the members of the inquisition are unanimous in a cer- tain woman for him, and they think they all to- gether are better able to judge than he, or any other private person whatsoever.

"Sir,

Temple, March 3, 1711

"Your speculation this day on the subject of idleness has employed me, ever since I read it, in sorrowful reflections on my having loitered away the term (or rather the vacation) of ten years in this place, and unhappily suffered a good chamber and study to lie idle as long. My books (except those I have taken to sleep upon) have been totally neglected, and my Lord Coke and other venerable authors were never so slighted in their lives. I spent most of the day at a neighbouring coffee-house where we have what I may call a lazy club. We generally come in night-gowns with our stockings our heels, and sometimes but one on. Our ion at entrance is a yawn and a stretch, and without more ceremony we take our place at the long-table, where our discourse is, what I fear I could not read, therefore shall not insert. But I beg of you, Sir, I heartily lament this loss of time, and am now resolved (if possible, with double diligence) to retrieve it, being effectually awakened by the arguments of Mr. Slack, out of the senseless story that has so long possessed me. And to illustrate that penitence accompanies my conscience, and constancy my resolutions, I have left my door for a year, and desire you would let my companions know I am not within. I am, with respect,

"Sir,

"Your most obedient Servant,

"N. B."

21.] SATURDAY, MARCH 8, 1711-12.

ec satis est palchra esse poemata, dulcia sunt.

Hon. Arts Poet. ver. 22.

It is not enough a poem's finely writ—
It must affect and captivate the soul.

Those who know how many volumes have been written on the poems of Homer and Virgil will pardon the length of my discourse upon Milton. The Paradise Lost, is looked upon, by the judges, as the greatest production, or at least the best work of genius, in our language, and it deserves to be set before an English reader with all beauty. For this reason, though I have endeavoured to give a general idea of its graces and beauties in my first six papers, I thought myself obliged to bestow one upon every book in particular.

The first three books I have already discussed, and am now entering upon the fourth. I need acquaint my reader that there are multitudes of beauties in this great author, especially in the first four parts of this poem, which I have not time to discuss; it being my intention to point out only such beauties as appear to be the most exquisite, which are not so obvious to ordinary readers. One that has read the critics who have written of the Odyssey, the Iliad, and the Æneid, knows well, that though they agree in their opinions of the great beauties in those poems, they have missed each of them discovered several masterpieces, which have escaped the observation of the rest. In the same manner, I question not but any one who shall treat of this subject after me, may discover several beauties in Milton, which I have not time to notice of. I must likewise observe, that as the latest masters of critical learning differ among themselves, as to some particular points in an author, I have not bound myself scrupulously to any one, which any of them have laid down upon; but have taken the liberty sometimes to follow one, and sometimes with another, and sometimes to differ from all of them, when I have thought that the reason of the thing was on my side. I may conclude the beauties of the fourth book into three heads. In the first are those pictures of life, which we meet with in the description of Paradise, Adam's Bower, &c. In the next machines, which comprehend the speeches and actions of the good and bad angels. In the third the conduct of Adam and Eve, who are the principal actors in the poem.

In the description of Paradise, the poet has observed Aristotle's rule of lavishing all the ornaments on the weak inactive parts of the fable.

which are not supposed to have any great character. As I observe, that the expressions in these descriptions of the poem. I must not be drawn into drawings of gardens and dead pieces of nature, which is a heroic poem, when the length—the description has been faulty, had no more in it, not only as it is an action, but as it is that happiness from which the plan of it is woven upon the short sketch of the poet. Milton's expressions poured forth such a stream of this sort of happiness, that it is endless to point out.

I must not quit this subject, that there is something in the whole poem, allusions are not tallies of habitation. The reason of action, always finds a way. In short, as there is in those poems where the thoughts ought to be in the woods, fields, at that our first parents were in a happy station in any of the reader will give a reason, that their thoughts.

We are in the beginning of the fourth book, the prospect of Eden, and the series of the creation, is from those which he has in hell. The place is adapted to it. He then tells us from whence he speaks that is softened of remorse and self-condemnation confirms himself in it of drawing man into misery. This conflict is a great deal of art, as the sun is very bold and

"O thou that, with so Look'st from thy so
Of this new world;
Hide their diminish
But with no friend
O Sun! to tell thee
That bring to my re
I fell, how glorious

This speech is, I think, to Satan in the whole world proceeds to make our first parents, and they may be best attached to the walls of Paradise; his morant upon the tree in the centre of it, and over the garden; his alignments, which are so beautiful about Adam and Eve, himself into different conversation; are circled about in a surprising great art, to connect which the poet has engaged. The thought of Sa

The remaining part of Eve's speech, in which she gives an account of herself upon her first creation, and the manner in which she was brought to Adam, is, I think, as beautiful a passage as any in Milton, or perhaps in any other poet whatsoever. These passages are all worked off with so much art, that they are capable of pleasing the most delicate reader without offending the most severe.

"That day I oft remember, when from sleep," &c.

A poet of less judgment and invention than this great author, would have found it very difficult to have filled these tender parts of the poem with sentiments proper for a state of innocence; to have described the warmth of love, and the professions of it, without artifice or hyperbole; to have made the man speak the most endearing things without descending from his natural dignity, and the woman receiving them without departing from the modesty of her character; in a word, to adjust the prerogatives of wisdom and beauty, and make each appear to the other in its proper force and loveliness. This mutual subordination of the two sexes is wonderfully kept up in the whole poem, as particularly in the speech of Eve I have before mentioned, and upon the conclusion of it in the following lines:

So spake our general mother, and with eyes Of conjugal attraction unrepaid, And meek surrender, half-embracing bound On our first father; half her swelling breast Naked met his under the flowing gold Of her loose tresses hid; he in delight Both of her beauty and submissive charms Smil'd with superior love.

The poet adds, that the devil turned away with envy at the sight of so much happiness.

We have another view of our first parents in their evening discourses, which is full of pleasing images and sentiments suitable to their condition and characters. The speech of Eve in particular, is dressed up in such a soft and natural turn of words and sentiments, as cannot be sufficiently admired.

I shall close my reflections upon this book with observing the masterly transition which the poet makes to their evening worship in the following lines:

Thus at their shady lodge arriv'd, both stood, Both turned, and under open sky ador'd The God that made both sky, air, earth, and heav'n, Which they beheld, the moon's resplendent globe,
And starry pole: "Thou also mad'st the night, Maker omnipotent, and thou the day," &c.

Most of the modern heroic poets have imitated the ancients, in beginning a speech without promising that the person said thus or thus; but as it is easy to imitate the ancients in the omission of two or three words, it requires judgment to do it in such a manner as they shall not be missed, and that the speech may begin naturally without them. There is a fine instance of this kind out of Homer, in the twenty-third chapter of Longinus.—L.

No. 322.] MONDAY, MARCH 10, 1711-12.

—Ad humani marore gravi deducti et angit.

HOR. Ars Poet. v. 110.

—Grief wrings her soul, and bends it down to earth.

FRANCIS.

It is often said, after a man has heard a story with extraordinary circumstances, "it is a very good one, if it be true;" but as for the following relation, I should be glad were I sure it were false. It is told with such simplicity, and there are so many art-

less touches much from

"Mr.

"Some
same house
whose good make it m
able in my civilities in
He watche me; and I an estate as as gave him
with them,
me more ea
very hard
was no reas
to think the or character
an unequal
tinued his sion of dem
imaginable
to marry m
be so happ become pos
him, and y
what was
was not so carrying w
also my mo
mony. We

ficate to be the servan
we convers house; but
and the int
rupted, ma
rather the lovers, than is to be ob
tation made
press him t relieve my ceal the se
to know we was resolv
in the coun by letter. V and I with and over m
resigned ex
take notice husband I within a fe
and the re
hopes to a man, whos This rustic
the want o
it, and wit
ample fort things, wit
ignorant p passed for strange, as bribed by fit; I happ belonged t
over one o which I al

BRITISH ESSAYISTS.

the nauseous
the papers der so great a feet, and
th the same
swore he fortunate, he tion arising in him, he
that since
writ them
read them
ou my tears
f leave the
when I had
more than en my coun-
in the mis-
same kind.
and at last
ld not then
e could find
to have it.
ld every day
rent, I grew own, where e dead, and ohabitation,
ried in obe-
ins and dis-
nd confront him against ld I talk it
spect for an e means to my preten-
life; but I
that he said,
ghed at the
elf; let him indifference how I, who his own re-
Mr. Spec-
ence in mar-
py piercing my distress
be speedy,
exposed to probably quoted Æn. vi. 448.

and impertinence, than in crimes and immoralities. Offences of this latter kind are not to be dallied with or treated in so ridiculous a manner. In short, my journal only holds up folly to the light, and shows the disagreeableness of such actions as are indifferent in themselves, and blamable only as they proceed from creatures endowed with reason.

My following correspondent, who calls herself Clarinda, is such a journalist as I require. She seems by her letter to be placed in a modish state of indifference between vice and virtue, and to be susceptible of either, were there proper pains taken with her. Had her journal been filled with gallantries, or such occurrences as had shown her wholly divested of her natural innocence, notwithstanding it might have been more pleasing to the generality of readers, I should not have published it: but as it is only the picture of a lazy life, filled with a fashionable kind of gaiety and laziness, I shall set down five days of it, as I have received it from the hand of my fair correspondent.

"DEAR MR. SPECTATOR,

"You having set your readers an exercise in one of your last week's papers, I have performed mine according to your orders, and herewith send it you enclosed. You must know, MR. SPECTATOR, that I am a maiden lady of a good fortune, who have had several good matches offered me for these ten years last past, and have at present warm applications made to me by 'A Very Pretty Fellow.' As I am at my own disposal, I come up to town every winter, and pass my time in it after the manner you will find in the following journal, which I began to write the very day after your SPECTATOR upon that subject."

Tuesday night. Could not go to sleep till one in the morning for thinking of my journal.

Wednesday. From eight till ten. Drank two dishes of chocolate in bed, and fell asleep after them.

From ten to eleven. Ate a slice of bread and butter, drank a dish of bohea, and read the SPECTATOR.

From eleven to one. At my toilette; tried a new hood. Gave orders for Veny to be combed and washed. Mem. I look best in blue.

From one till half an hour after two. Drove to the 'Change. Cheapened a couple of fans.

Till four. At dinner. Mem. Mr. Froth passed by in his new liveries.

From four to six. Dressed; paid a visit to Mr. Lady Blithe and her sister, having before heard they were gone out of town that day.

From six to eleven. At basset. Mem. Never set again upon the ace of diamonds.

Thursday. From eleven at night to eight in the morning. Dreamed that I punted* to Mr. Froth.

From eight to ten. Chocolate. Read two acts in Aurengzebe a-bed.

From ten to eleven. Tea-table. Sent to borrow Lady Faddle's Cupid for Veny. Read the play bills. Received a letter from Mr. Froth. Mem. Locked it up in my strong box.

Rest of the morning. Fontange, the tire-woman, her account of my Lady Blithe's wash. Broke tooth in my little tortoise-shell comb. Sent Frank to know how my Lady Heetic rested after her monkey's leaping out at window. Looked pale. Fontange tells me my glass is not true. Dressed by three.

* A term in the game of basset.

three to four. Dinner cold before I sat four to eleven. Saw company. Mr. Froth's of Milton. His accounts of the Mohocks. cy for a pincushion. Picture in the lid of st-box. Old Lady Faddle promises me her to cut my hair. Lost five guineas at crimp. ve o'clock at night. Went to bed.

19. Eight in the morning. A-bed. Read 1 Mr. Froth's letters. Cupid and Veny. o'clock. Stayed within all day, not at home. 1 ten to twelve. In conference with my maker. Sorted a suit of ribands. Broke e china cup.

1 twelve to one. Shut myself up in my n, practised Lady Betty Modley's skuttle.* in the afternoon. Called for my flowered chief. Worked half a violet leaf in it. Eyes and head out of order. Threw by my work, id over the remaining part of Aurengzebe.

1 three to four. Dined.

1 four to twelve. Changed my mind, dressed, broad, and played at crimp till midnight. Mrs. Spitley at home. Conversation: Mrs. it's necklace false stones. Old Lady Love- ing to be married to a young fellow that is th a groat. Miss Prue gone into the coun- tom Towndley has red hair. Mem. Mrs. whispered in my ear, that she had something ne about Mr. Froth; I am sure it is not true. een twelve and one. Dreamed that Mr. ny at my feet, and called me Indamora.

1 day. Rose at eight o'clock in the morning. en to my toilette.

1 eight to nine. Shifted a patch for half an fore I could determine it. Fixed it above eye-brow.

1 nine to twelve. Drank my tea and dressed. 1 twelve to two. At chapel. A great deal company. Mem. The third air in the new Lady Blithe dressed frightfully.

1 three to four. Dined. Miss Kitty called ic to go to the opera before I was risen from 1 dinner to six. Drank tea. Turned off a 1 for being rude to Veny.

1 o'clock. Went to the opera. I did not see uth till the beginning of the second act. Mr. alked to a gentleman in a black wig: bowed ly in the front box. Mr. Froth and his friend [Nicolini in the third act. Mr. Froth cried "Lucora." Mr. Froth led me to my chair. I e squeezed my hand.

en at night. Went to bed. Melancholy . Methought Nicolini said he was Mr. Froth. ay. Indisposed.

1 day. Eight o'clock. Waked by Miss Kitty. zebe lay upon the chair by me. Kitty re- without book the eight best lines in the play. a our mobst† to the dumb man, according to ment. Told me that my lover's name be- h a G. Mem. The conjuror‡ was within a 1 Mr. Froth's name, &c.

1 in looking back into this journal, I find that a loss to know whether I pass my time well and indeed never thought of considering id it before I perused your speculation upon ject. I scarce find a single action in these five days that I can- e in the working upon t solved to finish the t for Mr. Froth and Ve up so much of my time do upon my journal. off, if you insist upon- bring matters to a con- not let my life run aw "

To resume one of and to confirm Clarin would have her cons would make among po whole life published I shall conclude my pap an uncertain author of lady who seems to hav different from that of O it is so very noble, th pardon me the quotati

ON THE COUNTESS

" Underneath th
Lies the subtle Sidney's sister
Death, ere th
Fair and leas
Time shall th

L.

No. 321.] WEDNES

O curve in terris ai

O souls, in whom no Flat minds, and eve

" MR. SPECTATOR

"THE materials y general history of club your SPECULATIONS, t we all owe the learn such assistances as nia For this reason I coul to you some imperfect (if you will allow them being) who have late nocturnal fraternity, u club, a name borrowed nibals in India, who devouring all the natio dent is styled 'Emper arms are a Turkish cr jesty bears at present ner engraved upon his name, the avowed desi chief; and upon this orders are framed. An all possible hurt to great cement of their cation required in the this principle in its f they take care to drink is, beyond the possibil tions of reason or hun sally, and attack all th walk the streets throug

* The motto prefixed to folio, was taken from Juve

Savits inter
Even bear

* A pace of affected precipitation.

† A huddled economy of dress so called.

‡ Jussieu's Conjurer

st. opportunity that offered of snatching his out of his hand. He seemed desirous of seeing it; but finding her resolved to look into it, begged her, that, if she should happen to see the person, she would not reveal her name. carrying it to the window, she was very much surprised to find there was nothing within but a little looking-glass; on which, after she viewed her own face with more pleasure than ever had done before, she returned the box with a telling him she could not but admire his

It, fancying that this story took, immediately to a dissertation on the usefulness of looking-glasses; and, applying himself to me, asked if there any looking-glasses in the times of the Greeks and Romans; for that he had often observed, in the fables of poets out of those languages, that they generally talked of seeing themselves in fountains, lakes, and rivers. Nay, says he, I remember Mr. Dryden, in his Ovid, tells us of a king-fellow, called Polyphemus, that made use of a looking-glass, and could never dress himself to advantage but in a calm.

My friend Will, to show us the whole compass of turning upon this subject, further informed us, there were still several nations in the world so barbarous as not to have any looking-glasses for themselves; and that he had lately read a voyage into the South Sea, in which it is said that the ladies always dressed their heads over a basin of water. The more particular in my account of Will's last night's lecture on these natural mirrors, as it will bear some relation to the following letter, I received the day before.

SIR,

I have read your last Saturday's observations on the fourth book of Milton with great satisfaction, and am particularly pleased with the hidden moral you have taken notice of in several parts of the poem. The design of this letter is to desire your thoughts, whether there may not also be some allusion couched under that place in the same book, where the poet lets us know, that the first woman immediately after her creation ran to a looking-glass, and became so enamoured of her own face, that she had never removed to view any of the other beauties of nature, had she not been led off to a man? I think fit to set down the whole passage from your paper, so that your readers will be able to judge for themselves, and the quotation will not a little contribute to filling up of your paper.

Your humble Servant,

"R. T."

The last consideration urged by my querist is so strong, that I cannot forbear closing with it. The allusion he alludes to is part of Eve's speech to Adam, and one of the most beautiful passages in the whole poem.

That day I oft remember, when from sleep I first awak'd, and found myself repos'd Under a shade of flow'rs, much wond'ring where and what I was, whence thither brought, and how. Not distant far from thence a murmuring sound Of waters issu'd from a cave, and spread In a liquid plain; and stood unmov'd, Pure as th' expanse of heaven: I thither went With unexperient thought, and laid me down On the green bank, to look into the clear smooth lake, that to me seem'd another sky. As I bent down to look, just opposite My face within the wat'ry gleam appear'd.

Bending to look
It started back;
Pleas'd it return'd
Of sympathy and Mine eyes till now
Had not a voice
What there thou
With thee it came
And I will bring Thy coming and Whose image thou Inseparably thine
Multitudes like thee Mother of human
But follow straight Till I espie'd thee
Under a plain
Less winning soft
Than that smooth Thou following
Whom fly'st thou
His flesh, his bone
Out of my side Substantial life, to Henceforth an Part of my soul,
My other half?
Seiz'd mine; I yield
How beauty is ex
And wisdom, which
So spake our ge

X.

No. 326.] FRIDAY

Incham Danaen
Robustus fores Tristes exaltat, in Nocturnis ab no Si non

Of watchful dogs
Right well one ha
When in a tower
By nighty bars o
Although by mort
With all their m
Had not

Be to her faults a Be to her virtues
And clap your pa

"MR. SPECTATOR

"YOUR correspondent hunters, and your have given me encouragement of my case, by which I complained of is a country.

"I am a country six thousand a year. very fine park and account I have been and fops, that for the enjoyed a moment's in a state of war; a constant watch in my commanded a town country. I have in park; having for the four keepers, who a quarter-staff beyond try. And for the band of pensioner-milition whom I keep derbusses always about private places about given frequent notice it is, that in spite of and then have a same (as I think you ce

BRITISH ESSAYISTS.

to a ball. I mistress on mon practice re to remove e house, and ut short my I durst not election, for being off my of you is, to t, and upon friends, and e our daugh- that some would move r preserving

Servant."
6, 1711-12.

door every looks up at eal towards and looks ng for. The , that, if he the parlour and give him

ervant,
COMFIT.
ve him time does."

ay, and by l causes of ar that my f something appeared to ar a resem- er. I have e had four e fifth. The g what she with them, the charges her fancy wo, as not ntibles and ges and fur- trouble you with child ne day just ng a rela- present of e and that e a week ow to it of than lose the furni- changed or he frightful ell, the up- saved that d fixed her uch china these also ther to an Indian pagod. Hitherto I found her demands m upon every concession; and had she gone on, I h been ruined; but by good fortune, with her thin which was Peggy, the height of her imaginatio came down to the corner of a venison-pasty, an brought her once even upon her knees to gnaw e the ears of a pig from the spit. The gratification of her palate were easily preferred to those of h vanity: and sometimes a partridge, or a quail, or wheat-ear, or the pestle of a lark, were cheerfull purchased; nay, I could be contented though I was to feed her with green-peas in April, or cherries i May. But with the babe she now goes, she i turned girl again, and fallen to eating of chalk, pntending it will make the child's skin white; an nothing will serve her but I must bear her company to prevent its having a shade of my brown. In this however, I have ventured to deny her. No longe ago than yesterday, as we were coming to town, sh saw a parcel of crows, so heartily at breakfast on a piece of horse-flesh, that she had an invincible d sire to partake with them, and (to my infinite su prise) begged the coachman to cut her off a slice, a if it were for himself, which the fellow did; and a soon as she came home, she fell to it with such a appetite, that she seemed rather to devour than e it. What her next sally will be I cannot guess but, in the meantime, my request to you is, that i there be any way to come at these wild unaccount able roivings of imagination by reason and argument you'd speedily afford us your assistance. This ex ceeds the grievance of pin-money; and I thiak i every settlement there ought to be a clause inserted that the father should be answerable for the lounping of his daughter. But I shall impatiently expect your thoughts in this matter, and am,

"Sir, your most obliged and

"Most faithful humble Servant,
"T. B.

"Let me know whether you think the next chick will love horses as much as Molly does chins wate."—T.

No. 327.] SATURDAY, MARCH 15, 1711-12.

—Major rerum mibi nascitur ordo.—VIRG. Æn. vii. 48.
A large scene of action is display'd.—DAVIDEN

We were told in the foregoing book, how the evil spirit practised upon Eve as she lay asleep, in order to inspire her with thoughts of vanity, pride, and ambition. The author who shows a wonderful art throughout his whole poem, for preparing the reader for the several occurrences that arise in it, founds upon the above-mentioned circumstance, the first part of the fifth book. Adam, upon his awaking, finds Eve still asleep, with an unusual discomposure in her looks. The posture in which he regards her is described with a tenderness not to be expressed, as the whisper with which he awakens her is the softest that ever was conveyed to a lover's ear.

His wonder was, to find awaken'd Eve With tresses discompos'd, and glowing cheek, As through unquiet rest: he, on his side Lemning half-raised, with looks of cordial love Hung over her enamour'd, and beheld Beauty, which, whether waking or asleep, Shot forth peculiar graces: Lo! with voice Mild as when Zephyrus on Flora breathes, Her hand soft touching, whisper'd thus: "Awake, My fairest, my espous'd, my latest found, &c Here's a last best gift, my ever new delight!
Awake: the morning shines, and the fresh field Calls us; we lose the prime, to mark how spring Our tender plants, how blows the citron grove,

What drops of myrrh, and what the balmy reed, How nature paints her colours, how the bee Sits on the bloom extracting liquid sweet."

Such whispering wak'd her, but with startled eye On Adam, whom embracing, thus she spake:
"O sole, in whom my thoughts find all repose, My glory, my perfection! glad I see Thy face, and morn return'd—"

I cannot but take notice, that Milton, in the conferences between Adam and Eve, had his eye very much upon the book of Canticles, in which there is a noble spirit of eastern poetry, and very often not unlike what we meet with in Homer, who is generally placed near the age of Solomon. I think here is no question but the poet in the preceding speech remembered those two passages which are spoken on the like occasion, and filled with the same pleasing images of nature.

"My beloved spake, and said unto me, Rise up, my love, my fair one, and come away! for, lo! the winter is past, the rain is over and gone, the flowers appear on the earth, the time of the singing of birds is come, and the voice of the turtle is heard in our ears. The fig-tree putteth forth her green figs, and the vines with the tender grapes give a good smell. Arise, my love, my fair one, and come away!"

"Come, my beloved! let us go forth into the field, let us get up early into the vineyards, let us see whether the vine flourish, whether the tender grapes appear, and the pomegranates bud forth."

His preferring the garden of Eden to that

Where the sapient king Held dalliance with his fair Egyptian spouse, shows that the poet had this delightful scene in his mind.

Eve's dream is full of those high conceits engendering pride, which, we are told, the devil endeavoured to instil into her. Of this kind is that part of it where she fancies herself awakened by Adam in the following beautiful lines:

"Why sleep'st thou, Eve? Now is the pleasant time, The cool, the silent, save where silence yields To the night-warbling bird, that now awake Tunes sweetest his love-labour'd song: now reigns Full-orb'd the moon, and with more pleasing light Shadows sets off the face of things. In vain, If none regard. Heav'n wakes with all his eyes, When to behold but thee, nature's desire,
In whose sight all things joy, with ravishment, Attracted by thy beauty still to gaze!"

An injudicious poet would have made Adam talk through the whole work in such sentiments as these: but flattery and falsehood are not the courtship of Milton's Adam, and could not be heard by Eve in her state of innocence, excepting only in a dream produced on purpose to taint her imagination. Other vain sentiments of the same kind, in this relation of her dream, will be obvious to every reader. Though the catastrophe of the poem is finely presaged on his occasion, the particulars of it are so artfully shadowed, that they do not anticipate the story which follows in the ninth book. I shall only add, that though the vision itself is founded upon truth, the circumstances of it are full of that wildness and inconsistency which are natural to a dream. Adam, conformable to his superior character for wisdom, instructs and comforts Eve upon this occasion:

So cheer'd he his fair spouse, and she was cheer'd, But silently a gentle tear let fall From either eye, and wip'd them with her hair; Two other precious drops, that ready stood Each in their crystal sluice, he, ere they fell, Kiss'd, as the gracious signs of sweet remorse And pious awe, that fear'd to have offended.

The morning of those psalms of praise and praise angels, but upon inanimate creatures their common fill the mind and awaken the natural to devotion parts of nature ship, it was in the first parents, w minds, and has of Providence, with those many matter to the de not remark that runs through that resolution.

Having already are assigned to to the descriptive phael. His de his flight throo imagined. As with circumstan ing, he describe such a manner, proach of the a

—Till
Of heav'n arr
On golden hin
Divine, the so

The poet has three passages in which, speaking had made twenty which, upon occ assembly of the use for them, re Scaliger has ra point, as M. I I will not prete ticular of Hom of the probable of Milton's gat the tripods, s mentioned it, b passage in the heaven that ha selves, or stood whom they acc

There is no stance in his book he descri living wheels, vision:—

—Forth
The chariot o Flashing thic
Itself instinet

I question who are for vin in Homer, by s have been very confronting Va

* This epithet, tially included in distinction from doctrine establish This is not noted serious truth.

BRITISH ESSAYISTS.

some pro-
do myself to such cru-
encouraged.
see what I any more of ation I show

, 1711-12.

day, I took nerly taken,
last letter:
very same;
part of it
t will insert
iel Bullock
which you
I have other sent you en-
y own hand a Yorkshire
ary, and an own by the other coun-
followed the ly informed
comedian, is ot Mr. Wil-
body of the
As neither tice of it, I ire that the re recovered

Reader."

garet Clark.

loving Mrs.
excuse pre-
to enjoy the romely body
y treacle or op, I am so
e keep close
nt. And I
sweet self,
may match
away; and n yard land
of land* in a year as a ers and sis-
ood house-
and pewter,
house be all go hard
f you shall pon you as hay-harvest
ood matches (be with her)
entlewoman, sowing and
and I can r, I shall be years come
. If I could
d have sent

rs 30 acres of one on purpose, and some trifles or other for a use of my love; but I hope there is nothing lost for this neither. So, hoping you will take this letter in good part, and answer it with what care and speed you can I rest and remain

"Yours, if my own,

"Sweepston, Leicestershire.

"MR. GARRIET BULLOCK,

"NOW MY FATHER IS DEAD

"When the coal carts come, I shall send oftener and may come in one of them myself." *

"For Sir William to go to london at westminster to member a parliament.

"SIR,

"William, i hope that you are well. i write to let you know that i am in trouble about a lady your nease; and i do desire that you will be my friend; for when i did com to see her at your hall i was mighty Abused. i would fain a see you a topecliff, and thay would not let me go to you; bu i desire that you will be our friends, for it is no dishonour neither for you nor she, for God did make u
all. i wish that i might see you, for they say tha you are a good man; and many doth wonder at it but madam norton is abused and coated two i believe. i night a had many a lady, but I can has none but her with a good consorts, for there is God that know our hearts. if you and madam norton will come to York, there i shall meet you; i God be willing, and if you be pleased. so be no angterie till you know the trutes of things.

"I give my to me lady, as

"George Nelson.

to Mr. Aysenby, and to madam norton, March the 19th, 1706."

"This is for madam mary norton disforth Lady she went to York.

"Madam Mary. Deare loving sweet lady, hope you are well. Do not go to london, for the will put you in the nunnery; and heed not Mr Lucy what she saith to you, for she will ly and co-
you. go from to another place, and we will go wed so with speed. mind what i write to you, for they gate you to london they will keep you there and so let us gate wed, and we will both go. so you go to london, you ruceing yourself. so heed n what none of them saith to you: let us gate we and we shall lie to gader any time. i will do an thing for you to my poore. i hope the devil wi faile them all, for a hellish company there be. for their cursed trick and mischiefus ways good be bless and deliver both you and me.

"I think to be at York the 24 day."

"This is for madam mary norton to go to london for lady that belongs to dishforth.

"Madam Mary, i hope you are well. i am soon that you went away from York. deare loving sweet lady, i writt to let you know that i do remain full full; and if can let me know where i can meet you i will wed you, and I will do any thing to my power for you are a good woman, and will be a loving Misteris. i am in troubel for you, so if you will come to york i will wed you. so with speed come and I will have none but you. so, sweet love, be-not what to say to me, and with speed come; be-not what none of them say to you; your Maid make you believe ought.

* See No. 324, and note, where this letter is given in effectively, and supplied otherwise.

"So deare love think of Mr. George Nilson with ed; i sent 2 or 3 letters before.

"I gave misteris elcock some nots, and thay put in pruson all the night for me pains, and non w wheat i was, and I did gat cold.

"But it is for mrs. Lucy to go a good way from me, for in yorke and round about she is known; writ any more her deeds, the same will tell hor al is black within, hor corkis stinks of hell.

" March 19th, 1706."*

No. 329.] TUESDAY, MARCH 18, 1711-12

Ire tamen restat, Numa quo devenit et Ancus.

Hon. 1 Ep. vi. 27.

With Ancus, and with Numa, kings of Rome,

We must descend into the silent tomb.

My friend Sir Roger de Coverley told me to other night, that he had been reading my paper upon Westminster-abbey, in which, says he, there are a great many ingenious fancies. He told me at the same time, that he observed, I had promised another paper upon the tombs, and that he should be glad to go and see them with me, not having visited them since he had read history. I could not imagine at first how this came into the knight's head, till I recollected that he had been busy all last summer upon Baker's Chronicle, which he has quoted several times in his disputes with Sir Andrew Freeport since his last coming to town. Accordingly I promised to call upon him the next morning, that we might go together to the abbey.

I found the knight under the butler's hands, who always shaves him. He was no sooner dressed, than he called for a glass of the widow Truby's water, which he told me he always drank before he went abroad. He recommended me a dram of it at the same time, with so much heartiness, that I could not forbear drinking it. As soon as I had got it down, I found it very unpalatable; upon which the knight, observing that I had made several wry faces, told me that he knew I should not like it at first, but that it was the best thing in the world against the stone or gravel.

I could have wished indeed that he had acquainted me with the virtues of it sooner; but it was too late to complain, and I knew what he had said was out of good-will. Sir Roger told me further, that he looked upon it to be very good for a man whilst he stayed in town, to keep off infection, and that he got together a quantity of it upon the last news of the sickness being at Dantzick: when

of a sudden the who stood behind coach, and the drove it.

He then rewater, telling who did more carries in the that grew with buted her water to which the kn jointure, and have it a match
says Sir Roger,
haps I could not

His discourse him he had call after having call
the coachman fellow's telling turned to me, to and went in with

We had not out his head, c box, and, upon
asked him if what this would
at any good to best Virginia.
remaining part
at the west end

As we went u pointed at the ments, and cried him!" Passing he flung his h Cloudesly Show
stood before Bu self again after great man! he great man! I sh had not been a

We were im chapel on the ri self at our histo
every thing he gave us of the l rocco's head. A very well please
his knees; and was conducted martyr to good of a needle. U she was a maid
knight was ver
family; and, af some time, "I w Baker has said

We were the chairs, where m
the stone under was brought fr
pillar, sat himse like the figure o terpreter, what had ever been in returning him a his honour woul
Sir Roger a little but our guide n knight soon reco
pered in my ear,

* Is a MS. written by Dr. Birch, now before the annotator, is said, that an original number of the Spectator in folio was thoroughly at the time of its republication in volumes, on the somerance of a family who conceived themselves injured its appearance in print. It was, most probably, this very part.

The following short letter, with the desire annexed to it, are joined to No. 320 in the original publication of the Spectator folio: as they evidently relate to this paper which was appeared very soon after its original date, they are here repeated for the first time.

"MR. SPECTATOR,

March 18, 1711-12.

"The attention you shewed yesterday (March 17) would be pardonable, had you provided better for the two remittances of your paper, and placed in the one the letter R;
the other.

Nescio quid meditans sugarum et totus in illis.

A word to the wise.

"I am your humble Servant,

"T. TRUBB."

According to the emendation of the above correspondent, reader is desired, in the paper of the 17th, to read R, for T.

BRITISH ESSAYISTS.

go hard but he would
e or t'other of them.
laid his hand upon
nd leaning upon the e history of the Black Sir Richard Baker's
as one of the greatest English throne.

ward the Confessor's acquainted us, that on the evil: and after-on which he shook his ne reading in the ca-

d to that monument of our English kings
ing us to know, that ten silver, had been e: "Some whig, I'll
; "you ought to lock ill carry off the body

y the Fifth and Queen reat opportunities of
o Sir Richard Baker, ith some surprise, had whose monuments he

not but be pleased to honest passion for the a respectful gratitude

nevolence of my good towards every one he ry kind to our inter-
as an extraordinary ook him by the hand
e should be very glad Norfolk-buildings, and n more at leisure.—L.

MARCH 19, 1711-12.

entia—Juv. Sat. xiv. 48.
ace is due.

ten by two very consi-nder twenty years of ts of the necessity of many incidents which

nat, in the course of several parts of human other fall upon a subnot, I take the liberty I mean is, the patron-such as are able to them into the world.
a youth of merit lanquity when his circum-
riot and excess when cannot make myself
adding you a history of you to insert in your I have of expressing
bligations imaginable.
nt of the city of Lon-reduced from a very very narrow circumstances, in comparison to that of his former ance. This took away the vigour of his mi all manner of attention to a fortune which thought desperate; insomuch that he died a will, having before buried my mother, midst of his other misfortunes. I was sixteen of age when I lost my father; and an estate a year came into my possession, without a guardian to instruct me in the management joyment of it. The natural consequence was (though I wanted no director, and a fellows who found me out for a smart young man, and led me into all the debaucheries I was capable), that my companions and I well be supplied without running into debt, did very frankly, till I was arrested, and with a guard strong enough for the most d assassin, to a bailiff's house, where I lay fo surrounded with very merry, but not very ag company. As soon as I had extricated mys this shameful confinement, I reflected upon so much horror, that I deserted all my old a ance, and took chambers in an inn of court resolution to study the law with all possible tion. I trifled away a whole year in looking thousand intricacies, without a friend to ap any case of doubt; so that I only lived then men, as little children are sent to school bel are capable of improvement, only to be outo way. In the midst of this state of suspe knowing how to dispose of myself, I was re by a relation of mine; who, upon observing inclination in me, used me with great fa and carried me to his seat in the country.

came there he introduced me to all the go pany in the county; and the great obligatio to him for this kind notice, and residence ever since, has made so strong an impress me, that he has an authority of a father founded upon the love of a brother. I hav study of books, a good stable of horses at my command; and, though I am not n eighteen years of age, familiar converse on and a strong inclination to exert myself have had an effect upon me, that makes m able wherever I go. Thus, Mr. Spectator gentleman's favour and patronage, it is fault if I am not wiser and richer every d I speak this as well by subscribing the initi of my name to thank him, as to incite oth imitation of his virtue. It would be a wor to show what great charities are to be done expense, and how many noble actions are of inadvertency, in persons capable of pe them, if they were put in mind of it. If man of figure in a county would make his pattern for sobriety, good sense, and breed would kindly endeavour to influence the and growing prospects of the younger gent him, I am apt to believe it would save him deal of stale beer on a public occasion, an him the leader of his country from their to him, instead of being a slave to their r tumults, in order to be made their repres The same thing might be recommended to have made any progress in any parts of kn or arrived at any degree in a profession; ot gain preferments and fortunes from their but I have, I hope, received from mine go and virtues. I repeat to you, Sir, my re print this, in return for all the evil a helples shall ever escape, and all the good he shall feet both which are wholly owing to this man's favour to,

"Sir, Your most obedient Servant,
"S. P."

R. SPECTATOR,

I am a lad of about fourteen. I find a mighty deal in learning. I have been at the Latin school for years. I don't know I ever played truant, neglected any task my master set me in my school, or what I read in school as I go home at night, and so intently, that I have often of a mile out of my way, not minding whither I go.

Our maid tells me she often hears me talk in my sleep, and I dream two or three nights that I am reading Juvenal and Homer. My father seems as well pleased with my performances as the boys in the same class. I think, if I know my mind, I would choose rather to be a scholar than a prince without learning. I have a very good, wise father; but though very rich, yet so near, that he thinks much of the charges of education. He often tells me he believes my father will ruin him; that I cost him God knows many books.

I tremble to tell him I want one, and need to keep my pocket-money, and lay it out on books now and then, that he don't know of. I ordered my master to buy no more books but says he will buy them himself. I asked Horace the other day, and he told me in a jest he did not believe I was fit for it, but my master had a mind to make him think I was a great way in my learning. I am somewhat behind other boys in getting the lessons my master gives orders for. All the boys in school, but I, have the classic authors in use, gilt and lettered on the back. My father is reckoning up how long I have been at school, and tells me he fears I do little good. My father's carriage so discourages me, that he makes me dull and melancholy. My master wonders the matter with me; I am afraid to tell him he is a man that likes to encourage learning.

My father would be apt to chide my father, and, not his temper, may make him worse. Sir, if you have any love for learning, I beg you would give some instructions in this case, and persuade my father to encourage their children when they find them diligent and desirous of learning. I have heard my parents say, they would do any thing for their children, if they would but mind their learning. I should be glad to be in their place. Dear Sir, excuse my boldness. If you will but consider and advise, I will pray for your prosperity as long as I live.

"Your humble Servant,
"JAMES DISCIPULUS."

London, March 2, 1711.

[L.] THURSDAY, MARCH 20, 1711-12.

— Stolidam præbet tibi vellere barbam.—

PARS. SAT. II. 28.

to cut his foolish beard for thee to pluck.

When I was last with my friend Sir Roger in the nether-abbey, I observed that he stood longer before the bust of a venerable old man, than I was at a loss to guess the reason of it; after some time, he pointed to the figure, and said if I did not think that our forefathers were much wiser in their beards than we do without? "For my part," says he, "when I am walking in my gallery, and I see the busts of my ancestors, who many of my age, I cannot forbear to think of the old patriarchs, and, at myself as an idle smooch to see your Abrahams and Jacobes, as we have them, with their beards below their girdles." The knight adds, "I have seen beards in one of my pictures, store human faces to be seen upon a month's warning, lead up the fashion him."

I smiled at my friend's part, could not forbear to say, "The phosias our faces have upon."

The beard, conformable to Sir Roger, was for many years a type of wisdom. Lucius, the philosophers of his time, one another in beards, and a man who stood for a philosopher, was unqualified for it by the beard.

Ælian, in his account of the beard, a critic, who wrote against the beard, thought himself wiser than the beard, tells us that this beard, that hung down upon the face, his head, which he added, regarding, it seems, the beard, suckers, which, if they were, might have drawn away the chin, and by that means the beard.

I have read somewhere, that I refused to accept an edition of the beard, were presented to him, effigies before the book.

We see by these instances, that the beard has formerly paid to be the beard, not then allowed to make the faces of the learned, with the beard of late years.

Accordingly several of the beard, extremely jealous of the beard, that they seemed to honour principally in the beard, were wonderfully tender of the beard. Quevedo, in his third book, has carried the humour of the beard, that one of his valets, having received sentence by a couple of evil spirits, opening to disorder his beard, to recompose them with the beard, before they could get him the beard.

If we look into the beard, we shall find that the beard, shall find that the beard, heptarchy, but was the beard, the Norman line. It is to time, in several reigns. The last effort it made, was Queen Mary's days, as if he pleases to persecute and Bishop Gardiner; think it may be questioned, has not induced our beard, the beards of these two beard, tural dimensions, in our beard, more terrible.

I find but few beards in the reign of King James. During the civil war

BRITISH ESSAYISTS.

passed over
ed Hudibras,
tted to poste-

to ne among us is a subject

ng discussed
I keep by me introducing

uxury of the
sive fashion.
uld soon pro-
e lightest co-
A fair beard ger seems to nty guineas.
lapius would
e in the ex-

ladies would ke the air on hats and fea-
reason why
d have their

se in another

21 1712.

III. 29
—CREECH

ay last, you
orthy society
have partici-
ances of the
he tumblers:
hen a perfect
very easily es of it, the t of dancing-
m for half a savages, as upon whom hip out their
the horizon,
round about
piece of con-
without doubt
ward the ope-
rds whom he ns his sword
ereon school-
y natural to bout to some elf the same ront. After and, and the iently, he is e attendants,
hat purpose,
had from a friend of mine, who has lately been under that cipline. He tells me he had the honour to dance before the emperor himself, not without the applau and acclamations both of his imperial majesty at the whole ring; though I dare say, neither I, or any of his acquaintance, ever dreamt he would ha merited any reputation by his activity.

"I can assure you, Mr. Spectator, I was ve near being qualified to have given you a faith and painful account of this walking bagnio, if may so call it, myself. Going the other night alo Fleet-street, and having, out of curiosity, just e tered into discourse with a wandering female w was travelling the same way, a couple of fellows a vanced towards us, drew their swords, and cried o to each other, 'A sweat! a sweat!' Whereupon suspecting they were some of the ringleaders of t bagnio, I also drew my sword, and demanded a p ley; but finding none would be granted me, a perceiving others behind them filing off with gr diligence to take me in flank, I began to sweat fear of being forced to it: but very luckily betaki myself to a pair of heels, which I had good reas to believe would do me justice, I instantly got po session of a very snug corner in a neighbourin alley that lay in my rear; which post I maintai for above half an hour with great firmness and r solution, though not letting this success so far ove come me as to make me unmindful of the circums pection that was necessary to be observed upon m advancing again towards the street; by which pr udence and good management I made a handson and orderly retreat, having suffered no other da mage in this action than the loss of my baggage and the dislocation of one of my shoe heels, w last I am just now informed, is in a fair way of g covery. These sweaters, by what I can learn fro my friend, and by as near a view as I was able take of them myself, seem to me to have at presen but a rude kind of discipline amongst them. It probable, if you would take a little pains with the they might be brought into better order. But I leave this to your own discretion; and will onl add, that if you think it worth while to insert th by way of caution to those who have a mind to p serve their skins whole from this sort of cuppin and tell them at the same time the hazard of tes ing with night-walkers, you will perhaps obli others, as well as

"Your very humble Servant,

"JACK LIGHTFOOT.

"P. S. My friend will have me acquaint yo that though he would not willingly detract fro the merit of that extraordinary strokesman, M Sprightly, yet it is his real opinion, that some those fellows who are employed as rubbers to th new-fashioned bagnio, have struck as bold strok as ever he did in his life.

"I had sent this four-and-twenty hours since I had not had the misfortune of being in a gre doubt about the orthography of the word bagnio.
consulted several dictionaries, but found no relief at last having recourse both to the bagnio in New gate-street, and to that in Chancery-lane, and ad ing the original manuscripts upon the sign-posts each to agree literally with my own spelling, I m turned home full of satisfaction, in order to dra this epistle."

"MR. SPECTATOR,

"As you have taken most of the circumstances human life into your consideration, we the under-written thought it not improper for us also to represent to you our condition. We are three ladies who live in the country, and the greatest improvement we make is by reading. We have taken a small journal of our lives, and find it extremely opposite to your last Tuesday's speculation. We are by seven, and pass the beginning of each day in devotion, and looking into those affairs that fall within the occurrences of a retired life; in the afternoon we sometimes enjoy the good company of some friend or neighbour, or else work or read: at night we retire to our chambers, and take leave of each other for the whole night at ten o'clock. We take particular care never to be sick of a Sunday. Mr. Spectator, we are all very good maids, but ambitious of characters which we think more laudable, that of being very good wives. If any of your correspondents inquire for a spouse for an honest country gentleman, whose estate is not dipped, and wants a wife that can save half his revenue, and yet make a better figure than any of his neighbours of the same estate, with finer-bred women, you shall have farther notice from,

"Sir, your courteous Readers,

"MARTHA BUSIE,

"DEBORAH THRIFTY,

"ALICE EARLY."

[a. 333.] SATURDAY, MARCH 22, 1711-12.

—Vocal in certaminis divos.—VIRG

He calls embalmed deities to arms.

We are now entering upon the sixth book of Paradise Lost, in which the poet describes the battle of the angels; having raised his reader's expectation, and prepared him for it by several passages in the preceding books. I omitted quoting these passages in my observations on the former books, having purposely reserved them for the opening of this, the subject of which gave occasion to them. The author's imagination was so inflamed with this great scene of action, that wherever he speaks of it, he rises, if possible, above himself. Thus, where he mentions Satan in the beginning of the poem:

—Him the Almighty Power Hood'd heading flaming from th' ethereal sky, With hideous ruin and combustion down To bottomless perdition, there to dwell In adamant chain and penal fire, Who durst defy th' Omnipotent to arms.

We have likewise several noble hints of it in the eternal conference,

O prince! O chief of many-throned powers, That led th' embattled seraphim to war,
Too well I see, and rue the dire event,
That with sad overthrow and foul defeat Hath lost us heav'n; and all this mighty host In horrible destruction laid thus low.
But see! the angry victor has recall'd His ministers of vengeance and pursuit Back to the gates of heav'n. The sulphurous hail Shot after us in storm, o'erblown, hath laid The fiery surge, that from the precipice Of heav'n receiv'd us falling: and the thunder, Wing'd with red lightning, and impetuous rage, Perhaps has spent his shafts, and ceases now To bellow through the vast and boundless deep.

There are several other very sublime images on the same subject in the first book, as also in the

—What when we fled amain, pursued and struck With heav'n's afflicting thunder, and besought The deep to shelter us: this hell then seem'd A refuge from those wounds.

SPECTATOR—Nos. 49 & 50.

In short, the
this battle, but terror as are su others I cannot the Power, wh chaos, speaks i

Thus Satan
With fall'n Answer'd, "I
That night
Made head
I saw and h Fled not in
With ruin u
Confusion w
Pour'd out b Pursuing"

It required g strength of ima circumstances a
of the reader;
of judgment, to pear light or tri
are surprised to another, and im of the Iliad. M with the same b
signs of wrath censed. The fir a cope of fire, o able burning dar
from either hos
terrible, as it is which seem to m duce a kind of angels. This is f tains and prom Messiah comes f terror. The po roarings of his nings, and the scribed with the u

There is noth
gagement which able enough to t
ceive of a fight b

The second day imagination whic
for such a descrip poets, and of Ho a very bold thou first use of artill
such a pernicious
have proceeded fr
probably into the along described Maker. Such en could have made
that in all poetry, presented as the a
up the hills was u as the former. V for such an incid
war, which we me What still made t for the poet's use men, that the fab
so great a noise i sublimest descript legory founded u
between the good

It may, perhaps what judgment Mi

with the sword of Turnus which came from a mortal hand. As the metal in this place is divine, so by the way we may observe, that the best swing on a man was favoured by heaven such an allegorical weapon is very conformable to the old eastern way of thinking. Not only Homer has made use of it, but we find the Jewish hero in the Book of Maccabees, who fought the battles of the chosen people with so much glory and success, receiving in his dream a sword from the hand of the prophet Jeremiah. The following passage, where Satan is described as wounded by the sword of Michael, is no imitation of Homer.

The quivering web of continents went Thus wither'd, and the ethereal lance clasp'd, Not only rent, but all from the centre As if a mortal stroke, amidst a mass of Satan's flesh, as celestial spirits may have it,
And all his sinews stand ———

Homer tells in the same manner, that upon Diomedes wounding the gods, there flowed from the wound an ether, or pure kind of blood, which was more precious than mortal fluids; and that, though the wound was extremely great, the wound soon came to itself, in those beings who are vested with immortality.

It is striking to find Milton in his description of the wound which Diomedes had received, had his eyes turned on the Greek who upon his being wounded is represented as retiring out of the fight, and is fighting an enemy milder than that of a whole army when it begins the charge. Homer tells, that the Greeks and Trojans, who were engaged in a general battle, were terrified on each side with the flowing of this woundful liberty. The reader will easily observe how Milton has kept all the horror of the image, without running into the ridiculous of it.

———Where the might of combat fought, And victory or ruin pend on the deep array O, Meville, I have known thee beaming bold A star of heaven, who, to the stars, thou beav'st Thou art not from the Heav'n, O'er of heav'n Retained his tongue blasphemous, but upon Dropt as a comet from the sky, with scathed dart A line of light, and flared below it ———

Milton has likewise raised his description in this book with many images taken out of the poetical parts of Scripture. The Messiah's chariot, as I have before taken notice, is formed upon a vision of Ezekiel, who, as Grævus observes, has very much in him of Homer's spirit in the poetical parts of his prophecy.

The following lines in that glorious compass which is given the Messiah to extirpate the host of rebel angels, is drawn from a sublime passage in the Psalms.

Go then, thou mightiest, on thy Father's right Thou shalt be, and thou shalt ride the rage of who is That have sworn, there, to a forth all my war, My bow, my hammer, my staff, and my Girded, and were on my passed thigh.

The reader will easily discover many other strokes of the same nature.

There is no question but Milton had heard of the combat with the light of the gods in Homer before he entered upon this engagement of the long list. Homer there gives us a scene of men, heroes, and gods, mixed together in battle. He minutely describes the contending armies, and lifts up his voice in such a manner, that it is heard distinct amidst all the shouts and confusion of the fight. Jupiter at the same time thunders over their heads

As Neptune raises such a tempest, that the whole old of battle, and all the tops of the mountains, shake about them. The poet tells us, that Pluto himself, whose habitation was in the very centre of the earth, was so affrighted at the shock, that he apt from his throne. Homer afterward describes Vulcan as pouring down a storm of fire upon the river Xanthus, and Minerva as throwing a rock at Ixion; who, he tells us, covered seven acres in his fall.

As Homer has introduced into his battle of the gods every thing that is great and terrible in nature, Milton has filled his fight of good and bad angels with all the like circumstances of horror. He shews of armies, the rattling of brazen chariots, the hurling of rocks and mountains, the earthquake, the fire, the thunder, are all of them employed to fit up the reader's imagination, and give him a suitable idea of so great an action. With what art as the poet represented the whole body of the earth trembling, even before it was created!

All heav'n resounded; and had earth been then,
All earth had to its centre shook.——

In how sublime and just a manner does he afterward describe the whole heaven shaking under the wheels of the Messiah's chariot, with that exception to the throne of God!

Under his burning wheels
The stedfast empyrean shook throughout, All but the throne itself of God.——

Notwithstanding the Messiah appears clothed with so much terror and majesty, the poet has still found means to make his readers conceive an idea of him beyond what he himself is able to describe:

Yet half his strength he put not forth, but cherk'd His thunder in mid volley: for he meant Not to destroy, but root them out of heaven.

In a word, Milton's genius, which was so great in itself, and so strengthened by all the helps of learning, appears in this book every way equal to the subject, which was the most sublime that could enter into the thoughts of a poet. As he knew all the arts of affecting the mind, he has given it certain rest-places, and opportunities of recovering itself from time to time; several speeches, reflections, similes, and the like reliefs, being interspersed to diversify his narration, and ease the attention of the reader.

L.

No. 334.] MONDAY, MARCH 24, 1711-12.

Voluisti, in suo genere, unumquemque nostrum quasi quendam esse Rocium, dixisti; non tam ea que recta essent probasti, quam que prava sunt fastidius adhaerere. —Cic. de Gestu.

You would have each of us be a kind of Rocius in his way: and you have said that fastidious men are not so much pleased with what is right, as disgusted at what is wrong.

It is very natural to take for our whole lives a slight impression of a thing, which at first fell into contempt with us for want of consideration. The real use of a certain qualification (which the wiser part of mankind look upon as at best an indifferent thing, and generally a frivolous circumstance) shows the ill consequence of such prepossessions. What I mean, is the art, skill, accomplishment, or whatever you will call it, of dancing. I knew a gentleman of great abilities, who bewailed the want of his education to the end of a very honourable life. He observed that there was not occasion for the common use of great talents; that they are but seldom in demand; and that they are often rendered of no use by attainments. As to gesture, and as to even these would be of no carriage, if what were confirmed by reason. To one mention the force of appear fantastical, tended to it, and another view; and from plain and those beautiful forms is not so agreeable as any of those ad it without any ex the shape of the mechanically, we collect and join had the regard education, will freedom before new learning, would for the advances being agreeable one would wish as conducive, as in matters that a man of learning others as he is points too difficult manner the read ordinary motion learnt to know posture of his has seen Booth, to his throne to majestic and gro very step; but could perform himself would were he a dance to treat with g enter into it any lowing letter h of in such a m a resolution, th of any thing, ti another opinion

"Mr. SPE

"Since there sciences that ha world by the pe or lovers of th lence, and bene speculative and lic, to the great arts and science brated by the d ner, be totally destitute of any cellences and s

"The low el altogether ow teemed only as uncultivated, a putation of illi in one of his dancers drawi so we may well

of, just and there, re-
should come in the many
rept into it,
set dancing
ess and ele-
struction pro-
fundamental ement of its ctators, that orm, and the g what is (in genious pen
and in some advantages to dance,*
essay towards ve inquired
shown what likewise con-
its several
it is, both endeavour'd maliciously
give an ac-Greeks and civil; and dancing topantomimes
wanting in particular a ter which I modern sense of it so ab-
of gentlemen
me short re-
character
manipulated
great gen-
art to that what might consider the
that some of
and unpro-
k that ever been raised
what can-ave thought
's hammer-
music? Yet that Pyth-nd that to-were either he different
her, to im-
its by stings
like man-ights. This mbers which as that two on, the case that interval
a; the same length
e tension of an a beg inwas only before noise, to one of the most delightful sciences by marrying it to the mathematics; and by this means caused it to be one of the most abstract and demonstrative of sciences. Who knows ~~hereof~~ but motion, whether decorous or representative, may not (as it seems highly probable it may) be taken into consideration by some person capable of reducing it into a regular science, though not so demonstrative as that proceeding from sounds, yet sufficient to entitle it to a place among the magnificent arts?

"Now, Mr. Spectator, as you have declared yourself visitor of dancing-schools, and this being an undertaking which more immediately respects me, I think myself indispensably obliged, before I proceed to the publication of this my essay, to ask your advice; and hold it absolutely necessary to have your approbation, in order to recommend my treatise to the perusal of the parents of such as learn to dance, as well as to the young ladies, to whom, as a visitor, you ought to be guardian.

"Salop, March 19,

1711-12.

T.

"I am, Sir,

"Your most humble Servant."

No. 335.] TUESDAY, MARCH 25, 1711-12

Respecte exemplar vite morumque iubebo Dedum imitatorum, et veras tunc dicere voces Hoc. Ars Po. 35

Keep Nature's great original in view.

And trace the living in ages' course — ELEGY.

My friend Sir Roger de Coverley, when we last met together at the club, told me that he had a great mind to see the new tragedy * with me, assuring me at the same time, that he had not been at play these twenty years. "The last I saw," said Sir Roger, "was the Committee, which I should have gone to neither, had not I been told before-hand that it was a good church of England comedy. He then proceeded to inquire of me who this distressed mother was; and upon hearing that she was Hector's widow, he told me that her husband was a brave man, and that when he was a school-boy he had read his life at the end of the dictionary." Mr. and I enquired in the next place, if there would not be some danger in coming home late, in case the Mohecks should be abroad. "I assure you," says he, "I thought I had fallen into their hands last night; for I observed two or three lusty blue-men that followed me half way up Fleet-street, attended their pace I hind me, in proportion as put on to get away from them. You must know, continued the knight with a smile, "I fancied they had a mind to hunt me; for I remember an honest gentleman in my neighbourhood, who was served such a trick in King Charles the Second's time, of which reason he has not ventured himself in ever since. I might have shown them very good sport, had this been their design; for, as I am an old fox-hunter, I should have turned and dodged, and have played them a thousand tricks they have never seen in their lives before." Sir Roger added that "if these gentlemen had any such intention they did not succeed very well in it; for I threw them out," says he, "at the end of Norfolk-street where I doubled the corner, and got shelter in a lodging before they could imagine what was to come of me. However," says the knight, "if Captain Sentry will make one with us to-morrow night and you will both of you call upon me about six ack, that we may be at the house before it is full, I have my own coach in readiness to attend for John tells me he has got the fore-wheels fixed."

&c. By John

* The Distrest Mother

The captain, who did not fail to meet me there at the appointed hour, bid Sir Roger fear nothing, for he had put on the same sword which he made use of at the battle of Steenkirk.* Sir Roger's valets, and among the rest my old friend the butler, had, I found, provided themselves with good new plants, to attend their master upon this occasion.

When we had placed him in his coach, with myself at his left hand, the captain before him, and the butler at the head of his footmen in the rear, I conveyed him in safety to the playhouse, where, having marched up the entry in good order, the captain and I went in with him, and seated him next us in the pit. As soon as the house was full and the candles lighted, my old friend stood up and looked about him with that pleasure which is not seasoned with humanity naturally feels in the sight of a multitude of people who are pleased with one another, and partake of the common entertainment. I could not but turn to myself, as the old man stood up in the middle of the pit, that he made a very proper centre for a tragic audience. Upon the entering of Pyrrhus the knight told me, that he did not believe the actor of France himself had a better strut. I was very attentive to my old friend's remarks, as I looked upon them as a piece of naturalism, and was well pleased to hear him, at the conclusion of almost every scene, telling me that he could not imagine how the play would end. While he appeared much concerned for Andromache; and a little while after as much for Hercules; and was extremely puzzled to think what would become of Pyrrhus.

When Sir Roger saw Andromache's obstinate refusal to her lover's importunities, he whispered in the ear, that he was sure she would never consent to him; to which he added, with a more than ordinary vehemence, "You can't imagine, Sir, it is to have to do with a widow." Upon Pyrrhus's threatening to leave her, the knight turned his head and muttered to himself, "Ay, do you can." This part dwelt so much upon my old friend's imagination, that at the close of the third act I was thinking on something else, he whispered in my ear, "These widows, Sir, are the most perverse creatures in the world. But pray," he said, "you that are a critic, is the play according to your dramatic rules, as you call them? Should people in tragedy always talk to be understood? Is there is not a single sentence in this play which I do not know the meaning of?"

The fourth act very luckily began before I had time to give the old gentleman an answer. "Well," said the knight, sitting down with great satisfaction, "suppose we are now to see Hector's ghost." He then renewed his attention, and, from time to time, fell a-praising the widow. He made, indeed, a little mistake as to one of her pages, whom at his entering he took for Astyanax; but quickly corrected himself right in that particular, though, at the same time, he owned he should have been very glad to have seen the little boy, who, says he, must needs be a very fine child to him. Upon Hercules's going to Pyrrhus, the audience Sir Roger added, "baggage!"

As there was a very great silence in the audience, it was natural for them to fill the intervals between the scenes of the players, and Sir Roger, hearing a great noise struck in with them, and his friend Pylades, they were afterwards put in a second time, he, "though he spoke low in whiskers as a Sentry, seeing two men lean with an attention, fearing lest they should miss him by the elbow, and ear, that lasted till the knight was won, which Orestes gives conclusion of it, told of work, that he was stage. Seeing after he grew more than a occasion to moralize on science, adding, that as if he saw something.

As we were the first we were the last that to have a clear passage did not care to venture crowd. Sir Roger's entertainment, and in the same manner play-house, being but not only with the people which had been present, which it had given to

No. 336.] WEDNESDAY.

Clamant
Cuncti pene patres, Quæ gravis Asopum
Vel quia nil rectum Vel quia turpe putat Imberbes didicere,

One tragic sentence
Which Betterton's
Or well-mouth'd Bo (Tho' but, perhaps How will our fathers
And swear, all shall You'd think no fool
Did not some grave
Who scorn a lud st
And, having once b

"MR. SPECTATOR,

"As you are the learning and good suggest to your comote or prejudice that has prevailed from gray hairs and tyrant port; I hope your reasonable check to mean old men's over their juniors by the *1692: Gentlemen wore about this time a kind of neck-cloth called a Steenkirk, probably from its being taken notice of at this battle. In like manner, and for a similar reason, was called Ramillies, being introduced, or having been fashionable, about the time of that battle, in 1706.

and vigour of his elders,
and regarded him a young man's head as company with or reason
prejudice,
the wisest),
sonings, un-
y, and truth
strongest ar-
est evidence
sonings and
age. 'You have not yet
young folks laziness in-the room to weakness of se, and we the attacks
ould enliven
ake our case s on brave
youth, and of age. The youth would insert them,
and entertainers.

Then was Barachel the st Job was himself rather nds was his no answer.

Elihu had y were elder no answer in s wrath was
l the Buzite, ve are very not shew you
ak, and mul-
But there is the Almighty
men are not stand judge, I also will your words;
searched out
n. And behced Job, or ould say, We
a him down,
d his words
n with your answered no
I had waited answered no t; I also will matter, the old, my belly
ady to burst
may be re-
er. Let me
erson, neither

For I know
g my Maker

"MR. SPECTATOR,

"I have formerly read with great satisfaction your papers about idols, and the behaviour of gentlemen in those coffee-houses where women officiate; and impatiently waited to see you take India and China shops into consideration: but since you have passed us over in silence, either that you have not as yet thought us worth your notice, or that the grievances we lie under have escaped your discerning eye, I must make my complaints to you, and am encouraged to do it because you seem a little at leisure, at this present writing. I am, dear Sir, one of the top China-women about town; and though I say it, keep as good things, and receive as fine company, as any of this end of the town, let the other be who she will. In short, I am in a fair way to be easy, were it not for a club of female rakes, who, under pretence of taking their innocent rambles forsooth, and diverting the spleen, seldom fail to plague me twice or thrice a day, to cheapen tea, or buy a screen. What else should they mean? as they often repeat it. These rakes are your idle ladies of fashion, who, having nothing to do, employ themselves in tumbling over my ware. One of these customers (for by the way they seldom or never buy any thing) calls for a set of tea-dishes, another for a basin a third for my best green tea, and even to the punch-bowl, there's scarce a piece in my shop but must be displaced, and the whole agreeable architecture disordered, so that I can compare them to nothing but to the night-goblins that take a pleasure to overturn the disposition of plates and dishes in the kitchens of your housewifely maids. Well, after all this racket and clutter, this is no dear, that is their aversion; another thing is charming, but not wanted; the ladies are cured of the spleen, but I am not a shilling the better for it. Lord, what signifies one poor pot of tea, considering the trouble they put me to? Vapours, Mr. Spectator, are terrible things; for though I am not possessed by them myself, I suffer more by them than if I were. Now I must beg you to admonish all such day-goblins to make fewer visits, or to be less troublesome when they come to one's shop; and to convince them that we honest shop-keepers have something better to do, than to cure folks of the vapours gratis. A young son of mine, a schoolboy, is my secretary, so I hope you will make allowances.

"I am, Sir,

"Your constant Reader, and very humble Servant,

"March 22nd.
T.

"REBECCA the distressed."

No. 337.] THURSDAY, MARCH 27, 1712.

Fingit equum tenera docilem cervicem magister, Ire viam quam monstrat eques. — HOA. 1 Ep. ii. 63.
The jockey trains the young and tender horse While yet soft-mouth'd, and breeds him to the course.

CÆCILIUS.

I HAVE lately received a third letter from the gentleman who has already given the public two essays upon education. As his thoughts seem to be very just and new upon this subject, I shall communicate them to the reader.

"SIR,

"If I had not been hindered by some extraordinary business, I should have sent you sooner my further thoughts upon education. You may please to remember, that in my last letter I endeavoured give the best reasons that could be urged in favour of a private or public education. Upon the whole, it may perhaps be thought that I seemed rather inclined to the latter, though at the same time confessed that virtue, which ought to be our first incipal care, was more usually acquired in the former.

"I intend therefore, in this letter, to offer at methods, by which I conceive boys might be made to improve in virtue as they advance in letters.

"I know that in most of our public schools vice is punished and discouraged, whenever it is found at; but this is far from being sufficient, unless our youth are at the same time taught to form a right judgment of things, and to know what is properly true.

"To this end, whenever they read the lives and actions of such men as have been famous in their generation, it should not be thought enough to make them barely understand so many Greek or Latin sentences; but they should be asked their opinion of such an action or saying, and obliged to give their reasons why they take it to be good or bad. By this means they would insensibly arrive at proper notions of courage, temperance, honour, and justice.

"There must be great care taken how the example of any particular person is recommended to them in gross; instead of which they ought to be taught wherein such a man, though great in some respects, was weak and faulty in others. For want of this caution, a boy is so often dazzled with the story of a great character, that he confounds its beauties with its blemishes, and looks even upon the faulty part of it with an eye of admiration.

"I have often wondered how Alexander, who was naturally of a generous and merciful disposition, came to be guilty of so barbarous an action as that of dragging the governor of a town after his chariot. Now this is generally ascribed to his passion for Homer: but I lately met with a passage in Plutarch, which, if I am not very much mistaken, still gives us a clearer light into the motives of this action. Plutarch tells us, that Alexander in his youth had a master named Lysimachus, who, though he was a man destitute of all politeness, ingratiated himself both with Philip and his pupil, and became the second man at court, by calling the king Peleus, the prince Achilles, and himself Phoenix. It is no wonder if Alexander, having been thus used not only to admire but to personate Achilles, should think it glorious to imitate him in this piece of cruelty and extravagance.

"To carry this thought yet further, I shall submit to your consideration, whether, instead of a theme or copy of verses, which are the usual exercises, as they are called in the school phrase, it would not be more proper that a boy should be tasked, once or twice a week, to write down his opinion of such persons and things as occur to him by his reading; that he should descant upon the actions of Turnus or Eneas; show wherein they excelled, or were defective; censure or approve any particular action; observe how it might have been carried to a greater degree of perfection, and how it exceeded or fell short of another. He might at the same time mark what was moral in any speech, and how far it agreed with the character of the person speaking. This exercise would soon strengthen his judgment in what is blameable or praiseworthy, and give him an early seasoning of morality.

"Next to those examples which may be met with in books, I very much approve Horace's way of setting before you the characters of the ancients; thus, this was the manner of inclining him to any aversion to any person. 'My father advised me to be contented with what I have. Do you not see, of Burrus, and the tunes of those of luxury and extravagance. I met me with an abler man, says he, 'make me may be happy in my How scandalous, bonius, who was man's wife!' The poet adds, that not at first follow orderly when he about him; so you by hearing the ill

"Xenophon's Cyrus the Great, us, that the Persians employed their principles of justice other countries and sciences; the day in hearing the the other, whether or ingratitude; a ment against the guilty of these crimes and short coat, for as a case equally

"The method of the Gymnosophists is still more curious as follow: 'When is served up, the scholar how he is rising: some of chosen as arbiters composed their decisions, that they their parents; and found out something or learnt it from But if there happens who cannot make the morning to be excluded from the the rest are at dinner

"It is not in ways of producing a general method to endeavour to instruct too soon taught the first impressions always the strongest

"The archbishop says, that, though in the art of knowing his friend's secret prince, 'went to his knees, and, as he was saying, 'O my friends,' the education of father, show it in all, do not omit none of us likely to come to any great harm; and that, let them do their best, we shall in all probability live out the length of our days, and frequent the theatres more than ever. What makes me more desirous to have some reformation of this matter is, because of an ill consequence or two attending it: for a great many of our church musicians being related to the theatre, they have, in imitation of these epilogues, introduced, in their farewell voluntaries, a sort of music quite foreign to the design of church-services, to the great prejudice of well-disposed people. Those fingering gentlemen should be informed, that they ought to suit their airs to the place and business, and that the musician is obliged to keep to the text as much as the preacher. For want of this, I have found by experience a great deal of mischief. For when the preacher has often, with great piety and art enough, handled his subject, and the judicious clerk has with the utmost diligence culled out two staves proper to the discourse, and I have found in myself and in the rest of the pew, good thoughts and dispositions, they have been, all in a moment, dissipated by a merry jig from the organ-loft. One knows not what further ill effects the epilogues I have been speaking of may in time produce: but this I am credibly informed of, that Paul Lorrain* has resolved upon a very sudden reformation in his tragical dramas; and that, at the next monthly performance, he designs, instead of a penitential psalm, to dismiss his audience with an excellent new ballad of his own composing. Pray, Sir, do what you can to put a stop to these growing evils, and you will very much oblige

"Your humble Servant,

"PHYSIBULUS."

No. 339.] SATURDAY, MARCH 29, 1712.

— Ut his exordia primis Omnia, et ipse tener mundi concrevit orbis.
Tum darare solum et discludere Nereæ ponto Cuperit, et rerum paullatim sumere formas.
Virg. Ecl. vi. 33.

He sung the secret seeds of nature's frame, How seas, and earth, and air, and active flame, Fell through the mighty void, and in their fall, Were blindly gather'd in this goodly ball.
The tender soil then stiff'ning by degrees, Shut from the bounded earth the bounding seas.
The earth and ocean various forms disclose,
And a new sun to the new world arose.—DRYDEN

LONGINUS has observed, that there may be a greatness in sentiments where there is no passion, and he brings instances out of ancient authors to support this his opinion. The pathetic, as that great critic observes, may animate and inflame the subject, but is not essential to it. Accordingly, as he observes, we very often find that those who excel most in stirring up the passions very often want talent of writing in the great and sublime manner, and so on the contrary. Milton has shown himself a master in both these ways of writing. In the seventh book which we are now entering upon, an instance of that sublime which is not mixed and worked up with passion. The author appears in a kind of composed and sedate majesty; and though the sentiments do not give so great an emotion as those in the former book, they abound with as magnificent and troubled ocean the seventh and in a calm, and producing in a

The critic which he lays way of writing should imitate have gone be works of the he writes on a how Homer w By this means flame from an copying servile shining passag up by Homer.

Milton, thou was capable of doubtless very ceptions by su nus has recom

In this book six days' wor assistance from to the wonder glorious stroke writ, the auth through the w critic I have has taken not the lawgiver d in the first ch other passage same majesty Milton has s in making use his poem, and eastern poetry imaginations of colder clim

Adam's spe an account of of nature be solemn. The that the day i upon such a s

And the s Much of h Held by t And longe His gener

The angel modest pursu which he assi very just and as we are told goes forth in with a host of jesty as beco according to exertion of C scription has one of the p chariots out mountains w

About his Cherub an And virtu From the Myriads h Against a * Paul Lorrain was the ordinary of Newgate at this time. Each place he held for many years: he died October 7, 1719. His accounts of the convicts executed at Tyburn, P. Lorrain generally represented them as true penitents, and dying very well, after having lived for the most part very ill: they are ungenerously styled Paul Lorrain's saints in the Tatler, No. 63.

BRITISH ESSAYISTS.

the creation rise up to view one after another, in such a manner, that the reader seems present at this wonderful work, and to assist among the choirs of angels who are the spectators of it. How glorious is the conclusion of the first day!

Thus was the first day ev'n and morn;
Nor past uncelebrated, nor unsung,
By the celestial choirs, when orient light Exhaling first from darkness they beheld; Birth-day of heav'n and earth! with joy and shout
The hollow universal orb they fill'd.

We have the same elevation of thought in the third day, when the mountains were brought forth and the deep was made:

Immediately the mountains huge appear Emergent, and their broad bare backs up-beave Into the clouds, their tops ascend the sky:
So high as heav'n the tumid hills, so low Down sunk a hollow bottom broad and deep, Capacious bed of waters—

We have also the rising of the whole vegetable world described in this day's work, which is filled with all the graces that other poets have lavished on their description of the spring, and leads the reader's imagination into a theatre equally surprising and beautiful.

The several glories of the heavens make their appearance on the fourth day:

First in his east the glorious lamp was seen, Regent of day, and all the horizon round, Invested with bright rays, jocund to run His longitude through heaven's high road; the gray Dawn, and the Pleiades before him danc'd, Shedding sweet influence. Less bright the moon, But opposite in levell'd west was set His mirror, with full face borrowing her light From him, for other lights she needed none In that aspect, and still that distance keeps Till night; then in the east her turn she shines, Revolv'd on heaven's great axle, and her reign With thousand lesser lights dividual holds, With thousand thousand stars, that then appear'd Spangling the hemisphere—

One would wonder how the poet could be so concise in his description of the six days' works, as to comprehend them within the bounds of an episode and at the same time, so particular, as to give a lively idea of them. This is still more remarkable in his account of the fifth and sixth days, in which he has drawn out to our view the whole animal creation, from the reptile to the behemoth. As the lion and the leviathan are two of the noblest productions in the world of living creatures, the reader will find a most exquisite spirit of poetry in this account which our author gives us of them. The sixth day concludes with the formation of man, upon which the angel takes occasion, as he did at the battle in heaven, to remind Adam of his audience, which was the principal design of this visit.

The poet afterward represents the Messiah returning into heaven, and taking a survey of his great work. There is something inexpressibly sublime in this part of the poem, where the author describes that great period of time, filled with so many glorious circumstances; when the heavens and earth were finished; when the Messiah ascended in triumph through the everlasting gates; when he looked down with pleasure upon his new creation when every part of nature seemed to rejoice in existence, when the morning-stars sang together and all the sons of God shouted for joy.

So ev'n and morn accomplish'd the sixth day: Yet not till the Creator from his work Desisting, though unwearied, up return'd,

Up to the heaven of heavens, his high abode;
Thence to behold his new created world.
Th' addition of his empire, how it shew'd In prospect from his throne, how good, how fair, Answering his great idea. Up he rode,
Follow'd with acclamation and the sound Symphonious of ten thousand harps, that tun'd Angelic harmonies: the earth, the air Resounded (thou rememberest, for thou heard'st)
The heavens and all the constellations rung, The planets in their station list'ning stood, While the bright pomp ascended jubilant.
"Open, ye everlasting gates!" they sung, "Open, ye heavens, your living doors! let in The great Creator from his work return'd Magnificent, his six days' work—a world."

I cannot conclude this book upon the creation, without mentioning a poem which has lately appeared under that title.* The work was undertaken with so good an intention, and is executed with so great a mastery, that it deserves to be looked upon as one of the most useful and noble productions in our English verse. The reader cannot but be amazed to find the depths of philosophy enlivened with all the charms of poetry, and to see so great a length of reason amidst so beautiful a redundancy of the imagination. The author has shown us that signs in all the works of nature which necessarily lead us to the knowledge of the first cause. In short, he has illustrated, by numberless and incontestible instances, that divine wisdom which the son of Sirach has so nobly ascribed to the Supreme Being in his formation of the world, when he tells us, that "He created her, he saw her, and numbered her, and poured her out upon all his works."—L.

No. 340.] MONDAY, MARCH 31, 1712.

Quis novus hic nostris successit sedibus hospes?
Quem sese cre ferens: quam forti pectore et armis!
VIRG. Æn. iv. 10.

What chief is this that visits us from far,
Whose gallant mien bespeaks him train'd to war?

I TAKE it to be the highest instance of a noble mind, to bear great qualities without discovering in man's behaviour any consciousness that he is superior to the rest of the world. Or, to say it otherwise, it is the duty of a great person so to demean himself, as that whatever endowments he may have, he may appear to value himself upon no qualities but such as any man may arrive at. He ought to think no man valuable but for his public merit, justice, and integrity: and all other endowments to be esteemed only as they contribute to the exerting those virtues. Such a man, if he is wise and valiant, knows it is of no consideration to other men that he is so, but as he employs those high talents for their use and service. He who affects the praises and addresses of a multitude, or assumes to himself a pre-eminence upon any other consideration, must soon turn admiration into contempt. It is certain that there can be no merit in any man who is not conscious of it; but the sense that it is valuable only according to the application of it, makes that superiority amiable, which would otherwise be invidious. In this light it is considered as a thing in which every man bears a share. It annexes the ideas of dignity, power, and fame, in an agreeable and familiar manner, to him who is conscious of it; and all men who are strangers to him are naturally inclined to hold the person of him in whose favour they are formed something

Whether such men have a yearning for heroic worth; and parts of this kind, they have them an exact aspect of the principal has done such work. It would puzzle to the sort of man to hear of by the desire a description of something that concerns their own circumstances, friend of mine is exact in my account had marched an Alps; and, if possible, a peasant who showed a map, be yet lively and versatile, who is a man of humanity, desires an opportunity, in observing his highness and fancies work according to circumstances and circumstances with admiration, waited for his arrival. my correspondent is curious a Spectator Eugene.* It was now, to answer a written to me on to find words to let there is in his countenance how daring he is at Turin; but in general him will easily express be imagined, or man. The prince of man most easily height to be grace, ceremony, and no patch: his aspect lively and thoughtful; his action noble, able, and his behaviour graceful in a certain the rest, and because of receiving the person, and completely exact and beautiful thing sublime, with his quality or character of his mind. It is sense of much content in it; and he is rather to return to gratify any taste. As his thoughts they are as little and magnificence either case, no fiercest methods of this hero has the enterprises that * Creation, a philosophical poem; demonstrating the existence and providence of God. In seven books. By Sir Charles Blackmore, Knt. M.D. and fellow of the college of physicians in London.

* He stood god named Eugene after

BRITISH ESSAYISTS.

em with the Cæsar. It is able of being enterprise; a impatient for has wisdom,
an can enjoy
on, banish all all other vices to make it un-
oul and body,
that he apt every man
his very self,
which fortune
see Prince
e gentleman,
y and merit.
Eugene, he n that part of
to a familiar

reader with,
alled but by
s advantage,
est an esteem

1, 1712.

rem

feared.

DRYDEN.

Physibulus,
on to the new now publish
om a gentle-
is sentiments

attacked in een so geneceived such o any in au

s. Oldfield to had repeated
f encores was n obliged to till called for e to all other third repre-
een repeated

rised to find
e town, in a
the candour

ancholy cornnatural bee learned, I ilogue were at every one are distinct entirely de-
tial to it.

Oldfield is no

is time turned more Andromache, but Mrs. Oldfield; and thou the poet had left Andromache stone-dead upon stage, as your ingenious correspondent phrases.

Mrs. Oldfield might still have spoken a merry e-logue. We have an instance of this in a tragewhere there is not only a death, but a martyrdo St. Catherine was there personated by Nell Gwynn she lies stone-dead upon the stage, but, upon the gentlemen's offering to remove her body, she business it is to carry off the slain in our English tragedies, she breaks out into that abrupt begining, of what was very ludicrous, but at the same time thought a very good epilogue:

Hold! are you mad? you damn'd confounded dog I am to rise and speak the epilogue.

"This diverting manner was always practised by Mr. Dryden, who, if he was not the best writer of tragedies in his time, was allowed by every one to have the happiest turn for a prologue or an eplogue. The epilogues to Cleomenes, Don Sebastian The Duke of Guise, Aurengzebe, and Love Triumphant, are all precedents of this nature.

"I might further justify this practice by that excellent epilogue which was spoken, a few years since, after the tragedy of Phædra and Hippolytus; with a great many others, in which the authors had endeavoured to make the audience merry. If they have not all succeeded so well as the writer of this they have however shown that it was not for want of good-will.

"I must further observe, that the gaiety of it may be still the more proper, as it is at the end of the French play; since every one knows that nations who are generally esteemed to have as polite a taste as any in Europe, always close their tragic entertainments with what they call a petite pièce, which is purposely designed to raise mirth, and send away the audience well pleased. The same person who has supported the chief character in the tragedy very often plays the principal part in the petite pièce; so that I have myself seen, at Paris, Orestes and Lubin acted the same night by the same man.

"Tragi-comedy, indeed, you have yourself, in your former speculation, found fault with very justly because it breaks the tide of the passions while they are yet flowing; but this is nothing at all to the present case, where they have had already their full course.

"As the new epilogue is written conformably to the practice of our best poets, so it is not such a one which, as the Duke of Buckingham says in his Rehearsal, might serve for any other play; but which rises out of the occurrences of the piece it was composed for.

"The only reason your mournful correspondent gives against this facetious epilogue, as he calls it, that he has a mind to go home melancholy, I wish the gentleman may not be more grave than wise. For my own part, I must confess, I think very sufficient to have the anguish of a fictitious piece remain upon me while it is representing; and I love to be sent home to bed in a good humour.
Physibulus is, however, resolved to be inconsolable and not to have his tears dried up, he need not continue his old custom, and, when he has had his half-crown's worth of sorrow, slink out before the epilogue begins.

* A tragedy by Mr. Edmund Neal, known by the name of Smith, 8vo. 1707. Addison wrote a prologue to this play when Italian operas were in vogue, to rally the vulgar taste of the town in preferring sound to sense. Prior wrote the epilogue here mentioned.

"It is pleasant enough to hear this tragical genius complaining of the great mischief Andromache had done him. What was that? Why, she made him laugh. The poor gentleman's sufferings put me in mind of Harlequin's case, who was tickled to death. He tells us soon after, through a small mistake of sorrow for rage, that during the whole action he was so very sorry, that he thinks he could have attacked half a score of the fiercest Mohocks in the excess of his grief. I cannot but look upon it as a happy accident, that a man who is so bloody-minded in his affliction was diverted from this fit of outrageous melancholy. The valour of this gentleman in his distress brings to one's memory the Knight of the Sorrowful Countenance, who lays about him at such an unmerciful rate in an old romance. I shall readily grant him that his soul, as he himself says, would have made a very ridiculous figure, had it quitted the body, and descended to the poetical shades, in such an encounter.

"As to his conceit of tacking a tragic head with a comic tail, in order to refresh the audience, it is such a piece of jargon, that I don't know what to make of it.

"The elegant writer makes a very sudden transition from the playhouse to the church, and from thence to the gallows.

"As for what relates to the church, he is of opinion that the epilogues have given occasion to those merry jigs from the organ-loft, which have dissipated those good thoughts and dispositions he has found in himself, and the rest of the pew, upon the singing of two staves culled out by the judicious and diligent clerk.

"He fetches his next thought from Tyburn; and seems very apprehensive lest there should happen any innovations in the tragedies of his friend Paul Lorrain.

"In the mean time, Sir, this gloomy writer, who is so mightily scandalized at a gay epilogue after a serious play, speaking of the fate of those unhappy wretches who are condemned to suffer an ignominious death by the justice of our laws, endeavours to make the reader merry on so improper an occasion, by those poor burlesque expressions of tragical dramas and monthly performances.

"I am, Sir, with great respect,

"Your most obedient, most humble Servant,

X.

"PHILOMEDES."

No. 342.] WEDNESDAY, APRIL 2, 1712.

Justice parties sunt non violare homines; verecundia non offendere.—TULL.

Justice consists in doing no injury to men; decency, in giving them no offence.

As regard to decency is a great rule of life in general, but more especially to be consulted by the female world, I cannot overlook the following letter, which describes an egregious offender.

"MR. SPECTATOR,

"I was this day looking over your papers; and reading in that of December the 6th, with great delight, the amiable grief of Asteria for the absence of her husband, it threw me into a great deal of reflection. I cannot say but this arose very much from the circumstances of my own life, who am a soldier, and expect every day to receive orders, which will oblige me to leave behind me a wife that is very dear to me, and that very deservedly. She is at present, for conjugal some women wherein my w a reluctance, my duty. W example of a as well as I cer of good pened, in a co to a country g ceived with th which men of diers whom a ventures, has a easy, and agre time, and had unavoidable c with the beaut ter. People struck with ev they take the could live in e much happier The turbulent used to made all the advant among the re might enter in Sylvana wou world is so d that Hortensi act of genero highest merit, who had notl tions. The w house. Whe did not propo cumstances o as his darling that it was in of sense could and therefore luable jewels. nish her, that it was an oste to a woman l her to consid take these ma gowns, the la her air and b pear she dres humour that v had for the tr woman, Hort stay with her As soon as H her looking-g was wholly o and she was o the rest of m much greater for one so ge very witty, th town. She t excellence fro to the absence is now the g shut out the t retinue of th produced; to all Hortensi divinity than

be a work
and as she erest relief
n that they use of that on the fact the right to him, it
metics to ou play.

Says he,

innocently
mure wars
But at any needs a bes at of being se comp any to it is as to him he en's charac
m shall see but I cannot their service
omn's con is I have reflects the e to the dates of t

As these should not an accom
and I have st am. But turn of and ces, when immedial tly does, m y, and I am
ke the great thirty at the least of sing on the a distance
own to see en they con
than an ad
rn happiness
r when they
d be more of their lives
ornaments to didn't.—T

3, 1712

at art raus
etate
sing
bes,
de,
east.—D

ow up in ked up to t there might tion of souls
believed in that doctrine to this day. "Sir Paul Rycant says he," gives us an account of several well-to-do Mahometans that purchase the freedom of any little land they see confined to a cage, and think they merit as much by it as we should, hereby rendering any of our countrymen free in the vicinity at Algiers. "You must know," says Will, "the reason is, because they consider every Mahometan as a brother or sister Mahometan; and they consider themselves obliged to extend their charity even to such mean circumstances. "They do this," says Will, "that the soul of a Mahometan, when he dies, immediately passes into that of a Christian man, or of some brute, which he can't bear in his humour, or his fortune, when he is converted to us."

As I was wondering what this profusion of fear and awe signified. Will told us, that "Jack Frences a horse-dealer, who was a fellow of whom made love to a great deal of the scholars who throw away all their fondness for their books, monkeys, and lap-dogs. Upon going to Paris one fine morning, he writ a very pretty epigram upon this kind of Jack," says he, "was conducted into the parliament, where he diverted himself for some time with her favourite monkey, which was chained in one of the windows. till at length observing her services, and as he was by him, he writ the following libel to his mistress in the person of the monkey; and upon the next morning, coming down so soon as he expected in the window, and went about his business. "The lady soon after coming into the parlour, and seeing her monkey look upon a paper with great earnestness, took it up, and to this day is in such a flutter," says Will, "whether it was written by Jack or the monkey."

"MAYNARD,

"Not having the gift of speech, I have a long time wasted in vain for an opportunity of making myself known to you: and having at present the conveniences of pen, ink, and paper, by me, I shall take the occasion of giving you my history in writing, which I could not do by word of mouth. You must know, Madam, that about a thousand years ago I was an Indian brachman, and versed in all those mysterious secrets which your European philosopher, called Pythagoras, is said to have learned from our fraternity. I had so ingratiated myself by my great skill in the occult sciences with a deity whom I used to converse with, that he promised to grant me whatever I should ask him. I desired that my soul might never pass in the body of a brute creature; but this, I found, was not in his power to grant me. I then begged that, into whatever creature I should chance to transmute, I might still retain my memory, as he consented that I was the same person who lived in different animals. This, he told me, was what I desired, and accordingly promised, on the word of a deity, that he would grant me what I desired. From that time forth I lived so very unbrachman, that I was made president of a college of brachmans, in which I discharged with great integrity the duty of my office.

"I was then shuttled into another human body, and directed my part so well in it, that I became the favourite of the people, who were given up to the tanks of Greece. I have been in great honour for a thousand years, and have enjoyed all the immunities of a brachman, being obliged to rule and oppress people to enrich my sovereign; till at length I became so odious, that my master, to recover his crejects, shot me through the heart with a bullet. I was one day addressing myself to him of his army.

My next remove, I found myself in the shape of a jackal, and soon listed in the service of a lion. I used to yelp near about midnight, which was his time of seeking after his prey. He always followed in the rear, and when I had run down a wild goat, or a hare, after he had feasted fully upon it himself, would now and then come to the bone that was but half-picked, for my entertainment; but, upon my being unsuccessful in my chases, he gave me such a confounded thrashing, that I died of it.

My next transmigration, I was again set upon and became an Indian tax-gatherer: but being guilty of great extravagances, and owing to an expensive jade of a wife, I ran into debt, that I durst not show my head. I sooner step out of my house but I was followed by somebody or other that lay in wait for me, and ventured abroad one night in the dusk of the evening, I was taken up and hurried into a cage, where I died a few months after.

I then entered into a flying fish, and in due season led a most melancholy life for the space of a year. Several fishes of prey pursued me in the water; and if I betook myself to land, it was ten to one but I had a flock of gulls at me. As I was one day flying amidst the English ships, I observed a huge sea-gull with a long bill, and hovering just over my head: I was dipping into the water to avoid him, I felt the bite of a monstrous shark, that swallowed me in an instant.

Some years afterward, to my great surprise, I found myself a banker in Lombard-street; and I found how I had formerly suffered for want of money. I became so very sordid and avaricious, that the town cried shame of me. I was a little old fellow to look upon; for I had starved myself, and was nothing but skin and bone when I died.

Afterward very much troubled and amazed myself, I dwindled into an emmet. I was concerned to make so insignificant a figure, and I know but some time or other I might be a mite, if I did not mend my manners. I applied myself with great diligence to the duties that were allotted to me, and was generally respected as the most industrious ant in the whole mole-hill. At last I was picked up, as I was groaning in my den, by an unlucky cock-sparrow, that I met in my neighbourhood, and had before made great pretensions upon our commonwealth.

My condition a little bettered, I lived some time in the shape of a bee; but being weary of the painful and penurious life I had undergone my two last transmigrations, I fell into a desperate, and turned drone. As I one day went out to plunder a hive, we were received by the swarm which defended it, that we were left dead upon the spot.

I tell you of many other transmigrations that I have been through; how I was a town-rake, and did penance in a bay gelding for ten years; how I was a tailor, a shrimp, and at the last of these my shapes, I was shot dead on the holidays by a young jackanapes, who needs try his new gun upon me.

shall pass over these and several other stages of life, to remind you of the love I made to you about six years ago. I remember, Madam, how I used to sing, and played a thousand tricks, and how he was at last caught under your window. It was that unfortunate you were then so cruel. Not knowing my unlucky body, I found myself where I lived in my present shape. I was caught by a servant of yours, sent over into Great Britain, to show you how I came into your power. This is not the first time that I have been in your chain: I am, however, very grateful to you for your civility, as you often bestowed your caresses which I would have been very glad to receive when I was a man. I hope no person will not tend to my cure, and you will still continue your

"Your most devoted

"P.S. I would advise you to keep out of my way; for, I am the most formidable of my kind, or other to give him such a thrashing as he likes."—L.

No. 344.] FRIDAY

— In solo vivendi

Such, whose sole bliss is to be alone, But that one brutal reason

"MR. SPECTATOR,

"I THINK it has not yet been discoursed on little ambition, which ways men fall into, to destroy their acquaintance. Such a man, if he would make a pretty thing of himself, am got into a great deal of trouble (as most extraordinary occasions seem to do) from a mere accident. I was, some time ago, unfortunately engaged to a man, who esteemed a man of food he throws down at a man for distinguishing myself. I was of superiority which the reason, ate so immoderately for like to have cost me my life. My misfortune was, that having a stomach, and having lived a body was as well prepared for it had been by appointment quished every glutton in the world. I was such a prodigy in his merry during the whole of my life, sensibly betrayed me to a man which in a little time conducted me to my rival; after which I ate a considerable proportion of the victuals thought me obliged to me, effect, however, of this engagement, I resolve never to eat more pursuant to this resolution, I had depending on the strength which happened very luckily related in our articles either a man of common sense could hard to determine: but the

BRITISH ESSAYISTS.

as of my age, several got when they came about for the offering, that they also gave me charity with a very good air, but time, lost, and the same time asked the churchwarden if he would forget to bid me take a pinch. Pray, Sir, think on these things; and I resolve to do so, and you will oblige,

When I was
ious. It was im with such
allow, though a pass: not deavour: it n so let it not question ten cases: I breath, and enterprised
n very plain of mine was ver, I could see a man
immediately before I died, amended him
nce any other utive enough
er.

Servant.
MAMMON.

times, he quent e y fallen tended such a t tell who me et ient of she does ful ease er lip a sented to
to eat
s all sh
if she much t
ouident
the sn
s and very co ry true
who can part, I filthy p
able con
make up
end but on, or to bear with men an h too m e from m
so far t he pull easily) in she has
the s it to ar her
she has herself
Sunday

" Sir,
" Your most humble Servant."

NO. 35. SATURDAY, APRIL 5, 1712.

Scit. The first of the paper, capricious of the Ded. The first of the paper, capricious of the N. The first of the paper, capricious of the
A. The first of the paper, capricious of the W. The first of the paper, capricious of the C. The first of the paper, capricious of the
L. The first of the paper, capricious of the

The arguments which Raphael gives of the fault of being idle, and the creation of the world have a number of suppositions which the critics judge to be too open. They are nearly related to the principal action, and have a just connexion with the story.

The fourth book opens with a beautiful description of the happiness which this discourse of the arch angel has made in Adam's parents. Adam, afterwards by a very fine and easy, inquires concerning the condition of the world, and the bodies which make it. Raphael answers him, and among the six days of creation. He speaks here with a great deal of art, and shows the way from this part of the story to the next, which is the history of the fall.

He well opens that the open book is a book which is filled with Adam's account of his passion, and the reason for it, which would have been in proper to be told, and which is here devised very judiciously, and beautifully, as for his retiring.

S. The first of the paper, capricious of the D. The first of the paper, capricious of the N. The first of the paper, capricious of the
A. The first of the paper, capricious of the
W. The first of the paper, capricious of the
C. The first of the paper, capricious of the
L. The first of the paper, capricious of the

The angel's returning a faithful answer to Adam's inquiries was not only proper for the moral reason, but also for the story, but because it would have been too long to have given the summary of the whole, and the particular system of philosophy. He contented himself to mention, and open up, these, and concluded with great consciousness of propriety, and at the same time dressed in very plain and poetical images.

Adam, to detain the angel, enters afterwards upon his own history, and relates to him the circumstances in which he found himself upon his creation, and his conversation with his Maker, and his first meeting with Eve. There is no part of the poem more proper to raise the attention of the reader than this discourse of our great ancestor; as nothing can be more surprising and delightful to us, than to hear the sentiments that arose in the first man, was yet new and fresh from the hands of our. The poet has interwoven every thing delivered upon this subject in holy writ with beautiful imaginations of his own, that can be conceived more just and natural whole episode. As our author knew this could not but be agreeable to his reader, he trow it into the relation of his six days' at reserved it for a distinct episode, that he give an opportunity of expatiating upon it large. Before I enter on this part of the cannot but take notice of two shining passages the dialogue between Adam and the angel. is that wherein our ancestor gives an account the pleasure he took in conversing with which contains a very noble moral :

while I sit with thee I seem in heav'n, sweeter thy discourse is to my ear a fruits of palm-trees (pleasante to thirst lunger both, from labour) at the hour sweet repast; they satiate, and soon fill, ugh pleasant; but thy words, with grace divine ted, bring to their sweetness no satiety.

her I shall mention is that in which the es a reason why he should be glad to hear Adam was about to relate :

that day was absent, as befel, d on a voyage uncouth and obscure, in excursion towards the gates of hell r'd in full legion (such command we had) se that none thence issued forth a spy, semy, while God was in his work, he incens'd at such eruption bold, necelon with creation might have mix'd.

is no question but our poet drew the image follows from that in Virgil's sixth book, neas and the Sibyl stand before the adagates, which are there described as shut place of torments, and listen to the groans, of chains, and the noise of iron whips, heard in those regions of pain and sorrow.

—Fast, we found, fast shut, fismal gates, and barricado'd strong;
ong ere our approaching, heard within
, other than the sound of dance or song, ent, and loud lament, and furious rage.

then proceeds to give an account of his and sentiments immediately after his creaw agreeably does he represent the posture he found himself, the beautiful landscape inded him, and the gladness of heart which i him on that occasion !

—As new wak'd from soundest sleep, n the flow'ry herb I found me laid my sweet, which with his beams the sun dry'd, and on the reeking moisture fed.
h toward heaven my wond'ring eyes I turn'd, and awhile the ample sky : till rais'd w'k instinctive motion, up I sprung, herward endeavouring, and upright on my feet. About me round I saw like, and shady woods, and sunny plains, quid lapse of murmuring streams; by these,
resthat liv'd and mov'd, and walk'd, or flew, on the branches warbling: all things smil'd fragrance, and with joy my heart o'erflow'd.

afterward described as surprised at his see, and taking a survey of himself and works of nature. He likewise is repre-discovering, by the light of reason, that ery thing about him, must have been the ome Being infinitely good and powerful, is Being had a right to his worship and His first address to the Sun, and to of the creation which made the most disror—Nos. 51 & 52.

linguished figure, is very imagination :

"Thou Sun," said I,
And thou enlighten'd Ye hills, and dales, y
And ye that live and Tell, if ye saw, how

His next sentiment, sleep he fancies himself falling away into nothing admired. His dream, the consciousness of his removal into the garden reception, are also circ and grounded upon what

These, and the like part of the work, have novelty, at the same t graces of nature.

They are such as nor have thought of; though they seem to rise of the which he treats. In a tural, they are not obvi racter of all fine writing

The impression which of life left in the mind of with great strength and the several beasts and before him is very beautiful

—Each bird and Approaching two and two With blandishment; each I nam'd them as they pass'd

Adam, in the next place which he held with his solitude. The poet here Being as making an essaying to the trial that reason had endued his creature, vine colloquy, the impossible though he was the inhabit of the whole creation, w society of some rational take those blessings with is supported chiefly by the without other poetical ornaments in the whole poem. amines the justness and the more he will find him poet has wonderfully presty and condescension same time, that of human creature, as particularly

Thus I presumptuous : as As with a smile more bright — I with leave of speech And humble deprecation
"Let not my words offend My Maker, be propitious

Adam then proceeds second sleep, and of the the formation of Eve. awakened in him at the s finely :

Under his forming hand Manlike, but diff'rent sex That what seem'd fairer Meen, or in her summer
And in her looks, which Sweetness into my heart And into all things from The spirit of love and

erty. I am obliged to conceal all I know of the Bounteous," who lends at the ordinary rate, give men of less fortune opportunities of safer advantages. He conceals, under a distant behaviour, a bleeding compassionish tenderness. This is governed by exact circumspection, that there is no wanting in the person whom he is to serve, he is guilty of no improper expenses. This Tom; but who dare say it of so known the same care I was forced to use some in the report of another's virtue, and said of a hundred, because the man I pointed to. Actions of this kind are popular, being invidious; for every man of ordinary eyes looks upon a man who has this known in his nature as a person ready to be his in such terms as he ought to expect it; healthy, who may envy such a character, injury to its interests, but by the imitation which the good citizens will rejoice to be known not how to form to myself a greater than life, than in what is the practice of my men whom I could name, that make the improvement of their own fortunes, they do not also advance those of other would languish in poverty without that. In a nation where there are so many to be supported, I know not whether he is a good subject who does not embark of his fortune with the state, to whose views the security of the whole. This is an immediate way of laying an obligation many, and extending your benignity the man can possibly who is not engaged in.

But he who trades, besides giving the part of this sort of credit he gives his say, in all occurrences of life, have his eye wing want from the door of the industrious, being the unhappy upright man from bankruptcy without this benignity, pride or vengeance itate a man to choose the receipt of half from one whom he has undone, rather whole from one to whom he has shown this benignity is essential to the character of a trader, and any man who designs to enjoy with honour and self-satisfaction: nay, it is hard to maintain, that the practice of good and industrious men would carry them even to his profit than indulging the of serving and obliging the fortunate. Arguments on this subject, in order to incline us to those who want them most, after the: "We must always consider the necessities, and govern ourselves accordingly. My man, when he has repaid you, is upon with you; but the person whom you favour a loan, if he be a good man, will think your debt after he has paid you. The good and the conspicuous are not obliged by the you do them; they think they conferred a when they received one. Your good offices are suspected, and it is with them the same expect their favour as to receive it. But below you, who knows, in the good you of him, you respected himself more than his necessities, does not act like an obliged man only from whom he has received a benefit, but who are capable of doing him one. And little office he can do for you, he is so far from denying it, that he will labour to extenuate his actions and expressions. Moreover the regard to what you do to a notice of no further than but what you do to a man, provided always that he is a raises the affections toward character (of which there are

There is nothing gains so much as his own practice about what act of benignity Spectator. Alas! that I compass: and I think that my patronage are either circumstances bear an affinity for, I am able to do at the tell the town, that on Friday April, there will be performed a concert of vocal and instrumental music in the benefit of Mr. Edward Keble's children; and that this Mr. Powell hopes all the good will favour him, whom the Timon, Lear, and Orestes night, when he hazards all approbation in the humble Falstaff.—T.

No. 347.] TUESDAY

Quis furor, o cives! quæ

What blind, detested fit Such horrid licence to

I do not question but have been very much surprised they have met with in our cities of men among us, late Mohocks. I find the opinion of their origin and designs, is so much that very many indeed there were ever any terror which spread itself some years since on account in most people's memories appeared there was not the general consternation.

The late panic fear was deep and penetrating pain. These will have it, that the spectres and apparitions towns and villages in, though they were never seen. Others are apt to say are a kind of bull-beggar, married men, and masters deter their wives and daughters at unreasonable hours; them the "Mohocks" will of the same nature when they bid their children head and Bloody-bones.

For my own part, I am reason for the great alarm in upon this occasion; I must own, that I am in a following pieces are genuine more so, because I am name, by which the emblems altogether conformable to

I shall only further in some time since I received a manifesto, though, for I think fit to publish them ours for the maliciously

enclosed our
and pleasure
the public, by
We do not particular,

KALADAR, ocks."

in Kaladar,

nation, from ous city, of arms, noses, England, by subjects; in y from those
n it, as if we abettied any nts, thought
detestation
proceedings;
f any person
nd, hurt, da-
limbs, other-
the said per-to such as d redress of h committed
be cured at
of those hos-
at purpose.
ther through se penalties
a persons of notify to the down or as-ful business,
our order;
such person,
gain, and de-
is able.

ry our good on any pre-
h from their rs of eleven
upon man,
istan's shall

between the
ed, that our
the close of herein not-ver they are shall always as are least asure, that ublish their nooks, and y not be in

we chiefly
ex to Drury-
; and that
subjects do

each of them keep within the respective quarters we have allotted to them. Provided, nevertheless, that nothing herein contained shall in any wise be construed to extend to the hunters, who have our full licence and permission to enter into any part of the town wherever their game shall lead them.

"And whereas we have nothing more at our imperial heart than the reformation of the cities of London and Westminster, which to our unspeakable satisfaction we have in some measure already effected, we do hereby earnestly pray and exhort all husbands, fathers, housekeepers, and masters of families, in either of the aforesaid cities, not only to repair themselves to their respective habitations at early and seasonable hours, but also to keep their wives and daughters, sons, servants, and apprentices, from appearing in the streets at those times and seasons which may expose them to military discipline, as it is practised by our good subjects the Mohocks; and we do further promise on our imperial word that as soon as the reformation aforesaid shall be brought about, we will forthwith cause all hostility to cease.

"Given from our court at the Devil-tavern, X. "March 15, 1712."

No. 348.] WEDNESDAY, APRIL 9, 1712.

Invidiam placare parvas, virtute relicta?—Hos. 2 Sat. in 12.
To shun detraction, would'st thou virtue fly?

"MR. SPECTATOR,

"I HAVE not seen you lately at any of the places where I visit, so that I am afraid you are wholly unacquainted with what passes among my part of the world, who are, though I say it, without controversy, the most accomplished and best bred of the town. Give me leave to tell you, that I am extremely discomposed when I hear scandal, and am an utter enemy to all manner of detraction, and think it the greatest meanness that people of distinction can be guilty of. However, it is hardly possible to come into company where you do not find them pulling one another to pieces, and that from no other provocation but that of hearing any one commended. Merit, both as to wit and beauty is become no other than the possession of a few trifling people's favour, which you cannot possibly arrive at, if you have really any thing in you that is deserving. What they would bring to pass is, to make all good and evil consist in report, and wild whispers, calumnies, and impertinencies, to have the conduct of those reports. By this means, innocents are blas'd upon their first appearance in town; and there is nothing more required to make a young woman the object of envy and hatred, than to deserve love and admiration. This abominable endeavour to suppress or lessen every thing that is praiseworthy is as frequent among the men as the women. If I can remember what passed at a visit last night, it will serve as an instance that the sexes are equally inclined to defamation, with equal malice and impotence. Jack Triplett came into my Lady Airy's about eight of the clock. You know the manner we sit at a visit, and I need not describe the circle; but Mr. Triplett came in, introduced by two tapers supported by a spruce servant, whose hat is under a cap till my lady's candles are all lighted up, and the hour of ceremony begins; I say Jack Triplett came in, and singing (for he is really good company) 'Every feature charming creature'—he went on, 'It is a most unreasonable thing, that cannot go peaceably to see their friends, but orderers are let loose. Such a shape! such what a glance was that as her chariot passed!"—My lady herself interrupted him; "Pray, his fine thing!"—"I warrant," says another, "creature I was telling your ladyship of just 'You were telling of?' says Jack; 'I wish you were so happy as to have come in and heard or I have not words to say what she is; but recable height, a modest air, a virgin shame, patience of being beheld amidst a blaze of sound charms.'—The whole room flew—'Oh, Mr. Triplett!'—When Mrs. Loft, a prude, said she knew whom the gentleman but she was indeed, as he civilly represented patient of being beheld—Then turning to next to her—'The most unbred creature I saw!' Another pursued the discourse: 'As madam, as you may think her, she is ex- belied if she is the novice she appears; she t week at a ball till two in the morning; Mr. t knows whether he was the happy man that ure of her home; but'—This was followed e particular exception that each woman in n made to some peculiar grace or advantage; Mr. Triplett was beaten from one limb and to another, till he was forced to resign the woman. In the end, I took notice Triplett ed all this malice in his heart; and saw in intenance, and a certain waggish shrug, that igned to repeat the conversation: I therefore discourse die, and soon after took an occasion commend a certain gentleman of my acquaint- for a person of singular modesty, courage, ty, and withal as a man of an entertaining sation, to which advantages he had a shape inner peculiarly graceful. Mr. Triplett, who man's man, seemed to hear me with patience a commend the qualities of his mind. He heard indeed but that he was a very honest and no fool; but for a fine gentleman, he ak pardon. Upon no other foundation than fr. Triplett took occasion to give the gentle- pedigree, by what methods some part of the was acquired, how much it was beholden to a age for the present circumstances of it: after could see nothing but a common man in his a, his breeding, or understanding.

hus, Mr. Spectator, this impertinent humour inishing every one who is produced in conver- to their advantage, runs through the world; am, I confess, so fearful of the force of ill a, that I have begged of all those who are my ishers never to commend me, for it will but my frailties into examination; and I had be unobserved, than conspicuous for disputed tions. I am confident a thousand young , who would have been ornaments to society, from fear of scandal, never dared to exert elves in the polite arts of life. Their lives ased away in an odious rusticity, in spite of advantages of person, genius, and fortune.

is a vicious terror of being blamed in some elined people, and a wicked pleasure in sup- og them in others; both which I recommend r spectatorial wisdom to animadvert upon: ! you can be successful in it, I need not say uch you will deserve of the town; but new ill owe to you their beauty, and new wits me.

"I am, Sir,

"Your most obedient humble Servant,

"MARY."

No. 349.] THURSDAY

—Quos ille timor Maximus haud urget.
In ferrum mens prona Mortis— LUCAN.

Thrice happy they be Who that worst fear, Hence they no cares
But rash undaunted Provoke approaching
To spare that life which

I AM very much pleased of Phalaris,* to one young man of great merit, he comforts the afflicted memory, as follows:—I had set a kind of seal placed him out of the that, while he lived, he of falling away from which he was possessed reputation, and deter-

This, among other why we are naturally into a man's praise to Whilst he is capable to retract our opinion we have conceived of appear to us under a does at present. In cannot be called happy it be pronounced viclusion of it.

It was upon this co being asked whether himself, deserved me must first see us die, tion can be answered

As there is not a m to a good man than change, so there is n keep up a uniformity the beauty of his cha-

The end of a man's winding up of a well- cipal persons still a fate is which they un person in the Greci death has not been or other, and censur the genius or princip scanted on it. Mont particular in setting of Petronius Arbitr thinks he discovers mind and resolution Cato, or Socrates.

polite author's affect his remarks, and me caped the observation this course of reflect that he died in the s he lived: but as hi dissolute, the indiffer close of it is to be lo carelessness and levi resolution of Socrate motives, the consciou

* The reader hardly n of the epistles of Phalaris; but if the letters who wrote them.

BRITISH ESSAYISTS.

ingenious
with gaiety ve found a ryman Sir

ous for ent
t and plea-
au epistle
ke a second s respected

e suffered.
o conspicu-
e last. He rt upon the table; and e instances
always en-
ary occur-
th his life.
or affected.
head from
to produce nd; and as of immor-
sorrow and as he had fy him.

n from this e sufficient that what n would be u as well in e sanctity of

nstance of a more intre-
g moments of the most et with this ions in Por-

gal, had in-emper of
and set the Moluc was n he himself
pared for the
He was, in-
at he did not the last de-

the fatal con-
children and e put an end
cipal officers,
they should
at they should
was carried,
from him as
was carried
n open litter,
uraging them
religion and to go against t agonies, he his army, and erward ended
e Moors. He engagement,
was again re-
finger on his ra who stood

about him, he died a few moments after in that posture.—L

No. 350.] FRIDAY, APRIL 11, 1721.

Ea animi elatio quæ cernitur in periculis, et iustitia vacat pugnatque pro suis commodis, in vitio est.—TULL.

That elevation of mind which is displayed in dangers, if it wants justice, and fights for its own conveniency, is vicious.

CAPTAIN SENTRY was last night at the club, and produced a letter from Ipswich, which his correspondent desired him to communicate to his friend the Spectator. It contained an account of an engagement between a French privateer, commanded by one Dominick Pottiere, and a little vessel of that place laden with corn, the master whereof, as I remember, was one Goodwin. The Englishman defended himself with incredible bravery, and beat off the French, after having been boarded three or four times. The enemy still came on with greater fury, and hoped by his number of men to carry the prize; till at last the Englishman, finding himself sink apace, and ready to perish, struck; but the effect which this singular gallantry had upon the captain of the privateer was no other than an unmanly desire of vengeance for the loss he had sustained in his several attacks. He told the Ipswich man in speaking-trumpet, that he would not take him aboard, and that he stayed to see him sink. The Englishman at the same time observed a disorder in the vessel which he rightly judged to proceed from the disdain which the ship's crew had of their captain's intemperance. With this hope he went into his boat, and approached the enemy. He was taken in by the sailors in spite of their commander: but, though they received him against his command, they treated him, when he was in the ship, in the manner he directed. Pottiere caused his men to hold Goodwin while he beat him with a stick, till he fainted with loss of blood and rage of heart; after which he ordered him into irons, without allowing him any food, but such as one or two of the men stole to him under peril of the like usage: and having kept him several days overwhelmed with the misery, stench, hunger, and soreness, he brought him to Calais. The governor of the place was soon acquainted with all that had passed, dismissed Pottiere from his charge with ignominy, and gave Goodwin all the relief which a man of honour would bestow upon an enemy barbarously treated, to recover the imputation of cruelty upon his prince and country.

When Mr. Sentry had read his letter, full of many other circumstances which aggravate the barbarity, he fell into a sort of criticism upon magnanimity and courage, and argued that they were inseparable; and that courage, without regard to justice and humanity, was no other than the fierceness of a wild beast. "A good and truly bold spirit," continued he, "is ever actuated by reason, and sense of honour and duty. The affectation of a spirit exerts itself in an impudent aspect, an overbearing confidence, and a certain negligence giving offence. This is visible in all the cocky youths you see about this town, who are noisy assemblies, unawed by the presence of wise and virtuous men; in a word, insensible of all the honours and decencies of human life. A shameful fellow takes advantage of merit clothed with modesty and magnanimity, and, in the eyes of little people, appears sprightly and agreeable: while the man of resolution and true gallantry is overlooked and regarded, if not despised. There is a propriety and I believe what you scholars call just e, in opposition to turgid and bombast may give you an idea of what I mean. modesty is the certain indication of a t, and impudence the affectation of it. ites with judgment, and never rises into araths, manifests the true force of genius; mer, he who is quiet and equal in all his is supported in that deportment by what ll true courage. Alas! it is not so easy be a brave man as the unthinking part of nagine. To dare is not all that there is privateer we were just now talking of ss enough to attack his enemy, but not f mind enough to admire the same quality that enemy in defending himself. Thus d little mind was wholly taken up in the ard to the prize of which he failed, and done to his own vessel; and therefore honest man, who defended his own from manner as he would a thief that should s equally disappointed, and had not spirit consider, that one case would be laudable, her criminal. Malice, rancour, hatred, are what tear the breasts of mean men ut fame, glory, conquests, desires of op-to pardon and oblige their opposers, are in the minds of the gallant." The cap-his discourse with a specimen of his ng; and gave us to understand that he French author on the subject of justness gallantry. "I love," said Mr. Sentry, who mixes the rules of life with annotawriters. My author," added he, "in his pon epic poetry, takes occasion to speak e quality of courage drawn in the two haracters of Turnus and Æneas. He rage the chief and greatest ornament of ut in Æneas are many others which out-among the rest, that of piety. Turnus is, all along painted by the poet full of os-his language haughty and vain-glorious, his honour in the manifestation of his neas speaks little, is slow to action, and a sort of defensive courage. If equipage s make Turnus appear more courageous as, conduct and success prove Æneas it than Turnus."—T.

J. SATURDAY, APRIL 12 1712.

le cinnis domus inclinata recumbit.

VIRG. Æn. xii. 59.

thee the fortunes of our house depend.

ook into the three great heroic poems appeared in the world, we may observe are built upon very slight foundations.
d near 300 years after the Trojan war; e writing of history was not then in use Greeks, we may very well suppose that n of Achilles and Ulysses had brought very few particulars to his knowledge; re is no question but he has wrought into ms such of their remarkable adventures l talked of among his contemporaries. y of Æneas, on which Virgil founded was likewise very bare of circumstances, t meats afforded him an opportunity of g it with fiction, and giving a full range to his own invention. V has interwoven, in the co cipal particulars, which among the Romans, of A ment in Italy.

The reader may find an story, as collected out of
as it was received among Halicarnassus.

Since none of the critic fable with relation to this not, perhaps, be amiss to far as regards my present into the abridgement above the character of Æneas gods, and a superstitious oracles, and predictions.

served his character in the given a place in his poet phesies which he found r and tradition. The poet they came down to him, after his own manner,

more natural, agreeable,
very many readers have crous prophecy which one to the Trojans in the thir fore they had built their be reduced by hunger to e when they hear that this stances that had been tra the history of Æneas, th very well in taking not above mentioned acquaint foretold Æneas, he should till his companions should accordingly, upon his lan eating their flesh upon c other conveniences, they themselves; upon which merrily, "We are eating mediately took the hint, a cluded the prophecy to b not think it proper to ou in the history of Æneas, consider with how much it, and taken off every appeared improper for a p The prophetess who fore as the person who discov

Heus etiam menas conamim See, we devour the plates on Such an observation, mouth of a boy, would any other of the company the changing of the Troja which is the most viol Æneid, and has given off be accounted for the same fore he begins that relati was going to tell appear was justified by tradition me that this change of t circumstance in the histo has given a place to the s account of the heathen m

None of the critics I sidered the fable of the taken notice how the tr founded authorizes those the most exceptionable.

BRITISH ESSAYISTS.

to the curious

Milton's poem
Iliad or Æneid.

to insert every is fable. The
sider, is raised
e, wherein we ble than any woman to eat overcome by followed her ex-

s, Milton has fables that in-posed of these
y beautiful and s whole story rit, or rather on of what the

ted the longer the disposition
the principal
more story in

y other in the e globe, and
the night, as el of the sun,

of those beau-
duces this his examined the

out one which he again re-
very, sinks by garden, and t issued from p, as we have

as possible in le of Homer,
nurs and cha-

nferral agent,
tion of man.
gh the garden,

order to find
d to tempt our something in it

or dry
d on might find
e found

il,
btle wiles.

cription of the le to a divine
on of nature.

as curst, as a
from all parts,
the nostrils of

idea of Adam worship, and raise and ado-

nd'd hat breathe
at praise

an pair, olt

our two first
It proceeds passion, and is managed with reason, not with heat. It is as a dispute as we may suppose might have happen in Paradise, had men continued happy and im-cent. There is a great delicacy in the moralit which are interspersed in Adam's discourse, a which the most ordinary reader cannot but ta-notice of. That force of love which the father mankind so finely describes in the eighth book, a which is inserted in my last Saturday's pap shows itself here in many fine instances; as in the fond regards he casts towards Eve at her parting from him:

Her long with ardent look his eye pursu'd Delighted, but desiring more her stay.
Oft he to her his charge of quick return Repeated; she to him as oft engag'd To be return'd by noon amid the bow'r.

In his impatience and amusement during her absence:

Adam the while,
Waiting desirous her return, had wove Of choicest flow'rs a garland to adorn Her tresses, and her rural labours crown.
As reapers oft are wont their rural queen, Great joy he promis'd to his thoughts, and new Solace in her return, so long delay'd.

But particularly in that passionate speech, where seeing her irrecoverably lost, he resolves to part with her, rather than to live without her:

Some cursed fraud
Of enemy hath beguil'd thee, yet unknown,
And me with thee hath ruin'd: for with thee Certain my resolution is to die:
How can I live without thee? How forego Thy sweet converse and love so dearly join'd, To live again in these wild woods forlorn?
Should God create another Eve, and I Another rib afford, yet loss of thee Would never from my heart; no, no! I feel The link of nature draw me: flesh of flesh, Bone of my bone thou art, and from thy state Mine never shall be parted, bliss or woe!

The beginning of this speech, and the preparation to it, are animated with the same spirit as the conclusion, which I have here quoted.

The several wiles which are put in practice by the tempter, when he found Eve separated from her husband, the many pleasing images of nature which are intermixed in this part of the story, with a gradual and regular progress to the fatal catastrophe are so very remarkable, that it would be superfluous to point out their respective beauties.

I have avoided mentioning any particular similitudes in my remarks on this great work, because I have given a general account of them in a paper on the first book. There is one, however, in this part of the poem, which I shall here quote, as it is not only very beautiful, but the closest of all in the whole poem; I mean that where the serpent is described as rolling forward in all his pride, as animated by the evil spirit, and conducting Eve to his destruction, while Adam was at too great a distance from her to give her his assistance. These several particulars are all of them wrought into the following similitude:

Hope elevates, and joy
Brightens his crest; as when a wandering bee, Compact of unctuous vapour, which the night Condenses, and the cold envious round, Kindled through agitation to a flame, (Which oft, they say, some evil spirit attends) Hovering and blazing with delusive light, Misleads th' amazed night-wanderer from his way To bogs and mires, and oft through pond or pool, There swallow'd up and lost, from succour far.

The secret intoxication of pleasure, with all the flushings of guilt and joy, which the poet sets in our first parents upon eating the forbidden fruit, to those flaggings of spirit, damps of mind and mutual accusations which succeed it, are adorned with a wonderful imagination, and denote a very natural sentiments.

Dido, in the fourth Aeneid, yielded to that temptation which ruined her, Virgil tells us she trembled, the heavens were filled with lightning, and the nymphs howled upon mountain tops. Milton, in the same poetical as described all nature as disturbed upon eating the forbidden fruit :

ring, her rash hand in evil hour, reaching to the fruit, she pluck'd, she ate :
felt the wound, and Nature, from her seat g, through all her works gave signs of woe all was lost.

Adam's falling into the same guilt, the sensation appears a second time in convulsions :

—He scrupled not to eat at his better knowledge : not deceiv'd, only overcome with female charm, trembled from her entrails, as again sighs, and nature gave a second groan ; he w'd, and, muttering thunder, some sad drops at completing of the mortal sin.

Adam's nature suffered by the guilt of our first parents, the symptoms of trouble and consternation wonderfully imagined, not only as prodigies, but as marks of her sympathizing in the fall.

Adam's converse with Eve, after having eaten of the forbidden fruit, is an exact copy of that between Adam and Juno in the fourteenth Iliad. Juno approaches Jupiter with the girdle which she received from Venus ; upon which he tells her, she appeared more charming and desirable than ever done before, even when their loves were at the height. The poet afterward describes Adam reposing on a summit of Mount Ida, which he found under them a bed of flowers, the lotus, the hyacinth, and the hyacinth : and concludes his description with their falling asleep.

The reader compare this with the following in Milton, which begins with Adam's speech never did thy beauty since the day when we first and wedded thee, adorn'd with all perfections, so inflame my sense with ardour to enjoy thee, fairer now than ever, bounty of this virtuous tree.

He said he, and forbore not glance or toy of amorous intent, well understood Eve, whose eye darted contagious fire.
Her hand he seized, and to a shady bank, shaded overhead with verdant roof embower'd, led her, nothing loath ; flowers were the couch, hyacinths, and violets, and asphodel, and hyacinths, Earth's freshest softest lap, where they their fill of love and love's disport took largely, of their mutual guilt the seal, in silence of their sin, till dewy sleep rested them.

It seems as if the poet had studied Homer, and that he more resembled him in the greatness of his genius, than Milton, I think I should have had a very imperfect account of his beauties, if I had not observed the most remarkable passages in his works like parallels in these two great authors. In the course of these criticisms, have taken many particular lines and expressions translated from the Greek poet ; but as I thought this would have appeared too minute and tedious, I have purposely omitted them. The greater incidents, however, being shown in the same nature in Homer, I have also guarded against the charge of being ignorant.—L.

No. 352.] MONEY.

—Si ad honestatem
est, aut certe omni pondere liqua omnia.—TULL.

If we be made for honesty, certainly to be estimated things.

WILL HONEYCOMB.
Yesterday that the conversation of late years, that a fine matter to start a discussion in with the talk he gave takes notice, that the sun which he supposes not mentioned by any age. "Men," said he they ever did since the
If you read the tragedians the artful men, and advanced very far in years and sallies of youth ;
the young have taken you shall have a man false, and intriguing, cozen, and beguile. At the latter end of King a rascal of any eminence of resort for conversation what relates to the important regard to the fashionable, that young a certain neglect of simple, and worthy of yet worse than they are general turn of mind not any remaining value ; preferring the gain their ends, to the when they come in con-All this is due to the prevails, of being valued their point ; in a word, and unexperienced pe-
lived force of cunning. upon the various faces of a rascal, puts on to impose, a great authority but truth and ingenuity even upon a man's fortune.

"Truth and reality appearance, and many things be good for any better ; for why does to be that which he is good to have such a counterfeit and dissimulation of some real excellence in the world for a man is really to be what he sides, that it is many times good the pretence of a
and if a man have it not discovered to want it,

* Ingenuity seems to be

BRITISH ESSAYISTS.

warm in his p her eyes to hat fool talkrayers?' We our country,
h above the white shock-
quirrel or dorbridged piece
ure of being ous ass-race diversion to gure), it was poor animals to hear coun-
les make love
dam, this is ne diversion;
nobody might poor fellow's
g, might any never chats
l is supposed a sup. This ence to true
es virtue not
The sacred hor this kind
m promoting er example.
s is like vice ase him, but ld think the

servant,
lotspur,"

the Spartan
iour of their
was so much as soon have upon you as ar they were ed upon her
always subfluence upon ny could not not but die of London
all the young
h myself in rs, big looks,
server, would ians. I am
n, that I un-ch would be orrected the ere is scarce me, with a
ral swear inine, but the pt in every
by the scorn-
the swelling he 'prentice ger, and the f a country
bserving the als, it is not
of this town,

who are acquainted with these objects, ridicule rusticity. I have known a fellow with a burden on his head steal a hand down from his load, and a twirl the cock of a squire's hat behind him: while the offended person is swearing, or out of countenance, all the wag-wits in the highway are grinning in applause of the ingenious rogue that gave him the tip, and the folly of him who had not eyes round his head to prevent receiving it. These things arise from a general affectation of smartness, wit, and courage. Wycherley somewhere calls the pretensions this way, by making a fellow say, 'Red breeches are a certain sign of valour;' and Otway makes a man, to boast his agility, trip up a beggar on crutches. From such hints I beg a speculation on this subject: in the mean time I shall do all in the power of a weak old fellow in my own defence; for as Diogenes, being in quest of an honest man, sought for him when it was broad day-light with a lantern and candle, so I intend for the future to walk the streets with a dark lantern, which has a convex crystal in it; and if any man stares at me, I give fair warning that will direct the light full into his eyes. Thus, despairing to find men modest, I hope by this means to evade their impudence.

"I am, Sir, your humble Servant,
T. " SOPHROGENIUS."

No 355.] THURSDAY, APRIL 17, 1712.

Non ego mordaci distinxit carmine quinquan.
Ovid. Trist. l. 353.
I ne'er in gall dippt'd my envenom'd pen, Nor branded the bold front of shameless men.

I HAVE been very often tempted to write invectives upon those who have detracted from my work or spoken in derogation of my person; but I look upon it as a particular happiness, that I have always hindered my resentments from proceeding to the extremity. I once had gone through half a satire, but found so many motions of humanity rising in me towards the persons whom I had severely treated that I threw it into the fire without ever finishing. I have been angry enough to make several late epigrams and lampoons; and, after having admired them a day or two, have likewise committed them to the flames. These I look upon as so many sacrifices to humanity, and have received much great satisfaction from the suppressing such performances than I could have done from any reputation they might have procured me, or from any mortification they might have given my enemies, in case I had made them public. If a man has any talent for writing, it shows a good mind to forbear answering calumnies and reproaches in the same spirit of bitterness in which they are offered. But when a man has been at some pains in making suitable return to an enemy, and has the instruments of revenge in his hands, to let drop his wrath, and stifle his resentments, seems to have something in it great and heroic. There is a particular merit in such a way of forgiving an enemy; and the more violent and unprovoked the offence has been, the greater still the merit of him who thus forgives it.

I never met with a consideration that is more finely spun, and what has better pleased me, than one in Epictetus, which places an enemy in a new light, and gives us a view of him altogether different from that in which we are used to regard him. The sense of it is as follows: "Does a man reproach thee for being proud or ill-natured, envious or so norant or detracting? Consider with thyself his reproaches are true. If they are der that thou art not the person whom he s, but that he reviles an imaginary being, ps loves what thou really art, though he t thou appearest to be. If his reproaches if thou art the envious, ill-natured man he or, give thyself another turn, become ble, and obliging, and his reproaches of rally cease. His reproaches may indeed but thou art no longer the person whom ches."* apply this rule to myself; and when I satirical speech or writing that is aimed xamine my own heart, whether I deserve If I bring in a verdict against myself, I to rectify my conduct for the future in culars which have drawn the censure upon f the whole invective be grounded upon a I trouble myself no further about it, and my name at the head of it to signify no one of those fictitious names made use of or to introduce an imaginary character. ld a man be sensible of the sting of a re- so is a stranger to the guilt that is implied subject himself to the penalty, when he has never committed the crime? This is fortitude which every one owes to his own and without which it is impossible for a y merit or figure to live at peace with him- uality that abounds with wit and liberty. nous Monsieur Balzac, in a letter to the of France, who had prevented the publi- a book against him, has the following ich are a lively picture of the greatness visible in the works of that author: "If ew thing, it may be I should not be dis- ith the suppression of the first libel that use me; but since there are enough of ake a small library, I am secretly pleased number increased, and take delight in heap of stones that envy has cast at me ing me any harm."

hor here alludes to those monuments† of nations, which were mountains of stones n the dead bodies by travellers, that used ry one his stone upon it as they passed certain that no monument is so glorious ch is thus raised by the hands of envy. rt, I admire an author for such a temper e enables him to bear an undeserved re- thout resentment, more than for all the the finest satirical reply.

r I thought necessary to explain myself to those who have animadverted on this I to show the reasons why I have not to return them any formal answer. I er add, that the work would have been of use to the public had it been filled with flections and debates; for which reason ce turned out of my way to observe those s which have been made against it by norance. The common fry of scribblers, o other way of being taken notice of but ig what has gained some reputation in would have furnished me with business ad they found me disposed to enter the hem.

onclude with the fable of Boccacini's tra-sch. cap. 43 and 64, ed. Berk. 1674, 8vo. 101 99 e abundant monuments of the same kind in North e they are called "calms."

vellet, who was so pest hoppers in his ears, tha in great wrath to kill t author, "was troubling purpose. Had he pursue notice of them, the trou died of themselves in would have suffered not

No. 356.] FRID

—Aptissima q
Charior est illis homi

—The gods will gr
What their unerring
In goodness, as in gr Ah! that we lov'd ou

It is owing to pride, a certain self-existence, action that ever was p-knowledge the glory an The heart is treacherous our reflections go deep e the most honourable in actions. It is our natu selves into a belief, that thoughts, we find ours and divested of any vie vain-glory. But howev greatness may disdain a but from a noble impuls future regards in this stricter inquiry they will expect to be rewarded o heroic a pitch of virtue at. If the tenour of our tive than the desire to be Deity, it will necessari more than men, if we a prosperity and deprese Christian world has a L whose life and sufferings affliction, while the sen potence must give them

It is owing to the for straint with which men o they think they conform well as to the more odid that the word Christian first view all that is grea rous, and heroic. The m of the reward of worthy can bestow unseen, wh good to his slanderer, wh friend, never revengeful formed for the benefit of far from heroic virtues, nary duties of a Christian

When a man with a s the great catastrophe of ing emotions of heart m and sufferings of his Del occur to him, how will has often forgot them for the applause of a vain w past pleasures, which are How pleasing is the o steps our Almighty Leade his heavenly mansions!

similitude, and allegory,

* This paper was publish

About the new-arriv'd, in multitudes Th' ethereal people ran to hear and know, How all befel. They tow'rd the throne supreme Accountable made haste, to make appear,
 With righteous plea, their utmost vigilance,
 And easily approv'd: when the Most High Eternal Father, from his secret cloud Amidst, in thunder utter'd thus his voice.

The same Divine Person, who in the foregoing parts of this poem interceded for our first parents before their fall, overthrew the rebel angels, and created the world, is now represented as descending to Paradise, and pronouncing sentence upon the three offenders. The cool of the evening being a circumstance with which holy writ introduces this great scene, it is poetically described by our author, who has also kept religiously to the form of words in which the three several sentences were passed upon Adam, Eve, and the serpent. He has rather chosen to neglect the numerousness of his verse, than to deviate from those speeches which are recorded on this great occasion. The guilt and confusion of our first parents, standing naked before their judge, is touched with great beauty. Upon the arrival of Sin and Death into the works of the creation, the Almighty is again introduced as speaking to his angels that surrounded him.

See! with what heat these dogs of hell advance, To waste and havoc yonder world, which I So fair and good created, &c.

The following passage is formed upon that glorious image in holy writ, which compares the voice of an innumerable host of angels uttering hallelujahs, to the voice of mighty thunders, or of many waters:

He ended, and the heav'nly audience loud Sung hallelujah, as the sound of seas, Through multitude that sung: "Just are thy ways, Righteous are thy decrees in all thy works:
 Who can extenuate thee?"

Though the author, in the whole course of his poem, and particularly in the book we are now examining, has infinite allusions to places of Scripture, I have only taken notice in my remarks of such as are of a poetical nature, and which are woven with great beauty into the body of his fable. Of this kind is that passage in the present book, where, describing Sin and Death as marching through the works of nature, he adds,

—Behind her Death
 Close following pace for pace, mounted yet
 On his pale horse —

Which alludes to that passage in Scripture so wonderfully poetical, and terrifying to the imagination: "And I looked, and behold a pale horse, and his name that sat on him was Death, and Hell followed with him: and power was given unto them over the fourth part of the earth, to kill with sword, and with hunger, and with sickness, and with the beasts of the earth." Under this first head of celestial persons we must likewise take notice of the command which the angels received, to produce the several changes in nature, and sully the beauty of the creation. Accordingly they are represented as infecting the stars and planets with malignant influences, weakening the light of the sun, bringing down the winter into the milder regions of nature, planting winds and storms in several quarters of the sky, storing the clouds with thunder, and, in short, perverting the whole frame of the universe to the condition of its criminal inhabitants. As this is a noble incident in the poem, the following lines, in which we see the angels heaving up the earth, and placing it in a different

 before the lime image

Some
 The p
 From Obliqu

We are fernal ages
 us of them
 who would that he cou the earth v Africa, an fable. The greater ex astonishing
 the earth s dise. We the conste whole cre chaos, and

His fir angels is v a delightfu incident i
 than the t follows the expedition is describe any of the looked up works. M hints, and every incid unexpecte
 mensions
 those of th
 transform are suppos
 The beaut whole epis
 of these m it was con

The par sons, come art is no v
 the parts
 tation he g
 is wonderf pity and c involves fr
 ceeds from
 to pardon frailty of offended.
 he himself
 sive love fo
 I need no particular
 thodox wa
 great part which the
 is in a pa readers.

Adam a
 ing, are li
 not only i raise in ha
 and comm changes o
 in a disor

BRITISH ESSAYISTS.

ness; he is the anguish Creator for

lace

at

is presump-
gs that the inflicted on

en'd out
meet

rest more orse
at me

motion, and ve may supsturbed. I ich our first
which is so

right
d ar
ve:

able
!

mankind
dem'd,
ceed

of mankind,
idnight com-
wishing for his distress!

han fell)
black air,
oun,
and
and oft

ss passionate,
our. She is approaching
spirit of up-to the nature
ed the domi-
wherein she
to him, with something in

No
blowing,

Fell humble; and embracing them besought His peace, and thus proceeded in her plaint:
" Forsake me not thus, Adam! Witness, Heav'n, What love sincere, and reverence in my heart I bear thee, and unweeting have offended, Unhappily deceiv'd! Thy suppliant I beg, and clasp thy knees. Bereave me not (Whereon I live), thy gentle looks, thy aid, Thy counsel in this uttermost distress, My only strength and stay! Forlorn of thee, Whither shall I betake me? where subsist?
While yet we live (scarce one short hour, perhaps) Between us two let there be peace," &c.

Adam's reconciliation to her is worked up in the same spirit of tenderness. Eve afterward proposes to her husband, in the blindness of her despair, that to prevent their guilt from descending upon posterity, they should resolve to live childless; or, if that could not be done, they should seek their own deaths by violent methods. As those sentiments naturally engage the reader to regard the mother of mankind with more than ordinary commiseration, they likewise contain a very fine moral. The resolution of dying to end our miseries does not show such a degree of magnanimity as a resolution to bear them, and submit to the dispensations of Providence. Our author, has, therefore, with great delicacy, represented Eve as entertaining this thought, and Adam as disapproving it.

We are, in the next place, to consider the imaginary persons, or Death and Sin, who act a large part in this book. Such beautiful extended allegories are certainly some of the finest compositions of genius; but, as I have before observed, are no agreeable to the nature of an heroic poem. This Sin and Death is very exquisite in its kind, if not considered as a part of such a work. The truth contained in it are so clear and open, that I shall not lose time in explaining them; but shall only observe, that a reader, who knows the strength of the English tongue, will be amazed to think how the poet could find such apt words and phrases to describe the actions of those two imaginary persons and particularly in that part where death is exhibited as forming a bridge over the chaos; a well suitable to the genius of Milton.

Since the subject I am upon gives me an opportunity of speaking more at large of such shadows and imaginary persons as may be introduced in heroic poems, I shall beg leave to explain myself, a matter which is curious in its kind, and which not of the critics have treated of. It is certain Homer and Virgil are full of imaginary persons, who are very beautiful in poetry, when they are just short without being engaged in any series of action. Homer, indeed, represents Sleep as a person, and ascribes a short part to him in his Iliad; but we must consider, that though we now regard such person as entirely shadowy and unsubstantial, the heathens made statues of him, placed him in the temples, and looked upon him as a real deity. When Homer makes use of other allegorical persons, it is only in short expressions, which convey an ordinary thought to the mind in the most pleasing manner; and may rather be looked upon as poetical phrases, than allegorical descriptions. Instead of telling us that men naturally fly when they are terrified, he introduces the persons of Flight and Fear, who, he tells us, are inseparable companions. Instead of saying that the time was come when Apollo ought to have received his recompense, he tells us that the Hours brought him his reward. Instead of describing the effects which Minerva's arrow produced in battle, he tells us that the brains of it were encompassed by Terror, Rout, Discord, Fury, Pursuit, Massacre, and Death. In the same figure of speaking, he represents Victory as following Discord; Discord as the mother of funerals and mourning; Venus as dressed by the Graces; Belshazzar as wearing Terror and Consternation like a garment. I might give several other instances out of Homer, as well as a great many out of Virgil. Milton has likewise very often made use of the same way of speaking, as where he tells us that Victory sat on the right hand of the Messiah, when he marched forth against the rebel angels; that, at the rising of the sun, the Hours unbarred the gates of light; that Discord was the daughter of Sin. Of the same nature are those expressions, where, describing the singing of the nightingale, he adds, "Silence was pleased;" and upon the Messiah's bidding peace to the chaos, "Confusion heard his voice." I might add innumerable instances of our poet's writing in this beautiful figure. It is plain that these I have mentioned, in which persons of an imaginary nature are introduced, are such short allegories as are not designed to be taken in the literal sense, but only to convey particular circumstances to the reader, after an unusual and entertaining manner. But when such persons are introduced as principal actors, and engaged in a series of adventures, they take too much upon them, and are by no means proper for an heroic poem, which ought to appear credible in its principal parts, I cannot forbear therefore thinking, that Sin and Death are as improper agents in a work of this nature, as Strength and Necessity in one of the tragedies of Æschylus, who represented those two persons nailing down Prometheus to a rock; for which he has been justly censured by the greatest critics. I do not know any imaginary person made use of in a more sublime manner of thinking than that in one of the prophets, who, describing God as descending from heaven, and visiting the sins of mankind, adds that dreadful circumstance, "Before him went the Pestilence." It is certain that this imaginary person might have been described in all her purple spots. The Fever might have marched before her, Pain might have stood at her right hand, Frenzy on her left, and Death in her rear. She might have been introduced as gliding down from the tail of a comet, or darted upon the earth in a flash of lightning. She might have tainted the atmosphere with her breath. The very glaring of her eyes might have scattered infection. But I believe, every reader will think, that in such sublime writings the mentioning of her, as it is done in Scripture, has something in it more just, as well as great, than all that the most fanciful poet could have bestowed upon her in the richness of his imagination.

L.

No. 358.] MONDAY, APRIL 21, 1712

Despere in loco.—HOR. 4. Od. xii. l. ult.

Tis joyous folly that unbends the mind.—FRANCIS.

CHARLES LILLIE attended me the other day, and made me a present of a large sheet of paper, on which is delineated a pavement in Mosaic work, lately discovered at Stunsfield near Woodstock.* A person who has so much the gift of speech as Mr. Lillie, and can carry on a discourse without a reply, had great opportunity on that occasion to expatiate upon so fine a thing, I remember he drew from it was the floor of discord. Viewing the many gay authors, which care and anxiety forgetfulness who business, and were usually propose, and set out all around the which, joined to and agreeable produced the grace to the slow mixture of lots of flowers, with gay lights artificial falls of songs of love human life, and Such parties of the agreeable pages awakened to mirth and go entertainments there are a hundred one who is capable the first taste, society, overrated but equally rec sure of the who such collections as one might much spleen awkward gaiety an ill grace! of mine, who do chievious, airy, taken in what self is not what see a man, who descend from what denomination instead of that, only in doing with a secret co they know better mischievous to of some very m was started, an every man should which they have bler. The same each man, but whose estate was and laced hat jested themselves streets and fr There is no in gardner, but can where people h and yet scoured know a gentle head by watch the body to eas a man of so m is seldom merr the same time. men, I am hun * Engraved by Vertue in 1712. See an account of it in Gough's British Topography, vol. ii. p. 28.

titude of the abbey.

call unity of their representa-
who pretend jections to the further may man men. It ch mischief ow, but that of mind, and of imagination
common talent
of agreeable re some few out it is a tally when one ul but where in the second heightening
court, whose highest person ster. Merry and lively re-
sons, because as humorous man is in his not to lose
taking from he agreeable ne some idea to have given idea of any relation of pression than all who have court will be they will but asy a rate is y would omit
t before.—11.

22, 1712.

epellam.

to Ecl. a G.

ssue,
you.—WATSON.

observed that his usual cusinding what ng to himself
e with a cork
between us;
we saw the n say to himeve it." Sir
the should let.

that he was rted, and, re-Andrew, that
t. In short,
old us, in the eived a letter
n that his old
r David Dun-dow. "Hower think that er than I am,
n."

Will Honeycomb, who looks upon love as his particular province, interrupting our friend with a jolly laugh. "I thought, knight," said he, "thou hadst lived long enough in the world not to pin thy happiness upon one that is a woman, and a widow. I think that, without vanity, I may pretend to know as much of the female world as any man in Great Britain; though the chief of my knowledge consists in this, that they are not to be known." Will immediately, with his usual fluency, rambled into a recount of his own conquests. "I am now," says he,
"upon the verge of fifty" (though, by the way, we all knew he was turned of three score). "You may easily guess," continued Will, "that I have not lived so long in the world without having had some thoughts of settling in it, as the phrase is. To tell you truly, I have several times tried my fortune that way, though I cannot much boast of my success.

"I made my first addresses to a young lady in the country; but, when I thought things were pretty well drawing to a conclusion, her father happened to hear that I had formerly boarded with a surgeon the old put to-bede me his house, and within a fortnight after married his daughter to a fox-hunter in the neighbourhood.

"I made my next application to a widow, and attacked her so briskly, that I thought myself within a fortnight of her. As I waited upon her one morning, she told me, that she intended to keep foreign money and furniture in her own hand, and described me to call upon her attorney in Lyon's Inn, who would adjust with me what it was proper for me to add to it. I was so rebuffed by this overture that I never inquired either for her or her attorney afterwards.

"A few months after, I addressed myself to a young lady who was an only daughter, and of good family. I danced with her at several balls, squeezed her by the hand, said soft things to her and in short made no doubt of her heart; and though my fortune was no way equal to hers, I was in hope that her fond father would not deny her the man she had fixed her affections upon. But as I went one day to the house, in order to break the matter to him, I found the whole family in confusion, and heard, to my unspeakable surprise, that Miss Jenn was that very morning run away with the butler.

"I then courted a second widow, and am at a loss to this day how I came to miss her, for she had often commended my person and behaviour. Her maid indeed told me one day, that her mistress had said she never saw a gentleman with such a spindle pair of legs as Mr. Honeycomb.

"After this I laid siege to four heiresses successively, and, being a handsome young dog in those days, quickly made a breach in their hearts; but don't know how it came to pass, though I seldom failed of getting the daughter's consent, I could never in my life get the old people on my side.

"I could give you an account of a thousand other unsuccessful attempts, particularly of one which made some years since upon an old woman, whom I had certainly borne away with flying colours, her relations had not come pouring in to her assistance from all parts of England; nay, I believe should have got her at last, had not she been carried off by a hard frost."

As Will's transitions are extremely quick, I turned from Sir Roger, and applying himself to me told me there was a passage in the book I had considered last Saturday, which deserved to be written in letters of gold, and taking out a pocket Milton, re-ing lines, which are part of one of Adam's to Eve after the fall:—

— Oh! why did God wise! that peopled highest heaven its masculine, create at last vety on earth, this fair defect re, and not fill the world at once en, as angels, without feminine?
some other way to generate d? This mischief had not then befall'n, re that shall befall, innumerable ances on earth, through female shares, ight conjunction with this sex: for either l never find out fit mate; but such e misfortune brings him, or mistake;
m he wishes most shall seldom gain, h her perverseness; but shall see her gain'd r worse; or, if she love, withheld rels; or his happiest choice too late et already link'd, and wedlock-bound ll adversary, his hate or shame; adfinite calamity shall cause an life, and household peace confound.

ger listened to this passage with great attend, desiring Mr. Honeycomb to fold down the place, and lend him his book, the knight in his pocket, and told us that he would these verses again before he went to WEDNESDAY APRIL 23, 1712.

De paupertate Incentes, estate ferent.—HOR. 1 Ep. xvii. 43.

who all his wants conceals, re than he who all his wants reveals.—DUNCOMBE.

nothing to do with the business of this further than affixing the piece of Latin on of my paper; which I think a motto not e; since, if silence of our poverty is a re-tation, still more commendable is his mo-conceals it by a decent dress.

A. SPECTATOR,

e is an evil under the sun, which has not within your speculation, and is the censure, , and contempt, which some young fellows from particular persons, for the reasonsods they take to avoid them in general. y appearing in a better dress than may relation regularly consistent with a small and therefore may occasion a judgment of extravagance in other particulars: but the tage with which the man of narrow cir-es acts and speaks, is so feelingly set forth book called The Christian Hero, that the g to be otherwise is not only pardonable sary. Every one knows the hurry of con-hat are made in contempt of a person that be calamitous; which makes it very exo prepare one's self for the company of are of a superior quality and fortune, by g to be in a better condition than one is, such appearance shall not make us really a justice due to the character of one who and reflections from any particular person account, that such persons would inquire manner of spending his time; of which, o further information can be had than that is so many hours in his chamber, yet, if ared, to imagine that a reasonable creature, ith a narrow fortune, does not make the

of this retirement, would be a conclusion y uncharitable. From what has, or will be said, I hope no consequ plying, that I would ha more time than the comm require, or more money th may admit of, in the p with his betters: for, a that ought to be sacred sitions; for each irrecove ought to believe he sh And as to his dress, I sh than in the modest defen for being perfectly satisf vance of making a Moho him with laced and emb no means be thought to insinuating the advantag sertion which admits of of tolerable sense, dress better received by those one of much better part by the rigid notions of f ance falls within the cen him; his parts and learn and even upon these few intruded; for policy and him to be reserved amon himself only by the com Indeed among the injudi idiom, fine images, str fire,' and the rest, mad comely gravity, will mai reading, and the depth o

"All gentlemen of f and middle-aged, are apt too much upon their dress others in some measure tion. With what conf obliged to return the civ whose air and attire ha whom nevertheless the o though he is ashamed to public a manner. It is young fellow that affect teelly, might, with artifi pounds a year; as instea mourn in sackcloth, and portionably shabby; but this sum be to avert any leave him deserted by th he has, and prevent his p appearance of an easy fo making one, I don't kn vantage sometimes to th tain exclamations about marvellous surprise upon affected triumph upon it respect which the practi to appearances, withou tradesmen that wise and recommend themselves decorations upon their s the most eminent hand furnish them with. Wh a man of letters, than th ages and languages, wh conjunction with a pai column, and the extre spirit of maintaining a b among the grave and s (here I could be partic word apprentice to be and you may easily dist

BRITISH ESSAYISTS.

the whitest and
w; if indeed
s rails before
ded, and the
and what can f dress, than regular habit which upon
And though
ssary for the m have been r present sta-
sons. As to since I left modern phrase
a clean sys-
le jargon of
that, I have he perplexed
hereditarily
which severe
interims, the withstanding
fellow of no
understand the od of making of a profes-
man should enlarging a
and chance
—T.

24, 1712.

a omnis
En. vii. 514.
round;
ound.

letter from a

went to see a Upon the surprised with as exhibited myself that usic-meeting
indeed a little ality, of both
aterwauling, ance to have
icians them-
acquaintance
was forced to
I could not
would there-
account of the company
let me know
come from with you, I ough I durst
e playhouse,
man to one

l Servant,
t.ow, Esq."
a request, I
the cat-call.

In order to make myself a master of the subject, purchased one the beginning of last week, though not without great difficulty, being informed at two or three toy-shops that the players had lately bought them all up. I have since consulted many learned antiquaries in relation to its original, and find them very much divided among themselves upon that particular. A fellow of the Royal Society, who is my good friend, and a great proficient in the mathematical part of music, concludes, from the simplicity of its make, and the uniformity of its sound, that the cat-call is older than any of the inventions of Jubal. He observes very well, that musical instruments took their first rise from the notes of birds and other melodious animals; and "what," says he, "was more natural than for the first ages of mankind to imitate the voice of a cat, that lives under the same roof with them?" He added, that the cat had contributed more to harmony than any other animal; as we are not only beholden to her for this wind instrument, but for our string-music in general.

Another virtuoso of my acquaintance will not allow the cat-call to be older than Thespis, and is apt to think it appeared in the world soon after the ancient comedy; for which reason it has still its place in our dramatic entertainments. Nor must I here omit what a very curious gentleman, who is lately returned from his travels, has more than once assured me; namely, that there was lately dug up at Rome the statue of a Momus, who holds an instrument in his right hand very much resembling our modern cat-call.

There are others who ascribe this invention to Orpheus, and look upon the cat-call to be one of those instruments which that famous musician made use of to draw the beasts about him. It is certain that the roaring of a cat does not call together a greater audience of that species than this instrument if dexterously played upon in proper time and place.

But, notwithstanding these various and learned conjectures, I cannot forbear thinking that the cat-call is originally a piece of English music. Its resemblance to the voice of some of our British songsters, as well as the use of it, which is peculiar to our nation, confirms me in this opinion. It has at least received great improvements among us, whether we consider the instrument itself, or those several quavers and graces which are thrown into its playing of it. Every one might be sensible of this who heard that remarkable overgrown cat-caller which was placed at the centre of the pit, and presided over all the rest, at the celebrated performance lately exhibited at Drury-lane.

Having said thus much concerning the origin of the cat-call, we are in the next place to consider the use of it. The cat-call exerts itself to most advantage in the British theatre. It very much improves the sound of nonsense, and often goes along with the voice of the actor who pronounces it; the violin or harpsichord accompanies the Italian recitativo.

It has often supplied the place of the ancient chorus, in the words of Mr. ***. In short, a bi-poet has as great an antipathy to a cat-call as most people have to a real cat.

Mr. Collier, in his ingenious essay upon music has the following passage:

"I believe it is possible to invent an instrument that shall have a quite contrary effect to those musical ones now in use; an instrument that shall sit the spirits, and shake the nerves and curdle the blood, and inspire despair and cowardice and consternation, at a surprising rate. 'Tis probable the roaring of lions, the warbling of cats and screech-owls, together with a mixture of the howling of dogs, judiciously imitated and compounded, might go a great way in this invention. Whether such anti-music as this might not be of service in a camp, I shall leave to the military men to consider."

What this learned gentleman supposes in speculation, I have known actually verified in practice. The cat-call has struck a damp into generals, and frightened heroes off the stage. At the first sound of it I have seen a crowned head tremble, and a princess fall into fits. The humorous lieutenant himself could not stand it; nay, I am told that even Almanzor looked like a mouse, and trembled at the voice of this terrifying instrument.

As it is of a dramatic nature, and peculiarly appropriated to the stage, I can by no means approve the thought of that angry lover, who, after an unsuccessful pursuit of some years, took leave of his mistress in a serenade of cat-calls.

I must conclude this paper with the account I have lately received of an ingenious artist, who has long studied this instrument, and is very well versed in all the rules of the drama. He teaches to play on it by book, and to express by it the whole art of criticism. He has his bass and his treble cat-call: the former for tragedy, the latter for comedy; only in tragi-comedies they may both play together in concert. He has a particular squeak, to denote the violation of each of the unities, and has different sounds to show whether he aims at the poet or the player. In short, he teaches the smut-note, the fustian-note, the stupid note, and has composed a kind of air that may serve as an act-tune to an incorrigible play, and which takes in the whole compass of the cat-call.—L.

No. 362.] FRIDAY, APRIL 25, 1712.

Laudibus arguitur vini vinosus.—Hos. 1 Ep. xix. 6.
He praises wine; and we conclude from thence,
He lik'd his glass on his own evidence.

"MR. SPECTATOR, Temple, April 24.

"SEVERAL of my friends were this morning got together over a dish of tea in very good health, though we had celebrated yesterday with more glasses than we could have dispensed with, had we not been beholden to Brooke and Hellier. In gratitude therefore to those good citizens, I am, in the name of the company to accuse you of great negligence in overlooking their merit who have imported true and generous wine, and taken care that it should not be adulterated by the retailers before it comes to the tables of private families, or the clubs of honest fellows. I cannot imagine how a Spectator can be supposed to do his duty, without frequent resumption of such subjects as concern our health, the first thing to be regarded, if we have a mind to relish any thing else. It would therefore very well become your spectatorial vigilance, to give it in orders to your officer for inspecting signs, that in his march he would look into the itinerants who deal in provisions, and inquire where they buy their several wares. Ever since the decease of Colly-Molly-Puff, of agreeable and noisy memory, I cannot say I have observed any thing sold in carts, or carried by horse or ass, or, in fine, in any moving market, which is not perished or patrifined; witness the wheelbarrows of rotten raisins, almonds, figs, and currants, v dressed in a

You should c soned for the poor parents s they can have

When poisons
dear, how can we eat and dri

above-mentio
able to us of l
tom among the honours who h

much more doe
the death of m
of your officers

our health you
their fellow su

serve to wear.
good, that all v
in that behalf.

sions should in who mixes win

that the drinke
day after taking

der, and the ju present such c

mitigation of th
it can be broug

ter, upon proo
wine, or right

Port: but his it to be anothe

of wilful murd
an unlawful ac

is therefore wit
which a man v

designed only
he whipped thr

year at the Ter An ill intention

alleviation, be be too great s

well as cruelty
by preparing l

know, may be cent when apar

insured our saf
from our cups

and thanks of
to remind them

"MR. SP

"I am a per
lege, read muc

of the world t
map taught me

study, but beca
conversing get

unfit for the so finement I con versation, and

and little enter

some measure mortification o

unless the disc
forcing myself

the politest con

BRITISH ESSAYISTS.

tracted: but to act in public had a hand
was.

In addition, when nature admires that I really judged all my avowal to the
I not new to ve possessing e thing I had free and ges-table to her I ent summit declined. The sees my pas-sion's speaking of it spect to her kes my value is consistent mortality, and se she knows
rather than
fortune must eak my heart
considerable
ess of nature.
you the char-
has address-
to her lover,
in his passion,
ed by as great modesty, the over but real
now are her so just and
and what we have neither

Such is her
f every man to believe
r. I will not owing to selfness; the best
g uncommon
s' character.
ou will oblige
and in a more

the Servant.
ALL CRYON."

26, 1712

image
p. 260 n. 36-
and fear,
are—Davies
in describing our first pa-
ment that had ually passing
high remorse, ed hope, to a t the end of a prostrating
watering the not join this red up their where their

judge appeared to them when he pronounced the sentence:

— They forthwith to the place Repentant, where he judg'd them, prostrate fell Before him, repent, and both confess'd Humbly their faults; and pardon begg'd, with tears Watering the ground.—

There* is a beauty of the same kind in a tragedy of Sophocles, where Œdipus, after having put out his own eyes, instead of breaking his neck from the palace battlements (which furnishes so elegant an entertainment for our English audience), deems that he may be conducted to Mount Citharon, in order to end his life in that very place where he was exposed in his infancy, and where he should then have died, had the will of his parents been executed.

As the author never fails to give a poetical turn to his sentiments, he describes in the beginning of this book the acceptance which these their prayers met with in a short allegory formed upon that beautiful passage in holy writ, "And another angel came and stood at the altar, having a golden censer; and there was given unto him much incense, that he should offer it with the prayers of all saints upon the golden altar, which was before the throne: and the smoke of the incense, which came with the prayers of the saints, ascended up before God."

— To be even their prayers Flow up, nor rous'd the way, by curious winds Blown vagabond or trustee, in they pass'd Dimensionless through heavenly doors, then clad With incense, where the golden altar found By their great Intercessor, came in sight Before the Father's throne.—

We have the same thought expressed a second time in the intercession of the Messiah, which is conceived in very emphatical sentiments and expressions.

Among the poetical parts of Scripture, what Milton has so finely wrought into this part of his narration, I must not omit that wherein Ezekiel speaking of the angels who appeared to him in vision, adds, that every one had four faces, and that their whole bodies, and their backs, and their hands and their wings, were full of eyes round about:

— The cohort bright
Of watchful cherubim, four faces each Had, like a double Janus, all their shape Spangled with eyes.—

The assembling of all the angels of heaven, to hear the solemn decree passed upon man, is represented in very lively ideas. The Almighty is here described as remembering mercy in the midst of judgment, and commanding Michael to deliver his message in the mildest terms, lest the spirit of man which was already broken with the sense of his guilt and misery, should fall before him:

— Yet lest they faint
And the sad sentence rigorously urg'd, For I beheld them suffer'd, and with tears Beseeching their excess, all terror hide

The conference of Adam and Eve is full of moving sentiments. Upon their going abroad, at the melancholy night which they had passed together, they discover the lion and the eagle, each

This paragraph was not in the original paper in folio, but is added on the republication of the papers in volume when the eighteen numbers, of which Addison's critique on Paradise Lost consists, seem to have been carefully revised by their author, and to have undergone various and considerable alterations in consequence of his revision.
t Rev. viii. 3, 4

them pursuing their prey towards the eastern gates of Paradise. There is a double beauty in this incident, not only as it presents great and just omens, which are always agreeable in poetry, but as it expresses that enmity which was now produced in the animal creation. The poet, to show the like changes in nature, as well as to grace his fable with a noble prodigy, represents the sun in an eclipse. This particular incident has likewise a fine effect upon the imagination of the reader, in regard to what follows; for at the same time that the sun is under an eclipse, a bright cloud descends in the western quarter of the heavens filled with a host of angels, and more luminous than the sun itself. The whole theatre of nature is darkened, that this glorious machine may appear with all its lustre and magnificence:

——— Why in the east
Darkness ere day's mid-course? and morning light More orient in yon western cloud that draws O'er the blue firmament a radiant white,
And slow descends with something heavenly fraught?
He err'd not for by this the heavenly hands Down from a sky of jasper lighted now In Paradise, and on a hill made halt;
A glorious apparition——

I need not observe how properly this author, who always suits his parts to the actors whom he introduces, has employed Michael in the expulsion of our first parents from Paradise. The archangel on this occasion neither appears in his proper shape, nor in the familiar manner with which Raphael, the sociable spirit, entertained the father of mankind before the fall. His person, his port, and behaviour, are suitable to a spirit of the highest rank, and exquisitely described in the following passage:

——— Th' archangel soon drew nigh, Not in his shape celestial; but as man Clad to meet man: o'er his lucid arms A military vest of purple flow'd, Livelier than Melibonon, or the grain Of Barba, worn by kings and heroes old,
In time of truce: Iris had dipt the woof:
His starry helm, unbuck'd, shew'd him prime In manhood where youth ended: by his side, As in a glist'ring zodiac, hung the sword, Satan's dire dread, and in his hand a spear.
Adam bow'd low; he kindly from his state Inclin'd not but his coming thus declared.

Eve's complaint, upon hearing that she was to be removed from the garden of Paradise, is wonderfully beautiful. The sentiments are not only proper to the subject, but have something in them particularly soft and womanish:

Must I thus leave thee, Paradise? Thus leave Thee, native soil, these happy walks and shades, Fit haunt of gods, where I had hope to spend Quiet, though sad, the respite of that day That must be mortal to us both? O flowers, That never will in other climate grow, My early visitation, and my last At even, which I bred up with tender hand From the first opening bud, and gave ye names!
Who now shall rear you to the sun, or rank Your tribes, and water from the ambrosial fount?
Thee, lastly, nuptial bower, by me adorn'd With what to sight or smell was sweet: from thee How shall I part? and whither wander down Into a lower world, to this, obscure And wild? How shall we breathe in other air Less pure, accustomed to immortal fruits?

Adam's speech abounds with thoughts which are equally moving, but of a more masculine and elevated turn. Nothing can be conceived more sublime and poetical than the following passage in it:

This most afflicts me, that departing hence As from his face I shall be hid, depriv'd

His blessed With worship
Presence div
On this moun
Stood visible
I heard; her
So many gra
Of grassy tu
Of lustre fro
Or monument
Offer sweet
In yonder ne
His bright ap
For though l
To life prot
Gladly behol
Of glory, and

The angel a mount of Par misphere, as a
were to be rep
served how the particulars, gre Virgil's hero, i tained with a s
from him; but as one of the n
every one mus
much higher na to any particu
the whole speci

In this great sons and daugh
with exhibit to which is drawn propriety of ex horror which a dying man is to

But have I
I must retu
Of terror fo
Horrid to th

The second
death, in a gre to give him a g guilt had broug
him a large hou
sons lying und finely has the p guished under by an apt and beings as those
paper!

Dire was th Tended the
And over th Shook, but With vows,

The passion occasion is very

Sight so def Dry-ey'd be Tho' not of His best of

The discours follows, abound As there is n a contrast and after this melan raises up a sec
secret pleasure is intent upon licacy. I must female troop; w are called in S

BRITISH ESSAYISTS:

at seen'd
ne;
eye.
ves
ne,
nature, and the sight of
to that pas-

al death
w
men?
ty in his vi-
of his reader
nformable to those softer
at vision of e flood.
his eye upon
the reader
ent he has or puerile in e wolf swim-
those wanton
with, as un-
are. If our Ovid tells us this sea had nt in such a have passed Ovid is idle
in Milton.

abebant;
a ponto.
etam. i. 291.
DRYDEN.

ription does
e great and llows in our help'd

that the seas were used al other pa-
description
ably the ad-
with clouds,
of the seas,
uch descrip-
The ciry imagined,
ned authors,
this paper.

d ood;
rift
ro,
s' elang

The transition which the poet makes from the vision of the deluge, to the concern it occasioned in Adam, is exquisitely graceful, and copied after Virgil, though the first thought it introduces is rather in the spirit of Ovid:

How didst thou grieve then, Adam, to behold
The end of all thy offspring, and so sad, Depopulation! These another flood, Of tears and sorrow, a flood, thee also drown'd,
And sunk thee as thy sons: till gently rear'd By th' angel, on thy feet thou stood'st at last, Tho' comfortless, as when a father mourns His children all in view destroy'd at once.

I have been the more particular in my quotations out of the eleventh book of Paradise Lost, because it is not generally reckoned among the most shining books of this poem; for which reason the reader might be apt to overlook those many passages in it which deserve our admiration. The eleventh and twelfth are indeed built upon that single circumstance of the removal of our first parents from Paradise; but though this is not in itself so great a subject as that in most of the foregoing books, it is extended and diversified with so many surprising incidents and pleasing episodes, that these two last books can by no means be looked upon as unequal parts of this divine poem. I must farther add, that had not Milton represented our first parents as driven out of Paradise, his fall of man would not have been complete, and consequently his action would have been imperfect.—L.

No. 364.] MONDAY, APRIL 28, 1712.

—Navibus atque Quadrigis petimus bene vivere.—HOR. 1 Ep. XI. 29.
Anxious through sea and land to search for rest, Is but laborious idleness at best.—FRANCIS.

"MR. SPECTATOR,

"A LADY of my acquaintance, for whom I have too much respect to be easy while she is doing an indiscreet action, has given occasion to this trouble. She is a widow to whom the indulgence of a tender husband has intrusted the management of a very great fortune, and a son about sixteen, both which she is extremely fond of. The boy has parts of the middle size, neither shining nor despicable, and has passed the common exercises of his years with tolerable advantage, but is withal what you would call a forward youth: by the help of this last qualification, which serves as a varnish to all the rest, he is enabled to make the best use of his learning, and display it at full length upon all occasions. Last summer he distinguished himself two or three times very remarkably, by puzzling the vicar before an assembly of most of the ladies in the neighbourhood; and from such weighty considerations as these, as it too often unfortunately falls out, the mother is become invincibly persuaded that her son is a great scholar; and that to chain him down to the ordinary methods of education, with others of his age, would be to cramp his faculties, and do an irreparable injury to his wonderful capacity.

"I happened to visit at the house last week, and missing the young gentleman at the tea-table, where he seldom fails to officiate, could not upon so extraordinary a circumstance avoid inquiring after him. My lady told me he was gone out with her woman, in order to make some preparation for their equipage; for that she intended very speedily to carry him to 'travel.' The oddness of the expression shocked me a little; however, I soon recovered my-

enough to let her know, that all I was willing to understand by it was, that she designed this sum of money to show her son his estate in a distant county, which he had never yet been. But she soon took to rob me of that agreeable mistake, and let me into the whole affair. She enlarged upon young A's prodigious improvements, and his comprehensive knowledge of all book-learning; concluding, it was now high time he should be made acquainted with men and things: that she had read he should make the tour of France and Italy, could not bear to have him out of her sight, and fore intended to go along with him.

I was going to rally her for so extravagant a notion, but found myself not in a fit humour to do with a subject that demanded the most soft delicate touch imaginable. I was afraid of saying something that might seem to bear hard upon the son's abilities, or the mother's discretion, being sensible that in both these cases, though supported with all the powers of reason, I should, instead of gaining her ladyship over to my opinion, only expose myself to her disesteem: I therefore immediately determined to refer the whole over to the Spectator.

When I came to reflect at night, as my custom upon the occurrences of the day, I could not but say that this humour of carrying a boy to travel in his mother's lap, and that upon a pretence of seeing men and things, is a case of an extraordinary nature, and carries on it a peculiar stamp of

I did not remember to have met with its parallel within the compass of my observation, though it did call to mind some not extremely unlike it. Hence my thoughts took occasion to ramble on the general notion of travelling, as it is now a part of education. Nothing is more frequent than to take a lad from grammar and law, under the tuition of some poor scholar, who is to be banished for thirty pounds a year and his victuals, send him crying and snivelling into foreign countries. Thus he spends his time as men do at puppet-shows, and with much the same advantage, in staring and gaping at an infinite variety of strange things; strange indeed to one who is not prepared to comprehend the reason and meaning of them, whilst he should be laying the solid foundations of knowledge in his mind, furnishing it with just rules to direct his future progress in life under some skilful master of the art of instruction.

Can there be a more astonishing thought in nature than to consider how men should fall into so noble a mistake? It is a large field, and may well exercise a sprightly genius; but I do not remember you have yet taken a turn in it. I wish, you would make people understand, that 'travel' is really the last step to be taken in the institution of youth; and that to set out with it, is to begin where they should end.

Certainly the true end of visiting foreign parts is to look into their customs and policies, and observe in what particulars they excel or come short of our own; to unlearn some odd peculiarities in our manners, and wear off such awkward stiffnesses and affectations in our behaviour, as may possibly have been contracted from constantly associating with one nation of men, by a more free, general, and mixed conversation. But how can any of these stages be attained by one who is a mere stranger to the customs and policies of his native country, and has not yet fixed in his mind the first principles of mankind? Your aim, it is to build a foundation; or, if I may so say, to work a rich embryo.

"Another end of travelling, if it is to be considered, is the study of the authors of antiquity, to see how they lived, and of the natural face of the world, to see how they have given us a picture which agrees with the picture. It will be a most charming sight, if it is rightly turned for its use. A measure be made of a person is capable of concerning the uncertain ruins of alterations upon so many places, which make the modern world. And this hint may be a means of examining every spot of ground as the scene of some of the footsteps of a great man, such great virtuous men, such particular, though it is itself, may serve to enlarge a generous mind to a greater ardency in bright examples, if it is compared for the improvement. I will hardly think of entering into the study, that they do not yet have any exactness."

"But I have wanted only to desire you to show an English mother, and a ridiculous part of Europe, to be sea-sick, or to get into a coach, may perhaps of the body, yet it is in young empty heads."

"I am, Sir,

"Sir,

"I was married obligingly to bed; but, the next morning by these warlike sounds in a marriage-concealment seem to insinuate,

* The following paragraph is in folio, whether written or inserted afterward by me on the first republication printed here from the Spectator.

"I cannot quit this head to one of the most enterprising for the pleasure it gave me. I have in my head that ingenious gentleman applied his exact knowledge, to illustrate the several work alone is a pregnant that has a taste this way. Naples, and making Horace must feel some uneasiness in his retinue. I am page, and that not without state, I should have travelled for a guide, and in company, who, of all new living,

BRITISH ESSAYISTS.

issue. I fear matches, and in the honey-moon; therefore, for the future morning of a not only to can still sub-nt Servant,

RIDEGROOM."

hom the gayer

But to show their raillery, merous Widow, acted for the 28th instant. ous widow, or on to imitate ous character. in the exquisite honourable e character of er behalf at a h for any en- seasoned with commend it to and authority

Reader,
L TAMIRA."

29, 1712.

us—Georg. iii. 272
nspires

arts.
pring, 160, &c.

aints us, that ies of quality , which infuses all its inhabi- ho was one of she would pro- des, she could the beginning ear, I design , and publish any of them y not pretend ded the above- ulated for our at some of our ation with the

to determine anniversary in- e spirits, after ealed by win- rambling; or meadows, with oush, naturally easure; or n is prom- and by a kind of instinct to throw herself on a bed of flowers, and not to let those beautiful couches which nature has provided lie useless. However it the effects of this month on the lower part of sex, who act without disguise, are very visible, is at this time that we see the young wench in country parish dancing round a Maypole, which one of our learned antiquaries supposes to be a relic of a certain pagan worship that I do not think fit mention.

It is likewise on the first day of this month we see the ruddy milkmaid exerting herself in most sprightly manner under a pyramid of silver tankards, and like the virgin Tarpeia,* oppressed by the costly ornaments which her benefactor has upon her.

I need not mention the ceremony of the green gown, which is also peculiar to this gay season.

The same periodical love-fit spreads through the whole sex, as Mr. Dryden well observes in his description of this merry month.

For thee, sweet month, the groves green liv'd first year,
If not the first, the fairest of the year:
For thee the Graces lead the dancing hours,
And nature's ready pencil paints the flowers.
The sprightly May commands our youth to revel The vigils of her night, and breaks their sleep:
Each gentle breast with kindly warmth she moves, Inspires new flames, revives extinguish'd loves.

Accordingly, among the works of the great masters in painting, who have drawn this genial season of the year, we often observe Cupids confused with Zephyrs, flying up and down promiscuously in several parts of the picture. I cannot but add from my own experience, that about this time of the year love-letters come up to me in great numbers, in all quarters of the nation.

I received an epistle in particular by the last post from a Yorkshire gentleman, who makes his complaints of one Zelinda, whom it seems he has courted unsuccessfully these three years past. He tells me that he designs to try her this May; and if he does not carry his point, he will never think her more.

Having thus fairly admonished the female and laid before them the dangers they are exposed to in this critical month, I shall in the next play down some rules and directions for their behaviour, avoiding those calamities which are so very frequent in this season.

In the first place, I would advise them never venture abroad in the fields, but in the company of a parent, a guardian, or some other sober discreet person. I have before shown how apt they are to trip in the flowery meadow; and shall further serve to them, that Proserpine was out a-mooing when she met with that fatal adventure to which Milton alludes when he mentions—

—That fair field
Of Enna, where Proserpine gathering flowers, Herself a fairer flower, by gloomy Dis Was gather'd—

Since I am got into quotations, I shall conclude my head with Virgil's advice to young people, that they are gathering wild strawberries and noting that they should have a care of the snake in grass.

In the second place, I cannot but express my prescriptions which our astrologers and physicians in their almanacs for this month, such as are

I simple diet, with a moderate use of phlethis head of abstinence I shall also advise readers to be in a particular manner careful they meddle with romances, chocolate, and the like inflamers, which I look upon as generous to be made use of during this great of nature.

I have often declared that I have nothing heart than the honour of my dear country-

I would beg them to consider, whenever elections begin to fail them, that there are mid-thirty days of this soft season, and that as but weather out this one month, the rest of the year will be easy to them. As for that part of our sex who stay in town, I would advise them to be particularly cautious how they give themselves to their most innocent entertainments. If I should not forbear the playhouse, I would recommend to them rather than comedy; and I think the puppet-show much safer for them than opera, all the while the sun is in Gemini.

My reader will observe, that this paper is written for the use of those ladies who think it worth while to contend against nature in the cause of honour. As I have abandoned crew, who do not think virtue worth attending for, but give up their reputation for a few summons, such warnings and premonitions are thrown away upon them. A prostitute is the easiest creature in all months of the year, as there is no difference between May and December.

5.] WEDNESDAY, APRIL 30, 1712.

Pone me pigris ubi nulla campis Arbor æstiva recreatur aura, Dulce ridentem Lalagen amabo, Dulce loquentem.—HOR. I Od. xxii. 17.

Set me whereson some pathless plain The swarthy Africans complain, To see the chariot of the sun Go near the scorching country run;
The burning zone, the frozen isles, Shall hear me sing of Celia's smiles;
If cold, but in her breast, I will despise,
And dare all heat, but that of Celia's eyes.

Roscommon.

There are such wild inconsistencies in the conduct of a man in love, that I have often reflected that there can be no reason for allowing him more liberty than others possessed with frenzy, but that his reason has no malevolence in it to any mortal. A notion to his mistress kindles in his mind a tenderness, which exerts itself towards every woman as well as his fair one. When this passion is represented by writers, it is common with them to ascribe to it certain quaintnesses and turns of imagination, which are apparently the work of a mind that is not true; but the men of true taste can easily distinguish the exertion of a mind which overflows with tender sentiments, and the labour of one which describes distress. In performances of this kind, the most absurd of all things is to be witty; sentiment must grow out of the occasion, and must be to the circumstances of the character. If his rule is transgressed, the humble servant who says fine things he says, is but showing his misfortune; well he can dress, instead of saying how loves. Lace and drapery is as much a man, as a turn is passion.

MR. SPECTATOR,

The following verses are a translation of a Lapland love song, which is the history of that country.* to find a spirit of tenderness which I never suspect in climates, though altogether wondered if I had found among the natives, who eat oranges, and hear the music. But a Lapland lyric, like all poetry, not unworthy a regular ode from a climate cursed with darkness, where it is amazing that food, or be tempted to poison. I confess, seemed a great famous stories of their enchantments.

"I am the bolder in song, because I have no ornaments, without adding to no greater praise from who smooth and clean than have suffered by carrying original are as loose as the British ladies sport, perhaps the fairest of the greeable present from a to bind it in stricter measures for our tongue, though better suit the genius of the

"It will be necessary of this song, not having a mistress at her father's side, and being at a distance in

Thou rising sun,
Invites my fair love Dispel the mist, and
And bring my Orma

Oh! were I sure
I'd climb that pine Aloft in air that
And round and round

My Orma Moor, where What wood conceals Fast by the roots
The trees that hide

Oh! I could ride
Or on the raven's Ye storks, ye swans
And waft a lover

My bliss too long Apace the wasting Nor yet the winter
Not storms or nig

What may for steel
Oh! love has felt
By bolts of steel
But cruel love en

No longer then pass When thoughts to
'Tis mad to go, Away to Orma! h

"MR. SPECTATOR,

"I am one of those d d chamber-maid, and has some time, whom I love my duty and pleasure delight has been in being son; and indeed she is for a woman of her quality, Sir. To bear witness that she is pleased to give her cast-off clothes

* This Lapland love song is to those that e to hangers

come dressed rtifying sight
clothes, and an uneasi-
cheerfulness notice of, and ers preferred
er sister lives
usands below
g her favours
very Sunday, clothes of her suitable. All hout wishing at a discour-
isites divided others enjoy
to my misesired to be to nothing),
eg, Sir, your
olved to fol-

Servant,
MB-BRUSH.

er dress, and ho is an ad-
—T.

l 1712.

ry. Sat. i. 18.
best
rest.

considering the
to the public
n, were I to would distin-
nal. By the s which my er improved but having endeavours confine myer. By the hich arise to
as they con-
paper-manung, and find
persons.
several mean
her use, and collecting of employment.
usy in every mings to the in loads to a fresh set Those who ns consideration is in a
ore for which ours.

into paper,
esses, where ork, and fur-
hence, ac-
s or politics,

they fly through the town in Post men, Post-boy Daily Courants, Reviews, Medleys, and Examines Men, women, and children, contend who shall the first bearers of them, and get their daily sustenance by spreading them. In short, when I train my mind a bundle of rags to a quire of Spectator I find so many hands employed in every step the take through their whole progress, that while I am writing a Spectator, I fancy myself providing bread for a multitude.

If I do not take care to obviate some of my wit-readers, they will be apt to tell me, that my paper after it is thus printed and published, is still beneficial to the public on several occasions. I must confess I have lighted my pipe with my own works for this twelvemonth past. My landlady often sends up her little daughter to desire some of my old Spectators, and has frequently told me that the paper they are printed on is the best in the world to wrap spice in. They likewise make a good foundation for a mutton-pie, as I have more than once experienced, and were very much sought for last Christmas by the whole neighbourhood.

It is pleasant enough to consider the changes that a linen fragment undergoes, by passing through the several hands above mentioned. The finest piece of Holland, when worn to tatters, assume a new whiteness more beautiful than the first, and after return in the shape of letters to their native country.
A lady's shift may be metamorphosed into a child's doux, and come into her possession a second time.
A beau may peruse his cravat after it is worn out with greater pleasure and advantage than ever he did in a glass. In a word, a piece of cloth, after having officiated for some years as a towel or a napkin, may by this means be raised from a dung-hill and become the most valuable piece of furniture in a prince's cabinet.

The politest nations of Europe have endeavoured to vie with one another for the reputation of the finest printing. Absolute governments, as well as republics, have encouraged an art which seems to be the noblest and most beneficial that was ever invented among the sons of men. The present King of France, in his pursuits after glory, has particularly distinguished himself by the promoting of this useful art, inasmuch that several books have been printed in the Louvre at his own expense, upon which he sets so great a value, that he considers them as the noblest presents he can make to foreign princes and ambassadors. If we look into the commonwealths of Holland and Venice, we shall find that in this particular they have made themselves the envy of the greatest monarchies. Elsevir and Aldus are more frequently mentioned than any personer of the one, or doge of the other.

The several presses which are now in England and the great encouragement which has been given to learning for some years last past, has made our own nation as glorious upon this account, as for its late triumphs and conquests. The new edition which is given us of Caesar's Commentaries* has already been taken notice of in foreign gazettes, and is a work that does honour to the English press.
It is no wonder that an edition should be very correct which has passed through the hands of one of the most accurate, learned, and judicious writers this age has produced. The beauty of the paper, of the character, and of the several cuts with which this noble work is illustrated, makes it the Enes

* A most beautiful edition of Caesar's Memoirs, published about this time in folio, by Dr. Samuel Clarke.

that I have ever seen; and is a true instance of the English genius, which, though it does not set the first into any art, generally carries it to higher heights than any other country in the world. I am particularly glad that this author comes from a printing-house in so great a magnificence, as he is the first who has given us any tolerable account of our country.

My illiterate readers, if any such there are, will be surprised to hear me talk of learning as the glory of a nation, and of printing as an art that gains a reputation to a people among whom it flourishes. Men's thoughts are taken up with avarice and ambition, they cannot look upon any thing as at or valuable which does not bring with it an extraordinary power or interest to the person who is concerned in it. But as I shall never sink this over so far as to engage with Goths and Vandals, I shall only regard such kind of reasoners with that pity which is due to so deplorable a degree of stupidity and ignorance.—L.

No. 368.] FRIDAY, MAY 2, 1712.

Nos decebat.

Logere ubi esset aliquis in lucem editus,

Humane vite varia reputantes mala:

At qui labores morte finisset graves,

Omnes amicos laude et lætitia exequi.

ÆCIP. apud TULL.

When first an infant draws the vital air,

Officious grief should welcome him to care:

But joy should life's concluding scene attend,

And mirth be kept to grace a dying friend.

As the Spectator is in a kind a paper of news in the natural world, as others are from the busy and politic part of mankind, I shall translate the following letter, written to an eminent French gentleman in this town from Paris, which gives us the story of a heroine who is a pattern of patience and serenity.

"SIR,

Paris, April 18, 1712.

"It is so many years since you left your native country, that I am to tell you the characters of your nearest relations as much as if you were an utter stranger to them. The occasion of this is to give you an account of the death of Madame de Villacerfe, whose departure out of this life I know not whether any of your philosophy will call unfortunate or not, since it was attended with some circumstances much to be desired as to be lamented. She was her whole life happy in an uninterrupted health, and was always honoured for an evenness of temper and steadiness of mind. On the 10th instant that lady was taken with an indisposition which confined her in her chamber, but was such as was too slight to make her take a sick-bed, and yet too grievous to admit of any satisfaction in being out of it. It is notoriously known that some years ago Monsieur Festeau, one of the most considerable surgeons in Paris, was desperately in love with this lady. Her ability placed her above any application to her on account of his passion; but as a woman always has some regard to the person whom she believes to be her real admirer, she now took it in her head upon advice of her physicians to lose some of her blood (to send for Monsieur Festeau on that occasion). I happened to be there at that time, and my relation gave me the privilege to be present. As soon as her arm was stripped bare, and he began to press it in order to raise the vein, his colour changed, and I observed him seized with a sudden horror, which made me take the liberty to speak of it to my cousin who and said, she knew to do her injury and smiling also, immediately after the most unfortunate opened an artery, visible to express the composure. I will but go on to inform you that it was thought she was so far from being natural to one of her she would not let her sister mention about her presence on occasion asked if her were taken about she ordered her to be about a quarter of surgeons, of whom their work. I know of art, but there is amputation of her not live four-and-twenty so magnanimous.

I was particularly passed as her father and took notice of particularly word Festeau, which was

"Sir, you give anguish with which removed to all interests of human life like one wholly to consider you as one who no, you are my my entrance into the sense of this accident live may have the I have therefore my will, and have to fear from their

"While this expression Festeau looked as die, instead of a Villacerfe lived till and though she was exquisite torment wonderful a patient ceased to breathe who had not the to this lady, have honour you had of but we, who have easily resign our hers.

"I am, Sir,

"and

There hardly heroic mind than this lady weighed life itself could not of the unhappy concern for her tainly be of single an exact account which was crown Such greatness v article; nor is it

BRITISH ESSAYISTS.

which made her
the dissolution,

3, 1712.

Ars. Poet. 180.
e.—Roscommon.

in vision the period of na-
of it in narra-
me reason for fter this man-
ason was the found to have ted a story in ever, that the
it might have
I think that mankind in if a history-
of his subject,
f it. If Mil-
his narration,
been so atten-
ed his poetry.
ppily on seve-
able of poetinfusion which Babel, and in
t. The storm at overspread
ed with great ich follows is

nits

as ice, age
ea
lets pass
ills,

the crocodile,
ce Egypt de-ken from that aith the Lord
araoh, king of the midst of
is mine own,
ton has given
image in the most word for atch:

and

y command,

urn,

isode was to
on who was to ness and per-poet confines
n whence the s described as

seeing the patriarch actually travelling towards the land of promise, which gives a particular liveliness to this part of the narration:

I see him, but thou canst not, with what faith He leaves his gods, his friends, and native soil, Ur of Chaldaea, passing now the fords To Haran; after him a cumbrous train Of herds, and flocks, and numerous servitude:
Not wand'ring poor, but trusting all his wealth With God, who call'd him in a land unknown, Canaan he now attains; I see his tents Pitch'd about Schechem, and the neighbouring plain Of Moreh: there by promise he receives Gift to his progeny of all that land;
From Hamath northward to the desert south:
(Things by their names I call, though yet unnam'd.)

As Virgil's vision in the sixth Æneid probably gave Milton the hint of this episode, the last line is a translation of that verse where Anchises mentions the names of places, which they were to bear hereafter:

Hæc tum nomina erunt, nunc sunt sine nomine terra.

The poet has very finely represented the joy and gladness of heart which rises in Adam upon his discovery of the Messiah. As he sees his day at a distance through types and shadows, he rejoices in it: but when he finds the redemption of man completed, and Paradise again renewed, he breaks forth in rapture and transport:

O goodness infinite, goodness immense!
That all this good of evil shall produce, &c.

I have hinted in my sixth paper on Milton, that an heroic poem, according to the opinion of the best critics, ought to end happily, and leave the mind of the reader, after having conducted it through many doubts and fears, sorrows and dis-quietudes, in a state of tranquillity and satisfaction.
Milton's fable, which had so many other qualifications to recommend it, was deficient in this particular. It is here therefore that the poet has shown a most exquisite judgment, as well as the finest invention, by finding out a method to supply this natural defect in his subject. Accordingly he leaves the adversary of mankind, in the last view which he gives us of him, under the lowest state of mortification and disappointment. We see him cowering in ashes, grovelling in the dust, and loaded with innumerable pains and torments. On the contrary, our two first parents are comforted by dreams and visions, cheered with promises of salvation, and in manner raised to a greater happiness than that which they had forfeited. In short, Satan is represented miserable in the height of his triumph, and Adam triumphant in the height of misery.

Milton's poem ends very nobly. The last speech of Adam and the archangel are full of moral and instructive sentiments. The sleep that fell upon Eve, and the effects it had in quieting the disorder of her mind, produces the same kind of consolation in the reader, who cannot peruse the last beautiful speech, which is ascribed to the mother of mankind, without a secret pleasure and satisfaction:

Whence thou return'st, and whither went'st, I know:
For God is also in sleep, and dreams advise,
Which he hath sent propitious, some great good Presaging, since, with sorrow and heart's distress Wearied, I fell asleep; but now led on,
In me is no delay: with thee to go,
Is to stay here; without thee here to stay,
Is to go hence unwilling: thou to me Art all things under heav'n, all places thou, Who for my wilful crime art banish'd hence.
This farther consolation yet secure I carry hence; though all by me is lost, Such favour I unworthy am vouchsaf'd, By me the promis'd seed shall all restore.

flowing lakes, which conclude the poem, most glorious blaze of poetical images and urus in his Æthiopics acquaints us, that of the gods differs from that of mortals, never do not stir their feet, nor proceed step out slide over the surface of the earth by swimming of the whole body. The reader observe with how poetical a description Milton uttered the same kind of motion to the angels to take possession of Paradise:

Take our mother Eve; and Adam heard pleas'd, but answer'd not: for now too nigh rebel angel stood; and from the other hill saw his station; all in bright array cherubim descended; on the ground ing meteorous, as evening mist from a river, o'er the marsh glides, gathers ground fast at the labourer's heel ward returning. High in front advanc'd, brandish'd sword of God before them blaz'd as a comet—

the author helped his invention in the following by reflecting on the behaviour of the angel who writ has the conduct of Lot and his. The circumstances drawn from that story were gracefully made use of on this occasion:

On the other hand the hast'ning angel caught his ring parents, and to th' eastern gate them direct: and down the cliff as fast the subjected plain; then disappear'd, y looking back, &c.

ene which our first parents are surprised in their looking back on Paradise, wonders the reader's imagination, as nothing more natural than the tears they shed on vision:

Looking back, all th' eastern side beheld, Paradise, so late their happy seat, Cover'd by that flaming brand, the gate broad faces throug'd and fiery arms:
natural tears they dropp'd, but wip'd them soon;
world was all before them, where to choose place of rest, and Providence their guide.

ight presume to offer at the smallest alteration in his divine work, I should think the poem a better with the passage here quoted, than verses which follow:

hand in hand, with wand'ring steps and slow, th Eden took their solitary way.

two verses, though they have their beauty, much below the foregoing passage, and reduce the mind of the reader that anguish which is well laid by that consideration:

world was all before them, where to choose
place of rest, and Providence their guide.

number of books in Paradise Lost is equal of the Æneid. Our author in his first edition divided his poem into ten books, but afterwards the seventh and the eleventh each of two different books, by the help of some divisions. This second division was made at judgment, as any one may see who will pains of examining it. It was not done like of such a chimerical beauty as that of Virgil in this particular, but for the more regular disposition of this great work.

who have read Bossu, and many of the who have written since his time, will not be if I do not find out the particular moral inculcated in Paradise Lost. Though I do not mean think, with the last-mentioned author, that an epic writer first of all pitches upon a certain moral, as the occasion of his poem, and to it; I am however of opinion that no poem ever was or can be so great a moral may not be found in Milton is the most unimagined. It is to the will of God make obedience makes them the moral of the principle Adam and Eve, who they kept the command were driven out of it, gressed. This is likewise episode, which shows us the multitude of angels fell from heaven cast into hell upon their great moral, which may of the fable, there are which are to be drawn from the poem, and which make it more instructive than any other.

Those who have criticized the Iliad, and Æneid, have to fix the number of measures the action of each of them thinks it worth his while in Milton, he will find, appearance in the fourth book of Paradise in the twelfth. As for that part of the poem the three first books, as the regions of nature, I have not subject to any calculation.

I have now finished the which does an honour to the taken a general view of the fable, the character of language, and made an particular paper. I have of the censures which each of these heads, which papers, though I might if I had been disposed to subject; I believe, however will not find any little fault in this author has fallen into one of those heads among his several blemishes.

large of Paradise Lost, to have celebrated this descending to particular a paper upon each book to prove that the poem to point out its particular mine wherein they can show how some passages line, others by being so which of them are reduced which by the moral, which by the expressions voured to show how the a happy invention, a direct imitation; how he has or Virgil, and raised the use which he has made in Scripture. I might passages in Tasso, which but, as I do not look up voucher, I would not put quotations as might do than to the English poet.

BRITISH ESSAYISTS.

able kinds of capitulate, but which may be met with. Had I designed, that it should, I believe I should not have been at the kind reception of those whose uncomplaisance tells me have been at the same time, give me the same answer as I have been at in 5, 1712.

—SHAKESPEARE

very gay and are extremely the head of my I ought not each of them: from the top of in which often t "The whole that if we look employments is not, as the

The lawyer is wherein he is on his part, but in the prostitution of falsehood for no other divine, whose with any true piety and imputation of a character of pursuits will find half disguise and proceeds not of a player. frequent men-matter of the well or ill per- are indulged or manners and to the world, per. As the slow persons, the characters of a spectator in the use of the represent or in the world, representing in Macbeth, in Harry the young man of to the Jubilee, in the For; all the world's circumstances. If misapplied, or it has a great of others who bear a figure on the stage, that his talents were understood; it is their business to impose upon what cannot become him, or keep out of his way any thing in which he would shine. Were one raise a suspicion of himself in a man who passes upon the world for a fine thing, in order to alarm him, one might say, If Lord Poppington was not the stage (Cibber acts the false pretensions to genteel behaviour so very justly), he would be in the generality of mankind more that would mire than deride him. When we come to characters directly comical, it is not to be imagined what effect a well-regulated stage would have upon men's manners. The craft of a usurer, the absurdity of a fool, the awkward roughness of a fellow of no courage, the ungraceful mirth of a creature of no wit, might for ever be put out of countenance proper parts for Dogget. Johnson, by acting Caliban the other night, must have given all who saw him, a thorough detestation of aged avarice. The petulance of a peevish old fellow, who loves as hates he knows not why, is very excellently performed by the ingenious Mr. William Penkethman in the Pop's Fortune; where, in the character of Dr. Choleric Snap Shorto de Testy, he answers no questions but to those whom he likes, and wants no account of any thing from those he approves. Mr. Penkethman is also master of as many faces in the dumb scene as can be expected from a man in the circumstances of being ready to perish out of food and hunger. He wonders throughout the whole scene very masterly, without neglecting his vocal part. If it be, as I have heard it sometimes mentioned, a great qualification for the world to follow business and pleasure too, what is it in the ingenious Mr. Penkethman to represent a sense of pleasure and pain at the same time—as you may see him do this evening?

As it is certain that a stage ought to be wholly suppressed, or judiciously encouraged, while there is one in the nation, men turned for regular pleasure cannot employ their thoughts more usefully, for the diversion of mankind, than by convincing them that it is in themselves to raise this entertainment to the greatest height. It would be a great improvement, as well as embellishment to the theatre, if dancing were more regarded, and taught to the actors. One who has the advantage of such an agreeable girlish person as Mrs. Bicknell, joined with her capacity of imitation, could in proper gesture and motion represent all the decent ornaments of female life. An amiable modesty in one moment of a dancer, and assumed confidence in another, a sudden joy in another, a falling-off with an insouciance of being beheld, a return towards the audience with an unsteady resolution to approach them, a well-acted solicitude to please, would revive to the company all the fine touches of mind which they had before beheld. Such elegant entertainments, these would polish the town into judgment in the gratifications; and delicacy in pleasure is the first step people of condition take, in reformation of the vice. Mrs. Bicknell has the only capacity for all sort of dancing of any on the stage; and I dare say all who see her performance to-morrow night, will be of my mind.—T.

. 371.] TUESDAY, MAY 6, 1712.

ne igitur landas quod de sapientibus unus erat? Jev. Sak. x. 28.
 shall the sage* your approbation win.
 see laughing features wore a constant grin?

I communicate to my readers the following the entertainment of this day:—

I know very well that our nation is more fa-that sort of men who are called 'whims' merists,' than any other country in the or which reason it is observed, that our comedy excels that of all other nations in ty and variety of its characters.
 ing those innumerable sets of whims which try produces, there are none whom I have with more curiosity than those who have any particular kind of diversion for the en-ent of themselves and their friends. My all single out those who take delight in company that has something of burlesque tle in its appearance. I shall make my-stood by the following example. One of of the last age, who was a man of a good thought he never laid out his money better jest. As he was one year at the Bath, that, in the great confluence of fine peowere several among them with long chins, the visage by which he himself was very distinguished, he invited to dinner half a score remarkable persons, who had their mouths iddle of their faces. They had no sooner themselves about the table but they began upon one another, not being able to imagine brought them together. Our English pro-

'Tis merry in the hall, When beards wag all.

so in the assembly I am now speaking of,
 g so many peaks of faces agitated with nking, and discourse, and observing all that were present meeting together very the centre of the table, every one grew if the jest, and came into it with so much our, that they lived in strict friendship and rom that day forward.

same gentleman some time after packed a set of eggers as he called them, consisting had an unlucky cast in their eyes. His on this occasion was to see the cross bows, signs, and wrong connivances, that passed many broken and refracted rays of sight.
 third feast which this merry gentleman exas to the stammerers, whom he got together lent body to fill his table. He had ordered servants, who was placed behind a screen, down their table-talk, which was very easy ie without the help of short-hand. At ap-the notes which were taken, that though versation never fell, there were not above rds spoken during the first course; that ving up the second, one of the company rter of an hour in telling them that the and asparagus were very good; and that ook up the same time in declaring himself ne opinion. This jest did not, however, go l as either of the former; for one of the guests being a brave man than he knew how to exand sent the facetious inwhich, though it was afterposition of friends, y entertainments.

"Now, sir, I dare sa-that as there is no more to be discouraged, and of unluckiness than wit-for one man to refine up-and impossible for any ever his parts may be, to to its utmost perfection account of an honest get-who, upon hearing the mentioned, has himself to convert it to the benehalf a dozen of his frie-were each of them famo-dundant phrases in their me?—D'ye see?—That of his guests making fre-elegance, appeared so re-that he could not but peering equally ridiculopany. By this means together, every one, talkin-spection, and carefully tive, the conversation wacies, and had a greater less of sound in it.

"The same well-mean-sion, at another time, to friends as were addicted of swearing. In order of the practice, he had above mentioned, havina private part of the room when men open their honest friend began to norous but unnecessary house since their sittinmuch good conversation way to such superfluous says he, 'would they ha-we put the laws in ex-Every one of them took part; upon which he tolconversation would have ordered it to be taken d-humour-sake, would rea-There were ten sheets of reduced to two, had then interpolations I have be-reading of it in cold bloconference of fiends that one trembled at himself he had pronounced amid-of discourse.

"I shall only mention
 he made use of the same ent kind of men, who arversation, and murder t-two former, though they mean, that dull generafriend got together aboquaintance, who were malady. The first day entered upon the siege four o'clock, their time a North Briton took tritus.

 the last Duke of Buckingham, and father of the Mary Wortley Montague.

BRITISH ESSAYISTS.

his hands so
The third
er by a story
an to reflect
one another,
at lethargy
zed for seve-

that extra-makind are
I look upon
you please,
rs, I thought
le to you.

7, 1712.

III.
Met. i. 759

*—DRYDEN.

y 6, 1712.
garden, and as I was toll-ning, crowds
ble at a pup-
n. I had at
Mr. Powell
th, as if they lerings: but inced of the ell and com-
that he has
e to-morrow
oor charity-
informed, sir,
any show, or of wood and to pay out of onest and iny this means
y a tax to la-
also, that all countries, the necessities of
and diseased entlemen are assing time,
for knowing e case is so, I
le of quality,
pleasure, to ty, that they ve something
their luxury measure, for fortunes. It
e ladies who e playhouses
ay to this ex-
This method service to the e you would
h Mr. Powell made in it by ns, trumpets,
on of Troy,

to is wanting.

adorned with Highland dances, are to make up the entertainment of all who are so well disposed as not to forbear a light entertainment, for no other reason but that it is to do a good action.

"I am, sir, your most humble Servant,

"RALPH BELLAMY.

"I am credibly informed, that all the insinuations which a certain writer made against Mr. Powell at the Bath, are false and groundless."

"MR. SPECTATOR,

"My employment, which is that of a broker, leading me often into taverns about the Exchange, has given me occasion to observe a certain company, which I shall here submit to your animadversion. In three or four of these taverns, I have, at different times, taken notice of a precise set of people, with grave countenances, short wigs, black clothes, or dark camlet trimmed with black, and mourning gloves and hat-bands, who meet on certain days at each tavern successively, and keep a sort of moving club. Having often met with their faces, and observed a certain sinking way in their dropping in one after another, I had the curiosity to inquire into their characters, being the rather drawn to it by their agreeing in the singularity of their dress; and I find, upon due examination, they are a knot of parish clerks, who have taken a hobby one another, and perhaps settle the bills of mourning over their half-pints. I have so great a veneration for any who have but even an amiable Amen in the service of religion, that I am almost lest these persons should incur some scandal by the practice; and would therefore have them, without railery, advised to send the Florence and yield home to their own houses, and not pretend to be as well as the overseers of the poor.

"I am, sir, your most humble Servant,

"HUMPHRY TRANSFER."

"MR. SPECTATOR,

May 6th.

"I was last Wednesday night at a tavern in the city, among a set of men who call themselves 'a lawyers' club.' You must know, sir, this club consists only of attorneys; and at this meeting, some one proposes the cause he has then in hand to the board, upon which each member gives his judgment according to the experience he has met with. It happens that any one puts a case of which they had no precedent, it is noted down by their clerk Will Goosequill (who registers all their proceedings), that one of them may go the next day with to a counsel. This indeed is commendable, and ought to be the principal end of their meetings. I had you been there, to have heard them relate the methods of managing a cause, their manner of drawing out their bills, and, in short, their arguments upon the several ways of abusing their clients, of the applause that is given to him who has done most artfully, you would before now have given your remarks on them. They are so conscious that their discourses ought to be kept a secret, that they are very cautious of admitting any person who is not of their profession. When any who are not of the law are let in, the person who introduces him, though he is a very honest gentleman, and he is taken as their cant is, to pay costs. I am admitted by the recommendation of one of their principals, a very honest, good-natured fellow, that will never in a plot, and only desires to drink his bottle and smoke his pipe. You have formerly remarked on several sorts of clubs; and as the tendency of only to increase fraud and deceit, I hope you will please to take notice of it.

"I am, with respect, your humble Servant, T. H. R."

No. 373.] THURSDAY, MAY 8, 1712.

Fallit enim vitium specie virtutis et umbra.

Juv. Sat. xiv. 109.

Vice oft is hid in Virtue's fair disguise,
And in her borrow'd form escapes inquiring eyes.

MR. LOCKE, in his treatise of the Human Understanding, has spent two chapters upon the abuse of words. The first and palpable abuse of words, he says, is when they are used without clear and distinct ideas; the second, when we are so inconstant and unsteady in the application of them, that we sometimes use them to signify one idea, sometimes another. He adds, that the result of our contemplations and reasonings, while we have no precise ideas fixed to our words, must needs be very confused and absurd. To avoid this inconvenience, more especially in moral discourses, where the same word should be constantly used in the same sense, he earnestly recommends the use of definitions. "A definition," says he, "is the only way whereby the precise meaning of moral words can be known." He therefore accuses those of great negligence who discourse of moral things with the least obscurity in the terms they make use of; since, upon the fore-mentioned ground, he does not scruple to say that he thinks "morality is capable of demonstration, as well as the mathematics."

I know no two words that have been more abused by the different and wrong interpretations which are put upon them, than these two, modesty and assurance. To say such a one is a modest man, sometimes indeed passes for a good character; but at present is very often used to signify a sheepish, awkward fellow, who has neither good breeding, politeness, nor any knowledge of the world.

Again, a man of assurance, though at first it only denoted a person of a free and open carriage, is now very usually applied to a profligate wretch, who can break through all the rules of decency and morality without a blush.

I shall endeavour therefore in this essay to restore these words to their true meaning, to prevent the idea of modesty from being confounded with that of sheepishness, and to hinder impudence from passing for assurance.

If I was put to define modesty, I would call it "the reflection of an ingenious* mind, either when a man has committed an action for which he censures himself, or fancies that he is exposed to the censure of others."

For this reason a man truly modest is as much so when he is alone as in company, and as subject to a blush in his closet as when the eyes of multitudes are upon him.

I do not remember to have met with any instance of modesty with which I am so well pleased as that celebrated one of the young prince, whose father being a tributary king to the Romans, had several complaints laid against him before the senate, as a tyrant and oppressor of his subjects. The prince went to Rome to defend his father; but coming into the senate, and hearing a multitude of crimes proved upon him, was so oppressed when it came to his turn to speak, that he was unable to utter a word. The sto more moved at his humility* than the thetic oration, father for this

I take "assurance" as a man's self, things without mind." That assurance is a mode above all, a man do nothing again. An open and a sequence of such if his words or sented, retires v. ness of his own despite the little

Every one of himself the mentioned.

A man with uneasy by the converses with all sense of his

It is more the mentioned position very eminent d never have un august assembl he would have him, though it

From what b and assurance meet in the s mixed and ble we endeavour assurance;" b between bashful

I shall conclude man may be sible for the sa

We have mixture in peo cation, who, the man's eyes, of fusion, can volu or most indece

Such a pers to do ill even i all those check plexion seem to

Upon the wh this maxim, th proper method in his words a shelter itself in times attended

No. 374.

Nil actum

He reckon Great to be

THERE is a name. It is As we lose the to flay to execu

* "Ingenuity"

* "Ingenuity" never to be here used for "ingenuous."

ingenuousness."

BRITISH ESSAYISTS.

all and throw
prospect on ly acquitted
in the sight value upon ne, any fur-
to assist our ver-weening
our present
ould be, to
, with forti-
ccording to past actions
by our own contrary be-memory of them. Thus repentance
but present
vity. Time poraries did
ctions of the e, and what ses while we r the folly of
of virtue tone, and tot make use
and virtue?
sick friend?
and suspend
is weakness,
ch in pain?
Your mis-
le madness,
diversions as
r to all men.
that to sus-
and resolve
onable folly.
mischief of
as to think ve filled all
nity till yes-
lf to-day, he his reputa-
d yesterday.
om the rest,
re him intern, if he does ar, of whom e while there t on in per-assuming to e foundation
as the man-
down what was rather le of a clear
ed by others,
y thing that ts of his, to e to support perform, than let which he he obtained
d these loose
osed, by the
ey might be
y glory must his victory;

otherwise my loss will be greater than that of Pompey. Our personal reputation will rise or fall as we bear our respective fortunes. All my private enemies among the prisoners shall be spared. I will forget this, in order to obtain such another day. Trebutius is ashamed to see me; I will go to his tent, and be reconciled in private. Give all the men of honour, who take part with me, the terms offered before the battle. Let them owe this to their friends who have been long in my interests. Power is weakened by the full use of it, but extended by moderation. Galbinus is proud, and will be servile in his present fortune: let him wait. Send for Stertinius: he is modest, and his virtue is worth gaining. I have cooled my heart with reflection, and am fit to rejoice with the army to-morrow. He is a popular general, who can expose himself like a private man during a battle; but he is more popular who can rejoice but like a private man after a victory."

What is particularly proper for the example of all who pretend to industry in the pursuit of honour and virtue, is, that this hero was more than ordinarily solicitous about his reputation, when a common mind would have thought itself in security, and given itself a loose to joy and triumph. But though this is a very great instance of his temper, I must confess I am more taken with his reflections when he retired to his closet in some disturbance upon the repeated ill omens of Calphurnia's dream the night before his death. The literal translation of that fragment shall conclude this paper.

"Be it so then. If I am to die to-morrow, that is what I am to do to-morrow. It will not be then because I am willing it should be then; nor shall I escape it, because I am unwilling. It is in the gods when, but in myself how, I shall die. If Calphurnia's dreams are fumes of indigestion, how shall I behold the day after to-morrow! If they are from the gods, their admonition is not to prepare me to escape from their decree, but to meet it. I have lived a fulness of days and of glory: what there that Cæsar has not done with as much honour as ancient heroes?—Cæsar has not yet died! Cæsar is prepared to die."

T.

No. 375.] SATURDAY, MAY 10, 1712.

Non possidentem multa vocaveris Recte beatum: rectius occupat Nomen beati, qui deorum Muneribus sapienter uti, Duramque callet pauperiem pati, Pejusque letho flagitium timet.—HON. 4 Od. ix. 45.
We barbarously call them blest Who are of largest tenements possess, While swelling coffers break their owner's rest.
More truly happy those who can Govern that little empire, man; Who spend their treasure freely, as 'twas giv'n By the large bounty of indulgent Heaven;
Who, in a fix'd unalterable state, Smile at the doubtful tide of Fate,
And scorn alike her friendship and her hate:
Who poison less than falsehood fear, Loath to purchase life so dear.—SPESEY.

I HAVE more than once had occasion to mention a noble saying of Seneca the philosopher, that a virtuous person struggling with misfortunes, and rising above them, is an object on which the gods themselves may look down with delight. I have therefore set before my reader a scene of this kind of distress in private life, for the speculation of a day.

An eminent citizen, who had lived in good at my being a fault, for make you happy while be, if any er of,

Servant,
—

and soon after ne generous endship and in a condi-
To con-
the double y family to myself happy

1712.

vi. 11.

at some time
as not done
unt of very
olic streets,
your notice.
le ever met
ve me most all the cries
passengers, ts, by some-self, in the themselves ne person I ll, but very ple, for no
his manner
a subsidy.
n old man of the sub-
forming the
by a goose.
nfirms what
e little heed nce till, be-passed by a nd, who just er after one
ose behind
I could not on for the amazement to ainted with day, giving
e departure
While I was
house, and r whimsical
gave me the ation of the se two ani-
peripatetic man in that self, by fre-
vigilance,
y regularly

from time to time. The watchman was so affected with it, that he bought her, and has taken her a partner, only altering their hours of duty from night to day. The town has come into it, and they live very comfortably. This is the matter of fact. Now I desire you, who are a profound philosopher, to consider this alliance of instinct and reason. Your speculation may turn very naturally upon the force the superior part of mankind may have upon the spirits of such as, like this watchman, may be very near the standard of geese. And you may add to this practical observation, how, in all ages and times, the world has been carried away by odd unaccountable things, which one would think would pass upon no creature which had reason; and under the symbol of this goose, you may enter into the manner and method of leading creatures with their eyes open through thick and thin, for they know no what, they know not why.

"All which is humbly submitted to your spectral wisdom, by,

"Sir,

"Your most humble Servant,

"MICHAEL GAMBEL."

"MR. SPECTATOR,

"I have for several years had under my care the government and education of young ladies, which trust I have endeavoured to discharge with due regard to their several capacities and fortunes. I have left nothing undone to imprint in every one of them a humble courteous mind, accompanied with a graceful becoming mien, and have made them pretty much acquainted with the household part of family affairs; but still I find there is something very much wanting in the air of my ladies, different from what I have observed in those who are esteemed your fine-bred women. Now, Sir, I must own to you, I never suffered my girls to learn to dance; but since I have read your discourse of dancing, where you have described the beauty and spirit there is in regular motion, I own myself your convert, and resolve for the future to give my young ladies the accomplishment. But upon imparting my design to their parents, I have been made very uneasy for some time, because several of them have declared that if I did not make use of the master they recommended, they would take away their children. There was Colonel Jumper's lady, a colonel of the train-bands, that has a great interest in her parish she recommends Mr. Trot for the prettiest master in town; that no man teaches a jig like him; that she has seen him rise six or seven capers together with the greatest ease imaginable; and that his scholars twist themselves more ways than the scholar of any master in town; besides, there is Madam Pium, an alderman's lady, recommends a master of their own name, but she declares he is not of their family, yet a very extraordinary man in his way for, besides a very soft air he has in dancing, he gives them a particular behaviour at a tea-table, and in presenting their snuff-box; teaches to twirl, slip or flirt a fan, and how to place patches to the best advantage, either for fat or lean, long or oval faces for my lady says there is more in these things than the world imagines. But I must confess, the major part of those I am concerned with leave it to me. I desire, therefore, according to the enclosed direction, you would send your correspondent who he writ to you on that subject to my house. If proper application this way can give innocence new charms and make virtue legible in the countenance, I shall spare no charge to make my scholars, in their very and limon, bear witness how careful I have the other parts of their education.

"I am, Sir,

"Your most humble Servant,
"RACHAEL WATCHFUL."

. 377.] TUESDAY, MAY 13, 1712.

Quid quisque vitet, nunquam homini satis Cautum est in horis.—HON. 2 Od. xii. 13.
What each should fly, is seldom known;
We unprovided, are undone.—CHARR.

was the mother of poetry, and still produces, he most ignorant and barbarous, a thousand riddles and poetical complaints. It is a footman talk like Oroondates, and converts a rustic into a gentle swain. The most orphibean or mechanic in love bleeds and raves with a certain elegance and tenderness which this passion naturally inspires. inward languishings of a mind infected with passion have given birth to a phrase which is used by all the mating tribe, from the lowest—I mean that of "dying for meas, which owe their very being to this; are full of these metaphorical deaths. And heroines, knights, squires, and damsels, find them in a dying condition. There is the seed of mortality in our modern tragedies, every one gasps, faints, bleeds, and dies. The poets, to describe the execution which by this passion, represent the fair sex as that destroy with their eyes; but I think they have, with great justness of thought, compared a beautiful woman to a porcupine, that sends from every part.

often thought that there is no way so for the cure of this general infirmity, as a reflecting upon the motives that produce it. As passion proceeds from the sense of any perfection in the person beloved, I would not discourage it; but if a man considers his heavy complaints of wounds and deaths, some little affectations of coquetry, which are introduced into charms by his own fond imagination, laying before himself the cause of his may be sufficient to effect the cure of it.

this view that I have looked over the sedices of letters which I have received from you, and composed out of them the following mortality, which I shall lay before you without any further preface, as hoping that it will be useful to him in discovering those several where there is most danger, and those fatal where are made use of to destroy the heedless fly:—

er, slain at a puppet-show on the third of 7, shot from a casement in Piccadilly.

wounded by Zelinda's scarlet stocking, as stepping out of a coach.

apple, smitten at the opera by the glance that was aimed at one who stood by him. his love, lost his life at a ball.

apple, killed by the tap of a fan on his left eye Coquetilla, as he was talking carelessly in a bow-window.

on softly, murdered at the play-house in a box by a frown.

er, mortally wounded by Cleora, as she dug her tucker.

Ralph Gapley, Esq. ring.

F. R. caught his death the 1st.

W. W. killed by accident playing with the glove-box in Drury-lane.

Sir Christopher Cran a whale-bone petticoat.

Sylvius, shot through James's church.

Damon struck through the necklace.

Thomas Trusty, Fr Meanwell, Edward Cranrow, fell all four at the Widow Trapland.

Tom Rattle, chancing as he came out of the upon him, and laid him

Dick Tastewell, slain box in the third act of Samuel Felt, haberd to Islington, by Mrs. S was clambering over a

B. F. T. W. S. I. M last birth-day massacre.

Roger Blinko, cut off his age by a white-wash Musidorus, slain by dimple, in Belinda's left Ned Courtly, present (which she had dropped it, and took away his life

John Gosselin, having a pair of blue eyes, as was dispatched by a smile

Strephon, killed by C into the pit.

Charles Careless, shot who unexpectedly popped of a coach.

Jesiah Wither, aged to his long home by Elizabeth

Jack Freelove, murdered William Wiscacre, G tears by Moll Common.

John Pleadwell, Esq. rister-at-law, assassinated inst. by Kitty Sly, who for his advice.

I.

No. 378.] WEDNESDAY

Aggredere, O magnos! a

Mature in years, to read

I WILL make no apology to my reader with the following a great genius, a friend who is not ashamed to of his Maker.

MES
A SACRED
Composed of several passages Written in Italian Ye nymphs of Solyma! begin To heavenly themes sublimer The mossy fountains, and the The dreams of Pindus, and the

BRITISH ESSAYISTS.

e imp
 with pre
 begun
 ear a sea
 arise,
 fills the skies,
 shall move Dove,
 nectar pour,
 shower
 nt shall eat a shade,
 fraud sh e ul exte
 ven di
 pected ag
 , be ho
 stis to ng sprin
 ce,
 ns danc
 n rose,
 the sk
 rt cheer appears
 ly,
 g Deity
 nding ski
 valleys, re
 image pay ds, give way ards fore
 nd, behold
 visual ray,
 the day
 nd shall clear olding e crutch be g rose;
 ld shall hear,
 y tear:
 be bound
 mal wound,
 ey care,
 rest air,
 heep dire
 at prote
 arms,
 mon warm
 are engage age,
 n rise,
 teful eyes,
 cover'd o
 no more
 all bend,
 n-share end
 son
 re begun
 e shall y
 d reap the surprise
 lure rise,
 to hear his ear
 hodes,
 bulrush ro
 d with th
 rn;
 dms succe
 e weed ce the verdant
 er lead;
 ll meet,
 grim's feet
 all take snake
 tex sury
 pommel Salem, r y eyes
 adorn
 unborn
 arise,
 skies
 attend,
 ple bond
 prostrate kings,
 can spring

For these ladies spray & rests glow, For these the Queen's radiant ans glow, For these the sparkling petals wide display,
 And break upon thee in a flood of day!
 No more the tag sun shall add the morn,
 No more the Cynthia fill her silver horn, But rest, dissolv'd in thy superior rays,
 One tide of glory, one unclouded blaze O'erflow thy courts, thy halls, thy domes, shall shine Forever, and for ever, all day be thine!
 These shall white the skies, & make decay, These shall dust, and mountains roll away, But fix this word, His saying, power remains;
 His shall be ever his, thy own Messiah reigns
 T.

No. 379.] THURSDAY, MAY 15, 1712.

Sentium nihil est, nate sunt hoc erat aliter.
 Prosa Sat. 1. 2.
 — Science in science full reveal'd — Onions.

I have often wondered at that ill-natured position which has sometimes been maintained in the schools, &c. &c. is comprised in an old Latin verse, namely, that "A man's knowledge is worth nothing if he communicates what he knows to any one besides." There is certainly no more sensible pleasure to a well-natured man, than if he can by any means gratify or inform the mind of another. I might add, that this virtue naturally carries it own reward along with it, since it is almost impossible it should be exercised without the improvement of the person who practises it. The reading of books, and the daily occurrences of life, are continually furnishing us with matter for thought and reflection. It is extremely natural for us to desire to see such our thoughts put in the dress of words, without which, indeed, we can scarce have a clear and distinct idea of them, ourselves. When they are thus clothed in expressions, nothing so truly shows us whether they are just or false, as those effects which they produce in the minds of others.

I am apt to flatter myself, that, in the course of these my speculations, I have treated of several subjects, and laid down many such rules for the conduct of a man's life, which my readers were either wholly ignorant of before, or which at least those few who were acquainted with them, looked upon as so many secrets they have found out for the conduct of themselves, but were resolved never to have made public.

I am the more confirmed in this opinion from my having received several letters, wherein I am censured for having prostituted Learning to the embraces of the vulgar, and made her, as one of my correspondents phrases it, a common strumpet. I am charged by another with laying open the arcanes or secrets of prudence to the eyes of every reader.

The narrow spirit which appears in the letters of these my correspondents is the less surprising, as it has shewn itself in all ages; there is still extant a epistle written by Alexander the Great to his tutor Aristotle, upon that philosopher's publishing some part of his writings; in which the prince complains of his having made known to all the world those secrets in learning which he had before communicated to him in private lectures, concluding, that he had rather excel the rest of mankind in knowledge than in power.

Louisa de Padua, a lady of great learning, and countess of Aranda, was in like manner angry with the famous Gratian, upon his publishing his treatise of the Discrete, wherein she fancied that he had laid open those maxims to common readers which ought have been reserved for the knowledge of the objections are thought by many of so much that they often defend the above-mentioned by affirming they have affected such an object in their style and manner of writing, that, very one may read their works, there will be very few who can comprehend their meaning. As the Latin satirist, affected obscurity for reason; with which, however, Mr. Cowley added, that, writing to one of his friends, says he, "tell me, that you do not know Persius be a good poet or no, because you understand him; for which very reason I at he is not so."

For, this art of writing unintelligibly has been much improved, and followed by several persons, who, observing the general inclination of mankind to dive into a secret, and the reputation have acquired by concealing their meaning under obscure terms and phrases, resolve, may be still more abstruse, to write with meaning at all. This art, as it is at present practised by many eminent authors, consists in using so many words at a venture into difficulties, and leaving the curious reader to find the meaning of them.

The Egyptians, who made use of hieroglyphics for several things, expressed a man who condescended to knowledge and discoveries altogether within the figure of a dark lantern closed on all sides, though it was illuminated within, affording a manner of light or advantage to such as it. For my own part, as I shall from time to time communicate to the public whatever discoveries happen to make, I should much rather be like to an ordinary lamp, which consumes and itself for the benefit of every passenger.

I conclude this paper with the story of Roscius's sepulchre. I suppose I need not inform you, that this man was the founder of the Roman sect, and that his disciples still pretend to discoveries, which they are never to communicate to the rest of mankind.*

A certain person having occasion to dig some place in the ground, where this philosopher lay, met with a small door, having a wall on all sides of it. His curiosity, and the hopes of some hidden treasure, soon prompted him to open the door. He was immediately surprised by a sudden blaze of light, and discovered a vault. At the upper end of it was a statue of a man in armour, sitting by a table, and leaning on his right arm. He held a truncheon in his right hand, and had a lamp burning before him. The man no sooner set one foot within the vault, than the statue erected itself from its leaning position, bolt upright, and upon the fellow's advancing another step, lifted up the truncheon in his right hand. The man still ventured a third step, but the statue, with a furious blow, broke the lamp into a thousand pieces, and left his guest in a sudden darkness.

On the report of this adventure, the country soon came with lights to the sepulchre, and found that the statue, which was made of brass, was more than a piece of clock-work; that of the vault was all loose, and underlaid with several springs, which, on being touched, naturally produced light.

Roscius, say his disciples, by this method to show the world the ever burning lamps of truth, was resolved no one should be deceived from the discovery.—X

No. 380.] FRIDAY

Rivalem patienter habet

With patience bear a

"Sir,

"THE character you have given of the ladies' philosopher, has been seen you give to others. I thought I should address myself to you in order to desire your opinion on a subject I may call a lover. I have thought that I thought made perfect that most of my friends thought we were really much pains to undeceive a young gentleman of fortune who was then in the town, and seeing our interest in the liberty of taking I ingenuously told her I did not know what might be the consequence of getting acquainted with her, to take upon her to examine whether a new face had more than the old I will leave it to you to be determined that he utterly courted, but withal perfect for me; but, whether a way of friendship or not, and what I may really many who talk in a language of character, and yet guard themselves in direct terms to the point of distinguish between courtship and friendship. I hope you will do me the favour to let me know, and my friend, if they please, mean time I carry it with me the nymph and the swain, each believes I, who know myself revenged in their conduct, creates an irreconcilable right again, you shall hear."

"Sir, your most obedient servant,

"MR. SPECTATOR,

"Your observations on the character of the ladies' philosopher have had a good effect on me, but there is another fault in your notice, I mean of very zealous and punctilious that is only preparatory, and yet neglect to join in is an instance of this in the comb's, who sits opposite in till the prayers are said, he has entered his seat (in congregation) he devoutly face for three or four minutes acquaintance, sits down, and it be the evening service."

* See the account of the discovery of the sepulchre of Roscius, in the Œuvres de Gabalis, par l'Abbe Villars, 1742, 2 vols. ed. of Pope's Works, ed. of Warb. vol. 1. p. 109, 12mo.

BRITISH ESSAYISTS

the congress
is, that you
man's prac-
s devotion,
he custom of de ecclesiast-
attend to tell s to solemn will give this remain,
vant.
" J. S."

lay the 5th.
which I am a
and the de-
of relating y own door girl, under milk-pail I an opportu-
ette in low
nary notice
had affected
nanner as it
a play on in he discusse
ended in a enjoys her quality. I ject for you ll conditions
an occasion
ing the rest,
servant.
" T. B." ay 12, 1712.

ouse not far
der my arm.
ormed, takes
e same time
m a curtesy, nd finding I
up with me,
the gulfrea
y person for you gave it p it to make ast ungrate-
a couple of
I am so just,
asks how I benefactor
ny tale over our of you to
ely oblige,
servant.

LEMON."
ay 15, 1712
, and I dare
that I have
e gentleman.
ave raised a
of fifty boys,
boys to the
ope you will
— — —
se well there do them the same favour in Friday's Spectator for Sunday next, when they are to appear with their humble airs at the parish church of St. Bride's S.r. the mention of this may possibly be serviceable to the children; and sure no one will omit a good action attended with no expense.

" I am, Sir,
" Your very humble Servant,
T. " THE SEXTON."

No 381 | SATURDAY, MAY 17, 1712.

Aquum memento rebus in arduis Sociare mentem, non setus in bonis, An insidens temperatam Latitia, meriture Belli.—HOR. 2 Od. m. 1.
Be calm, my Bellias, and serene, Howe'er fortune change the scene,
In thy most dejected state, Suck rest underneath the weight; Nor yet, when happy days begin,
And the full tide comes rolling in,
Let a fierce, unruly, joy
The settled quiet of thy mind destroy.—ABST.

I HAVE always preferred cheerfulness to mirth The latter I consider as an act, the former as a habit of the mind. Mirth is short and transient, cheerfulness fixed and permanent. Those are often raised into the greatest transports of mirth, who are subject to the greatest depressions of melancholy. On the contrary, cheerfulness, though it does not give the mind such an exquisite gladness, prevents it from falling into any depths of sorrow. Mirth like a flash of lightning, that breaks through a gloom of clouds, and glitters for a moment; cheerfulness keeps up a kind of day-light in the mind, and fills it with a steady and perpetual serenity.

Men of austere principles look upon mirth as a wanton and dissolute for a state of probation, and filled with a certain triumph and insolence of heart that is inconsistent with a life which is every moment obnoxious to the greatest dangers. Writers of this complexion have observed, that the Sacred Person who was the great pattern of perfection never seem to laugh.

Cheerfulness of mind is not liable to any of the exceptions: it is of a serious and composed nature it does not throw the mind into a condition improper for the present state of humanity, and is very common in the characters of those who are looked upon as the greatest philosophers among the heathen as well as among those who have been deservedly respected as saints and holy men among Christians.

If we consider cheerfulness in three lights, as regard to ourselves, to those we converse with, and to the great Author of our being, it will not a little commend itself on each of these accounts. The man who is possessed of this excellent frame of mind, is not only easy in his thoughts, but a perfect master of all the powers and faculties of his soul.
His imagination is always clear, and his judgment undisturbed; his temper is even and unruffled whether in action or in solitude. He comes with relish to all those goods which nature has provided for him, tastes all the pleasures of the creature which are poured about him, and does not feel the full weight of those accidental evils which molest mortal man.

If we consider him in relation to the persons whom he converses with, it naturally produces in another good-will towards him. A cheerful mind is not only disposed to be affable and obliging; but raises the same good humour in those who come within influence. A man finds himself pleased, he deto know why, with the cheerfulness of his companion. It is like a sudden sunshine that awakens a secret delight in the mind, without her attending to it.

The heart rejoices of its own accord, and naturally flows out into friendship and benevolence towards the person who has so kindly an effect upon it.

When I consider this cheerful state of mind in its first relation, I cannot but look upon it as a constant habitual gratitude to the great Author of nature. An inward cheerfulness is an implicit praise and thanksgiving to Providence under all its dispensations. It is a kind of acquiescence in the state wherein we are placed, and a secret approbation of the Divine Will in his conduct towards man.

There are but two things which, in my opinion, can reasonably deprive us of this cheerfulness of heart. The first of these is the sense of guilt. A man who lives in a state of vice and impenitence, can have no title to that evenness and tranquillity of mind which is the health of the soul, and the natural fruit of virtue and innocence. Cheerfulness in an unrepentant man deserves a harder name than language can furnish us with, and is many degrees beyond what we customarily call folly or madness.

Atheism, by which I mean a disbelief of a Supreme Being, and consequently of a future state, under whatever titles it shelter itself, may likewise very reasonably deprive a man of this cheerfulness of temper. There is something so particularly gloomy and offensive to human nature in the prospect of non-existence, that I cannot but wonder, with many excellent writers, how it is possible for a man to outlive the expectation of it. For my own part, I think the being of a God is so little to be doubted, that it is almost the only truth we are sure of; and such a truth as we meet with in every object, in every occurrence, and in every thought. If we look into the characters of this tribe of infidels, we generally find they are made up of pride, spleen, and envy. It is indeed no wonder, that men who are treasurers to themselves should be so to the rest of the world; and how is it possible for a man to be otherwise than uneasy in himself, who is in danger every moment of losing his entire existence, and dropping into nothing?

The vicious man and Atheist have therefore no pretence to cheerfulness, and would act very unreasonably should they endeavour after it. It is impossible for any one to live in good-humour, and enjoy his present existence, who is apprehensive either of torment or of annihilation; of being miserable, or of not being at all.

After having mentioned these two great principles, which are destructive of cheerfulness in their own nature, as well as in right reason, I cannot think of any other that ought to banish this happy temper from a virtuous mind. Pain and sickness, shame and reproach, poverty and old age, nay death itself, considering the shortness of their duration, and the advantage we may reap from them, do not deserve the name of evils. A good mind may bear up under them with fortitude, with indolence, and with cheerfulness of heart. The tossing of a tempest does not discompose him, which he is sure will bring him to a joyful harbour.

A man who uses his best endeavours to live according to the dictates of virtue and right reason, has two perpetual sources of cheerfulness, in the consideration of his own nature, and of that Being on whom he has a dependance. If he looks into himself, he cannot but rejoice in that existence which is so lately bestowed upon him, and which,

after millions of its beginning, naturally arise in entrance into existence at its first setting out, and progress, and what of perfection, and happiness! The cheerfulness of a perpetual day, a virtuous man, every moment can conceive.

The second source of cheerfulness is the consideration of our dependance on him as yet but imperfections, we as great, glorious every where upon with an immensity depend upon a man make us happy, and desire it of him secure us in this

Such considerations perpetually cherish all that secret happiness men are subject to affliction; all the any evil that accide likewise add to the folly that are apt to establish in temper, as makes us whom we convert made to please.

No. 382.]

Hab
The

I OUGHT not of my correspondence say I have given a reason. He sent an excellent wine who had by the egregious error received the obsequies of the candour which and promises a the future. He more errors of benevolence. The upon the amiable generous acknowledgements as for repaid by it; for the injury, em He that says, I such an action, you, that though was never in his you that he is yours. It must be a judgment of a spirit, and not is quite different, when return made in

To make the best manner of it by a proper order who told his way. The n, which was for his error k a cane at roarious lan-

The whole g, who com-ight hand on horseback in rden. When was going to gility, threw t.

the pleasure the repara-s soldier, ap-by his grati-resentment.

se extraordi-see an inge-up for faults n in the very in a man has

by owning, confidence; his favour; hose gay fel-pudent, and calling them- this sort of rules to urge ly when you dent in pre-merit, every it, in defence without cons at this time andour when gant, often in e style, with the reputed e most beau-rely the pub-man really hat he takes orld, he loses a man must self, before inward morat the bar, all that they ole assembly d his case to ng any thing in before we own mouth, d sorrow we the great op- from the un-at we call a high spirit. It is far from greatness of spirit to persist in the wrong in any thing; nor is it a diminution of greatness of spirit to have been in the wrong. Perfection is not the attribute of man, therefore I am not degraded by the acknowledgment of an imperfection; but it is the work of little minds to impute the fortitude of great spirits on worthy occasions, by obstinacy in the wrong. This obstinacy prevails so far upon them, that they make it extend to the defence of faults in their very servants. I would swell this paper to too great a length should I insert all the quirels and debates which are going on foot in this town; where one party, and in some cases both, is sensible of being on the faulty side and ~~are~~ not spirit enough to acknowledge it. Among the ladies the case is very common; for there are very few of them who know that it is to maintain a true and high spirit, to throw away from it all which itself disapproves, and to scorn so pitiful a shame, as that which disables the heart from accepting a liberality of affection and sentiments. The candid mind, by acknowledging and discarding its faults, has reason and truth for the foundation of all its passions and desires, and consequently is happy and simple: the disingenuous spirit, by indulgence of one unacknowledged error, is entangled with an after-life of guilt, sorrow, and perplexity.—T.

No. 383.] TUESDAY, MAY 20, 1712.

Crimine de hortis — Juv. Sat. l. 75

A beauty to garden, but by vice maintain'd

As I was sitting in my chamber, and thinking of a subject for my next Spectator, I heard two or three irregular bounces at my landlady's door, and upon the opening of it, a loud cheerful voice inquiring whether the philosopher was at home. The child who went to the door answered very innocently, that he did not lodge there. I immediately recollected that it was my good friend Sir Roger vol. 1: and that I had promised to go with him to the water to Spring-garden,* in case it proved good evening. The knight put me in mind of a promise from the bottom of the staircase, but told me, that if I was speculating, he would stay below until I had done. Upon my coming down, I found all the children of the family got about my old friend; and my landlady herself who is a notable prating gossip, engaged in a conference with him being mightily pleased with his stroking her little boy on the head, and bidding him to be a good child and mind his book.

We were no sooner come to the Temple-stair but we were surrounded with a crowd of watermen offering us their respective services. Sir Roger after having looked about him very attentively, spied one with a wooden leg, and immediately gave him orders to get his boat ready. As we were walking towards it, "You must know," says Sir Roger, "I never make use of any body to row me, this is not lost either a leg or an arm. I would rather have a few strokes of his oar than not employ an honest man that has been wounded in the queen's service. If I was a lord or a bishop, and kept barge, I would not put a fellow in my livery that had not a wooden leg."

My old friend, after having seated himself, and trundled the boat with his coachman, who, being a very sober man, always serves for ballast on these occasions, we made the best of our way for Vaux-

* Now known by the name of Vauxhall.

all.* Sir Roger obliged the waterman to give us the history of his right leg; and hearing that he had left it at La Hogue, with many particulars which passed in that glorious action, the knight, in the triumph of his heart, made several reflections on the greatness of the British nation; as, that one Englishman could beat three Frenchmen; that we could never be in danger of popery so long as we took care of our fleet; that the Thames was the noblest river in Europe; that London-bridge was a greater piece of work than any of the seven wonders of the world; with many other honest prejudices which naturally cleave to the heart of a true Englishman.

After some short pause, the old knight, turning about his head twice or thrice to take a survey of his great metropolis, bid me observe how thick the city was set with churches, and that there was scarce a single steeple on this side Temple-bar. "A most heathenish sight!" says Sir Roger: "there is no religion at this end of the town. The fifty new churches will very much mend the prospect; but church-work is slow, church-work is slow."

I do not remember I have any where mentioned in Sir Roger's character, his custom of saluting every body that passes by him with a good-morrow or a good-night. This the old man does out of the overflowings of his humanity; though at the same time, it renders him so popular among all his country neighbours, that it is thought to have gone a good way in making him once or twice knight of the shire. He cannot forbear this exercise of benevolence even in town, when he meets with any one in his morning or evening walk. It broke from him to several boats that passed by us upon the water; but, to the knight's great surprise, as he gave the good-night to two or three young fellows a little before our landing, one of them, instead of returning the civility, asked us what queer old put we had in the boat, and whether he was not ashamed to go a-wenching at his years? with a great deal of the like Thames-ribaldry. Sir Roger seemed a little shocked at first, but at length assuming a face of magistracy, told us, that if he were a Middlesex justice, he would make such vagrants know that her majesty's subjects were no more to be abused by water than by land.

We were now arrived at Spring-garden, which is excellently pleasant at this time of the year. When I considered the fragrancy of the walks and bowers, with the choirs of birds that sung upon the trees, and the loose tribe of people that walked under their shades, I could not but look upon the place as a kind of Mahometan paradise. Sir Roger told me it put him in mind of a little coppice by his house in the country, which his chaplain used to call an aviary of nightingales. "You must understand," says the knight, "there is nothing in the world that pleases a man in love so much as your nightingale. Ah, Mr. Spectator, the many moonlight nights that I have walked by myself, and thought on the widow by the music of the nightingale!" He here fetched a deep sigh, and was falling into a fit of musing, when a mask, who came behind him, gave him a gentle tap upon the shoulder, and asked him if he would drink a bottle of mead with her? But the knight being startled at so unexpected a familiarity, and displeased to be interrupted in his thoughts of the widow, told her "she was a wanton baggage;" and bid her go about her business.

We conclude the tale, and a slice of eating ourselves, and bid him call that had but one on him at the o to be saucy; commands with

As we were g thinking himse rum, to animat told the mistres that he should if there were t pets.—I.

No. 384.] W

"Hague, May 24, have so often si killed him in ou Dauphin of Fra and death itself they will take t assured by a ve instant this you to be since the c now sending his modesty to cont merci in Lorrain few domestics o mar<sup>o</sup> having det an ambassador enemies will a Utrecht, when long at that cou his lamentable s

I SHOULD be overlook some My lord bishop lished some ser me to determin man, and a god flattery and b princes, assert found us as to tainment shall Post-Boy, and Asaph. I shou of the Post-Bo publicans for a of the pretend minister of Ha in my motto. England conc that family.

"The publi latest of which and the first natural for pe doing so; and these following

"First, from to make for th public affairs, several princ been studiously thereupon, I c saging, that th if ever we shou the throne, of and true honou tions, and lose

<sup>o</sup> Ambassador of the Hanoverian f † Dr. William

* In the original publication in folio, it is printed Fox-hall.

BRITISH ESSAYISTS.

ose charge a
 whenever it er justly or mine: but I o deliver my-ches and the ng to all the course of my er occasions,
 the loving,
 ce's person,
 violable and submission to convenient to k myself at e that either
 y other holy y them, sub-
 country in re condition
 a they would ans. I ever against that it that might justice, in a a free and
 No. People
 ey will, but arty. When have brought eck, religion
 d submissive
 shake it off:
 This always ent of these to posterity
 as mine can no loved his Englishman,
 e transmitted
 made for and could think the occasions
 ence, without public; and ey were then those people
 les to me, as erly was. I matters; and ell-grounded,
 er.
 ese sermons
 myself some
 the memory
 o have very
 the people of value for the
 tion of the ere the great
 d to see their
 and the great ightly and r deliverance
 ced and vili-
 at was their ir boast and are in bring-st, must have nly disclaim-
 ents thereof.

Who could expect such a requital of such merit I have, I own it, an ambition of exempting myself from the number of unthankful people: and as loved and honoured those great princes living, as lamented over them when dead, so I would gladly raise them up a monument of praise as lasting as any thing of mine can be: and I choose to do it this time, when it is so unfashionable a thing to speak honourably of them.

"The sermon that was preached upon the Duke of Gloucester's death was printed quickly after, and is now, because the subject was so suitable, joined to the others. The loss of that most promising and hopeful prince was at that time, I saw, unspeakably great; and many accidents since have convinced us that it could not have been overvalued. That precious life, had it pleased God to have prolonged in the usual space, had saved us many fears and jealousies, and dark distrusts, and prevented many alarms that have long kept us, and will keep us still, waking and uneasy. Nothing remained but comfort and support us under this heavy stroke, but the necessity it brought the king and nation united of settling the succession in the house of Hanover, and giving it a hereditary right by act of parliament as long as it continues Protestant. So much good did God, in his merciful providence, produce from misfortune, which we could never otherwise have sufficiently deplored!

"The fourth sermon was preached upon the queen's accession to the throne, and the first year in which that day was solemnly observed (for by some accident or other it had been overlooked the year before); and every one will see, without the date of it, that it was preached very early in the reign, since I was able only to promise and presage a future glories and successes, from the good appearances of things, and the happy turn our affairs began to take; and could not then count up the victories and triumphs that, for seven years after, made it, in the prophet's language, a name and a praise among all the people of the earth. Never did seven such years together pass over the head of any English monarch, nor cover it with so much honour. The crown and sceptre seemed to be the queen's least ornaments; those, other princes wore in common with her, and her great personal virtues were the same before and since; but such was the fame of her administration of affairs at home, such was the reputation of her wisdom and felicity in choosing ministers, and such was then esteemed the faithfulness and zeal, their diligence and great abilities, in executing her commands; to such a height of military glory did her great general and her armies carry the British name abroad; such was the harmony and concord betwixt her and her allies, and such was the blessing of God upon all her counsels and undertakings, that I am as sure as history can make me, no prince of ours ever was so prosperous and successful, so beloved, esteemed, as honoured by their subjects and their friends, so near so formidable to their enemies. We were, all the world imagined then, just entering on the ways that promised to such a peace as would have answered all the prayers of our religious queen, the care and vigilance of a most able ministry, the payment of a willing and most obedient people, as we as all the glorious toils and hazards of the soldier; when God, for our sins, permitted the spirit of discord to go forth, and by troubling sore the camp the city and the country, (and oh that it had altogether spared the places sacred to his worship) or a time, this beautiful and pleasing prospect give us, in its stead, I know not what—nines will tell the rest with pleasure. It ne me better to pray to God to restore us ker of obtaining such a peace as will be to the safety, honour, and welfare of the d her dominions, and the general satisfac her high and mighty allies.—T.

2, 1712."

S. THURSDAY, MAY 22, 1712.

Thesea pectora juncta fide.—OVID, I Trist. lib. 66. is that with sympathizing ardour glow'd, oly friendship, such as Theseus vow'd.

ed the paper for this day as a loose essay adship, in which I shall throw my observa- ether without any set form, that I may eating what has been often said on this ship is a strong and habitual inclination rsons to promote the good and happiness other. Though the pleasures and advan- friendship have been largely celebrated by aoral writers, and are considered by all as edients of human happiness, we very et with the practice of this virtue in the man is ready to give in a long catalogue virtues and good qualities he expects to e person of a friend, but very few of us l to cultivate them in ourselves.

ad esteem are the first principles of friend- h always is imperfect where either of these ating.

the one hand, we are soon ashamed of nan whom we cannot esteem; so, on the igh we are truly sensible of a man's abi- can never raise ourselves to the warmth ship, without an affectionate good-will to- person.

hip immediately banishes envy under all es. A man who can once doubt whether rejoice in his friend's being happier than ay depend upon it that he is an utter t this virtue.

something in friendship so very great, that in those fictitious stories which are o the honour of any particular person, the ve thought it as necessary to make their nd as a lover. Achilles has his Patro- Eneas his Achates. In the first of these we may observe, for the reputation of l I am treating of, that Greece was almost the hero's love, but was preserved by his

acter of Achates suggests to us an ob- ve may often make on the intimacies of who frequently choose their companions the qualities of the heart than those f, and prefer fidelity in an easy, inoffen- ying temper, to those endowments which eld greater figure among mankind. I ember that Achates, who is represented t favourite, either gives his advice, or ow, through the whole Æneid.

ship which makes the least noise is very useful; for which reason I should prefer friend to a zealous one.

one of the best men of ancient Rome, remarkable instance of what I am here This extraordinary person, amidst the civil wars of his country of all parties equally to liberty, by constantly affection of both the e serve his friends on eith money to young Marius an enemy to the com one of Sylla's chief favo general.

During the war betw stil maintained the same of Cæsar, he sent mone and did a thousand go and friends when that pe even in that bloody was gustus, Atticus still ke friendships: inasmuch t Nepos, whenever he was part of the empire, writ was doing, what he read, go; and the latter gave count of all his affairs.

A likeness of inclinat so far from being requis two minds towards each imagined, that I believe firmest friendships to have persons of different humo pleased with those perfe and which it does not find ments. Besides that a p plies his own defects, and band possessed of those ments which are in the p eye of the world is look

The most difficult pro letting a man see his fault if possible, be so contri our advice is given him selves as for his own ad therefore of a friend sho and not too frequent.

The violent desire of p proved, may otherwise cha it, while he finds himself not conscious of. A min manized by friendship o proaches; either it must pression, or abate consi esteem it had for him wh

The proper business of and courage; and a soul self; whereas, if it be v these succours, it droops

We are in some measur violate our duties to a fr since the former arises fro latter from a necessity to our own consent.

As it has been said on not to break with a fault expose the weakness of h hold much stronger with that he may never be up valuable a treasure which sion.—X.

No. 386.] FRIDA

Cum tristibus severe, cum remi- viter, cum juvenute comiter

THE piece of Latin on

BRITISH ESSAYISTS.

but I have set the rules of Catiline, merely, with the wicked." The two or bear to consent only to upon a com- sign and in- this manner from a man's to do it out the most fruit- aginable. To er end but an is of all en- must be sin- not to inter- it is a most ple who want e into conver- are the least n inclination rather be in- had better go n force them- d humour. In a friend a sad eve a heavy ere meant is, nation to the or not pre- a very happy ds of dispos- open to re- ot obstinately with the cha- o. You meet the wise, the d the witty; in it that can y one sect of use, good na- a enjoys him- to contributes er was at a second time. e of Acasto, a ful to the ge- ng pleasing. agreeable as companions rally the pre- g that if you in his seat, e rest of the ng agreeable thing as art hose you are entertained, A man thus y call a good in all the g friendly in minds more s of humour in a man of d be treated with respect even in a man no otherwise general The forwardness of youth, when it proceeds fr alacrity and not insolence, has also its allowance The companion who is formed for such by nature gives to every character of life its due regards, a is ready to account for their imperfections, and ceive their accomplishments as if they were his ow It must appear that you receive law from, and give it, to your company, to make you agreeable

I remember Tully, speaking, I think, of Antio says, that, In eo facillia erant, quæ nulla arte in posunt: "He had a witty mirth, which could be acquired by no art." This quality must be of a kind of which I am now speaking; for all sorts of behaviour which depend upon observation and knowledge of life are to be acquired; but that which one can describe, and is apparently the act of nature, must be every where prevalent, because every thing it meets is a fit occasion to exert it; and who follows nature can never be improper or unseasonable.

How unaccountable then must their behaviour be, who, without any manner of consideration what the company they have just now entered upon, give themselves the air of a messenger, as make as distinct relations of the occurrences the last met with, as if they had been dispatched from those they talk to, to be punctually exact in a report of those circumstances! It is unpardonable in those who are met to enjoy one another that a free man shall pop in, and give us only the last part of his own life, and put a stop to ours during the history. If such a man comes from 'Change, whether you will or not, you must hear how the stocks go, and, though you are never so intently employed on a graver subject, a young fellow of the other end of the town will take his place and tell you, Mrs. Swallow is charmingly handsome, because he just now saw her. But I think I need not dwell on this subject, since I have acknowledged there can be no rules made for excelling this way; and precepts of this kind fare like rules for writing poetry, while it is said, may have prevented ill poets, but never made good ones.

T.

No. 387.] SATURDAY, MAY 24, 1712.

Quid pure tranqillet—Hos. 1 Ep. xviii. 102.

What calms the breast, and makes the soul serene.

IN my last Saturday's paper I spoke of cheerfulness as it is a moral habit of the mind, and accordingly mentioned such moral motives as are apt to cherish and keep alive this happy temper in the soul of man: I shall now consider cheerfulness in its natural state, and reflect on those motives to which are indifferent either as to virtue or vice.

Cheerfulness is, in the first place, the best promoter of health. Repinings, and secret murmurings of heart, give imperceptible strokes to those delicate fibres of which the vital parts are composed, and wear out the machine insensibly; not to mention those violent ferments which they stir up in the blood, and those irregular disturbed motions which they raise in the animal spirits. I scarce remember in my own observation, to have met with many old men, or with such, who (to use our English phrase) wear well, that had not at least a certain indolence in their humour, if not a more than ordinary gaiety and cheerfulness of heart. The truth of it is, health and cheerfulness mutually beget each other; and this difference, that we seldom meet with a great degree of health which is not attended with a certain liness, but very often see cheerfulness where there is no great degree of health.

Cheerfulness bears the same friendly regard to the mind as to the body. It banishes all anxious and discontent, soothes and composes the passions, and keeps the soul in a perpetual calm. But already touched on this last consideration, I will take notice, that the world in which we live is filled with innumerable objects that appear to raise and keep alive this happy temper of mind.

We consider the world in its subserviency to us, we would think it was made for our use; but consider it in its natural beauty and harmony, and we are apt to conclude it was made for our eyes. The sun, which is as the great soul of the world, and produces all the necessities of life, has a particular influence in cheering the mind of man, making the heart glad.

Several living creatures which are made for our use or sustenance, at the same time either amuse us with their music, furnish us with game, or give us pleasing ideas in us by the delightfulness of their appearance. Fountains, lakes, and rivers, are made to shine to the imagination, as to the soil which they pass.

Painters are writers of great distinction, who have made an argument for Providence, that the whole world is covered with green rather than with any other colour, as being such a right mixture of light and dark, that it comforts and strengthens the eye, and does not weaken or grieve it. For this reason, several painters have a green cloth hanging in their rooms, to ease the eye upon, after too great an exertion to their colouring. A famous modern painter* accounts for it in the following manner: "The most luminous, and most dissipated the animal spirits which are in the eye; on the contrary, those that are more dense do not give the animal spirits a sufficient exercise; whereas the rays that produce in us the colour of green, fall upon the eye in such a due manner, that they give the animal spirits their proper exercise, and, by keeping up the struggle in a moderate degree, excite a very pleasing and agreeable temper." Let the cause be what it will, the effect is the same; for which reason, the poets ascribe to the colour of green the epithet of cheerful.

Consider further this double end in the works of Providence, and how they are at the same time both useful and entertaining, we find that the most important parts in the vegetable world are those which are the most beautiful. These are the seeds by which several races of plants are propagated, and which are always lodged in the most beautiful blossoms. Nature seems to hide her design, and to be industrious in making the world gay and delightful, while she is carrying on her great work, and intent upon her own preservation. The husbandman, after the same manner, is employed in laying out the whole country into a garden or landscape, and making every thing about him, whilst in reality he thinks of nothing but of the harvest, and the increase which he derives from it.

We may further observe how Providence has contrived to keep up this cheerfulness in the mind of man, having formed it after such a manner, as to be capable of conceiving delight from several objects which seem to have very little use in them; as from the view of the sea, and the like grotesque and ridiculous objects, are versed in philosophy, and consider things in a higher, by which they appeared to us endowments which it actually is but a very joyless and empty thing. Why has Providence contrived in us such imaginary pleasures, sounds and smells, while he is conversant with the real world, might have his conversation with agreeable sensations, and the reverse is a kind of the either raise in us pleasure.

The reader's own experience of the vicissitude of days, and seasons, with all that varies the face of nature, and the succession of beautiful

I shall not here mention the pleasures of the arts, with the pleasures of conversation, and other pleasures, because I would only mention them to a cheerful temper, persons of all ranks are sufficiently shown us that this world should be a place of pleasures, or that the heart should be in gloom and melancholy.

I the more inculcate as it is a virtue in which we are served to be more deficient. Melancholy is a kind of island, and often conveyed by a wind. A celebrated Fable tells us that to those who begin the season of the year, and the gloomy month of November in England hang and droop, a lover walked out into the world.

Every one ought to consider his climate or constitution, and in himself those considerations which lead to a serenity of mind, and to a full and lively temper, and fully against those little pleasures which are common to human nature, and improvement of them, and an uninterrupted happiness.

At the same time that we consider the world in its utility, we must own there are pleasures spring up amidst the cares of life, which are provided for us; but these, if we be far from overcasting our minds, and destroying that cheerful temper which has been recommending.

With good, and pain with good, nature, is very truly as the poet says in his Essay on Human Understanding, in the following words:

"Beyond all this world, why God hath scattered pleasures of pleasure and pain around and affect us, almost all that our thoughts are with; that we, finding in our hearts a want of complete happiness, which the creature is led to seek it in the enjoyment of, there is fullness of joy, and pleasures for evermore."

* Sir Isaac Newton.

BRITISH ESSAYISTS

MAY 26, 1712.

et artis
udere fontes.
Vind. Georg. li. 174.
sacred spring,
sages sing.

read your papers, to authors from whence ed a passage lately omon's Song, it oc-
d, upon reading it,
ly soft and tender,
is paraphrase of it;
ttle forbear sending pprobation which I en me so sensible a bear endeavouring
th any appearance
am, Sir, umble Servant."

LOMON'S SONG.

ashing rose
disclose,
r:

us pride prevail,
sunshine blest.
he rest:
ere, shed
er's head,
ad.
yield.
art combine,

han mine.

pass
grass;
ns, shine,
f divine;
old,
igh,

invite:
ng sight,
ght.

my head.
haste;
to the taste;
he bowl,
soul;
rove,
ners of his love

t
pprest!

lies,

e: urs stay
s away;
p. mbrace.

s you go d the bow,
on rove,

Let sacred silence dwell around,
To keep off each intruding sound;
And when the balmy slumber leaves his eyes,
May he to joys, unknown till then, arise!

VI.

Bat see! he comes! with what majestic gait
He onward bears his lovely state!
Now through the lattice he appears,
With softest words dispels my fears.
Arise, my fair one, and receive
All the pleasures love can give!
For, now the spilen winter's past,
No more we fear the northern blast;
No storms nor threat'ning clouds appear,
No falling rains deform the year:
My love admits of no delay;
Arise, my fair, and come away!

VII.

Already, see! the teeming earth Brings forth the flow'rs, her beauteous birth.
The dews, and soft-descending show'rs, Nurse the new-born tender flow'rs.
Hark! the birds melodious sing,
And sweetly usher in the spring.
Close by his fellow sits the dove,
And billing whispers her his love.
The spreading vines with blossoms sweet, Diffusing round a grateful smell.
Arise, my fair one, and receive All the blessings love can give:
For love admits of no delay;
Arise, my fair, and come away!

VIII.

As to its mate the constant dove Flies through the covert of the spicy grove, So let us hasten to some lonesome shade;
There let me safe in thy lov'd arms be laid;
Where no intruding hateful noise Shall damp the sound of thy melodious voice.
Where I may gaze, and mark each beauteous grace For sweet thy voice, and lovely is thy face.

IX.

As all of me, my Love, is thine, Let all of thee be ever mine.
Among the lilies we will play; Fairer, my Love, thou art than they.
Till the purple morn arise,
And balmy sleep forsake thine eyes;
Till the gladsome beams of day Remove the shades of night away!
Then, when soft sleep shall from thy eyes depart, Rise like the bounding roe, or lusty hart, Glad to behold the light again From Beth's mountains darling o'er the plain.

T.

No. 389.] TUESDAY, MAY 27, 1712.

—Meliora pili docuere parentes.— Their pious sires a better lesson taught.

NOTHING has more surprised the learned in I-land, than the price which a small book, ent-Spaccio della Bestia trionfante, bore in a late tion.* This book was sold for thirty pounds.

* The book here mentioned was bought by Walter G.
Esq. at the auction of the library of Charles Barnard, Esq.
1711, for twenty-eight pounds. The same copy became cessively the property of Mr. John Nichols, of Mr. J.
Ames, of Sir Peter Thomson, and of M. C. Tinel, Esq. a whose books it was lately sold by auction, at Mr. Groom Litchfield-street. The author of this book, Giordano B. was a native of Nola in the Kingdom of Naples, and was Rome by the order of the Inquisition in 1600. Marbott, a ing of Atheists, says, "Jordanum tamen Brenum hunc non annumerarem." manifesta in illo atheismi venon deprehendo." Polyhist. l. i. s. 22. Bruno published other writings said to be atheistical. The book spoken of was printed, not at Paris, as is said in the title-page, s.
1544, but at London, and in 1584, 12mo. dedicated to Philip Sydney. It was for some time so little regarded, it was sold with five other books of the same author, for ten five pence French, at the sale of Mr. Rigor's library in 1 but it is now very scarce, and has been sold at the stated price of £20. Nicéron. Hommes illust. tom. xviii. p.
There was an edition of it in English in 1713.

by one Jordanus Brunus, a professed a design to depreciate religion, every so fancy, from the extravagant price it ere must be something in it very forress that, happening to get a sight of myself, I could not forbear perusing it rehension; but found there was so very in it, that I shall venture to give my account of the whole plan upon which treatise is built.

r pretends that Jupiter, once upon a l on a reformation of the constellations: rpose, having summoned the stars touplains to them of the great decay of f the gods, which he thought so much aving called several of those celestial names of the heathen deities, and by made the heavens as it were a book of eology. Momus tells him that this is ndered at, since there were so many ories of the deities. Upon which the occasion to cast reflections upon all is, concluding that Jupiter, after a full arded the deities out of heaven, and rs by the names of the moral virtues. fable, which has no pretence in it to gument, and but a very small share of ever recommended itself, wholly by its hose weak men who would distinguish y the singularity of their opinions.

two considerations which have been against Atheists, and which they never over. The first is, that the greatest ancient persons of all ages have been
, and always complied with the public hip established in their respective coun-were was nothing in them either deroga-mour of the Supreme Being, or preju-good of mankind.

s and Ciceros among the ancients; the Boyles, and the Lockes, among our own ; are all instances of what I have been to mention any of the divines, however nee our adversaries challenge all those, have too much interest in this case to evidences.

as been often urged as a consideration e weight, is not only the opinion of the ut the general consent of mankind to ith; which I think could not possibly pass, but from one of the three folas: either that the idea of a God is inexistent with the mind itself; or that so very obvious, that it is discovered by rtion of reason in persons of the most acities; or, lastly, that it has been deto us through all ages by a tradition man.

sts are equally confounded, to which three causes we assign it; they have ed by this last argument from the get of mankind, that after great search ey pretend to have found out a nation mean that polite people the Hottentots.
shock my readers with a description of and manners of these barbarians, who respect scarce one degree above brutes, anguage among them but a confused h is neither well understood by themselves.

however, to be imagined, how much the Atheists have gloried in their

and allies.

If we boast of a Socrates now confront them with these Hottentots.

Though even this point has been several times controverted, harm it could do to religion give them up this elegant po-

Methtinks nothing more their cause, than that no o-creatures join with them, but they themselves own reason who have little else but the title them to any place in the

Besides these poor creatures then been instances of a few nations, who have denied the

The catalogue of these is even Vanini, the most celeb-cause, professed before his the existence of a God; and which lay before him on the that alone was sufficient to leging several arguments to possible nature alone could

I was the other day readi-mir Lyszynski, a gentleman convicted and executed for of his punishment was very his body was burnt, his ashes and shot into the air towards

I am apt to believe, that method of punishment shows (such is the natural good sen-tion), that whether we rama great gun, or pulverized our Poland, we should not have

I should however propose lasted, that, instead of Tan-keep two or three cannons re-Cape of Good Hope, in order into the country of the Hot-

In my opinion, a solemn jan honour for an Atheist; method of exploding him, a ludicrous kind of martyrdom proper enough to the nature

There is indeed a great manner of treating them.
active a nature, that it seldo-for which reason I am afraid our Atheists, we might possour sectaries; and as one de-situde of human affairs, it come to a man's own turn to a demiculverin.

If any of my readers imathese gentlemen in two ludic-confess, for my own part, I such unbelievers, upon a po-mon sense of mankind, is a honour, giving them a figure and making people fancy them than they really have

As for those persons who ligious worship, I am for the most tenderness, and should their errors with the greatest but as these miscreants are gion in general, for strip-themselves own is of exec-

No, thou aloud may'st thy petitions trust!
 Thou need'st not whisper; other great ones must;
 For few, my friend, few dare like thee be plain,
 And pray'r's low artifice at shrines disdain.
 Few from their pious mumblings dare depart,
 And make profession of their inmost heart, Keep me, indulgent Heaven, through life sincere, Keep my mind sound, my reputation clear.
 These wishes they can speak, and we can hear.
 Thus far their wants are audibly express'd; Then sinks the voice, and muttering groans the rest.
 "Hear, hear at length, good Hercules, my vow!
 O chink some pot of gold beneath my plough!
 Could I, O could I, to my ravish'd eyes See my rich uncle's pompous funeral rise;
 Or could I once my ward's cold corpse attend; Then all were mine!"

WHERE Homer represents Phoenix, the tutor of Achilles, as persuading his pupil to lay aside his resentments, and give himself up to the entreaties of his countrymen, the poet, in order to make him speak in character, ascribes to him a speech full of those fables and allegories, which old men take delight in relating, and which are very proper for instruction. "The gods," says he, "suffer themselves to be prevailed upon by entreaties. When mortals have offended them by their transgressions, they appease them by vows and sacrifices. You must know, Achilles, that prayers are the daughters of Jupiter. They are crippled by frequent kneeling, have their faces full of cares and wrinkles, and their eyes always cast towards heaven. They are constant attendants on the goddess Atë, and march behind her. This goddess walks forward with a bold and haughty air; and, being very light of foot, runs through the whole earth grieving and afflicting the sons of men. She gets the start of Prayers, who always follow her, in order to heal those persons whom she wounds. He who honours these daughters of Jupiter, when they draw near to him, receives great benefit from them; but as for him who rejects them, they entreat their father to give his orders to the goddess Atë, to punish him for his hardness of heart." This noble allegory needs but little explanation; for, whether the goddess Atë signifies injury, as some have explained it; or guilt in general, as others; or divine justice, as I am more apt to think; the interpretation is obvious enough.

I shall produce another heathen fable, relating to prayers, which is of a more diverting kind. One would think, by some passages in it, that it was composed by Lucian, or at least by some author who has endeavoured to imitate his way of writing; but as dissertations of this nature are more curious than useful, I shall give my reader the fable, without any further inquiries after the author.

"Menippus the philosopher was a second time taken up into heaven by Jupiter, when, for his entertainment, he lifted up a trap-door that was placed by his footstool. At its rising, there issued through it such a din of cries as astonished the philosopher. Upon his asking what they meant, Jupiter told him they were the prayers that were sent up to him from the earth. Menippus, amidst the confusion of voices, which was so great that nothing less than the ear of Jove could distinguish them, heard the words, 'riches, honour,' and 'long life,' repeated in several different tones and languages. When the first hubbub of sounds was over, the trap-door being left open, the voices came up more separate and distinct. The first prayer was a very odd one; it came from Athens, and desired Jupiter to increase the wisdom and the beard of his humble supplicant. Menippus knew it by the voice to be the prayer.

This was su

just laden

care of it, a

he would

Jupiter the down his e

a voice co

Ephesian v

passion in very hones

of incense

as to hear

with a who

the health

prayed for

surprised,

up with so

whispers f

with Jove

asking him

was so ood

that he too

the last.

mounting u

the trap-do

'This,' say

catomb tha

who is very

a hundred

array again

think I see

sacrifice of

and all this

Jupiter, 't

time of dar

the Ionian

days ago, u

the scound

impudence

from sinki

youth for

who keeps

miseries o

till he mak

his pains.'

pious lady

amiable an

As the phi

dinary pet

the trap-do

of Zephyr

of sighs.

and were s

of wounds despair, a lamentable

or from w

Jupiter to

the isle of complaints

tribe of me

trifled with

sexes, and

whether I shall order

tercept the

random up

was from a

old, beggin

promising

old fellow!

BRITISH ESSAYISTS.

When he only that he the world. I the favour for might see the was brought might live to port, he is an an excuse; which he flung was resolved le, the moral a, and is the d by Socrates Persius, who nature in their nity of men's of the mind, s which they ntly exposed ns of prayer, y, that by this en's desires ot break out so great and 1712.

ON.

owers.

oking-glass.

some young relation of a ad been dis- turn the dis- be malicious, on from the und amongst mind by, as dded that, if nged into a ed to ask its ight worked ing, that it my glass, the s aspect ap- spoke in the efore a man, wo brothers, y the clear- be owned. s) they had to their dis- elly sunk in though his ke fire im- him appear whose breast trary, took g, and was These odd- ut disgusted young gentllemen were sent from court to study mathematics at the university.

"I need not acquaint you, that I was very well made, and reckoned a bright polite gentleman. I was the confidant and darling of all the fair; and if the old and ugly spoke ill of me, all the world knew it was because I scorned to flatter them. No ball, no assembly, was attended until I had been consulted. Flavia coloured her hair before me, Celia showed me her teeth, Panthea heaved her bosom, Cleora brandished her diamond; I have seen Chloe's foot, and tied artificially the garters of Rhodope.

"It is a general maxim, that those who doat upon themselves can have no violent affection for another: but, on the contrary, I found that the women's passion rose for me in proportion to the love they bore to themselves. This was verified in my amour with Narcissa, who was so constant to me, that if I was pleasantly said, had I been little enough, she would have hung me at her girdle. The most dangerous rival I had was a gay empty fellow, who by the strength of a long intercourse with Narcissa, joined to his natural endowments, had formed himself into a perfect resemblance with her. I had been discarded, had she not observed that he frequently asked my opinion about matters of the last consequence. This made me still more considerable in her eye.

"Though I was eternally caressed by the ladies, such was their opinion of my honour, that I was never envied by the men. A jealous lover of Narcissa one day thought he had caught her in an amorous conversation: for, though he was at such a distance that he could hear nothing, he imagined strange things from her airs and gestures. Sometimes with a serene look she stepped back in a listening posture, and brightened into an innocent smile. Quickly after she swelled into an air of majesty and disdain, then kept her eyes half shut after a languishing manner, then covered her blushes with her hand, breathed a sigh, and seemed ready to sink down. In rushed the furious lover: but how great was his surprise to see no one there but the innocent Fidelio, with his back against the wall betwixt two windows!

"It were endless to recount all my adventures. Let me hasten to that which cost me my life, and Narcissa her happiness.

"She had the misfortune to have the small-pox, upon which I was expressly forbid her sight, it being apprehended that it would increase her distemper; and that I should infallibly catch it at the first look. As soon as she was suffered to leave her bed, she stole out of her chamber, and found me all alone in an adjoining apartment. She ran with transport to her darling, and without mixture of fear lest I should dislike her. But oh me! what was her fury when she heard me say, I was afraid and shocked at so loathsome a spectacle! She stepped back, swollen with rage, to see if I had the insolence to repeat it. I did, with this addition, that her ill-timed passion had increased her ugliness. Enraged, inflamed, distracted, she snatched a bodkin, and with all her force stabbed me to the heart. Dying, I preserved my sincerity, and expressed the truth, though in broken words; and by reproachful grimaces to the last I mimicked the deformity of my murderess.

"Cupid, who always attends the fair, and paid the fate of so useful a favourite as I was, obtained of the destinies, that my body should remain incorruptible, and retain the qualities my mind had possessed. I immediately lost the figure of man, and smooth, polished, and bright, and to this the first favourite with the ladies."—T.

393.] SATURDAY, MAY 31, 1712.

Nescio qua præter solitum dulcedine læti.

VIRG. Georg. i. 412.

Unusual sweetness purer joys inspires.

ING over the letters that have been sent me, and to find the following one, which I received 20 years ago from an ingenious friend who lived in Denmark:—

DEAR SIR, Copenhagen, May 1, 1710.

I spring with you have already taken possession of the fields and woods. Now is the season of and of moving complaints upon trivial affairs. Now the griefs of lovers begin to flow, and wounds to bleed afresh. I, too, at this time from the softer climates, am not without my share at present. You perhaps may laugh at me, most romantic wretch, when I have discovered to you the occasion of my uneasiness; and cannot help thinking my unhappiness real, in being confined to a region which is the very reverse of it. The seasons here are all of them unseasonable, and the country quite destitute of rural beauties. I have not heard a bird sing, nor a brook murmur, nor a breeze whisper, neither have I been in the sight of a flowery meadow, these two months. Every wind here is a tempest, and every current an turbulent ocean. I hope, when you reflect upon this, you will not think the grounds of my complaint the least frivolous and unbecoming a man's thought; since the love of woods, of fields, of rivers and fountains, seems to be implanted in our natures the most early of all, before the fair sex had a being.

"I am, Sir," &c.

I transport myself with a wish from one country to another, I should choose to pass my winter in Italy, my summer in France, and my autumn in France. Of all these seasons there is none that can vie with the spring in its beauty and delightfulness. It bears the same relation to the seasons of the year, that the morning to the divisions of the day, or youth to the stages of life. The English summer is not so pleasant as that of any other country in Europe, not so pleasant but because it has a greater degree of spring in it. The mildness of our climate, those frequent refreshments of dews and rains that fall among us, keep up a perpetual cheerfulness in our fields, and fill the hottest months of the year with a lively verdure.

At the opening of the spring, when all nature recovers herself, the same animal pleasure is communicated to the birds sing, and the whole brute creation rejoices, rises very sensibly in the heart of man, and is the source of those pleasures which the poets who have observed

Milton these secret overflows of gladness diffuse themselves through the mind of the poet, upon surveying the gay scenes of nature has touched upon it twice or thrice in his Lost, and describes it very beautifully under the name of "vernal delight," in that passage represents the devil himself as almost sen-

As and fruits at once of golden hue
And with gay enamell'd colours mixt:
In the sun more glad improv'd his beams

Than in fair evening clime When God had shower'd That landscape: and o'er Meets his approach, and Vernal delight, and joy
All sadness, but despair

Many authors have represented the human creature, and represent it as a thing in this world, and as any solid or substantial pleasure of this nature are very vain and voluptuous, those speculative pleasures, those speculations of the side of things, and lay out their pleasures in vain amusements which are to no purpose, several objects that encourage them, official to men of dark and gloomy was for this reason that they had a cheerfulness of mind, and papers, and which I was prevented from the consideration of. Being on whom we desire a survey of that universe as it is present, but from reflection in which this paper is a perpetual feast to the mind, nothing he sees cheers and animates, has imprinted so many pleasures impossible for a mind to be gross and sensual delight without several secret pleasures. The Psalmist has, in several places, celebrated those beautiful pleasures that make the heart glad, and the delight which I have been

Natural philosophy, the contemplation of creation, and renders it more agreeable to the imagination, but to the understanding in the murmur of brooks in the shade of groves and in the dery of fields and meadows, the ends of Providence and the wonders of divinity are to be seen in them. It heightens the mind, and raises such a rational devotion, little inferior to devotion.

It is not in the power of any kind of worship to the gods to indulge these more rational pleasures which are doubtless high pleasures. I shall therefore conclude this paper with the pleasure which the mind finds in the present season of the year, and of a practice for which it has abilities.

I would have my reader to consider this natural pleasure of this vernal delight, as a Christian virtue. When we have this pleasing instinct, this complacency, arising from the contemplation of nature, let us consider to what use we may put it. All these entertainments thus opens his hand, and the Apostle instructs us to use it with a present temper of mind, with religious exercise as is paid by that precept which as we pray, and those who are cheerfulfulness of heart with the survey of nature's works as a preparation for gratitude, and a way towards praise and thanksgiving with such a secret gladness

BRITISH ESSAYISTS.

sanctifies it in
ue. Such an es every field a morning or those transient
n up and re-
an inviolable
ness.

2, 1712.

vis et servorum
mini et ea, quæ
e nullo modo.—

ry acceptable to
to such as most meet with the eration.

and frivolous
another, and common and in matters of ons for mem-
rows of old
g upon a level that wherein versions, will prostituting a ending to the ps as good an considerable
nothing else
make his way
rer methods,
inclination of working from in all matters
hem: for his f, he need not or virtue to
of the highest ular disguise
an himself),
among men.
what a man admire that t yourself in
urt. I have Spain, who elegant use patches in it his secretary
ce, and under trap for his
as a faithful
ust his tying pressions, but ay guess the much longer ne to his own municated to pain as soon ing knows I

world, should ir fortunes:
o the person
o be doubted
ust look with r, on all the faces to approve and smile at all he says in the gross. A good comedy enough to observe a superior talking half sentences, and playing a humble admirer's countenance from one thing to another, with such perplexity, that he knows not what to sneer in approbation of. But this kind of complaisance is peculiarly the manner of courts; in all other places you must constantly go further in compliance with the persons you have to do with, than a mere conformity of looks and gestures. If you are in a country life, and would be a leading man, a good stomach, a loud voice, and a rustic cheerfulness, will go a great way, provided you are able to drink; and drink any thing. But I was just now going to dress the manner of behaviour I would advise people to practise under some maxim; and intimated, that every one almost was governed by his pride. There was an old fellow about forty years ago so peevish and fretful, though a man of business, that no one could come at him; but he frequented a particular little coffee-house, where he triumphed over every body at trick-track and backgammon. The way to pass his office well, was first to be insulted by him at one of those games in his leisure hours; for his vanity was to show that he was a man of pleasure as well as business. Next to this sort of insinuation, which is called in all places (from its taking its birth in the households of princes) making one's court, the most prevailing way is, by what better-people call a present, the vulgar a bribe. I hardly conceive that such a thing is conveyed with more gallantry in a billet-doux that should be understood at the Bank, than in gross money, but as to sub-born people, who are so surly as to accept of nothing note nor cash, having formerly dabbled in chemistry, I can only say, that one part of matter asks one thing and another another, to make it fluent; but there is nothing but may be dissolved by a proper mean. Thus the virtue which is too obdurate for gold or paper, shall melt away very kindly in a liquid. The island of Barbadoes (a shrewd people) manage all their appeals to Great Britain by a skilful distribution of citron water* among the whisperers about men of power. Generous wines do every day prevail, and that in great points, where ten thousand times their value would have been rejected with indignation.

But, to wave the enumeration of the sundry ways of applying by presents, bribes, management of people's passions and affections, in such a manner as it shall appear that the virtue of the best man is by one method or other corruptible, let us look on for some expedient to turn those passions and affections on the side of truth and honour. When a man has laid it down for a position, that parting with his integrity, in the minutest circumstance, is losing so much of his very self, self-love will become a virtue. By this means, good and evil will be the only objects of dislike and approbation; and he that injures any man, has effectually wounded the man of this turn as much as if the harm had been to himself. This seems to be the only expedient to arrive at an impartiality: and a man who follows the dictates of truth and right reason, may by advice be led into error, but never can into guilt.

T.

No. 395.] TUESDAY, JUNE 3, 1712.

Quod nunc ratio est, impetus ante fuit.—OVID. Rem. Amor.

'Tis reason now, 'twas appetite before.

"BEWARE of the ides of March," said the Romans.

* Then commonly called Barbadoes water.

Julius Caesar: "Beware of the month of May." The caution of the first was unhappily neglected. Caesar's confidence cost him his life. I flatter myself that my pretty readers had regard to the advice I gave them, since I received very few accounts of any notable made in the last month.

Though I hope for the best, I shall not positively on this point, till I have seen it well over; at which period of time, as my friend Sir Roger has often told me, he has never seen as a justice of peace, among the dissipated people in the country, than at any one of the year.

Must I forget a letter which I received to-day, since from a lady, who, it seems, is no longer, telling me she looked upon me as then out, for that she had all along by the new style.

On the other hand, I have great reason to believe, that the angry letters which have been sent to appointed lovers, that my advice has been of great service to the fair sex, who, according to the proverb, were "forewarned, forearmed."

These gentlemen tell me, that he would give me a hundred pounds, rather than I should publish that paper; for that his mistress had promised to explain herself to him at the beginning of May, upon reading that disconcerting him, that she would give him her answer acquaints me, that when he desired Sylvia to walk in the fields, she told him, the Spectator had forbidden her.

One of my correspondents, who writes himself Mr. C., complains that, whereas he constantly breakfasts with his mistress upon chocolate, and that upon her the first of May, he found her treat very much changed for the worse, and forced to feed ever since upon green tea.

I shall conclude it with a caveat to my gun. I heartily wish them joy of their happy success.

They now reflect with pleasure on the dangers they have escaped, and look back with as much concern on the perils that threatened them, as the grandmothers did formerly on the burnings and shames, after having passed through the flames.

The instigations of the spring are now over. The nightingale gives over her "love-song," as Milton phrases it; the blossoms are faded, and the beds of flowers swept away by the mower.

I now allow my fair readers to return to their dances and chocolate, provided they make them with moderation, till about the middle of the month, when the sun shall have made some work of the Crab. Nothing is more dangerous than much confidence and security. The Trojans stood upon their guard all the while the city lay before their city, when they fancied it was raised, and the danger past, were the city burnt in their beds. I must also say that as in some climates there is a perishing, so in some female constitutions there is a fatal May. These are a kind of valetudinary chastity, whom I would continue in a diet. I cannot think these wholly out of all they have looked upon the other sex at years through a pair of spectacles. Will Honeycomb has often ascribed one of this species of grand climacteric, than this side five-and-twenty acquaintance, who had in the affections of a young man made his fortune by running with his mother.

But as I do not desire evergreens of the sex, I leave those who would willingly reason and virtue, and blood. If there are any innocences, they must now take that melancholy view in the sister, in those beautiful

—Long she flourished Grew sweet to sense, Till at the last a cruel Crop this fair rose, and Then cast it like a low

On the contrary she was cautious I gave her, and modesty, will now flourish with all her virgin blushes. I must, however, desire that it would be for a successful campaign, to quarters. It would be a lady to lose, in any other she has been at the pains

There is no charm to supply the place of virgin beauty is unlovely, and breeding degenerates into impudence. It is observed represented by both pale female shapes; but if a particular title to that leave it to the divines to posit vice, as they may tions. It is sufficient for against it, as they may be

I desire this paper may draw ordinary attention, at all of London and Westminster

No. 396.] WEDNESDAY

Barbara, Celarent, D

HAVING a great deal to do at present, I shall beg that you will send him with a letter that I wrote ago from a gentleman, who calls himself Peter de Quir. I have not time to say more than that I have at last discovered that he does not take them at

"To Mr.

"From St. John's College

"The monopoly of printing has been an immemorial privilege, and we cannot help regret that our ancient right as to the pretender to clenching who in application to you ago, styled himself Philo, are by character a profes

* The students of

BRITISH ESSAYISTS.

gentleman's
to a brother
nical account
gs to a set of n uncommon
olite parts of

es of females
ls of the cap-
n that way of s of another,
es generally
th an assem-
e hardly any l, &c. These ght of the un-
es, and give anguine com-
n inclination attended with
lsc. During is extremely in nature, to u, by way of s, and unfor-discreated (to y termed the consult Dr.
ery able pro-
and spiritual ne better part ral intermar-
u this sister-
ernity of the

a very ser-
flow of light ully, that it
to a thousand
se reflections
covery of the oundation of
dy. It is no-leration, that rown jugs,
u memorable
nown by the sphere of the minates least fills the fra-Besides, it is spirits among proceedings,
mour, profess-
ning, the an-
y. After all, absurd that I an advocate
our censures pon that sub-
ink it abun-
this humbler rting us from es in wit, as would be in
Had Mr.
within the
that learned what the holy e, like other L—y been

histon.

content with the employment of refining upon Shakspeare's points and quibbles (for which he must be allowed to possess a superlative genius), and now and then penning a catch or a ditty, instead of inditing odes and sonnets, the gentlemen of the bon goût in the pit would never have been just to all that grimace in daunting the frippery of state, the poverty and languor of thought, the unnatural wit, and inartificial structure of his dramas.

"I am, Sir,
"Your very humble Servant,
"PETER DE QUIR."

No. 397.] THURSDAY, JUNE 5, 1712

Dolor ipse disertam Fecerat — OVID, Metam. xiii. 225.
Her grief inspired her then with eloquence.

As the Stoic philosophers discard all passions in general, they will not allow a wise man so much as to pity the afflictions of another. "If thou seest thy friend in trouble," says Epictetus, "thou mayest put on a look of sorrow, and condole with him, but take care that thy sorrow be not real." The man rigid of this sect would not comply so far as to show even such outward appearance of grief; but when one told them of any calamity that had befallen even the nearest of their acquaintance would immediately reply, "What is that to me?" If you aggravated the circumstances of the afflic-tion, and showed how one misfortune was followed by another, the answer was still, "All this may be true, but what is it to me?"

For my own part, I am of opinion compassion does not only refine and civilize human nature, but has something in it more pleasing and agreeable than what can be met with in such an indolent lap-piness, such an indifference to mankind, as that which the Stoics placed their wisdom. As love is the most delightful passion, pity is nothing else but love softened by a degree of sorrow. In short, it is a kind of pleasing anguish, as well as generous sympathy, that knits mankind together, and blends them in the same common lot.

Those who have laid down rules for rhetoric or poetry advise the writer to work himself up, if possible, to the pitch of sorrow which he endeavours to produce in others. There are none therefore who stir up pity so much as those who indite their own sufferings. Grief has a natural eloquence belonging to it, and breaks out in more moving sentiment than can be supplied by the finest imagination.
Nature on this occasion dictates a thousand passen-ate things which cannot be supplied by art.

It is for this reason that the short speeches or sentences which we often meet with in history make a deeper impression on the mind of the reader than the most laboured strokes in a well-written tragedy. Truth and matter of fact sets the person actually before us in the one, whom fiction places at a greater distance from us in the other. I do not remember to have seen any ancient or modern story more affecting than a letter of Anna of Bologne, wife to King Henry the Eighth, and mother to Queen Elizabeth, which is still extant in the Co-ton library, as written by her own hand.

Shakspeare himself could not have made her tal-in a strain so suitable to her condition and character. One sees in it the expostulations of a slighted the resentments of an injured woman, and the sorrows of an imprisoned queen. I need not acquaint at this princess was then under prosecution to the king's bed, and that she publicly beheaded upon the same account this prosecution was believed by many; she herself intimates, rather from the Jane Seymour, than from any actual of Boulogne.

Boleyn's last Letter to King Henry.

Cotton Lib. Otho. C. 10.

ce's displeasure and my imprisonment, strange unto me, as what to write, or e, I am altogether ignorant. Whereas o me (willing me to confess a truth, i your favour), by such a one, whom e mine ancient professed enemy, I no ed this message by him, than I rightly r meaning; and if, as you say, conth indeed may procure my safety, I l willingness and duty perform your ot your grace ever imagine, that your ll ever be brought to acknowledge a ot so much as a thought thereof pre- to speak a truth, never prince had wife all duty, and in all true affection, than er found in Ann Boleyn: with which lace I could willingly have contented d and your grace's pleasure had been Neither did I at any time so far forget ' exaltation or received queenship, but looked for such an alteration as now I ground of my preferment being on no tion than your grace's fancy, the least new was fit and sufficient to draw that e other subject. You have chosen me ate to be your queen and companion. y desert or desire. If, then, you found such honour, good your grace, let not cy, or bad counsel of mine enemies, r princely favour from me: neither let at unworthy stain, of a disloyal heart good grace, ever cast so foul a blot on tiful wife, and the infant princess your 'ry me, good king, but let me have a nd let not my sworn enemies sit as my judges; yea, let me receive an open truth shall fear no open shame; then either mine innocency cleared, your conscience satisfied, the ignominy and e world stopped, or my guilt openly o that, whatsoever God or you may me, your grace may be freed from an ; and mine offence being so lawfully grace is at liberty both before God and f to execute worthy punishment on me al wife, but to follow your affection al- on that party, for whose sake I am now se name I could some good while since unto, your grace being not ignorant of therein.

u have already determined of me, and f my death, but an infamous slander, ou the enjoying of your desired happi- desire of God, that he will pardon your rein, and likewise mine enemies, the thereof; and that he will not call you ccount for your unprincely and cruel at his general judgment-seat, where I myself must shortly appear, and in sent I doubt not (whatsoever the world may think of me) mine innocency known, and sufficiently cleared.

"My last and only request may only bear the burden of assurance, and that it may not touch those poor gentlemen, who are likewise in strait imprisonment: ever I have found favour in the name of Ann Boleyn hath I ears, then let me obtain this leave to trouble your grace with earnest prayers to the Trinity in his good keeping, and to your actions. From my doleful prison, sixth of May;

"Your most loyal, and

L.

No. 398.] FRIDAY,

Insanire pares certa ratione mod

With art and wisdom, and be m

CYNTHIO and Flavia are p this town, who have been lo last past, and writ to each o under those feigned names Mrs. Such-a-one not being soul out of the ordinary track up to that elevation which moured so much superior to world. But ever since the made such a figure as she no charming women, Cynthia h her adorers. Lætitia has be town these three months, an acted the part of a lover very sence of Flavia. Flavia has him, and has too sincere a serve a thousand things which this change of mind to any she was. Cynthia was mu piazza in Covent-garden, an that he was a very ill man professing love to Flavia, v thrall to another. "It is not constant to Flavia; b greater crime, since I cannot to profess that I do. To m coldness that usually indeed o is ruining one's self with on it is really doing her an inj deration forsooth, of injuring him resolve to break off up opportunity of making her in this thought, he saw Rob at Will's coffee-house, pas must know, is the best man billet; the fellow has a thin b looks, sufficient sense, and man carried Cynthia's first frequent visits ever since. The fellow covers his knowle messages with the most exp ginable. The first he oblig by complaining to her that children; and if she did not he was sure there was no ha his family must go supperless man would pay him accordi ness. Robin, therefore, Cy make use of, and gave him called him to her, and Cynthio who passed by, he knew it was, but upon him needed not much search to find a well-dressed Cynthio designed her. Robin was posted, he drove hackney-coach and a woman at the door talking with him pulled up the glass as usual. The report of this stairs, and Robin could not be favoured* his master; were the lady was but his ask for him, adding that relation, because they were till he was awake. The following epistle, which basest, falsest of mankind the bearer saw you.

June 4, 1712.

The injured FLAVIA."

In the letter, he asked Robin what she said at the desk; he spoke short to him, and had nothing to say to all the men in the world; the maid followed, and bid as follows:—

Three afternoon, 1712.

The bearer have seen me but I desire to know, what your letter means by I shall stay here all the amazed CYNTHIO."

and with this, Flavia an-

two in my anti-chamber have recovered myself which you ought to forgive come to me immediately you and a creature of the coach an hour ago.

most humble Servant,

"FLAVIA."

letter which my Cynthio you must have been want of hearing the whole instant, and Cynthio six minutes after three, Will's Coffee-house. by your lodging with a have the honour to be relation, and a pretty starting manner of writing done me the honour er, has in it something

ed.

very unaccountable, and alarms one that thoughts of passing his days with you, I born to admire you with all your imperfections.

"CYNTHIO"

Robin ran back and brought for answer:

"Exact Sir, there are at Will's Coffee-house minutes after three, June 4; one that thoughts, and all my little imperfections, I to me immediately, or I shall determine perhaps not be very pleasing to you."

"FLAVIA"

Robin gave an account that she looked angry when she gave him the letter; and told her, for she asked, that Cynthio only the clock, taking snuff, and writ two or three on the top of the letter when he gave him.

Now the plot thickened so well, as that saw he had not much more to do, to ac being irreconcilably banished; he writ,

"MADAM,

"I have that prejudice in favour of all that it is not possible for you to determine what will not be very pleasing to

"Your obedient Servant,

"CYNTHIO"

This was delivered, and the answer returned a little more than two seconds

"SIR,

"Is it come to this? You never loved the creature you were with is the proper for your associate. I despise you, and hope soon hate you as a villain to

"The credulous FLAVIA"

Robin ran back with:

"MADAM,

"Your credulity when you are to gain you and suspicion when you fear to lose it, may very hard part to behave as becomes your slave,

"CYNTHIO"

Robin whipt away and returned with,

"MR. WELLFORD,

"Flavia and Cynthio are no more. I rel from the hard part of which you compel banish you from my sight for ever.

"ANN HENRY"

Robin had a crown for his afternoon's work this is published to admonish Cecilia to avoid injury done to Flavia.—T.

No. 399.] SATURDAY, JUNE 7, 1712.

Ut nemo in sese tentat descendere!—PERRA, SAT. None, none descends into himself to find The secret imperfections of his mind.—DEYER.

HYPOCRISY at the fashionable end of the very different from hypocrisy in the city modish hypocrite endeavours to appear more than he really is, the other kind of hypocrite virtuous. The former is afraid of every thing has the show of religion in it, and would be engaged in many criminal gallantries and which he is not guilty of. The latter assumes of sanctity, and covers a multitude of vices a seeming religious deportment.

is another kind of hypocrisy, which differs from these, and which I intend to make the subject of this paper; I mean that hypocrisy, which a man does not only deceive the world, but which he imposes on himself; that hypocrisy, which he has his own heart from him, and makes himself more virtuous than he really is, and does not attend to his vices, or mistake even his virtues. It is this fatal hypocrisy, and which I have taken notice of in those words, "Understand his errors? cleanse thou me from faults."

Those professors of impiety deserve the attention and endeavours of moral writers, who, from vice and folly, how much they may lay a claim to their care and company, are walking in the paths of death, and fancy themselves engaged in a course of virtue. I shall endeavour therefore to lay down some rules for the discovery of those vices that lurk in the corners of the soul, and to show my readers the methods by which he may arrive at a true knowledge of himself. The rules I have prescribed for this purpose are, to examine ourselves by the rules which are laid down in sacred writ, and to compare our lives with that of that person who acted up to the perfection of human nature, and is the standing example, as well as the great guide and instructor, to receive his doctrines. Though these rules may not be too much insisted upon, I shall insist on them, since they have been handled so often by eminent writers.

I therefore propose the following methods for the attainment of such as would find out their seeds, and make a true estimate of themselves:—In the first place, let them consider well what characters which they bear among their friends, and how very often flatter us, as much as we desire. They either do not see our faults, or they are from us, or soften them by their praise, after such a manner that we think it should be taken notice of. An adversary, on the contrary, makes a stricter search into every flaw and imperfection in our lives, though his malice may set them in a wrong light, it has generally some ground for its observations. A friend exaggerates a man's virtues, and inflames his crimes. A wise man pays just attention to both of them, so far as they tend to the improvement of the one, and the correction of the other. Plutarch has written of the benefits which a man may receive from his friends, and among the good fruits of friendship, this in particular, that by the reflection it casts upon us we see the worst of ourselves, and open our eyes to several defects in our lives and conversations, which could not have been observed without the help of a third monitor.

It is likewise to come at a true knowledge of ourselves, we should consider on the other hand how we deserve the praises and approbations which are bestowed upon us; whether the actions which we proceed from laudable and worthy motives, how far we are really possessed of the virtues which gain us applause among those with whom we converse. Such a reflection is absolutely necessary, we consider how apt we are either to magnify ourselves by the opinions of others, or to neglect the report of our own hearts to the world.

In the next place, that we should consider ourselves in a point of so much consequence, that we should not lay too great a stress on our own merits, which we possess that are of a doubtful nature, and which we may esteem all those in the world who dissent from us, who are as good as ourselves. We should always be cautious of our own greatness and circumspection in our actions, and it is impossible that we may be without some rate zeal, bigotry, and partiality of opinion, how praiseworthy they may appear to weak men of our age, and in the midst of infinite calamities among men, who are criminal in their own nature, and who are persons eminent for piety and virtue, who are absurd principles of action, and who are under the colour of piety, in part, I must own I never yet saw any thing so and reasonable, that a man could be so cruel and violence, and at the same time so virtuous.

We should likewise be very cautious of those actions which proceed from our favourite passions, particularly from those which promote our worldly interests, and these and the like cases, a man should be very much perverted, and a wrong bias should be put on these are the inlets of pride, and the avenues of the mind, by which we are led to secret faults and admissions, which are not served or taken notice of. We should therefore be very cautious of those actions to which he is led by his passions, besides reason, and always against his conscience, and in every resolution that he takes, when it is conformable to his duty, and his age, or way of life, or when it is to his advantage or his profit.

There is nothing of greater consequence to us, than thus diligently to sift our thoughts, and to search these dark recesses of the mind, and to publish our souls in such a solid manner, that we will turn to account in the day of judgment, and must stand the test of infinity.

I shall conclude this essay with a description of two kinds of hypocrisy; namely, that of deceiving the world, and that of posing on ourselves, are to be distinguished by beauty in the hundred and third of the first kind of hypocrisy, which is by reflections on God's omnipotence, which are celebrated in poetry as any other I ever saw, or profane. The other kind of hypocrisy, which a man deceives himself, is in those verses, where the Psalmist says, "Great Searcher of hearts in the earth," "Try me, O God! and seek to know if there be any way of wickedness in me, or if there be any way of wickedness in the way everlasting."

L.

No. 400.] MONDAY

———Latet anguis in herba

There's a snake in the grass.—

It should, methinks, present itself to the mind, that there is always creates offence; and that wantonness are defeated by it so much boldness, as to intemperance are quite extinguished.

BRITISH ESSAYISTS.

s said of a wit

ort

t;

es away

all day.

de up of com-

formity to the

usticity, broad

offend those of s odious to all

gard. It is in tifully ordered

es, in the dia-

Cleopatra in

h gold;

as;

h were plac'd,

nd,

se Cupids,

wind

d'd,

ry'd,

play'd,

t;

with all the ob-

othing that is

ore loose than advantage. The rit of modesty,

ie of Mr. Phil-

tly flow!

d her grow!

t;

a tenderness or

es the passion.

t brutal in it.

s us in the con-

But it may be a discourse of te ears against the "prevailing

are capable of ress, and some-

urpose of their

unguarded is

s too insensibly

n for the lady's

ld be annoyed

r, and this ut-

expressed by an

at some little

, than in any

thods of skillful

-----

s in the reign of rite. The noble-

en said, not to Sir

l address: for we had acquired to

agreeable, parti

admirers. They are honest arts when their purpose is such, but infamous when misapplied. It is certain that many a young woman in this town has had her heart irrecoverably won, by men who have so made one advance which ties their admirers, though the females languish with the utmost anxiety. I have often, by way of admonition to my female readers, given them warning against agreeable company of the other sex, except they are well acquainted with their characters. Women may disguise it if they think fit; and the more to do it they may be angry at me for saying it; but I say it is natural to them, that they have no manner of approbation of men, without some degree of love. For this reason he is dangerous to be entertained as a friend, or a visitant, who is capable of gaining so eminent esteem or observation, though it be never so remote from pretensions as a lover. If a man's heart has not the abhorrence of any treacherous design, he may easily improve approbation into kindness, and kindness into passion. There may possibly be no manner of love between them in the eyes of all their acquaintance; no, it is all friendship; and yet they may be as fond as shepherd and shepherdess in a pastoral, but still the nymph and the swain may be to each other, no other, I warrant you, than Pyrlades and Orestes.

When Lucy decks with flowers her swelling breast,

And on her elbow leans, describing rest;

Unable to refrain my madding mind,

Nor sheep nor pasture worth my care I find.

Once Delia slept, on easy moss reclin'd,

Her lovely limbs half bare, and bade the wind;

I smooth'd her coats, and stole a silent kiss:

Condemn me, shepherds, if I did amuse

Such good offices as these, and such friendly thoughts and concerns for one another, are what make up the amity, as they call it, between men and women.

It is the permission of such intercourse that makes a young woman come to the arms of her husband after the disappointment of four or five parties, which she has successively had for different men before she is prudentially given to him for what she has neither love nor friendship. For what should a poor creature do that has lost all her friends? There's Marinet the agreeable has, to my knowledge, had a friendship for Lord Welford, which had like to break her heart: then she had so great a friendship for Colonel Hardy, that she could not resist any woman else should do any thing but rail at him. Many and fatal have been the disasters between friends who have fallen out, and their resentments are more keen than ever those of other men can possibly be: but in this it happens unfortunately that as there ought to be nothing concealed from one friend to another, the friends of different sexes may often find fatal effects from their unanimity.

For my part, who study to pass life in as much innocence and tranquillity as I can, I shun the company of agreeable women as much as possible: and must confess that I have, though a tolerable good philosopher, but a low opinion of Platonic love: for which reason I thought it necessary to give my fair readers a caution against it, having, to my great concern, observed the waist of a Platonist lately swell to a roundness which is inconsistent with that philosophy.—T.

[L.] TUESDAY, JUNE 10, 1712.

ore hinc eunda insunt vitia: injuriæ, siles, inimicitie, iudicium, in, pax, furor.

TER. ERM. act I. sc. I.

rious state of love, to be attended with injuries, enmities, truces, quarrelling, and reconciliation.

I publish, for the entertainment of this sort of a packet, which I have just re-ceiv'd one of my female correspondents.

SPECTATOR,

you have often confessed that you are not your papers should sometimes convey the of distressed lovers to each other, I am out will favour one who gives you an un-stance of her reformation, and at the same vancing proof of the happy influence your ve had over the most incorrigible part of incorrigible sex. You must know, Sir, I that species of women, whom you have acterized under the name of 'jilts,' and d you these lines as well to do public pe-having so long continued in a known to beg pardon of the party offended. I choose this way, because it in some measures the terms on which he intimated the tween us might possibly be made up, as ee by the letter he sent me the next day d discarded him; which I thought fit to a copy of, that you might the better know case.

at further acquaint you, that before I jilted had been the greatest intimacy between ear and a half together, during all which rished his hopes, and indulged his flame. ou to guess, after this, what must be his when upon his pressing for my full consent I told him I wondered what could make he had ever any place in my affections.
 sex allow him sense, and all ours good.

His person is such as might, without nke him believe himself not incapable of oved. Our fortunes, indeed, weighed in scale of interest, are not exactly equal, the way was the true cause of my jilting I had the assurance to acquaint him with ing maxim, that I should always believe s passion to be the most violent, who could the largest settlement. I have since my opinion, and have endeavoured to let r so much by several letters, but the baran has refused them all; so that I have no of writing to him but by your assistance. bring him about once more, I promise to all gloves and favours, and shall desire the Sir Roger and yourself to stand as god-o my first boy.

"I am, Sir,

"Your most obedient humble Servant,

"AMORET."

"PHILANDER TO AMORET.

ADAM,

a so surprised at the question you were o ask me yesterday, that I am still at a loss ay to it. At least my answer would be too trouble you with, as it would come from a who it seems is so very indifferent to you. if it, I shall only recommend to your consideration the opinion of one whose sentiments on matters I have often heard you say are ex-just. 'A generous and constant passion,' says your favourite author where there is not too grecumstances, is the greatest person beloved; and, if ohaps never be found in a

"I do not, however, a-shortly much better believat present; since, when ceed his, you were pleas'd would increase according

"The world has seen
 time to please a fickle w-been employed much motage in other pursuits.

liberty to acquaint you, hin a lady's ears, that th-happen to return, unless to make your recantation lic, as they are already a-which you have treated m-

"AMORET TO

"SIR

"Upon reflection, I f-both to you and myself t-the part I now act may c-corum usually observed I-break through all rules, t-some measure equal my in my present hopes of r-Antenor's estate with co-yesterday in a gilt charrefused to see him. Tho-eyes after what has pas-amidst all their confusio-tenderness in mine, as who love. I shall be all in the country; but the dens, without Philander,
 unhappy

"I must desire you, dlish this my letter to Ph-and to assure him that I death of his rich uncle in

No. 402.] WEDNES

Ipsæ sibi tradit Spectat-Sent by the Spectator

WERE I to publish a ceive from different han-circumstances and qualiwithout reflections on t-raise all the passions o-minds. As instances oor three letters; the wrrecourse to any legal pohave written rather to v-ceive consolation.

"MR. SPECTATOR,

"I am a young woma-suitably married to a g-But this person of min-passion in a nobleman's husband. This friend-cess, and frequent oppo-apart. My heart is in face is covered over wit-

BRITISH ESSAYISTS.

is, that my en, is gained elicit me for or believing
tience of his one with my discretionary
I such-a-one,
vises me to.
seems to hint
ys appeared,
l. It is pos-eve me from ner, and the end. I have resolved to y I can think the discovery which I must ment against nd the shame
persons cones relate to ne is dead in ear of shame ch I conjure assion for in-
SYLVIA."

merit, but amdy of her acl to a gentle-
st relating to ncurrence in irresistible a der his future
ty, and com-
tricks to sus-
of hopes for
) is a woman
a gentleman,
nd : but envy
ly, waste my d sense of a nnot but ap-
f repentance,
at disposition
esent the de-
ons would be piness. Mr.
on these ter-ll you can to ree possessed ANNIBAL."

o express my t against an-low : I have
by a gentle-
to expect, as t, to be sure,
sort of way,
match, and ch other. In me time, and im tenderly.
ways thought
at he thought up what he few months I altered, and he has affected a certain art of getting me alone, and talking with a mighty profusion of passionate words, how I am not to be resisted longer, how irresistible his wishes are, and the like. As long as I have been acquainted with him, I could not on such occasions say downright to him, 'You know you may make me yours when you please.' But the other night, he with great frankness and openness explained to me, that he thought of me only as a mistress. I answered this declaration as it deserved; upon which he only doubled the terms on which he proposed my yielding. When my anger heightened upon him, he told me he was sorry he had made so little use of the unguarded hours we had been together so remote from company, 'as indeed,' continued he, 'so we are at present.' I flew from him to a neighbouring gentlewoman's house, and, though her husband was in the room, threw myself on a couch, and burst into a passion of tears. My friend desired her husband to leave the room. 'But,' said he, 'there is something so extraordinary in this, that I will partake in the affliction; and be it what it will, she is so much your friend, that she knows she may command what services I can do her.' The man sat down by me, and spoke so like a brother, that I told him my whole affliction. He spoke of the injury done me with so much indignation, and animated me against the love he said he saw I had for the wretch who would have betrayed me, with so much reason and humanity to my weakness, that I doubt not of my perseverance. His wife and he are my comforters, and I am under no more restraint in their company than if I were alone; and I doubt not but in a small time contempt and hatred will take place of the remains of affection to a rascal.

"I am, Sir, your affectionate Reader.

"DORINDA."

"MR. SPECTATOR,

"I had the misfortune to be an uncle before I knew my nephews from my nieces; and now we are grown up to better acquaintance, they deny me the respect they owe. One upbraids me with being their familiar, another will hardly be persuaded that I am an uncle, a third calls me little uncle, and a fourth tells me there is no duty at all due to an uncle. I have a brother-in-law whose son will use all my affection, unless you shall think this worthy of your cognisance, and will be pleased to prescribe some rules for our future reciprocal behaviour. It will be worthy the particularity of your genius to lay down rules for his conduct, who was, as it were, born an old man; in which you will much oblige.

"Sir, your most obedient Servant,

T.

"CORNELIUS NEPOS."

No. 403.] THURSDAY, JUNE 12, 1712.

Qui mores hominum multorum vidit.

HOR. Ars Poet. v. 112.

Of many men he saw the manners.

WHEN I consider this great city in its secret quarters and divisions, I look upon it as an aggregate of various nations distinguished from each other by their respective customs, manners, and interests. The courts of two countries do not so much differ from one another, as the court and city in their peculiar ways of life and conversation. In short, the inhabitants of St. James's, notwithstanding they live under the same laws, and speak the same language, are a distinct people from those of Cheapside, who are likewise removed from those of the Temple on one side, and those of Smithfield on the other, by several climates and degrees in their ways of thinking and conversing together.

For this reason, when any public affair is upon the anvil, I love to hear the reflections that arise upon it in the several districts and parishes of London and Westminster, and to ramble up and down a whole day together, in order to make myself acquainted with the opinions of my ingenious countrymen. By this means I know the faces of all the principal politicians within the bills of mortality; and as every coffee-house has some particular statesman belonging to it, who is the mouth of the street where he lives, I always take care to place myself near him, in order to know his judgment on the present posture of affairs. The last progress that I made with this intention, was about three months ago, when we had a current report of the king of France's death. As I foresaw this would produce a new face of things in Europe, and many curious speculations in our British coffee-houses, I was very desirous to learn the thoughts of our most eminent politicians on that occasion.

That I might begin as near the fountain-head as possible, I first of all called in at St. James's, where I found the whole outward room in a buzz of politics. The speculations were but very indifferent towards the door, but grew finer as you advanced to the inner end of the room, and were so very much improved by a knot of theorists, who sat in the inner room, within the steams of the coffee-pot, that I have heard the whole Spanish monarchy disposed of, and all the line of Bourbon provided for in less than a quarter of an hour.

I afterwards called in at Giles's, where I saw a crowd of French gentlemen sitting upon the life and death of their grand monarch. Those among them who had espoused the whig interest, very positively affirmed, that he departed this life about a week ago, and therefore proceeded without any further delay to the release of their friends in the galleys, and to their own re-establishment; but finding they could not agree among themselves, I proceeded on my intended progress.

Upon my arrival at Jenny Man's I saw an alert young fellow that cocked his hat upon a friend of his who entered just at the same time with myself, and accosted him after the following manner: "Well, Jack, the old prig is dead at last. Sharp's no word. Now or never, boy. Up to the walls of Paris directly." With several other deep reflections of the same nature.

I met with very little variation in the politics between Charing-cross and Covent-garden. And upon my going into Will's, I found their discourse was run off from the death of the French king to that of Monsieur Boileau, Racine, Corneille, and several other poets, whom they regretted on this occasion, as persons who would have obliged the world with very noble elegies on the death of so great a prince, and so eminent a patron of learning.

At a coffee-house near the Temple, I found a couple of young gentlemen engaged very smartly in dispute on the succession to the Spanish monarchy. One of them seemed to have been retained as advocate for the Duke of Anjou, the other for his imperial majesty. They were both for regulating the title to that kingdom by the statute laws of England; and finding them going out of my depth, I passed on to St. Paul's churchyard, where I listened with great attention to a learned man, who gave the company a France during

I then turned where the church hearing the no bacco, and ru he, "the king have plenty o will not be dis for these ten y how the death pilchards, and general joy int

I afterward at the upper e with a non-jurc man who was conventicle. the late French or Nero. The heat on both si me very frequen I was under soe peal to me, an the bar, and ma

I here gazed I found one to in the coffee-ro grief for the de his explaining arise from the having sold out he heard the ne who was the or circle of admir ness that he had before, that the which he added we had received it could be othe gether, and dict rity, there came who told us th France just com gone out a-hunt away: upon wh that hung upon his shop with put a stop to n with much satis hear so many d esent, and to o piece of news e regard to his o tage.—L.

No. 404.]

—Non omnia
With different

NATURE does the universe has use and purpos course and spher least deviates, it for which it was the dispositions formed in a cha either case the whole in some d that most of the in the world is s

BRITISH ESSAYISTS.

men are not
igned them.
s which may
ers. Nature while the in-she brings herself for a
; if he pro-
acarry. Naas she never form, so she omises. But they may be fit for; they
of what their all their am-each. Thus lents, in the quiet and re-
u what they ion they are

emory, and a lication. In ch Cleanthes
re; but this naccountable
man: all his
of attending
of justice, or lays, dances,
wing-rooms,
or physician,
will remain
ample of ta-
on the world ature in her
he has some-always of a ulents other-
bears a high course, and those that do lication of a clining from
les. By the may possibly imely salad;
pid! Just as alerio had a nd learning,
was believed
id not excel;
ut one: Va-
s resolved to great pains ot that extra-

pon Nature,
effects might much alone in war. To tion upon a
order as it half done as nclined him
f the Muses;
nd were re-
his modest made but a declamatory
in poetry.

Nature, if left to herself, leads us on in the be-course, but will do nothing by compulsion and constraint: and if we are not satisfied to go her way we are always the greatest sufferers by it.

Wherever Nature designs a production, she always disposes seeds proper for it, which are absolutely necessary to the formation of any moral or intellectual excellence, as they are to the being and growth of plants; and I know not by what fat and folly it is, that men are taught, not to reckon him equally absurd that will write verses in spite of Nature, with that gardener that should undertake to raise a jonquil or tulip without the help of their respective seeds.

As there is no good or bad quality that does not affect both sexes, so it is not to be imagined but the fair sex must have suffered by an affectation of this nature, at least as much as the other. The ill effect of it is in none so conspicuous as in the two opposite characters of Cælia and Iras: Cælia has all the charms of person, together with an abundant sweetness of nature, but wants wit, and has a very ill voice; Iras is ugly and ungenteel, but has wit and good sense. If Cælia would be silent, her beholders would adore her: if Iras would talk, her hearers would admire her: but Cælia's tongue runs mean-santly, while Iras gives herself silent airs and soft languors, so that it is difficult to persuade one's self that Cælia has beauty, and Iras wit: each neglects her own excellence, and is ambitious of the other's character; Iras would be thought to have as much beauty as Cælia, and Cælia as much wit as Iras.

The great misfortune of this affectation is, that men not only lose a good quality, but also contract a bad one. They not only are unfit for what they were designed, but they assign themselves to what they are not fit for; and instead of making a very good figure one way, make a very ridiculous one another. If Semanthe would have been satisfied with her natural complexion, she might still have been celebrated by the name of the olive beauty; but Semanthe has taken up an affectation to white and red, and is now distinguished by the character of the lady that paints so well. In a word, could the world be reformed to the obedience of that famous dictate, "Follow Nature," which the oracle of Delphos pronounced to Cicero, when he consulted what course of studies he should pursue, we should see almost every man as eminent in his proper sphere as Tully was in his, and should in a very short time find impertinence and affectation banished from among the women, and coxcombs and false characters from among the men. For my part, I could never consider this preposterous repugnancy to Nature any otherwise, than not only as the greatest folly, but also one of the most heinous crimes, since it is a direct opposition to the disposition of Providence, and (as Tully expresses it) like the sin of the giants, an actual rebellion against Heaven.—2.

No. 405.] SATURDAY, JUNE 14, 1712.

With hymns divine the joyous banquet ends;
The peans lengthen'd till the sun descends:
The Greeks restored, the grateful notes prolong; Apollo listens, and approves the song.—POPE.

I am very sorry to find, by the opera bills for this day, that we are likely to lose the greatest performer in dramatic music that is now living, or that perhaps ever appeared upon a stage. I need not acquaint my readers that I am speaking of Signor Nicolini. The town is highly obliged to that excel-ent artist, for having shown us the Italian music at its perfection, as well as for that generous approbation, he lately gave to an opera of our own country, in which the composer endeavoured to do justice to the beauty of the words, by following that noble example which has been set him by the greatest foreign masters in that art.

I could heartily wish there were the same application and endeavours to cultivate and improve our church music as have been lately bestowed on that of the stage. Our composers have one very great advantage to it. They are sure to meet with excellent words, and at the same time a wonderful variety of them. There is no passion that is not truly expressed in those parts of the inspired writings, which are proper for divine songs and anthems.

There is a certain coldness and indifference in the phrases of our European languages, when they are compared with the oriental forms of speech; and it happens very luckily, that the Hebrew idioms run to the English tongue with a particular grace and purity. Our language has received innumerable elegancies and improvements, from that infusion of Hebrewisms, which are derived to it out of the poetical passages in holy writ. They give a force and energy to our expressions, warm and animate our language, and convey our thoughts in more ardent and intense phrases, than any that are to be met with in our own tongue. There is something so pathetic in this kind of diction, that it often sets the mind in flame, and makes our hearts burn within us. How cold and dead does a prayer appear, that is composed in the most elegant and polite forms of speech, which are natural to our tongue, when it is heightened by that solemnity of phrase which may be drawn from the sacred writings. It has been said by some of the ancients, that if the gods were to talk with men, they would certainly speak in Plato's style; but I think we may say with justice, that when mortals converse with their Creator, they cannot do it in so proper a style as in that of the Holy Scriptures.

If any one would judge of the beauties of poetry that are to be met with in the divine writings, and compare how kindly the Hebrew manners of speech mix and incorporate with the English language; after having perused the Book of Psalms, let him read a literal translation of Horace or Pindar. He will find in these two last such an absurdity and confusion of style, with such a comparative poverty of imagination, as will make him very sensible of what I have been here advancing.

Since we have therefore such a treasury of words, so beautiful in themselves, and so proper for the uses of music, I cannot but wonder that persons of distinction should give so little attention and encouragement to that kind of music which would have its foundation in reason, and which would improve our virtue in proportion as it raised our delight. The passions that are excited by ordinary compositions generally flow from such silly and absurd occasions, that a man is ashamed to reflect upon them seriously; but the fear, the love, the sorrow, the indignation, that are awakened in the mind by hymns and anthems, make the heart better, and proceed from such causes as are altogether reasonable and praiseworthy. Pleasure and duty go hand in hand; and the greater our satisfaction is, the greater is our religion.

Music, among those who were styled the chosen people, was a religious art. The songs of Zion, which we have to put among the things that were nothing else but the greatest conquest of the manner of the composition of the words, and then to music, though they were the nation's devotion of his people.

The first original of worship, consisted of nothing else but voluptuousness. In religion, this form of music, in which, the first of music was vicious, and laudable, to improve, and to improve.

Homer and Virgil should be applied to as surrounding about his throne passages in ancient instrumental music, religious worship, and the soul, which of this nature, purify and exalt the proper turn, and the soul, which them by sensual.

Music, when the mind of the deceptions. It is praise into raptures of worship, and impressions in the company any transition in the ordinary

No. 406.]

Hæc studia adolescenti cunctas res ornant delectant domi, non peregrinantur, rursus
These studies nourish of prosperity, the
they are delectable they gladden us in country.

THE following is the joys and satisfaction is from a gentleman very great respect the satisfaction is a letter to me, of Lapland lover: to translate another able manner. young and old paper which my tastes in solitude description of art honourable.

"DEAR SIR
"You have of
by which I find

BRITISH ESSAYISTS

that mixt state,
are qualified
others and mo-es, in praising
in the former;
uch rest; and,
much precipi-
and are good on, do but the ners, and are selves. Those s useful to all that not only
ts, amidst the lous towns in nt and service of people who
ean who have y own part, I ys, Tam nam-ae: quicquid in re fitter for u e such as have waters, which lited to a great re, and a much ore smoothly,
natural course
of this would
the possession
the companion ses too for his
to be uneasy.
ff into a good
tarch just now
in a game at nest cast; but,
n to play it as it.

able Servant."

with the fine
e inspired the
ately printed,
bus translator
er also which is not, a much
u this.
overs to divert
rney through
r mistresses,
in-deer, which supplies the
which succehis way, are, I woven. The
the roads, and ce, since those his desires;
at the greatest nd his joyful
is mistress as cribed in the

ral nature are may think fit
letter, when writing, will our own hand, it is natural

to have a fondness for what one does one's self, &c.
I assure you, I would not have any thing of me displace a single line of yours."

I

He, my love, cheer, and at us ready go
Thou art, my love, my love, my love, my love
He, my love, cheer, and at us ready go
In, my love, cheer, and at us ready go.

II

Around us for the busy world are spread From all the sun with all its cheerful ray Darkening and bright we have the world's tread, No lay ensuing to cheat the tedious day.

III

He, my love, cheer, and at us ready go
Thou art, my love, my love, my love, my love
He, my love, cheer, and at us ready go
In, my love, cheer, and at us ready go.

IV

He, my love, cheer, and at us ready go
Thou art, my love, my love, my love, my love
He, my love, cheer, and at us ready go
In, my love, cheer, and at us ready go.

V

Our love, my love, cheer, and at us ready go Thou art, my love, my love, my love, my love
Our love, my love, cheer, and at us ready go Thou art, my love, my love, my love, my love.

VI

Our love, my love, cheer, and at us ready go
Thou art, my love, my love, my love, my love
Our love, my love, cheer, and at us ready go Thou art, my love, my love, my love, my love.

VII

Our love, my love, cheer, and at us ready go
Thou art, my love, my love, my love, my love
Our love, my love, cheer, and at us ready go Thou art, my love, my love, my love, my love.

T.

No. 407.] TUESDAY, JUNE 17, 1712.

Our love, my love, cheer, and at us ready go
Thou art, my love, my love, my love, my love

Most foreign writers, who have given any character of the English nation, whatever views they are able to it, allow, in general, that the people are naturally modest. It proceeds perhaps from the our national virtue, that our orators are observed to make less gesture or action than those of other countries. Our preachers stand stock-still in the pulpit, and will not so much as move a finger to pull the best sermons in the world. We need not the same speaking statues at our bars, and in public places of debate. Our words flow from us a smooth continued stream, without those strains of the voice, motions of the body, and majesty of the hand, which are so much celebrated in the orators of Greece and Rome. We are like of and death in cold blood, and keep our temper in discourse which turns upon every thing that is set to us. Though our zeal breaks out in the heat of disputes and figures, it is not able to stir a hair of us. I have heard it observed more than once, that those who have seen Italy, that an untaught Englishman cannot relish all the beauties of Italian pictures, because the pictures which are exhibited in them are often such as are peculiar to that country. One who has not seen an Italian in the pulpit, would not know what to make of that and gesture in Raphael's picture of St. Paul preaching at Athens, where the apostle is represented up both his arms, and pouring out the of his rhetoric amidst an audience of pagan here.

certain that proper gestures and vehement of the voice cannot be too much studied in orator. They are a kind of comment he utters, and enforce every thing he says, ask hearers, better than the strongest argument can make use of. They keep the audience and fix their attention to what is delivered at the same time that they show the speaker next, and affected himself with what he so truly recommends to others. Violent gesticulation naturally shake the hearts of the ignorant, and fill them with a kind of reverent. Nothing is more frequent than to see men stand and tremble at the sight of a preacher, though he is placed quite out of hearing; as in England we very frequently see men asleep with solid and elaborate discourses of piety, who would be warmed and transported of themselves by the bellowing and dissonance of enthusiasm.

useless, when accompanied with such an effect of voice and body, has such an influence on the mind, what might we not expect from those admirable discourses which are in our tongue, were they delivered with a fervour, and with the most agreeable voice and gesture!

we are told that the great Latin orator very soon impaired his health by the laterum contentio, violence of action, with which he used to himself. The Greek orator was likewise famous for this particular in rhetoric, that he was an antagonist, whom he had banished from reading over the oration which had produced banishment, and seeing his friends admiring not forbear asking them, if they were so affected by the bare reading of it, how much they would have been alarmed, had they actually throwing out such a storm of fire?

cold and dead a figure, in comparison of a great man, does an orator often make at a bar, holding up his head with the most serenity, and stroking the sides of a long robe reaches down to his middle! The truth there is often nothing more ridiculous than the gestures of an English speaker: you see some running their hands into their pockets as if they can thrust them, and others looking at attention on a piece of paper that has been written on it; you may see many a smart man turning his hat in his hands, moulding it into all different cocks, examining sometimes the top of it, and sometimes the button, during the course of his harangue. A deaf man might think he was cheapening a beaver, when he is talking of the fate of the British nation. I remember when I was a young man, and in frequent Westminster-hall, there was a man who never pleaded without a piece of red in his hand, which he used to twist with his thumb or finger all the while he was speaking; ways of those days used to call it "the red of his discourse," for he was not able to utter without it. One of his clients, who was wiser than wise, stole it from him one day in the heat of his pleading; but he had better have done so, for he lost his cause by his jest.

He all along acknowledged myself to be a dumb man, and therefore a improper person to give advice. I will believe every one that we ought either to do (which seems to be very good for our nation), or at least to be graceful and expressive.

No. 408.] WEDNESDAY

Deceit affectus animi neque serviliter.—TULL. de Finib.
The affections of the heart are not servilely depressed.

"MR. SPECTATOR,
